
Digitized by the Internet Archive in 2012 with funding from The Institute of Museum and Library Services through an Indiana State Library LSTA Grant http://archive.org/details/harpersweeklyv13bonn

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

A JOURNAL OF CIVILIZATION.

VOL. XIII.—No. 627.] NEW YORK, SATURDAY, JANUARY 2, 1869. SINGLE COPIES, TEN CENTS. $4.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE.

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the Year 1868, by Harper & Brothers, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court of the United States, for the Southern District of New York.

THIS BOOK IS THE PROPERTY OF

difficult. Bishop WHIPPLE, of Minnesota, who speaks with the authority of much experience, thinks that there should be a special Department for the Indians with agents appointed for life, with ample salaries and subject to no civil service discipline. The Bishop does not favor placing the Indian Bureau in the War Department, fearing the effect upon the Indians of placing the agencies at military posts. One chief difficulty is that of finding the right kind of men for agents, and the reasons are obvious. But let us hope, now that the subject is before the Senate, that it will not be dismissed without the most ample investigation.

EIGHTEEN HUNDRED AND SIXTY-NINE.

CHRISTMAS WEEK began with April softness, and if we could only trust the flattering tales that are always told by Hope upon Christmas-eve, we might expect the pleasantest of winters and of years. But if Jack Frost is, with all affectionate children, large and small, "Home for the Holidays," he will return by Twelfth Night, and the "Christmas Undine" shall yet skim the moonlit snow to the dance of the yellow glass of mulled wine. No April-eyed December can deceive old Santa Claus. He will step over the mouse-ops as nimbly as ever and—cheer up, dear parents!—there shall be no lack of drums, trumpets, rattles, whistles, guns, and cannon, to promote the tranquillity of the nursery. Indeed, how else winter would be? But whatever the weather may do, we shall try to keep the old sun shining in our columns, and to keep up with the sun o' day.

The new era upon which the country is entering, the vast and novel industries which assured peace must develop, the rapid extension of enterprise into remote and romantic regions of our own and of other countries, promise opportunity and material enough for the busiest pen and the busiest life. By the law of our paper the world is our oyster, to be opened as we best can for the pleasure and profit of our readers. And to all of them, old and new, with renewed pledges of fidelity and once—if ever—more needed—and with the various sweet and sad memories of the years that are gone, we enter upon eighteen hundred and sixty-nine with the heartiest wishes for a Happy New Year!

THE BOSTON, HARTFORD, AND ERIE RAILROAD.

THE efforts of Boston to reach the Western trade have been as active as her natural advantages will allow; but as her principal route, by way of Worcester and Springfield to Albany, encounters a high elevation in the mountain range in Berkshire, the descent of which going East is rendered sometimes difficult in winter owing to steep grades, other lines have been proposed to overcome this objection. The engineering difficulties encountered in that descent have been managed with the highest skill. The mountain stream, in company with which the railroad seeks the plain, is crossed twenty-seven times over bridges of masonry, many of whose arches are sixty feet high. In the summer, when no sense of danger attends the descent, the traveler, who watches from the rear of the train the course of the river as it rushes down its valley bed, expands with it, descends, and notices the high and durable arches over which the train has just moved at rapid speed, is amazed at the boldness which, in the infancy of engineering knowledge, projected a work so difficult. The scenery is remarkably picturesque, and contributes to the sensations of pride with which the work occasions. It will stand as an enduring monument to the sagacity, the energy, and the courage of Massachusetts. Now created prize, the trade of the great West with its treasures for the world those of India, calls into exercise the display of skill and power. Long may that system of policy endure, which opens to every part of the Union the opportunity to carry great enterprises through other portions of it, to reap the advantages which are diffused by and liberally over our country! The states of Europe can not offer such facilities. The forces which we employ in developing our whole industry as a unit they employ—1,200,000 France, 1,000,000 Prussia, 1,000,000 in Russia, 800,000 in Austria, 500,000 in Italy—in standing armies to secure isolation and prevent united influence and action.

If the nonuniformity and imperfect system of European states were adopted here the construction of a Boston road through the House Tunnel to any of the improvements to the north, and the construction of another line to tap the Erie road at Newburgh, would be impossible. These enterprises are not only not regarded with jealousy—they scarcely attract attention, except in the quarters specially interested in the results which are expected to flow from them. The House Tunnel enterprise now waits for the closing of a contract authorized by Massachusetts to embrace the entire work, the question being undecided whether the security demanded by the State from bidders shall be required or waived. The Boston, Hartford, and Erie line calls for a more particular notice, as the short distance remaining unfinished is now being worked, and will exercise, when finished, a powerful influence upon the industry of Connecticut, Rhode Island, and Massachusetts.

It will be recollected that the Erie Railroad during the preceding summer took five millions of dollars of the bonds of this Company—a questionable proceeding—which were purchased at eighty. They were called the Berdell mortgage bonds. The object of this purchase was to secure the aid of the Connecticut Legislature, which, in 1867, had authorized a loan of its credit to this enterprise to the extent of three millions of dollars, on certain conditions, which otherwise could not have been complied with. The act called for the appointment of three commissioners, one of whom shall be an engineer, to ascertain the amount of work and inform the Governor and Council of its exact condition. It was provided that no portion of the State credit should be issued by the Treasurer of the Commonwealth, unless it should appear to him that the Company would be able, either alone or with the aid of other parties, to complete the line of railway from Boston to Fishkill; and if, at any time after any portion of the loan had been advanced, it should appear that such road would not be completed in five years, no further aid was to be given.

On the 14th of October last the Governor and Council of Massachusetts, on a report of the Commissioners, decided that, in all human probability, the means had been provided to complete the road to Fishkill, and ordered that the first instalment of one hundred thousand dollars of the scrip of the Commonwealth should be issued agreeably to the provisions of Great Britain; upon the issuing of which, contracts for the most difficult portion of the line were immediately made.

The unfinished portion of the line extends from Waterbury in Connecticut to Fishkill on the Hudson, immediately opposite to the termination of the Erie Railroad at Newburgh. From Waterbury to our State line, about 38 miles, its course is westerly, generally at right angles to the streams and ridges which it constantly cut. It commences at Waterbury, where the road in running order now terminates, at an elevation of 153 feet above tide, reaches in about eight miles the valley of Naugatuck, elevated 646 feet; descends ten miles to the valley of the Housatonic, 142 feet above tide; ascends to Bethel Hill, 600 feet above tide (near Hawleyville), which it pierces with a tunnel 300 feet long and 368 feet above tide; passes on a very good grade to Danbury, eight miles, which is 389 feet above tide, and thence five miles to the dividing line between New York and Connecticut, which it crosses at an elevation of 475 feet. Its course thence to Fishkill is through an open country on one of the affluents of the Croton to near Brewster's Station, with which station it will connect on the Harlem Road, whose course runs parallel with that road, to Towner's Station, near which point it diverges toward the Fishkill Mountains, which it crosses near Whaley's Pond at an elevation of 716 feet above tide, constituting the summit. Descending the mountain, it runs near Fishkill Creek, and uses the Dutchess, Columbia, and Rensselaer Railroad, having been purchased, is to be delivered over finished, with its rolling stock, at an early period.

A very large portion of the line is described as now being completed, and the remainder, if sound and severe cuts will require nearly two years, it is not expected that the whole will be in running order before December, 1870. There is a very strong probability that it will be finished and in operation by that time, as over four hundred miles of road now completed as well as the value of those being developed depend upon it. This road, between Putnam and Willimantic in Connecticut, is being straightened in order to furnish between Boston and New York, by way of the Harlem River, a route which will be a shorter line of travel than by any other route. This road connects also with Providence, Rhode Island, and other important points.

The main object of this route to the Hudson is to obtain coal by way of the Erie Railroad for the numerous manufacturing establishments in the three States mentioned as benefited, and also to diffuse it over the whole Eastern States by means of the various lines going north and south which it intersects. The coal-fields of Pennsylvania lie due west of Newburgh, and may be reached, it is supposed, with more ease in this way than by the lines now existing. It is also supposed that there will be no such necessity to mills in the interior, so that during the droughts of summer their industry may not be delayed. That this road will be a feeder to the Erie, and will receive a great variety of Western products from the Erie, is certain. Another route has been devised from New Haven by way of Derby, the Ulster Valley, Derby's Junction on the Harlem Road, the High Bridge over the Hudson near Peekskill, to connect with the Erie near Towner's; but the interior west of Derby has not been commenced, although the bridge intended for general use has been located to cross the Hudson at Anthony's Nose, above Peekskill.

New York can console itself, as it views these evidences of energy and power in our Eastern States, by the knowledge that very little of the trade which is intended for foreign parts can be diverted from us, inasmuch as at the Hudson the effort at competition will encounter the facility of tide-water to float produce cheaply to their place of destination.

The line ought to have been constructed by the States most interested, without calling upon the Erie Railroad to advance its funds to the extent of two millions, and its acceptances to the extent of $1,570,400, for such an object. The loan also agreed, in consideration of the right to use the Boston, Hartford, and Erie Road for some purposes of distribution, to pay for a limited time the interest on the $4,000,000 of bonds. The branch to Derby was being profitable, these operations were undertaken in order, it is said, to give it additional employment, and thus benefit its through line: a very insufficient reason.

The avails of this arrangement, and the $3,000,000 to be advanced by Massachusetts, including the $100,000 advanced in October, constitute, with unused bonds and stock of the Boston, Hartford, and Erie, the means for completing this line, which is regarded with great interest by a large population. The interior portions of Putnam, Dutchess, Columbia, and northern Westchester expect to derive important advantages from this connection with the Erie Railroad, as it will enable their inhabitants to obtain coal, grain, cattle, and many Western productions free of the great expense which now attends their transportation, and will stimulate largely their manufacturing and other industry.

THE INDIANA VIGILANCE COMMITTEE.

THE hanging of prisoners by a Vigilance Committee in Indiana, and the deliberate determination to continue it was done, is one of the most startling and significant of recent events. Last May a railroad express car was robbed, and the messenger horribly beaten. Some of the robbers were taken, some escaped to Canada, and some disappeared altogether. Those who fled to Canada were returned under the extradition treaty, and confined with their comrades in October. Meanwhile those who escaped altogether organized a fresh robbery of the same kind, were betrayed, entrapped, and after a desperate struggle arrested and lodged in jail. They were subsequently placed upon a train to be carried to the county seat. The train stopped when a signal of distress was made upon the road-side. The signal proved to be the device of a Vigilance Committee, which seized the prisoners. Knowing their doom in the most summary and swift way they could so, were hung by the Committee, which then issued an address of warning to all thieves, threatening a like punishment, and to hang every thieving character it could lay its hands upon. The Committee pursued three of the gang who had escaped, and finding them, hung them also.

This was in July, and on the 23d of October that the prisoners were surrendered from Canada. The Governor that year brought to the jail at New Albany, Indiana, and it was supposed they would be left in peace until their trial. But some days since, at 3 o'clock in the morning, a body of twenty men masked and armed arrived in the town by the railroad, proceeded to the jail, and summoned the sheriff to surrender the prisoners. He refused, and after some struggle was shot and wounded. Finding the keys the masked men opened the jail doors, until they came upon one door which they could not open, and the patrol. He made show of fight, but they showed him a rope and told him that if he resisted he should be hanged. Overpowered by numbers and fear of death, the jail men entered the cells, and seizing the prisoners instantly hanged them from the railing of an upper corridor. Then locking the door and taking the keys, the band soon returned without disorder to the station where a train awaited them, and stepping in they departed, having given the prisoners but one hour in all.

The Canadian papers say very properly that if prisoners charged with crime but not convicted are liable to be slaughtered when surrendered under the extradition treaty, it is high time to consider whether the evils of the treaty do outweigh its advantages. But while that is true from the point of view of law, the existence of such a Vigilance Committee indicates a fatal distrust of the ordinary processes of justice. And it is now stated that this distrust was not ill-founded, and that there was no reason to suppose that the robbers would be properly punished by the law. The courts of law are the last resort of anybody, but when they are more than suspected, the remedy inevitably ceases to be peaceful. When the courts fail into public contempt, the condition of order is that no great crime taxes the public patience. San Francisco taught all cities that lesson. It is the bitter reproach of the people of Indiana that such terrible deed should even seem to have a palliation. Meanwhile, if the United States Government receives accused prisoners from the British Government for trial, it is bound to see that they are tried, not murdered before trial. But it is the duty of Indiana so to do justice that there shall be no wish to deprive the law of its prerogative.

LITERARY.

PROFESSOR JOHN M. LEGETTE, in the poetical tragedies of Afranese and The Adonean, has endeavored to do for the ancient life of Rome and Judea what LONGFELLOW essayed for the days of Puritanism in his "New England Tragedies." Without possessing the subtle and often exquisite imagination of LONGFELLOW, he seems to us to possess a truer appreciation of character, and to afford a better portraiture of the age with which he endeavors to conduct his readers. The second tragedy is perhaps the less original, and the historic accuracy of the characters of ARISTOBULUS and ANTIPATER could probably neither be verified nor disproved. But there are few scenes in history more terrible than those which characterize the close of the reign of HEROD THE GREAT; and to be true to the life the tragedy of that era must be terrible. The history of these ages of the past is, for the most part, like a portrait of an Old Master—the features distorted by the incrustations of time. Professor LEGETTE has endeavored to restore the tissue, and in presenting in the language of imagination as much the life which, in its ordinary historic forms, seems like fiction.

"HARPER'S BAZAR."

THE number of this journal of fashion for the present week contains a supplement containing FASHION PLATE, prepared expressly for it by the Mode Illustrée of Paris, which surpasses any work of the kind hitherto published in this country. A NEW-YEAR'S gift in the form of a well-selected and beautiful chromicle of the modes, with its carefully detailed directions for enabling every body to keep pace with their changes, is a remembrance which never itself every week, and is worth a thought at that happy season.

DOMESTIC INTELLIGENCE.

CONGRESS.

December 14.

In the Senate, a communication was presented from the Governor of Georgia, inclosing resolutions from the Legislature of that State rescinding the ratification of the Fourteenth Amendment.—Mr. Morton introduced a bill providing for the coinage of the fractional currency of the United States and fractional currency in 1871. The bill also requires the Treasurer to redeem their notes and coin in kind.

In the House, a resolution was adopted instructing the Judiciary Committee to investigate the Ku-Klux outrages in Tennessee.—The President's message in regard to the Georgia resolutions were announced with only six dissentient voices.

December 15.

In the Senate, Mr. Wilson's bill to repeal the bill prohibiting the organization of militia in the State lately in rebellion was passed.

December 16.

In the Senate, a resolution was adopted instructing the Judiciary Committee to inquire into the expediency of introducing legislation to prevent the hanging of convicts in Virginia, under the recent extraordinary proceedings in the case of the former Governor, who offered the resolution, referred to the recent execution of JAMES McDONOUGH, whereby a human sentenced to death was discharged from custody because one of the Inspectors of Prisons, who had been duly disqualified from holding office by the Fourteenth Amendment.

In the House, a bill reported from the Reconstruction Committee was passed, relieving from political disabilities certain citizens of the Southern States lately in rebellion, limited to eighty. The House bill regulates the act prohibiting the organization of militia in the recently reconstructed States. The Democratic members dissent all the Southern States to be included in the bill; but the bill, as passed, as reported from the Reconstruction Committee.—A resolution was adopted declaring that the persons employed by the Government shall hereafter receive the same rate of compensation as such may perform similar services.

December 17.

In the Senate, a bill was passed relieving from political disabilities certain citizens of Texas.—In the House.—The Home resolution was passed, disapproving of the final recommendations of the Freedmen's Bureau.

In the House, eulogies upon the late THADDEUS STEVENS were pronounced by Messrs. Kelley, Wood, Boutwell, Dawes, Hoar, and Logan.

December 18.

In the Senate, a resolution was adopted requesting the Secretary of the Interior to communicate any information he has in regard to enlisting Ute people as peaceful characters or the Indians recently killed or captured by General Custer in his fight with them on the Washita.—Mr. SUMNER'S resolution, expressing sympathy with Cuba in her present struggles, passed, by a vote of 41 yeas to 9 nays.—The House concluded the debate upon the Georgia case. Speeches were received, and eulogies were pronounced upon THADDEUS STEVENS by Messrs. Banks and Bingham, after which the Senate adjourned.

December 19.

In the Senate, a resolution was adopted requesting the Secretary of the Interior to communicate any information he has in regard to enlisting Ute people as peaceful characters or the Indians recently killed or captured by General Custer in his fight with them on the Washita.—Mr. SUMNER'S resolution, expressing sympathy with Cuba in her present struggles, passed, by a vote of 41 yeas to 9 nays.—The House concluded the debate upon the Georgia case. Speeches were received, and eulogies were pronounced upon THADDEUS STEVENS by Messrs. Banks and Bingham, after which the Senate adjourned.

December 20.

In the Senate, a resolution was adopted requesting the Secretary of the Interior to communicate any information he has in regard to enlisting Ute people as peaceful characters or the Indians recently killed or captured by General Custer in his fight with them on the Washita.—Mr. SUMNER'S resolution, expressing sympathy with Cuba in her present struggles, passed, by a vote of 41 yeas to 9 nays.—The House concluded the debate upon the Georgia case. Speeches were received, and eulogies were pronounced upon THADDEUS STEVENS by Messrs. Banks and Bingham, after which the Senate adjourned.

December 21.

In the Senate, a resolution was adopted requesting the Secretary of the Interior to communicate any information he has in regard to enlisting Ute people as peaceful characters or the Indians recently killed or captured by General Custer in his fight with them on the Washita.—Mr. SUMNER'S resolution, expressing sympathy with Cuba in her present struggles, passed, by a vote of 41 yeas to 9 nays.—The House concluded the debate upon the Georgia case. Speeches were received, and eulogies were pronounced upon THADDEUS STEVENS by Messrs. Banks and Bingham, after which the Senate adjourned.

December 22.

In the Senate, a resolution was adopted requesting the Secretary of the Interior to communicate any information he has in regard to enlisting Ute people as peaceful characters or the Indians recently killed or captured by General Custer in his fight with them on the Washita.—Mr. SUMNER'S resolution, expressing sympathy with Cuba in her present struggles, passed, by a vote of 41 yeas to 9 nays.—The House concluded the debate upon the Georgia case. Speeches were received, and eulogies were pronounced upon THADDEUS STEVENS by Messrs. Banks and Bingham, after which the Senate adjourned.

December 23.

In the Senate, a resolution was adopted requesting the Secretary of the Interior to communicate any information he has in regard to enlisting Ute people as peaceful characters or the Indians recently killed or captured by General Custer in his fight with them on the Washita.—Mr. SUMNER'S resolution, expressing sympathy with Cuba in her present struggles, passed, by a vote of 41 yeas to 9 nays.—The House concluded the debate upon the Georgia case. Speeches were received, and eulogies were pronounced upon THADDEUS STEVENS by Messrs. Banks and Bingham, after which the Senate adjourned.

December 24.

In the Senate, a resolution was adopted requesting the Secretary of the Interior to communicate any information he has in regard to enlisting Ute people as peaceful characters or the Indians recently killed or captured by General Custer in his fight with them on the Washita.—Mr. SUMNER'S resolution, expressing sympathy with Cuba in her present struggles, passed, by a vote of 41 yeas to 9 nays.—The House concluded the debate upon the Georgia case. Speeches were received, and eulogies were pronounced upon THADDEUS STEVENS by Messrs. Banks and Bingham, after which the Senate adjourned.

December 25.

In the Senate, a resolution was adopted requesting the Secretary of the Interior to communicate any information he has in regard to enlisting Ute people as peaceful characters or the Indians recently killed or captured by General Custer in his fight with them on the Washita.—Mr. SUMNER'S resolution, expressing sympathy with Cuba in her present struggles, passed, by a vote of 41 yeas to 9 nays.—The House concluded the debate upon the Georgia case. Speeches were received, and eulogies were pronounced upon THADDEUS STEVENS by Messrs. Banks and Bingham, after which the Senate adjourned.

December 26.

In the Senate, a resolution was adopted requesting the Secretary of the Interior to communicate any information he has in regard to enlisting Ute people as peaceful characters or the Indians recently killed or captured by General Custer in his fight with them on the Washita.—Mr. SUMNER'S resolution, expressing sympathy with Cuba in her present struggles, passed, by a vote of 41 yeas to 9 nays.—The House concluded the debate upon the Georgia case. Speeches were received, and eulogies were pronounced upon THADDEUS STEVENS by Messrs. Banks and Bingham, after which the Senate adjourned.

December 27.

In the Senate, a resolution was adopted requesting the Secretary of the Interior to communicate any information he has in regard to enlisting Ute people as peaceful characters or the Indians recently killed or captured by General Custer in his fight with them on the Washita.—Mr. SUMNER'S resolution, expressing sympathy with Cuba in her present struggles, passed, by a vote of 41 yeas to 9 nays.—The House concluded the debate upon the Georgia case. Speeches were received, and eulogies were pronounced upon THADDEUS STEVENS by Messrs. Banks and Bingham, after which the Senate adjourned.

December 28.

In the Senate, a resolution was adopted requesting the Secretary of the Interior to communicate any information he has in regard to enlisting Ute people as peaceful characters or the Indians recently killed or captured by General Custer in his fight with them on the Washita.—Mr. SUMNER'S resolution, expressing sympathy with Cuba in her present struggles, passed, by a vote of 41 yeas to 9 nays.—The House concluded the debate upon the Georgia case. Speeches were received, and eulogies were pronounced upon THADDEUS STEVENS by Messrs. Banks and Bingham, after which the Senate adjourned.

December 29.

In the Senate, a resolution was adopted requesting the Secretary of the Interior to communicate any information he has in regard to enlisting Ute people as peaceful characters or the Indians recently killed or captured by General Custer in his fight with them on the Washita.—Mr. SUMNER'S resolution, expressing sympathy with Cuba in her present struggles, passed, by a vote of 41 yeas to 9 nays.—The House concluded the debate upon the Georgia case. Speeches were received, and eulogies were pronounced upon THADDEUS STEVENS by Messrs. Banks and Bingham, after which the Senate adjourned.

December 30.

In the Senate, a resolution was adopted requesting the Secretary of the Interior to communicate any information he has in regard to enlisting Ute people as peaceful characters or the Indians recently killed or captured by General Custer in his fight with them on the Washita.—Mr. SUMNER'S resolution, expressing sympathy with Cuba in her present struggles, passed, by a vote of 41 yeas to 9 nays.—The House concluded the debate upon the Georgia case. Speeches were received, and eulogies were pronounced upon THADDEUS STEVENS by Messrs. Banks and Bingham, after which the Senate adjourned.

December 31.

In the Senate, a resolution was adopted requesting the Secretary of the Interior to communicate any information he has in regard to enlisting Ute people as peaceful characters or the Indians recently killed or captured by General Custer in his fight with them on the Washita.—Mr. SUMNER'S resolution, expressing sympathy with Cuba in her present struggles, passed, by a vote of 41 yeas to 9 nays.—The House concluded the debate upon the Georgia case. Speeches were received, and eulogies were pronounced upon THADDEUS STEVENS by Messrs. Banks and Bingham, after which the Senate adjourned.

December 32.

In the Senate, a resolution was adopted requesting the Secretary of the Interior to communicate any information he has in regard to enlisting Ute people as peaceful characters or the Indians recently killed or captured by General Custer in his fight with them on the Washita.—Mr. SUMNER'S resolution, expressing sympathy with Cuba in her present struggles, passed, by a vote of 41 yeas to 9 nays.—The House concluded the debate upon the Georgia case. Speeches were received, and eulogies were pronounced upon THADDEUS STEVENS by Messrs. Banks and Bingham, after which the Senate adjourned.

December 33.

In the Senate, a resolution was adopted requesting the Secretary of the Interior to communicate any information he has in regard to enlisting Ute people as peaceful characters or the Indians recently killed or captured by General Custer in his fight with them on the Washita.—Mr. SUMNER'S resolution, expressing sympathy with Cuba in her present struggles, passed, by a vote of 41 yeas to 9 nays.—The House concluded the debate upon the Georgia case. Speeches were received, and eulogies were pronounced upon THADDEUS STEVENS by Messrs. Banks and Bingham, after which the Senate adjourned.

December 34.

In the Senate, a resolution was adopted requesting the Secretary of the Interior to communicate any information he has in regard to enlisting Ute people as peaceful characters or the Indians recently killed or captured by General Custer in his fight with them on the Washita.—Mr. SUMNER'S resolution, expressing sympathy with Cuba in her present struggles, passed, by a vote of 41 yeas to 9 nays.—The House concluded the debate upon the Georgia case. Speeches were received, and eulogies were pronounced upon THADDEUS STEVENS by Messrs. Banks and Bingham, after which the Senate adjourned.

December 35.

In the Senate, a resolution was adopted requesting the Secretary of the Interior to communicate any information he has in regard to enlisting Ute people as peaceful characters or the Indians recently killed or captured by General Custer in his fight with them on the Washita.—Mr. SUMNER'S resolution, expressing sympathy with Cuba in her present struggles, passed, by a vote of 41 yeas to 9 nays.—The House concluded the debate upon the Georgia case. Speeches were received, and eulogies were pronounced upon THADDEUS STEVENS by Messrs. Banks and Bingham, after which the Senate adjourned.

December 36.

In the Senate, a resolution was adopted requesting the Secretary of the Interior to communicate any information he has in regard to enlisting Ute people as peaceful characters or the Indians recently killed or captured by General Custer in his fight with them on the Washita.—Mr. SUMNER'S resolution, expressing sympathy with Cuba in her present struggles, passed, by a vote of 41 yeas to 9 nays.—The House concluded the debate upon the Georgia case. Speeches were received, and eulogies were pronounced upon THADDEUS STEVENS by Messrs. Banks and Bingham, after which the Senate adjourned.

December 37.

In the Senate, a resolution was adopted requesting the Secretary of the Interior to communicate any information he has in regard to enlisting Ute people as peaceful characters or the Indians recently killed or captured by General Custer in his fight with them on the Washita.—Mr. SUMNER'S resolution, expressing sympathy with Cuba in her present struggles, passed, by a vote of 41 yeas to 9 nays.—The House concluded the debate upon the Georgia case. Speeches were received, and eulogies were pronounced upon THADDEUS STEVENS by Messrs. Banks and Bingham, after which the Senate adjourned.

December 38.

In the Senate, a resolution was adopted requesting the Secretary of the Interior to communicate any information he has in regard to enlisting Ute people as peaceful characters or the Indians recently killed or captured by General Custer in his fight with them on the Washita.—Mr. SUMNER'S resolution, expressing sympathy with Cuba in her present struggles, passed, by a vote of 41 yeas to 9 nays.—The House concluded the debate upon the Georgia case. Speeches were received, and eulogies were pronounced upon THADDEUS STEVENS by Messrs. Banks and Bingham, after which the Senate adjourned.

December 39.

In the Senate, a resolution was adopted requesting the Secretary of the Interior to communicate any information he has in regard to enlisting Ute people as peaceful characters or the Indians recently killed or captured by General Custer in his fight with them on the Washita.—Mr. SUMNER'S resolution, expressing sympathy with Cuba in her present struggles, passed, by a vote of 41 yeas to 9 nays.—The House concluded the debate upon the Georgia case. Speeches were received, and eulogies were pronounced upon THADDEUS STEVENS by Messrs. Banks and Bingham, after which the Senate adjourned.

December 40.

In the Senate, a resolution was adopted requesting the Secretary of the Interior to communicate any information he has in regard to enlisting Ute people as peaceful characters or the Indians recently killed or captured by General Custer in his fight with them on the Washita.—Mr. SUMNER'S resolution, expressing sympathy with Cuba in her present struggles, passed, by a vote of 41 yeas to 9 nays.—The House concluded the debate upon the Georgia case. Speeches were received, and eulogies were pronounced upon THADDEUS STEVENS by Messrs. Banks and Bingham, after which the Senate adjourned.

December 41.

In the Senate, a resolution was adopted requesting the Secretary of the Interior to communicate any information he has in regard to enlisting Ute people as peaceful characters or the Indians recently killed or captured by General Custer in his fight with them on the Washita.—Mr. SUMNER'S resolution, expressing sympathy with Cuba in her present struggles, passed, by a vote of 41 yeas to 9 nays.—The House concluded the debate upon the Georgia case. Speeches were received, and eulogies were pronounced upon THADDEUS STEVENS by Messrs. Banks and Bingham, after which the Senate adjourned.

December 42.

In the Senate, a resolution was adopted requesting the Secretary of the Interior to communicate any information he has in regard to enlisting Ute people as peaceful characters or the Indians recently killed or captured by General Custer in his fight with them on the Washita.—Mr. SUMNER'S resolution, expressing sympathy with Cuba in her present struggles, passed, by a vote of 41 yeas to 9 nays.—The House concluded the debate upon the Georgia case. Speeches were received, and eulogies were pronounced upon THADDEUS STEVENS by Messrs. Banks and Bingham, after which the Senate adjourned.

December 43.

In the Senate, a resolution was adopted requesting the Secretary of the Interior to communicate any information he has in regard to enlisting Ute people as peaceful characters or the Indians recently killed or captured by General Custer in his fight with them on the Washita.—Mr. SUMNER'S resolution, expressing sympathy with Cuba in her present struggles, passed, by a vote of 41 yeas to 9 nays.—The House concluded the debate upon the Georgia case. Speeches were received, and eulogies were pronounced upon THADDEUS STEVENS by Messrs. Banks and Bingham, after which the Senate adjourned.

December 44.

In the Senate, a resolution was adopted requesting the Secretary of the Interior to communicate any information he has in regard to enlisting Ute people as peaceful characters or the Indians recently killed or captured by General Custer in his fight with them on the Washita.—Mr. SUMNER'S resolution, expressing sympathy with Cuba in her present struggles, passed, by a vote of 41 yeas to 9 nays.—The House concluded the debate upon the Georgia case. Speeches were received, and eulogies were pronounced upon THADDEUS STEVENS by Messrs. Banks and Bingham, after which the Senate adjourned.

December 45.

In the Senate, a resolution was adopted requesting the Secretary of the Interior to communicate any information he has in regard to enlisting Ute people as peaceful characters or the Indians recently killed or captured by General Custer in his fight with them on the Washita.—Mr. SUMNER'S resolution, expressing sympathy with Cuba in her present struggles, passed, by a vote of 41 yeas to 9 nays.—The House concluded the debate upon the Georgia case. Speeches were received, and eulogies were pronounced upon THADDEUS STEVENS by Messrs. Banks and Bingham, after which the Senate adjourned.

December 46.

In the Senate, a resolution was adopted requesting the Secretary of the Interior to communicate any information he has in regard to enlisting Ute people as peaceful characters or the Indians recently killed or captured by General Custer in his fight with them on the Washita.—Mr. SUMNER'S resolution, expressing sympathy with Cuba in her present struggles, passed, by a vote of 41 yeas to 9 nays.—The House concluded the debate upon the Georgia case. Speeches were received, and eulogies were pronounced upon THADDEUS STEVENS by Messrs. Banks and Bingham, after which the Senate adjourned.

December 47.

In the Senate, a resolution was adopted requesting the Secretary of the Interior to communicate any information he has in regard to enlisting Ute people as peaceful characters or the Indians recently killed or captured by General Custer in his fight with them on the Washita.—Mr. SUMNER'S resolution, expressing sympathy with Cuba in her present struggles, passed, by a vote of 41 yeas to 9 nays.—The House concluded the debate upon the Georgia case. Speeches were received, and eulogies were pronounced upon THADDEUS STEVENS by Messrs. Banks and Bingham, after which the Senate adjourned.

December 48.

In the Senate, a resolution was adopted requesting the Secretary of the Interior to communicate any information he has in regard to enlisting Ute people as peaceful characters or the Indians recently killed or captured by General Custer in his fight with them on the Washita.—Mr. SUMNER'S resolution, expressing sympathy with Cuba in her present struggles, passed, by a vote of 41 yeas to 9 nays.—The House concluded the debate upon the Georgia case. Speeches were received, and eulogies were pronounced upon THADDEUS STEVENS by Messrs. Banks and Bingham, after which the Senate adjourned.

December 49.

In the Senate, a resolution was adopted requesting the Secretary of the Interior to communicate any information he has in regard to enlisting Ute people as peaceful characters or the Indians recently killed or captured by General Custer in his fight with them on the Washita.—Mr. SUMNER'S resolution, expressing sympathy with Cuba in her present struggles, passed, by a vote of 41 yeas to 9 nays.—The House concluded the debate upon the Georgia case. Speeches were received, and eulogies were pronounced upon THADDEUS STEVENS by Messrs. Banks and Bingham, after which the Senate adjourned.

December 50.

In the Senate, a resolution was adopted requesting the Secretary of the Interior to communicate any information he has in regard to enlisting Ute people as peaceful characters or the Indians recently killed or captured by General Custer in his fight with them on the Washita.—Mr. SUMNER'S resolution, expressing sympathy with Cuba in her present struggles, passed, by a vote of 41 yeas to 9 nays.—The House concluded the debate upon the Georgia case. Speeches were received, and eulogies were pronounced upon THADDEUS STEVENS by Messrs. Banks and Bingham, after which the Senate adjourned.

December 51.

In the Senate, a resolution was adopted requesting the Secretary of the Interior to communicate any information he has in regard to enlisting Ute people as peaceful characters or the Indians recently killed or captured by General Custer in his fight with them on the Washita.—Mr. SUMNER'S resolution, expressing sympathy with Cuba in her present struggles, passed, by a vote of 41 yeas to 9 nays.—The House concluded the debate upon the Georgia case. Speeches were received, and eulogies were pronounced upon THADDEUS STEVENS by Messrs. Banks and Bingham, after which the Senate adjourned.

December 52.

In the Senate, a resolution was adopted requesting the Secretary of the Interior to communicate any information he has in regard to enlisting Ute people as peaceful characters or the Indians recently killed or captured by General Custer in his fight with them on the Washita.—Mr. SUMNER'S resolution, expressing sympathy with Cuba in her present struggles, passed, by a vote of 41 yeas to 9 nays.—The House concluded the debate upon the Georgia case. Speeches were received, and eulogies were pronounced upon THADDEUS STEVENS by Messrs. Banks and Bingham, after which the Senate adjourned.

December 53.

In the Senate, a resolution was adopted requesting the Secretary of the Interior to communicate any information he has in regard to enlisting Ute people as peaceful characters or the Indians recently killed or captured by General Custer in his fight with them on the Washita.—Mr. SUMNER'S resolution, expressing sympathy with Cuba in her present struggles, passed, by a vote of 41 yeas to 9 nays.—The House concluded the debate upon the Georgia case. Speeches were received, and eulogies were pronounced upon THADDEUS STEVENS by Messrs. Banks and Bingham, after which the Senate adjourned.

December 54.

In the Senate, a resolution was adopted requesting the Secretary of the Interior to communicate any information he has in regard to enlisting Ute people as peaceful characters or the Indians recently killed or captured by General Custer in his fight with them on the Washita.—Mr. SUMNER'S resolution, expressing sympathy with Cuba in her present struggles, passed, by a vote of 41 yeas to 9 nays.—The House concluded the debate upon the Georgia case. Speeches were received, and eulogies were pronounced upon THADDEUS STEVENS by Messrs. Banks and Bingham, after which the Senate adjourned.

December 55.

In the Senate, a resolution was adopted requesting the Secretary of the Interior to communicate any information he has in regard to enlisting Ute people as peaceful characters or the Indians recently killed or captured by General Custer in his fight with them on the Washita.—Mr. SUMNER'S resolution, expressing sympathy with Cuba in her present struggles, passed, by a vote of 41 yeas to 9 nays.—The House concluded the debate upon the Georgia case. Speeches were received, and eulogies were pronounced upon THADDEUS STEVENS by Messrs. Banks and Bingham, after which the Senate adjourned.

December 56.

In the Senate, a resolution was adopted requesting the Secretary of the Interior to communicate any information he has in regard to enlisting Ute people as peaceful characters or the Indians recently killed or captured by General Custer in his fight with them on the Washita.—Mr. SUMNER'S resolution, expressing sympathy with Cuba in her present struggles, passed, by a vote of 41 yeas to 9 nays.—The House concluded the debate upon the Georgia case. Speeches were received, and eulogies were pronounced upon THADDEUS STEVENS by Messrs. Banks and Bingham, after which the Senate adjourned.

December 57.

In the Senate, a resolution was adopted requesting the Secretary of the Interior to communicate any information he has in regard to enlisting Ute people as peaceful characters or the Indians recently killed or captured by General Custer in his fight with them on the Washita.—Mr. SUMNER'S resolution, expressing sympathy with Cuba in her present struggles, passed, by a vote of 41 yeas to 9 nays.—The House concluded the debate upon the Georgia case. Speeches were received, and eulogies were pronounced upon THADDEUS STEVENS by Messrs. Banks and Bingham, after which the Senate adjourned.

December 58.

In the Senate, a resolution was adopted requesting the Secretary of the Interior to communicate any information he has in regard to enlisting Ute people as peaceful characters or the Indians recently killed or captured by General Custer in his fight with them on the Washita.—Mr. SUMNER'S resolution, expressing sympathy with Cuba in her present struggles, passed, by a vote of 41 yeas to 9 nays.—The House concluded the debate upon the Georgia case. Speeches were received, and eulogies were pronounced upon THADDEUS STEVENS by Messrs. Banks and Bingham, after which the Senate adjourned.

December 59.

In the Senate, a resolution was adopted requesting the Secretary of the Interior to communicate any information he has in regard to enlisting Ute people as peaceful characters or the Indians recently killed or captured by General Custer in his fight with them on the Washita.—Mr. SUMNER'S resolution, expressing sympathy with Cuba in her present struggles, passed, by a vote of 41 yeas to 9 nays.—The House concluded the debate upon the Georgia case. Speeches were received, and eulogies were pronounced upon THADDEUS STEVENS by Messrs. Banks and Bingham, after which the Senate adjourned.

December 60.

In the Senate, a resolution was adopted requesting the Secretary of the Interior to communicate any information he has in regard to enlisting Ute people as peaceful characters or the Indians recently killed or captured by General Custer in his fight with them on the Washita.—Mr. SUMNER'S resolution, expressing sympathy with Cuba in her present struggles, passed, by a vote of 41 yeas to 9 nays.—The House concluded the debate upon the Georgia case. Speeches were received, and eulogies were pronounced upon THADDEUS STEVENS by Messrs. Banks and Bingham, after which the Senate adjourned.

December 61.

In the Senate, a resolution was adopted requesting the Secretary of the Interior to communicate any information he has in regard to enlisting Ute people as peaceful characters or the Indians recently killed or captured by General Custer in his fight with them on the Washita.—Mr. SUMNER'S resolution, expressing sympathy with Cuba in her present struggles, passed, by a vote of 41 yeas to 9 nays.—The House concluded the debate upon the Georgia case. Speeches were received, and eulogies were pron

THE CHRISTMAS-TREE.

A CURIOUS CUSTOM OBSERVED BY THE GREEK CHURCH IN RUSSIA.—SKETCHED BY PAUL FRENZENY.—[SEE PAGE 7.]

A YEAR'S WORK.

SPRING beside the casement
In the chill December day,
While Twilight, wrapped in her misty veil,
Was sobbing her life away:
Hearing the tinkle of the beck,
And the chirp of the lingering bird,
And the whistle of the homeloand hind,
And the low of the distant herd:
Watching the red leaves floating down
From the branches one by one;
Thinking of all that a year could do,
Of all that a year had done.

Sweet as an April morn it rose,
The love that had filled so soon,
Strewing her path with bright May flowers,
Brilliant and warm as June.
It drooped in August's fervid smile,
It fell like the year's last rose;
She can scarcely trace its resting-place,
'Neath December's deep'ning snows.
The blossoms will bloom into life again
At the call of the summer sun,
But nor time nor tide can undo for her
What a single year has done.

Sitting beside the casement
Till the stars gleam through the drs,
The large tears dropping, slow and cold,
On those folded hands of hers.
They glitter as bright in the red fire-light
As the diamond that she wore
Ere she drew it off, the mocking pledge
Of a truth whose truth was o'er.
The hollow darkness around her creeps;
The day's long watch is run;
And all that they swore but Death could do,
A little year has done.

THAT BOY OF NORCOTT'S.

CHAPTER XI.

A BIRTHDAY DINNER.

THE eventful day arrived at last, and now, as I write, I can bring up before me the whole of that morning, so full of exciting sensations and of pleasurable surprises. I wandered about from room to room, never sated with the splendors around me. Till then I had not seen the gorgeous furniture uncovered, nor had I the faintest idea of the beauty and richness of the silk hangings, or the glittering elegance of those lustres of pure Venetian glass. Perhaps nothing, however, astonished me so much as the array of gold and silver plate in the dining-room. Our everyday dinners had been laid out with what had seemed to me a most costly elegance; but what were they to this display of splendid centre-pieces and massive cups and salvers large as shields! Of flowers, the richest and rarest, wagon-loads poured in; and at last I saw the horses taken out, and carts full of carnations and geraniums left unloaded in the stable-yard. Ice, too, came in the same profusion: those squarely cut blocks, bright as crystal, and hollowed out to serve as wine-coolers, and take their place amidst the costlier splendors of gold and silver.

It is rare to hear the servant class reprove profusion; but here I overheard many a comment on the reckless profligacy of outlay which had provided for this occasion enough for a dozen such. It was easy to see, they said, that Mr. Cleremont did not pay, and this sneer sank deep into my mind, increasing the dislike I already felt for him.

Nor was it the house alone was thus splendidly prepared for reception; but kiosks and tents were scattered through the grounds, in each of which, as if by magic, supper could be served on the instant. Upward of thirty additional servants were engaged, all of whom were dressed in our state livery, white, with silver epaulets, and the Norcott crest embroidered on the arm. These had been duly drilled by Mr. Cleremont, and were not, he said, to be distinguished by the most critical eye from the rest of the household.

Though there was movement every where, and every where activity, there was little or no confusion. Cleremont was an adept in organization, and already his skill and cleverness had spread discipline through the mass. He was a despot, however; would not permit the slightest interference with his functions, nor accept a suggestion from any one. "Captain Hotham gives no orders here," I heard him say; and when standing under my window, and, I am almost sure, seeing me, he said, "Master Digby has nothing to do with the arrangements any more than yourself."

I had determined that day to let nothing irritate or vex me; that I would give myself up to unmixed enjoyment, and make this birthday a memorable spot in life, to look back on with undiluted delight. I could have been more certain to carry out this resolve if I could only have seen and spoken with Madame Cleremont; but she did not leave her room the whole day. A distinguished hair-dresser had arrived with a mysterious box early in the morning, and after passing two hours engaged with her, had returned for more toilet requirements. In fact, from the coming and going of maids and dress-makers, it was evident that the preparations of beauty were fully equal to those that were being made by cooks and confectioners.

My father, too, was invisible; his breakfast was served in his own room; and when Cleremont wished to communicate with him, he had to do so in writing; and these little notes passed uncensingly between them till late in the afternoon.

"What's up now?" I heard Hotham say, as Cleremont tore up a note in pieces and flung the fragments from him with impatience.

"Just like him. I know exactly how it would be," cried the other. "He sent a card of invitation to the Duc de Bredar without first making a visit; and here comes the Duc's chasseur to say that his Excellency has not the honor of knowing the gentleman who has been so gracious as to ask him to dinner."

"Norcott will have him out for the imperial nence," said Hotham.

"And what will that do? Will the shooting him or the being shot make this dinner go off as we meant it, eh? Is that for me, Nixon? Give it here." He took a note as he spoke and tore it open. "La Marquise de Carnac is engaged; not a word more. The world is certainly progressing in politeness. Three cards came back this day with the words 'sent by mistake' written on them. Norcott does not know it yet, nor shall he till to-morrow."

"Is it true that the old Countess de Joievillars begged to know who was to receive the ladies invited?"

"Yes, it is true; and I told her a piece of her own early history in return, to assure her that no accident of choice should be any bar to the hope of seeing her."

"What was the story?"

"I'd tell it if that boy of Norcott's was not listening there at that window."

"Yes, Sir," cried I, "I have heard every word, and mean to repeat it to my father when I see him."

"Tell him at the same time, then, that his grand dinner of twenty-eight has now come down to seventeen, and I'm not fully sure of three of these."

I went down into the dining-room, and saw that places had been laid for twenty-eight, and as yet no alteration had been made in the table, so that it at once occurred to me this speech of Clerement's was a mere impertinence—one of those insolent sallies he was so fond of. Nixon, too, had placed the name of each guest on his napkin, and he, at least, had not heard of any apologies.

Given in my honor as this dinner was, I felt a most intense interest in its success. I was standing, as it were, on the threshold of life, and regarded the mode in which I should be received as an augury of good or evil. My father's supremacy at home, the despotism he wielded, and the respect and deference he exacted, led me to infer that he exercised the same influence on the world at large; and that, as I had often heard, the only complaint against him in society was his exclusiveness. I canvassed these thoughts with myself for hours, as I sat alone in my room waiting till it was time to dress.

At last eight o'clock struck, and I went down into the drawing-room. Hotham was there, in a window recess, conversing in whispers with an Italian count—one of our intimates, but of whom I knew nothing. They took no notice of me, so that I took up a paper and began to read. Cleremont came in soon after with a bundle of notes in his hand. "Has your father come down?" asked he, hastily; and then, without waiting for my reply, he turned and left the room. Madame next appeared. I have no words for my admiration of her as, splendidly dressed and glittering with diamonds, she swept proudly in. That her beauty could have been so heightened by more toilet seemed incredible, and as she read my wonderment in my face she smiled, and said:

"Yes, Digby, I am looking my very best to fête your birthday."

I would have liked to have told her how lovely she appeared to me, but I could only blush and gaze wonderingly on her.

"Button this glove, dear," said she, handing to me her wrist all weighted and jingling with costly bracelets; and while, with trembling fingers, I was trying to obey her, my father entered and came toward us. He made her a low but very distant bow, tapped me familiarly on the shoulder, and then moved across to an arm-chair and sat down.

Cleremont now came in, and drawing a chair beside my father's, leaned over and said something in a whisper. Not seeming to attend to what he was saying, my father snatched rather than took the bundle of letters he held in his hand, ran his eye eagerly over some of them; and then, crushing the mass in his grasp, he threw it into the fire.

"It is forty minutes past eight," said he, calmly, but with a deadly pallor in his face. "Can any one tell me if that clock be right?"

"It is eight or ten minutes slow," said Hotham.

"Whom do we wait for, Clerement?" asked my father again.

"Steinmets was 'de service' with the King, but would come if he got free; and there's Rochegude, the French Secretary, who to replace his chief. I'm not quite sure about the Walronds, but Crayden told me positively to expect him."

"Do me the favor to ring the bell and order dinner," said my father, and he spoke with measured calm.

"Won't you wait a few minutes?" whispered Clerement. "The Duke de Frialmont, I'm sure, will be here."

"No, Sir; we live in a society that understands and observes punctuality. No breach of it is accidental. Dinner, Nixon!" added he, as the servant appeared.

The folding-doors were thrown wide almost at once, and dinner announced. My father gave his arm to Madame Cleremont, who actually tottered as she walked beside him, and as she sat down seemed on the verge of fainting. Just as we took our places three young men, somewhat overdressed, entered hurriedly, and were proceeding to make their apologies for being late; but my father, with a chilling distance, assured them they were in excellent time, and motioned them to be seated.

Of the table laid for twenty-eight guests nine places were occupied; and these, by some mischance, were scattered here and there with wide intervals. Madame Clerement sat on my fa-her's right, and three empty places flanked his lunch hand.

"ISN'T THAT BOY OF NORCOTT'S GOING IT TO-NIGHT?"

I sat opposite my father, with two vacant seats on either side of me; Hotham nearest to me, and one of the strangers beside him. They conversed in a very low tone, but short snatches and half-sentences reached me; and I heard the stranger say, "It was too bold a step; women are sure to resent such attempts." Madame Clermont's name, too, came up three or four times; and the stranger said, "It's my first dinner here, and the Breslars will not forgive me for coming."

"Well, there's none of them has such a cook as Norcott," said Hotham.

"I grant you that; but I'd put up with a worse dinner for better company."

I looked round at this to show I had heard the remark, and from that time they conversed in a whisper.

My father never uttered a word during the dinner. I do not know if he ate, but he helped himself and affected to eat. As for Madame, how she sat out those long two hours, week after week, by my side, I can not tell. I saw her once try to lift her glass to her lips, but her hand trembled so she set it down unheard, and lay back in her chair like one dying out of exhaustion.

A few words and a faint attempt to laugh once or twice broke the dead silence of the entertainment, which proceeded, however, in all its stately detail, course after course, till the dessert was handed round, and Tokay, in small tiny glasses, was served; then, my father rose slowly, and drawing himself up to his full height, looked haughtily around him. "May I ask my illustrious friends," said he, "who have this day so graciously honored me with their presence, to drink the health of my son, whose birthday we celebrate. There is no happier augury on entering life than to possess the friendship and goodwill of those who stand foremost in the world's honor. It is his great privilege to be surrounded this day by many and by distinguished. The great in the art of peace and war, and that loveliness which surpasses in its fascination all other rewards, are around me, and I call upon these to drink to the health of Digby Norcott."

All rose and drank: Hotham lifted his glass high in the air, cried a cheer, but never joined him. His voice died away, and he sat down, and for several minutes an unbroken silence prevailed.

My father at last leaned over toward Madame, and I heard the word "coffee." She arose and took his arm, and we all followed close to the drawing-room.

"I'm right glad it's over," said Hotham, as he poured the liquor over his coffee. "I've sat out a court-martial that wasn't slower than that dinner."

"But what's the meaning of it all?" asked another. "Why and how came all these apologies?"

"You'd better ask Clermont, or rather his wife," muttered Hotham, and moved away.

"You ought to get into the open air," that's the best advice you," I heard Clermont say to his wife, but there was such a thorough indifference in the tone it sounded like a kind sister than a sarcasm. She, however, drew a shawl around her, and moved down the steps into the garden. My father soon after retired to his own room, and Clermont, laughingly, said, "There are no women here, and we may have a cigar;" and he threw his case across the table. The whole party were soon immersed in smoke.

I saw that my presence imposed some restraint on the conversation, and soon escaped to my room with a much sadder spirit and a heavier heart than I had left it two hours before.

CHAPTER XII.

THE DUEL.

Reserve, and thinking, and fretting together. I had fallen asleep on my sofa, and was awakened by Mr. Nixon blotting my candles, and asking me in a very low voice if I felt unwell.

"No, nothing of the kind."

"Won't you go down, Sir, then. It's past eleven now, and there's a good many people below."

"Who have come?" asked I, eagerly.

"Well, I don't know, but, with a certain degree of hesitation, "they're not much to talk about. There's eight or nine young gentlemen of the Embassy—fellows like—and Clermont and his twenty officers of the Guides, and there's some more that look like travelers out of the hotels. They call it morning dress."

"Are there no ladies?"

"Yes: I suppose we must call them ladies, Sir. Madame Madame Bignoli and her two daughters."

"The dusty-cook?"

"Yes, Sir; and there are the Mademoiselles Jenson, of the cigar shop, and stunningly dressed they are, too! Amber satin with black lace and Spanish veils on their heads; and there's that little Swedish girl—I believe she's a Swede —that sells the iced drinks."

"But what do you mean? These people have not been invited. How have they come here?"

"Well, Sir, I mustn't tell you a lie, but I hope you'll not betray me if I speak in confidence to you. Here's how it all has happened. The ladies all refused; they agreed together that they'd not come to dinner, nor come in the evening. Mr. Clermont knows why; but it ain't for me to say it."

"But I don't know, and I desire to know!" cried I, haughtily.

"Well, indeed, Sir, it's more than I can tell you. There's people here not a bit corrector than that won't meet her."

"Meet whom?"

"Madame, Sir—Madame Clermont."

"Don't dare to say another word," cried I, passionately. "If you utter a syllable of disrespect to that name I fling you out of the window."

"Don't be afraid, Master Digby; I know my station, and I never forget it, Sir. I was only telling you what you asked me, not a word more. The swells sent back your father's cards, and there's more than three hundred of them returned."

"And where's papa now?"

"In bed, Sir. He told his valet he wasn't to be disturbed except the house took fire."

"Is Madame Clermont below?"

"No, Sir; she's very ill. The doctor has been with her, and he's coming again to-night."

"And are these people—this rabble that you talk of—received as my papa's guests?"

"Only in a sort of a way, Sir," said he, smiling. "You see, that when Mr. Clermont perceived that there was nothing but excuses and apologies pouring in, he told me to close the house, and that we'd let all the hangers-on pass into the grounds, and give them a jolly supper and plenty of Champagne; and he sent word to a many of the officers that they might stay and have a lark; and certainly, as the supper was there, they might as well eat it. The only puzzle is now, won't there be enough for the rest round to all Sir Roger's tradespeople—all at least that has good-looking daughters—and these in by force and contrivance, and right well dressed and well got up, too."

"And what will papa say to all this to-morrow?"

"Don't you know, Sir, that Sir Roger seldom looks back," said he, with a cunning look; "he'll not be disturbed to-night. He'll have his shut up, and the bands are playing, one at the lake, the other at the end of the long walk, and the supper will be over about the time when they can cheer and drink toasts without annoying any one."

"It's a downright infamy!" cried I.

"It ain't the correct thing, sure enough, Sir, there's none of us could say that; but it will be a great day in Hotham's mind, 'the women are a precious sight better looking than the countesses'."

"Where is Mr. Eccles?"

"I saw him waltzing, Sir, or maybe it was the polka, with Madame Robineau just as I was coming up to you."

"I'll go down and tell Mr. Clermont to dismiss his friends," cried I, starting up all in a rage. "Papa meant this fête to celebrate my birthday. I'll not accept such rabble congratulations. Mr. Clermont must have an order, let him seek for another place to give it in."

"Don't go, master, don't I entreat you!" cried he, imploringly. "You'll only make a row, and bring down Sir Roger, and then who's to say what will happen? He'll have a dozen duels on his hands in half a week, and some of the officers won't stand being called to account, and Sir Roger is not the man to be sweet-tempered with them."

"And am I to see my father's name insulted, and his house dishonored by such a canaille crew?"

"Just come down and see them, Master Digby; prettier, nicer girls you never saw in your life, and gentlemen, too, Sir. I'll lay a hundred if he ever mixed with a nicer company. There now, Sir, slip on your velvet jackets—it looks nicer than that tail-coat—and come down. They'll be all proud and glad to see you, and won't she hold her head high that you ask to take a turn of a waltz with you?"

"And how should I face my father to-morrow?" said I, blushing deeply.

"Might I tell you, Master Digby?" said he, leaning over the table, and speaking almost in my ear.

"Go on," said I, dryly.

"I know well, Sir, you'll never throw me over, and what I'm going to tell you is worth gold to you."

"Go on," cried I, for he had ceased to speak.

"Here it is, then," said he, with an effort. "The greatest sorrow your father knows, Master Digby, is that he thinks you have no spirit in you—have not a dacent pride. As he told me one day to Mr. Clermont, 'You must teach him every thing, he has no "go" in himself; there's nothing in his nature but what somebody else put into it.'"

"He never said that!"

"I pledge you my oath he did."

"Well, if he did, he meant it very differently from what you do."

"There's no two meanings to it. There's a cheer!" cried he, running over to the window and flinging it wide. "I wonder who's come now? Oh, it's the fire-work fellow, I suppose."

"I'll go down," said I, but out of what process of reasoning came that resolve I am unable to tell.

"Maybe they won't be glad to see you!" cried he, as he helped me on with my jacket and arranged the heron's feathers in my velvet cap. I was half laboring at an excuse for myself, and thought me of that charge of feebleness of character Nixon had reported to me, and I determined to show what might, I had not. Next I had a will and could follow it. In less than five minutes after, I found myself among the trees in the garden shaking hands with scores of people I never saw before, and receiving the very politest and most flattering compliments on my very pretty lips, aided by very expressive eyes.

Here's Mademoiselle Pauline Delorme refuses to dance with me," cried Eccles, "since she has seen the head of the house. Digby, let me present you." And with this he led me up to a very beautiful girl, who, though only the daughter of a celebrated Restaurateur of Brussels, might have been a Princess, so far as look and breeding and elegance were concerned.

"This is to be the correct thing," cried Clermont. "We open with a quadrille; take your partners, gentlemen, and to your places."

Nothing can be more perfectly proper and decorous than this dance. It is possible, perhaps, that we exceeded a little on the score of reverential observance: we bowed and courtesied at every imaginable opportunity, and with an air of homage that smacked of a court, and if we did raise our eyes to each other, as we received from the obeisance, it was with a look of the profoundest humility and deference. I really began to think that the only hopelessly people I had ever seen were ladies and gentlemen. As for Eccles, he wore an air of almost reverential gravity, and Hotham was sternly composed. At last, however, we came to the finish, and Clermont, clapping his hands thrice, called out grande ronde; and taking his partner's arm within his own, led off at a gallop; the music striking up and the ladies's widows quickest strains. Away he went down an alley, and we all after him, stamping and laughing like mad. The darkness only added to the gayety. The moment before was electric; no longer arm in arm, but with arms close clasped around the waist, and hands over the shoulder, the turf with a will delight to which the music imparted a thrilling ecstasy. Now through the dense shade we broke into a blaze of light, where a great buffet stood; and round this we all swarmed at once, and glasses were filled with Champagne, and vivas shouted almost to the echo; and I heard that my health was toasted, and a very sweet voice—the lips were on my ear—whispered I knew not what, but it sounded very like making me joy and love, while others were deafening me about long life and happiness.

I only remember—I do not want to remember—all the nonsense I talked, and with a volubility quite new to myself, being fain to fill up with a tone of wild ecstasy; and as homage and deference met me at every step, my every wish anticipated, I felt that my head struck me more and more as bright inspiration, no wonder was it if I lost myself in a perfect ocean of bliss. Champagne flowed like the queen of the feast, and ordered a splendid wreath of flowers to be brought, which I placed upon her brows, and saluted her as Queen of the Night, amidst the rising shouts of willing tosters. Except to make a tour of a walk or a polka with some one I knew, I would not grant the chance with any one but myself; and she, I must say, most graciously submitted to the tyranny, and seemed to delight in the extravagant expressions of my admiration for her.

If I was madly jealous of her, I felt the most overwhelming gratitude for praises bestowed upon her beauty and her gracefulness. I perhaps the consciousness that I was a mere boy, and that had I been presented to her in my proper character would have been reprehensible with one older, led her to treat me with a degree of intimacy that was positively captivating; and before one third waltz was over I was calling her Pauline, and she calling me Digby, like old friends.

"Will you not grant me a dance with you, my self; and she, I must say, most graciously submitted to the tyranny, and seemed to delight in the extravagant expressions of my admiration for her.

If I was madly jealous of her, I felt the most overwhelming gratitude for praises bestowed upon her beauty and her gracefulness. I perhaps the consciousness that I was a mere boy, and that had I been presented to her in my proper character would have been reprehensible with one older, led her to treat me with a degree of intimacy that was positively captivating; and before one third waltz was over I was calling her Pauline, and she calling me Digby, like old friends.

"Will you not grant me a dance with you, my dear?" said Pauline, as I tried to shake myself free of her.

"I want to follow those men. I have a word to say to them."

"You shall do no such thing, dearest," muttered she. "You have just told me I am to be your little wife, and I am not going to see you head rushing into a stupid quarrel."

"And you are mine, then," cried I; "and you will not be angry if I kiss you before all?" Come, let me take off your glove."

"Not at all, my love; that's quite enough for courtesy, and a little too much for deference," whispered Eccles in my ear; for I was kissing with rapture the hand of that beauty, and she laughed at my raptures as an excellent joke. "I think you'd better lead the way to supper."

Secretly enough this suggestion of mine was short work of Mr. Eccles and his admonitions, I gave him a haughty glance and moved on. I remember even at that moment that I walked at the head of the table and placed Pauline on my right. I know I made some absurd speech in proposing the health of my father, and spoke of us, and what we—Pauline and myself—felt, and with what pleasure we should see our friends most attentive to the wishes of that tenderly touching name, and a brain addled with noise and heated with wine. I was frequently interrupted; my sentences finished by the moment; bread, breast, broth, but still louder laughter would ring out and convulse the whole assembly. Even addled and confused as I was, I could see that some were my partisans and friends, who approved of all I said, and wished me to give free course to my feelings; and others—two or three—who tried to stop me; and one actually said aloud, "I say that boy of Norcott's is not suppressed as he shall have to suppress."

Recalled to my dignity as a host by this impertinence, I believe I put some restraint on my eloquence, and I now addressed myself to do the honors of the table. Alas! my attentions seldom strayed beyond my lovely neighbor, and I firmly believed that none could remark the rapture with which I gazed on her, or so much as suspected that I had never quitted the grasp of her hand from the moment we sat down.

I think you'd better let Mademoiselle dance the cotillon with the Count Vaughan," whispered Eccles in my ear.

"And why, Sir?" rejoined I, half fiercely.

"I think you might guess," said he, with a smile; "at least you could if you were to get up."

"And would she—would Pauline—I mean, would Mademoiselle Delorme—approve of this arrangement?"

"No, Monsieur Digby, not if it did not come from you. We shall sit in the shade yonder for half an hour or so, and then, when you are rested, we'll join the cotillon."

"Get that boy off to bed, Eccles," said Clermont, who did not scruple to utter the words aloud.

I started up to make an indignant rejoinder; some fierce insult was on my lips; but passion and excitement and wine mastered me, and I sank back on my seat overcome and senseless.

CHAPTER XIII.

REMORSE.

I cannot say what was the day after the fête. I was conscious that Nixon was making a considerable noise—that he shut and opened doors and windows, splashed the water into my mouth, and threw down my boots with an unwonted energy; but through all this consciousness of disturbance I was quiet, and was determined to sleep, let him make what uproar he pleased.

"It's nigh two o'clock, Sir!" whispered he in my ear, and I replied by a snore.

"I'm very sorry to be troublesome, Sir; but the master is very impatient; he was getting up when I went in last time."

These words served to dispel my drowsiness at once, and the mere thought of my father's displeasure made me like a strong man awakened.

"Does papa want me?" cried I, sitting up in bed; "did you say papa wanted me?"

"Yes, Sir," said a deep voice, and my father entered the room, dressed for the street, and with his hat on.

"You may leave us," said he to Nixon; and as the man withdrew my father took a chair and sat down close to my bedside.

"I have sent these messages to you this morning," said he, gravely, "and am forced at last to come myself.

"Dispensing my apologies, when he stopped me, and said, "That will do; I have no wish to be told why you overslept yourself; indeed, I have already heard more than I cared to hear than I care for."

He paused, and though perhaps he expected me to say something, I was too much terrified to speak.

"I perceive," said he, "you understand me; you apprehend that I know of your doings of last night, and that any attempt at excuse is hopeless. I do not come here to reproach you for your misconduct; I reproach myself for a mistaken estimate of you; I ought to have known better. I ought to have been a friend where I now find a stranger—I suspect Weimar will do. He will be paymaster, and you will confer a favor by sending in your repeats expense. Whether you study or not, whether you employ your time profitably and creditably, or whether you pass it in dissipation, is a matter that completely regards yourself. As for me, my conscience is acquitted when I provide you with the means of acquirement, and I no more engage you to benefit by these advantages than I do to see you eat the food that is placed before you. The responsibility ceases as rejoins distinct duties from each. You need not write to me till I desire you to do so; and when I do I promise you I should much rather not."

If, while he spoke these harsh words to me, the slightest touch of feeling—had one trace of love never crossed his features—my whole heart would have melted at once, and I would have thrown myself at his feet in penitence. There was, however, a something so pitiless in his tone, and a look so full of scorn in his steadfast eye, that every moment of pause only added that same pride I inherited from himself—stimulated me to answer him, and I said, boldly: "If the people I saw here last night were not a well born as your habitual guests, Sir, I'll venture to say there was nothing in their manner or deportment to be ashamed of."

"I am told that Mlle. Pauline Delorme was charming," said he; and the sarcasm of his manner increased with almost every sentence. He had no need to say more: I could not utter a word.

"This is a topic I will not discuss with you, Sir," said he, after a pause. "I intended you to be a gentleman, and to live with gentlemen. Your tastes incline differently, and I make no opposition to them. As I have told you already, I was willing to launch you into life: I'll be you shall have no paper plan. Whatever I take, or could take in you, must be the result of your own qualities. These have not impressed me strongly up to this; and were I to judge by what I have seen, I should send you back to those you came from."

"Do so, then, if it will only give me back the nature I brought away with me!" cried I, passionately; and my throat swelled till I felt almost choked with emotion.

"That nature," said he, with a sneer on the word, "was contemptible, if I remember it, in a boy of fifteen and a pair of patched shoes, and I believe they have been preserved along with some other family relics"

I bethought me at once of the tower and its humble furniture, and a sense of terror overcame me, that I was in presence of one who could cherish hate with such persistence.

"The flames of your knight's debauch are some excuse for your bad manners, Sir," said he, rising. "I leave you to sleep them off; only remember that main starts at eight this evening, and it is my desire you do not miss it."

With this he left me. I arose at once and proceeded to dress. It was sheer procedure, for I would often stop and sit down to think what course would best befit me to take at this moment. At one instant it seemed to me I ought to follow him, and declare that the splendid slavery to which I had had no charm for me—that the faintest glimmering of self-respect and independence was more my ambition than all the luxuries and surroundings and; and when I had resolved I would do this, a sudden dread of his presence—his eye, that I could never face without shuddering—the tones of his voice, that spoke me like a lash—so shashed me that I gave up the effort with despair.

Night was at once to give me some pittance, enough to save her from the burden of my support, and send me back to my mother? Oh, if I could summon courage to ask this! What assistance need be continued only for a few years, for I hoped and believed I should not even have to live as a dependent. What if I were to write him a few lines to this purport. I could do this even better than speak it.

I sat down at once and began.

"Dear papa"—he would never permit me to use a more endearing word. "Dear papa, I hope you will forgive me troubling you about myself and my future. I would like to fit myself for some career or calling by which I might become independent, and I could very well live and study very closely if I were back with my mother."

As I reached this far the door opened and Felice appeared.

"All right" I cried he; I was afraid I should catch you so still, and I'm glad you've taken to preparing for the road. Are you nearly ready?"

"Not quite; I wanted to write a letter before I go. I was just at it."

"Write from Verviers or Bonn; you'll have lots of time on the road."

"Ay, but letter might save me from the journey if I sent it off now!"

He looked amazed at this, and I at once told him my plan and what hint what I had in view.

"You don't mean to say you'd have courage to send this to your father?"

"And why not?"

"Well, all I have to say is, don't do it till I'm off the premises; for I'd not be here when he reads it for all the world. What he'd do outright, which sometimes means questioned. Take your hat and stick, and go down to the river, in Heaven's name, you must, but don't set out on your life's journey with a curse or a kick, or possibly both. If I preach patience, my dear boy, I have had experience of it, too. I set up your traps in your portmanteau. Come down and take some dinner. We'll start with the nightmain; and you'll travel for a while, I suppose, fully ramble and enjoy yourselves heartily. If I know any thing of life, it is that there's no such mistake in life as hunting up anxiously and early. Let them find us if they can; but let us never run after them."

"My heart is too heavy for such enjoyment as you talk of."

"It won't be so to-morrow, or, at all events, the day after. Come, stir yourself now with your packing; I thought has just struck me that you'll be very grateful to me when I call it up."

"What is it?" asked I, half carelessly.

"You must ask with another guess-look in your eye if you want me to tell you."

"You could tell me nothing that would gladden me."

"Nor propose any thing that you'd like?" asked he.

"Nor that either," said I, despondingly.

"Oh, if that be the case, I give up my project; not that it was much of a project after all. What I was going to suggest was, that instead of dining here, and sleeping our tired heads off, we'd drive down to Delorme's, and have a pleasant little dinner there, in the garden; it's quite close to the railroad, so that we could start at the last whistle."

"That does sound pleasantly," said I, "there's nothing like a change in the way than hanging about a station waiting for departure."

"So then you agree?" cried he, with a malicious twinkle in his eye that I affected not to understand.

"Yes," said I, indolently; "I see little against it; and I really, after all, owe you a leave-taking with Captain Hotham and Claremont."

"By-the-way, you are not to ask to see Madame ; you've never reminded me to tell you this. The doctors say she is not to be disturbed on any account. What a chance that I did not forget this!"

Whether it was that I was too much concerned for my own misfortunes to have a thought that was not selfish, or that another feeling having that loomed in the distance was uppermost in my thoughts, certain it is I felt this privation for less acutely than I might.

"She's a nice little woman, and deserves a better lot than she has met with."

"What sort of dinner will Delorme give us?" said I, affecting the air of a man about town, but in reality drawing out the bait to lead the talk in that direction.

"First-rate, if we let him; that is, if we only say, 'Order dinner for us,' Monsieur Pierre. There's no man understands such a mandate more thoroughly."

"Then that's what I shall say," cried I, "as I crave his threshold."

"He'll serve you Madeira with your soup, and Steinberger with your fish, thirty francs a bottle, both of them."

"Be it so. We shall drink to our pleasant journey," said I, and I actually thought my voice had caught the tone and cadence of my father's as I spoke.

CHRISTMAS VOICES.

Voices of the belfry height,
Pealing forth your merry chimes,
Sound upon the winter night,
Melodies of Christmas times.
As of old, the yule-log bring,
Bind the holly round the hall;
At the gate the minstrels sing
Messages of peace to all.

Chorus.

Voices of the belfry height,
Pealing forth your merry chimes,
Sound upon the winter night,
Melodies of Christmas times.
Melodies of Christmas times.

Voices of the Christmas morn,
Calling to the sleeping West,
Eve the crimson light is born,
And the stars are gone to rest,
Wake the hearts
Lost upon the frozen earth;
Underneath the snowy skies,
Dreaming of a Christmas hearth.

Chorus.

Voices of the belfry height,
Pealing forth your merry chimes,
Sound upon the winter night,
Melodies of Christmas times.

Voices of the Christmas day,
May your echoes ring across,
As the seasons pass away,
Heralding a world's increase.
Through the mystery of time,
Stands alone the Truth divine;
Through the clouds of darkest fears,
Starlike, will it ever shine.

Chorus.

Voices of the belfry height,
Pealing forth your merry chimes,
Sound upon the winter night,
Melodies of Christmas times.

THE SHORTNESS OF TIME.

"LIVE as long as you may, the first twenty years are the longest half of it." Such, we are told, was said by one of our modern writers, and I doubt whether any thing more true was ever said by any man.

Don't you find—you that have reached middle life, and you that are approaching middle age—that time passes much more quickly than it used to pass? Don't you find, when the evening comes and the day's work is over, that it seems only a few minutes since the day's work began? You may have been very busy; but when you return home to your children it appears a very short time since you left them in the morning. Of course there are exceptional seasons, as when health is bad, or when a heavy grief presses you down; but, on the whole, it is not now a subject of constant remark that the days pass with incredible rapidity?

And don't you remember when the case was very different? Don't you remember how long the day used to be, when you yourself were a child—how a crowd of things happened, how applied and diversified the hours—and how extensive the prospect was when you looked toward the future? The fact is, you and your children are living lives of different lengths in the same space of time. The day is far longer to them than to you. Look at them when you leave and. You feel, when you think of it, as if its beginning and its ending were almost the same. When they get their little heads on the pillow, weary with their twelve hours' play—their toys broken—their pockets empty—their mouths full of hearty merry laugh, their eager quarrels, at length brought to a pause—those twelve hours have been made, to them, as various and copious existence. Your toys too, perhaps, are broken —you too may have been occupied with trifles—your laughter and your toughtiness—your quarrels inconsiderate—but your longer, your more responsible day, has been far shorter than theirs.

It might not be very difficult to explain this. Our sense of the lapse of time does not depend entirely, or quite, on the fact of occupation or routine itself. When impressions are vivid, forcible, and fresh the time seems long. When the events of our lives are habitual and ordinary—when all to-morrow will be an diligent occupation—the time seems short. Any man may test this for himself by comparing passages of his own experience. The first few days spent in a new place are longer than those that succeed them. Expanding in novelty, we glance from the stream above us, quietly and rapidly as before. And no one, on the other side, needs to be told that days of anxiety and watching, when the mind is consciously on the stretch, are frightfully long. The battle of Waterloo, for instance, can you not imagine, if you remember the circumstances of that engagement, how different was the length of that summer day to the great captain, on the one hand, on whom rested all the suspense and responsibility, and to some private soldier in the ranks, on the other, who merely passed and with nothing to think of but to be prompt and to obey?

How desirable then to make sure of doing something in the present which really will bear good fruit in the future!

"Ah no!
There is no rest:
Our Time is fleeting:
What rein can curb our headstrong hours?
They pass and pass, they pass, we know not how:
Our Now is gone before we can say Now:
Time past and future's noon of days:
That hath as yet no being,
And this is now no more to be:
What is, is only ours: how short a time have we!"

CURIOUS CUSTOM OF THE GREEK CHURCH IN RUSSIA.

THERE is a very curious custom observed by the Greek Church in Constant Russia, which we illustrate on page 1. It is the baptism at Christmas of the patron saint. Each church and each city has its particular patron. In the larger towns the ceremony is performed by a bishop. A cross is cut in the ice, and the patron saint, represented by a carved wooden effigy, is baptized in the name represented in cow cut in the ice, the bishop officiating and performing the ceremony. It is a curious custom, and shows the tendency so manifest in the Greek and Roman Catholic Churches to please the people with shows.

HOME AND FOREIGN GOSSIP.

THE week before and after Christmas is most emphatically known as the week when everything possible and impossible thing, which by any chance could pawn was made to child. The amount of inventive ingenuity expended on children's toys is wonderful—to say nothing of the amount of cash annually expended in buying them. A great many of the articles for juvenile amusement come from Germany, France, and Switzerland, but in our own country the manufacture of toys is becoming an extensive business; and the number of many a stump-pulling has made his fortune. Notwithstanding the enormities of gold-loving monopolists, boys will persist in liking any thing that makes a noise, no matter how horrible that noise may be. Consequently the two hundred thousand people who will be said to be made every month in the city of Paris, are scarcely enough to supply the demands of the Parisian manufacturers of brass trumpets as driven with work. Girls, on the contrary, are more happy as when they have a whole family of dolls, which they can dress in nudities, instruct and discipline, love, pet, and be displeased with, according to the most modern fashion. Sometimes, to be sure, they aspire to something better, and, instead of sewing seams and walking dolls, as did a little six-year-old, who, when very desirous of playing with a little cousin, was told that she must amuse herself with her doll, stated, "But, mamma," said the child, "my doll can't run out doors and play with me, can she?"

It is a good thing to brighten the lives of children; and their joy is not the only joy of the whole household. The Christmas toys are to most children the object of a long anticipation, and are to be received with the most eager delight. Yet we often make a great mistake in the selection. Children want playthings which will amuse something in a way more the better, if within their capacity. A hoop that moves by itself is not half so much amuse so long as the ordinary hoop and stick, which calls every muscle into activity. A jumping-jack is the most modern toy whittle, or a box of tools, will not only develop, but train muscles that will be of many an intricate but automatic toy. And every mother knows that her little girl takes infinitely more comfort in making a "lady" out of a clothes-pin and pinning it up in shawls and sheets, than in any thing she can do with the wax beauty, in the elaborate dress of the full-length bedding, and whose arms and legs are broken if we do not. Let the children have sensible toys, which will give their opening faculties something to do, which are not too nice to use, and which will not interfere with their tender and very extravagant or wholesome ideas.

Some protection against burglars is highly desirable, but recovered is not always the best safeguard. A week or two ago, a farmer living near St. Joseph, Missouri, heard footsteps on the roof about midnight. He had money in the house, and attempts had been previously made by burglars to enter the premises. Armed with a revolver, he went toward the door, but, judging by the sound that the burglars were retreating, he made no return to his bedroom. Meantime his wife had left the bed and was standing at the window looking out upon the roof. Her husband, supposing that she was still in bed, and seeing a human form at the window, concluded at once that it was a burglar about to enter the window, and, without challenging, drew his revolver and fired upon the man, his wife soon brought him the knowledge that he had shot her. The wound, though a very dangerous one, will probably not prove fatal; but the shooting was nearly frantic at his sad mistake.

On Sunday evening of last week Dr. J. T. Boynton delivered a lecture on the Bible, at the Cooper Institute. At the close of the lecture the lights in the hall were turned off, and the magic screen on the platform appeared, in rapid succession, pictures illustrative of scenes in the Bible, which were described and thus connected with religion in various parts of the world.

A suggestion has been made more than once, and from different quarters, that some arrangement be made whereby public reading-rooms and libraries may be established in hotels and on ferry-boats. There are probably thousands of young men in our city who, if such facilities were at their disposal, perhaps, to pay for a bare lodging-place, but not for a warm room, or for gas-light. Is it strange that such men look for a comfortable spot, during the cold winter time, where they can spend their spare hours? And if there are not enough respectable places where they can be warm, and also have some occupation, they will go elsewhere. The expense to the owner of all kinds would be diminished, especially on the Sabbath, if many of these pleasant rooms were open to those who are homeless and friendless.

George Peabody has made another donation of one hundred thousand dollars to the poor of London.

An English gentleman has issued a volume which he calls "A Clear and Easy Guide to the Art of Making English Verse." What an avalanche of poets will this develop before January 1870!

The infanta of Spain is of small and delicate stature, exceedingly pale, and not beautiful in appearance. Her eyes are large and very soft, without the smallest reminiscence of the fire which sometimes flashes from those of her mother. Her hair is of the dimmest hue of chestnut, and folded around her head in a double necklace, which has become the fashion and characteristic of the Spanish women. The Count Girgenti, her husband, is of cold, determined aspect, of multi height, and dark in complexion. The pallor of his visage makes the black mustache and royale he wears, according to the fashion of some seven years ago, appear even darker than in reality.

An example of the wondrous manner in which human life is preserved amidst great danger was lately afforded at the works of an edge-tool maker in Northampton, England. One important branch of employment making is the grinding, which gives the polish and the edge to the implements manufactured. The grindstones are of large size, generally from two to three tons, and require, by means of steam, with very great velocity. The grinder sits upon a "horse," a long plank of ice, which is slightly inclined toward the face of the stone to enable him to press the implements against it. This "horse" is secured to the ground by strong chains. The great danger in the breaking of the stone, when from the great velocity by which it comes to pieces, the broken pieces are cast with most destructive force. On the occasion referred to three grinders were at work in the shop, and the same Clark, working at a new stone weighing about two tons. All at once Clarke's stone split in three parts. One piece, weighing about nine hundred-weight, flew up higher than the roof, caught the brim of his hat, and knocked it off his head, the stone striking the roof and bringing it down. A second piece of stone of equal weight as the same moment clipped another workman, almost touching him, and the next second the half of the stone remaining fell with such force against the "horse" upon which Clark was sitting as to send it flying at an angle from his seat up through the broken and fallen roof, and in a second he found himself in the most remarkable manner, standing upon the roof, and looking down the shop into the street. The shop was in ruins, but Clark was found safe upon the wall, and the other workmen, though buried beneath the fallen roof, were uninjured. Such occurrences are frequent, and generally are either fatally injured, but seldom have any so wonderously escaped.

In a sermon delivered by the Rev. Henry Ward Beecher a week or two ago, he remarked that a man must have considerable standing, must do much toward benefiting the condition of his fellow-man, in order to fulfill to some measure the duties of life he was created. How many men and women apply this simple test to their ordinary avocations?

According to a traveler on the Union Pacific Railroad, there is no danger of starving in the far West at present. He says that not when the train was at a station they passed over a platform into a large hotel. The dining-room was in readiness for the two hundred passengers that crowded into it, and supper was to be seen until a door opened and the waiters paraded into the room with soiled cloths and took their places, as in a first-class city hotel.

"What will you have, Sir?

"What have you got?"

"Bear, buffalo, antelope, brook-trout—"

"Stop!" cried the traveler. "Give me those as far as you've got."

Another terrible kerosene accident. Only a very short time ago a mother and two children were burned to death in Long Island in consequence of the fluid of a lighted lamp filled with kerosene. In this more recent case, in Brooklyn, a Mrs. M'Guiness was dusting the mantle-piece of a room where were children with kerosene. It fell upon a hot stove, and breaking, the fluid spilled, and immediately took fire. Mrs. M'G. ran to the enveloping her almost instantly in one sheet of flame. Her husband and daughter came to her assistance, and their clothing also caught fire. All were terribly burned, and the result is uncertain.

The funeral of Baron Rothschild is said to have been one of the most remarkable which ever occurred in Paris. The Jewish ceremonies attending the residence of the deceased throughout the entire day. Orders had been issued that every house person so afflicted charity should receive a Napoleon, and not less than fifteen thousand men, women, and children made application. The funeral procession itself was attended with the greatest simplicity, but the procession which followed it was truly magnificent, while more than twenty thousand attended the reception of the relatives.

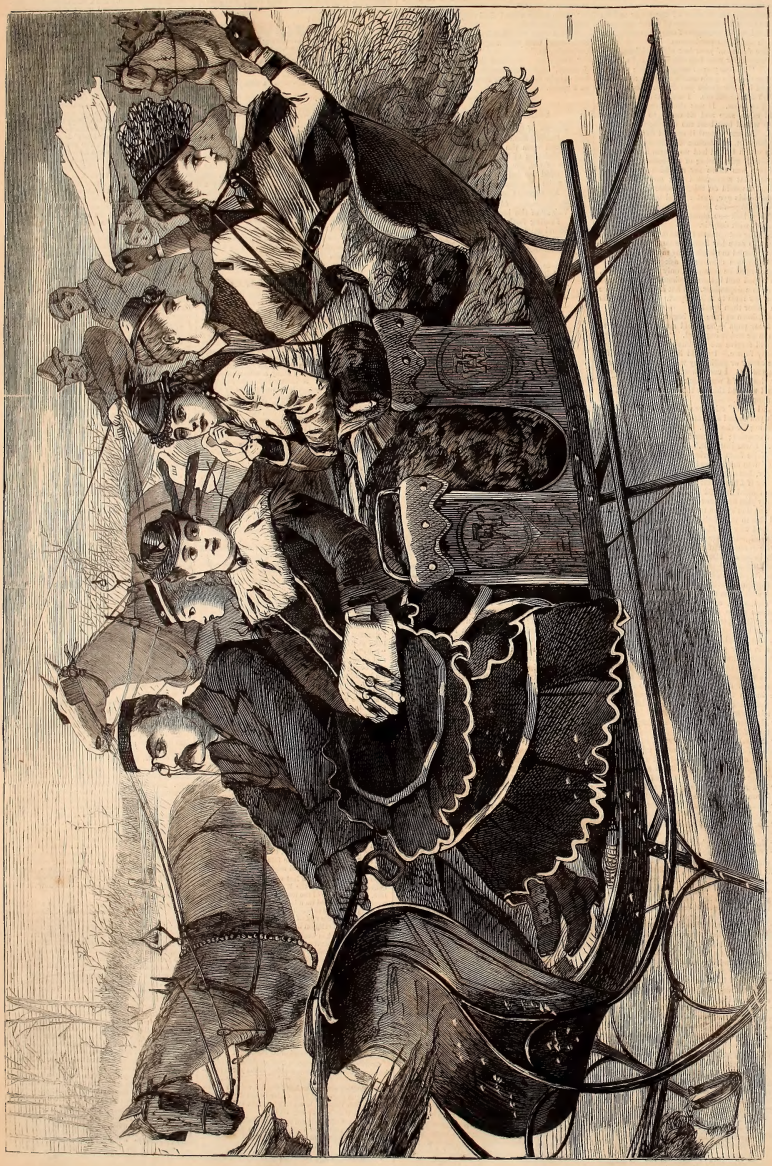
Rossini's funeral, also, was attended by a great concourse of people. The religious service was solemnized in the new Church of the Trinity, and the music on the occasion is said to have been most impressive.

Nilsson, Mlle. Patti, Gassier, and other singers like these interpreting the choicest music, on such an occasion, no wonder that the effect would be very solemn electric, and many were affected to tears.

Not long since a gentleman of Cincinnati went to Indianapolis to attend the case of his son in the latter city. He obtained the license and presented the magic document to the clerk, who was busy at his desk writing. The reverend was about to take place in the evening, and the clerk set out at once to perform the rite. In order to avoid needless care of baggage the trunks were previously dispatched by express. The clergyman arrived, and the clerk made short work of the case; but the license was demanded. Whereupon the bridegroom referred to the fact that he had given it right —he had the license. But when the clergyman said he must see it, he told him it was in his trunk at rack! The produced a panic—a duplicate license, however, was hastily obtained, and the ceremony performed. Then he went to bed for the happy couple to follow the trunk and the original license.

"Have to" is the new French manage to avoid rudeness, but what American would ever take the trouble to accomplish such a result? A gentleman the day he noticed there an elderly gentleman, who evidently had made prodigious exertions to get a passage while away as much time as possible over his dinner and the newspaper until then not interesting to him. One day, however, he got rather too much asleep; he began to snore—louder and louder. Those at the table of the gentleman referred, then annoyed, and finally rather indignant as the sonorous sound continued to increase. The waiter of the restaurant, seeing how matters stood, took a crooked goblet from the shelf, and going to the table next to the sleeping gentleman, began busily to rearrange the glass and china upon it. The gentleman awoke, and after looking fell to the floor (it was the cracked goblet, of course) broken into a hundred fragments. "Pardon, monsieur," said the waiter, as he started to depart, now thoroughly aroused, sat upright, and gazed at the debris at his feet. But the nap was ended for that day, though the somnolent gentleman believed himself to have been awakened by a rare accident.

The climate of Prince Edward Island is exceedingly salubrious, and, if reports are correct, the place is almost distressingly quiet. A traveler there asked a resident: "What are your politics here? What do you talk about?" "Why," was the reply, "we have no politics," and he spoke the truth. He asked a physician: "What are your prevailing diseases?" "We have no prevailing diseases," was the truth.



CHRISTMAS BELLES.—[DRAWN BY WINSLOW HOMER.]

HOME FOR THE HOLIDAYS.

THE OLD AND THE NEW.

I HAVE turned the lights of the merry old year low,
And wheeled my chair to the grate's dim glow;
And now, while the darkened city toils
The night's mid-watch from its steeple-bells—
While the sad gems born for a fleeting ghost,
I lift my goblet and pledge my toast:

Le roi est mort—vive le roi!

I drink to the dead year's next of kin.
Parting and welcome—so runs the word;
"The old year's out and the new year's in."

The greeting to birth and the farewell to death—
The male and the female in one light breath—
Ah, not with the same glad heart and brow
As I speak one now as I speak them now!
For the blood of youth has a warmth divine,
And the toast should be given o'er the grandchild's wine:
We toil and we moil but to fail at last,
And life is a wearisome web to spin,
Where the best we think of time goes knit with death—
"The old year out and the new year in!"

What riches they left me, those vanished years,
What treasure of splendid souvenirs!
Each one, as he passed to the mighty gloom
Of dreamless unremembering tomb,
Would point to a palace, dazzling-fair,
By a sea of dreams, on a coast of air,
And murmur, "This wealth of hope is thine—
Thine for the future to grandly win!"
Oh, merrily in my youth I drank
"The old year out and the new year in!"

And they recklessly lost from my fading sight,
These summer visions, bright as daylight—
Mistily spacious, delicate, proud,
With star-seeking spires and domes of cloud!
No; some of all splendor, seen faint and ill,
The phantoms of phantoms, I view them still!
Yet vaguer and more lost as the seasons speed
Who knows but their ruins to vapor thin
Shall have melted at last, ere I drink the present one—
"The old year out and the new year in!"

Well, well, we shall find those fair hopes, it may be,
That have died down so insensibly as
Amid some day life's tear-blotted pages behold,
Re-written by angels in letters of gold!
Past, before, always, for the dead year's ghost,
While I lift my goblet and pledge my toast:
We toil and we moil but to fail at last,
And life is a wearisome web to spin;
But some day the shuttle must cease to move,
And the labor end, and the rest begin!

THE BARRISTER.

I REGRET to say that my story is of the shop, shoppy! I use the word regret advisedly, weighed down by the melancholy reflection that somehow or other whenever I am called upon to make myself agreeable and entertaining, I always fly to professional sources for inspiration. The only case I can offer upon the present occasion is that this particular railway, conveying me as it does round circuit twice a year, awakens many reminiscences, one of which, connected with the Spring assizes at Reading some years ago, comes back forcibly to my mind.

It was in the earlier days of my Bar career, and briefs were far from being as plentiful as blackberries in September—in fact, I was seriously contemplating pawning my wig and gown, and emigrating with the proceeds to British Columbia, or some equally distant and desolate locality. Fortunately for me and society generally, which sooner or later must recognize my distinguished abilities by placing me on the woolsack, I abandoned the idea of British Columbia, and went to Reading. A beneficent fate rewarded me for my courage in the shape of a big brief with a small fee, to defend two men for conspiring to cheat a young gentleman, with more money than brains, by gambling with him and using loaded dice. It was a case that had excited a good deal of interest in the neighborhood, partly from the very remarkable way in which the cheat had been discovered by a stranger who happened to be in the room when the play was going on, and who, suspecting that all was not right, had with a large carving-fork pinned the hand of one of the conspirators to the table. Unfortunately, it was enough, as he found the loaded dice, which he had manipulated up his cuff with considerable skillfully hid the reckless youth found himself some five hundred pounds to the bad. As counsel for the defendants the aspect of the case was far from promising, and, on the very beery solicitor who instructed me observing, "I reckoned uncommon fishy."

The case opened. I entirely concurred, and folded up the papers with a hopeless sigh, cursing the ill-luck that always brought me the dudest cases. In the present instance there was nothing for me to do but to sit by and hold my tongue—a process, by-the-way, any thing but satisfactory to one fond of hearing the sound of his own voice. Apart from professional regrets, I could not help feeling that this precious pair of rascals thoroughly deserved all they were likely to get, and the longer they were shut up the better for the community at large.

The trial came on in due course, and the two prisoners were placed at the bar. As I looked at them I was much struck by their gentlemanly appearance and dress; but then I remembered that all that was part of the stock-in-trade of persons of their class, and turning to my brief prepared to do battle. As this is but a subordinary portion of my story it is needless for me to linger over the details of the trial. They say that a lucky fate often follows on the footsteps of rogues, and in this instance, by some unpardonable carelessness on the part of the constable, the loaded dice which had been found under the hand of one of the prisoners were not forthcoming, and after a great deal of wrangling with the counsel on the other side, the learned judge said that the prosecution in not producing it had, in his opinion, failed to make out a sufficient case to go to the jury, and that he must therefore direct a verdict for the acquittal of the prisoners. They were as much astonished as I overpowered as myself by the unexpected turn things had taken, and with admirable celerity disappeared from the dock.

Some four years afterward I received a very pressing invitation from my old Eton friend, Charlie Forrester, asking me to run down to his place in Devonshire, and spend a few days there. Master Charlie, whose lines had fallen in exceedingly pleasant places, and who at twenty-one had come into a very nice estate and some five thousand pounds annually, after tantalizing all the marriageable girls in the county by refusing to go to the Bar and qualify himself for the ambitions for which he was pertinaciously pestered from morning till night, had finally taken himself abroad, no one knew whither, and there remained between four and five years. When he returned home again he brought a wife with him, a procedure which by his family excited general discontent and disapprobation. But Charlie cared very little what the county folks thought about him. He was passionately fond of his wife, and consequently devoted to home, while he occupied his time in regulating the affairs of his estate, and improving the breed of pigs. In short, he found within the limits of his park fence all the amusement and occupation he required. His attraction for his wife was not surprising, for she was indeed a most lovely and charming woman, full of intelligence and spirit, and one in every way fitted to preside over a household. When she and Charlie first met at Pau, she was the presumptive heiress to untold riches to anything there; their courtship lasted but a few days, and one fine morning they set off impromptu, and walking up to the Mairie, were married before breakfast. Violet Danvers had no idea of the position, pecuniary or otherwise, that attached to Charlie, but it was the fortune of troubles, and all she knew was that he had been very kind and good to her.

"Friends and relations she had none," she said; and then, as she rested her head against his breast and looked up into his eyes, Charlie felt that Heaven had sent him to love and cherish. He told her of his past life, and his wanderings in distant countries, and sought to engage her confidence in the future as he always seemed to avoid all reference to her own past, and would hurriedly turn the conversation into quite another channel. Charlie was not of a suspicious nature, and had far too much love and confidence in his wife's fancy that she was concealing any thing from him.

And so Violet came to her new home—to the home in which generations of Forresters had lived and died.

It was not so very long after they had taken up their abode at "The Lions" that I received the invitation before alluded to; and as the long vacation had already commenced, and my prospects and resources were but of a moderate kind, I made a trip even to the sea-side, I thought the best thing I could do was to accept the hospitality that my old friend offered me, and by a short move found me comfortably installed at "The Lions," thoroughly enjoying the fresh air and strong exercise after the dusty London streets, a contrast to the heated atmosphere of close courts and continuous sitting in stingy chambers. I found Mrs. Forrester a most charming and amusing companion, though I could not help being struck by an air of constraint and reserve that at times settled over her. A very little acquaintance satisfied me that there was some mystery attaching to her which she dared not reveal.

One morning at breakfast, Charlie, after reading a letter he had just received by the post, informed us that it was from the family solicitor of his whom he had met in his traveler days, and who, in pursuance of a long-standing invitation, had written to say that he was coming down on a visit to "The Lions," and would, without waiting for a reply, put in an appearance that very evening. Charlie did not appear at all the prospect of seeing his old acquaintance, and in the course of a walk over the farm he informed me that the name of the solicitor was Murray, by the way, and that he was blessed with a great deal more ready wit than ready cash.

"He is a bit of an adventurer in his way," said Charlie, "he is a capital fellow, and the best company in the world."

It was very late when the expected guest arrived. Mrs. Forrester had retired to bed some time before. As for Charlie and myself, we quite smoke-consumed, and were fain to be supped, and when he had done ample justice to the good things before us, we, being about tired out with the fatigue of the stranger; but when he came across the room and held out his hand, which coldly enough was answered by mine, I started back for some sort, to bid me good-night, as I looked him full in the face, he seemed to start for a moment. Although he was closely shaved, except for a heavy mustache and huge beard, there was something about them that appeared familiar to me. Where on earth had I seen him before? When I got up stairs into my bedroom I puzzled my brain with inquiries, but all in vain. I could connect the face with no name, and nothing with the face, and with that I got angry with myself and went to sleep.

I awoke next morning in a wide state, and feeling a strong inclination for a walk before breakfast, tumbled headlong into my cold tub, and in a very short time after had completed my "toilette," and was out in the glorious fresh air. An hour's stroll brought me back to the window of the breakfast-room, which opened into the garden, and with the appetite of a tiger I was on the point of entering, when my step was arrested by the sound of Mrs. Forrester's voice, tremulous with emotion, exclaiming, "Say it is not true! Say it's a joke, say it's a lie!"

Who could the mean? Being of a curious turn—my conduct may have been disgraceful, but hereafter I hope to stand excused for it—I moved into a position where I could see into the breakfast-room without being seen, and hear all that was said. In an arm-chair by the table, her face buried in her hands, and her elbows resting on her knees, Mrs. Forrester was rocking herself to and fro in a way that showed her to be laboring under deep emotion. Close by her, in a strangely cool and insolent attitude, stood the new-comer of last night, stroking his mustache with his disengaged hand.

"Upon my word, my dear Violet," he replied to her entreaty, with a measured slowness of utterance, "you made me long to kick him, "I regret to say that it is true. Arthur Bernard is no more dead than you are. Like Cornelius Scipio, at the present moment feeds his flocks, not, however, upon the Grampian Hills, but in the neighborhood of the city of Pekin, I hope."

"But they told me he was dead," almost shrieked Mrs. Forrester; "the people who were with him when he died, they told me so."

"Wrote to you!" interrupted Murray, with suspicious eagerness. "Have you got the letter?"

"No, I dared not keep it," she replied, "lest it should fall into my husband's hands. Listen, she continued, hurriedly, "he knows nothing of the past—not even of my first marriage—I have kept it all, every thing from him: for pity's sake leave this place at once, and for the future for the present and for ever! But sooner or later you must hear me—mark, you must! Else—" He paused an instant, and continued, "I won't thank you, but remember Arthur Bernard lives!"

At this juncture Charlie entered the room, but I could see that his wife had had time to collect herself; while Murray, without appearing in the least disconcerted, went on making some commonplace remark about the weather. As for myself, this interview, of which I had been an unwilling witness, had completely overwhelmed me with varied emotions, and before putting in an appearance at the breakfast-table I thought it best to take a few minutes to collect myself, and think over the moments' reflection. The confession is somewhat humiliating, but I have always been rather given to considering other people's affairs, and just in the present instance, having seen and heard all I had, I felt exceedingly reluctant to let the matter drop. I felt positively attached to Mrs. Forrester was not very difficult to unravel—at least in its main feature. As for this Murray, with the fraudulent intention to possess over her, I had long since made up my mind that he was a villain who would stoop to any device, however contemptible, to attain success of any kind or enterprise in which he might be engaged. I determined to see every endeavor to defeat him in his present scheme, and let it not be said for a moment supposed that any heroics were mixed up in this resolve. I looked upon the whole matter rather as a game of cards, in which by hook or by crook I must checkmate my adversary. When I reached the breakfast-room, the trio were seated at the table on terms and conditions of either—Charlie cheerful and unsuspicious as ever. Mrs. Forrester playing nervously with a tiny piece of toast, and Murray eating and talking with equal earnestness.

"Oh, by the way," I came in, "your wife and I, Charlie, have discovered that we are old acquaintances. Eh, Murray, isn't it? Where have we met before? What fools we are to fancy our world to be such a huge place!"

I looked at my wife, and I sat down at the table more closely than I ever had before, and again the old thought of last night came back to me. Had I seen my companion either on the hustings? they were still encased in light gloves. I do not know what it was that prompted me, but joining in the conversation, I said, "You are quite sure you often trouble across people I never expected to see again—mere passing acquaintances. Do you know, I remember you quite well, and I've observed I fancied we had met before, though then you had no beard and mustache."

I could have cut off my head to myself at the moment, that his hand trembled as he raised his cup to his lips; but a moment after, as he set it down again, he was perfectly calm and cool, while in a notebaint tone he replied, "I must say you have the advantage of me, as I am not sure that I ever met before: though I think it quite sure that we never did. Besides, I have worn a beard and mustache ever since either one or the other would grow."

"Why, when you were in Paris, you were as clean-shaven as a priest on a feast-day," burst in Charlie, quite innocently; but Murray, without taking any notice of the observation, turned to Mrs. Forrester, and commenced talking to her about something quite different.

Slowly, but surely, a conviction was growing upon me that there was not considerable respect to my impressions of the night before, and determined me to be more watchful than ever. My only fear was that Mrs. Forrester, in the weakness of her terror, would take some desperate step, when after all, as I firmly believed, there was not the slightest ground for alarm.

In the course of the next twenty-four hours, by dint of pertinacious listening and watching, I found that Murray's protestations of affection cooled in proportion as he ingenuously hinted that his silence might be purchased for a reasonable sum—a suggestion that his victim received eagerly at, only to be met shortly after the revolution of feeling that followed when she reflected how utterly impossible it was for her to obtain the two hundred pounds he modestly asked. He was treading on dangerous ground, this same Murray—and I resolved he should learn I have handed him into the custody of the nearest constable on a charge of endeavoring to extort money by threats and menaces. Looking at it from a legal point of view, this would have been an excellent course to adopt, but it was the exposure that was to be avoided, and therefore it was necessary to adopt different tactics.

For three days I watched—with what—did to be sorted—not readily be imagined—the human spider torturing the poor fly he had got into his web: he cool, courteous, and insinuating, as he worked out his scheme; she growing weaker and weaker, and losing all strength and courage, only to find it again to take one last desperate step, and that found, to put an end to the torture she was suffering.

Yet all this while my husband seemed to notice nothing amiss with her, though her eyes were often red with weeping, and her face wore a settled look of unutterable grief. Perhaps, as I have hinted at affection or tenderness, only he was one of those men who, in the goodness of their own hearts and blindness to the emotions of others, look upon dyspepsia as a popular delusion, and can not understand why any one should be unhappy. It was on the evening of the fourth day since Murray's arrival, and after dinner I had left him and Charlie discussing a bottle of '54 claret, and had gone to the drawing-room, and was wandering down a side-path that led to the plantation, when I suddenly trod on something, looking downward I saw that it was a pocket-book of somewhat bulky dimensions. There was only one thing to be done, namely, to pick it up, untwip it, and examine its contents which I need scarcely add I faithfully did. This investigation having been satisfactorily accomplished, I placed the pocket-book in my own, and strolled on into the plantation, again to reflect what my next move with Mr. Murray should be. I have the pocket-book in my hand still, my only puzzle was how to play it without making a disturbance. Still, what was to be done must be done quickly. I saw that it was a combination. I found myself standing by the side of a small lake that lay in the midst of the plantation; almost at the same moment I heard the voices of some one in distress. Turning eagerly to the direction whence it seemed to come, through the dusk, which was now coming on apace, I saw the flutter of a white dress near to the bank of the lake. I know not what possessed me, but in a flash I seized the pocket-book, and through bushes and brambles with frantic speed. A few yards more, and I had caught Mrs. Forrester by the wrist.

"What would you do, woman?" I exclaimed, breathlessly.

She made no answer—only fell fainting at my feet!

When I got back to the house I found Murray alone in the dining-room, paying the closest attention to a second bottle of the '54 Clos-au-Margaux. He never guessed what I had in my hand when brought in, so that he might examine the marvelous beauty of its color. Charlie was in the room, smoking cigars and looking as unbluiff; in short, the opportunity of an interview alone with Murray that I so much wanted presented itself. He was not slow to take advantage of it, and flinging myself into an arm-chair close to him, poured out a glass of wine, and settled comfortably to my task. The pocket-book that he was any thing but pleased at the prospect of a tête-à-tête, and seemed not altogether easy in his chair.

"I was thinking of taking a stroll in the garden," he said, half rising from his chair.

"Always have such habits, Murray," I replied; "besides, it's rather chilly. Do you know," I continued, "I have been thinking of what you were saying last night on the hustings, when I said we had met before, and upon my word I believe I was right after all. I have such a capital memory for faces that it almost amounts to myself mistaken."

"Indeed," he laughed, roughly, "you ought to have great confidence in yourself. Unfortunately, as I told you, in this instance, you are quite wrong."

"Well, perhaps I am," was my answer, as I drew my chair a little nearer to his. "The strangest part of the matter was that I decided you were one of two men I defended at Reading some four years ago, for conspiring to cheat a young undergraduate out of his money by playing with loaded dice."

He was far too much on his guard to make any sign, but only sipped his claret. "Quite early paid me a great compliment." But I saw that he was drawing away his right hand, which had hitherto been resting on the table.

"It was a remarkable case," I continued, "chiefly from the way in which the roguery was detected. The hand of the man who was manipulating the loaded dice was, as yours might be, on the table, to all appearances in the most innocent manner possible"—this last, as if to give him ocular demonstration of the way in which the cheat had been effected, I took hold of his hand, and laid it on the table—"when a stranger who had been sitting at the farther end of the room came quickly to the side of the rogue, and in an instant more had pinned his hand with a carving-fork to the mahogany. I felt that I had carried the play on long enough, and quickly inserting my finger at the top of his glove I tore it down the back. He jumped to his feet, and so did I. "You are that man," I said, "whose hand was so pinned to the table, and that scar is the evidence I should call if it were necessary to prove it. Therefore sit down, and hear what else I have to say.

He glared viciously at me, like a fiend as if he would have struck me, and then sank into his chair again.

"A man who could so rob a poor silly boy by such disgraceful means," I continued, "could hardly be expected to have any pity on a helpless woman; but, fortunately, I have been a witness of your endeavors on more than one occasion, by threats and menaces, to extort a large sum of money from your lover's wife, and that by representing to her that her first husband was alive, and at Otago, in New Zealand, when you knew as well as I do that he was dead, and has been so this two years."

"He is not dead," growled Murray.

"He is dead," I replied, "and your own pocket-book proves it."

As I said this I held up to him the wallet that I had tumbled upon in the plantation yard, in one of the pockets of which, among a number of other exceedingly suspicious-looking documents, I had found a certificate of the death of Arthur Bernard.

But as I have been a very long time in telling my story—for which I am exceedingly long-winded, you know—I must hurry to a conclusion.

The morning following our interview Murray, with many excuses and regrets, found himself unavoidably compelled to return to town. As he got into the phaeton that was to take him to the station he kindly whispered in my ear, "I'll live to pay you out for this yet!" a promise that I somehow or other fancy he will fulfill some day. Till then I am content to forgive and think him. As for Mrs. Forrester, the clouds upon her horizon have lifted; she has buried a sad and painful past, and she is in a present loved as dearly and tenderly as ever by Charlie, who knows nothing, and who never shall, unless she, as I have advised her, has the courage to tell him all, even to the extent that her first husband, Arthur Bernard, was the co-conspirator who stood at Murray's side in the fishing-boat. I have every hope that she will do this, for the confidence between husband and wife should be as clear as the day at noon.

SANTA CATALINA, CUBA.

SANTA CATALINA, in that portion of Eastern Cuba known as the District of Guantanamo, is about sixty miles east of Santiago de Cuba, and fifteen miles west of a deep haven, eighteen miles long by seven broad, with a narrow entrance and a splendid anchorage, and capable of floating the British fleet. This bay is called Cumberland Harbor, after the DUKE OF CUMBERLAND, who once held possession of it.

The District of Guantanamo has within the last twelve years been converted from an almost barren waste into a busy and thriving colony, and this has been effected in the teeth of governmental interference. The valley of Guantanamo has at an early period been a vast intention of sloth, the land lying up by sacks alone from the ocean, and soil washed down from the mountains. The wild vegetation to which the latter has given birth is vanishing before the clearing and planting; and with it is disappearing the malaria fever that decimated the ranks of the earliest settlers. This splendid valley, which is never ravaged by the river that fertilizes it, is sheltered from oceanic inundations by a high buttress of sea-wall erected by the action of the waves along the shore. This natural barrier, strengthened by the same agencies that crumble our artificial breakwaters to ruin and decay, is composed of a calcareous conglomerate of shells and coralline formations partly petrified. The flat alluvial soil forming the bed of the valley, and breaking into natural salt lakes on the margin of the sea, is covered with low woods, abounding in deer, wild asses, parrots, and wood-pigeons. The river is filled with crocodiles. The woods are stocked with reptiles of prodigious size, mostly orchids and bromeliaceæ. The rains in the dry season being infrequent, the tarter order only prevails on the sea-shore. There are no more than three cacti that climb trees; they belong to the genus "cereus," except rhipsalis, which is parasitical, with cloud-like stems and branches, and has no prickles. Nearly all the trees are covered in parts by tree-shells, mostly helix and bulimia, and many varieties of the mistletoe family, which occasionally so multiply as to destroy them. The grasses and sedge-grasses are numerous, but too scattered and tufty to be of much avail for pasturage. In the dry season the bones of deer and oxen are frequently found bleaching in the sun. The deer were introduced into the island forty years ago by a French gentleman, the Government prohibiting their being interfered with for ten years. They are small, and keep to the plains. A lofty range of mountains rises from the valley at a radius of five or six leagues from the town, which stands in the centre. These high lands present a very different climate and vegetation from the plains, and are perfectly free from fevers and agues, when the low lands are even pestilential. The valley is studded with "sacaries," the mountains with "cafetals." The largest sugar estate, the "Esperanza," belonging to Mr. BARNOW of Havana, employs 400 male employés, one half of which are coolies, and the remainder slaves. The wood is the largest and most scientifically-managed "cafetal," with 200 slaves, and belongs to Mr. RAOUL. The "crême de la crême" of the coffee is mostly consumed on the island, and the rest shipped to Bordeaux, wine being returned. The prime cost of the latter is eleven dollars a barrel, expenses and duty bring it up to twenty-two, and it is sold for forty-five.

The custom-house arrangements may be understood from the following anecdote: "A cargo arrived in Cuba, upon which a duty of $20,000 had to be paid. The custom-house officer held a gold onza over each eye and exclaimed, 'Which these spectacles I can see nothing.' As a general rule all articles are charged with an extra half their true quantity, the duty upon the other half being shared between the official and consignee.

The town of Santa Catalina contains about 2000 inhabitants, mostly free, a Roman Catholic chapel, a prison, three schools for male children, stores of various kinds, and a brick factory.

A company of infantry and a detachment of artillery are quartered there, under a commandant, Governor MADAN. The inhabitants are exceedingly hospitable. There is no hotel, posada, or restaurant. The office of inn is considered an insecure; it is astonishing what large sums of money, the aggregate of trifling amounts, are extracted from the negroes for ceremonies performed in the service of Him who came to set men free. The town has a growing appearance, and bears no indications of poverty, which renders it exceptional in Cuba. At noon the heat is oppressive in the extreme, not a breath stirs the leaves. Animals droop their heads, ears and tails, or shut their eyes and lie stretched out in the shade as if dead. The sun appears to scorch the ground, waving disagreeably before the eyes, and producing a sensation somewhat similar to looking upon the stage of a theater from a position close to the foot-lights. The inhabitants remain as much as possible indoors and enjoy a siesta. The view from the hills at the early morning are indescribably beautiful. At a height of 600 feet above the sea-level the hot region ceases and the temperate begins. The storms above Santiago de Cuba are just visible in the far west, and the cane-fields below glitter like an Eastern carpet of golden hue, the combination of transient lights and shadows flung upon it by the slant rays of the rising sun. The precious minerals are found in the mountains, and the resources of the interior are absolutely undeveloped, and the woods are frequented by runaway slaves and the few aboriginal Indians, the descendants of those who occupied the soil before the discovery of Columbus in 1492. They are also overrun with wild boar. These mountains are draped in luxuriant vegetation, which keeps the soil perennially moist and favors the growth of a vast upward of 250 varieties of ferns, besides forty different woods of construction of great value. Stalactite caverns are found in many parts. In 1855 Messrs. BROOKS & COOP, of Santiago de Cuba, erected a wharf at the "Catimanera," an inlet in the harbor's head, and commenced a road to Santiago de Cuba; constructed a railroad to the town, with work-shops for the repair of all the lighter machinery. The line of road now runs through the valley and over the hills, three bridges over the river, imported machinery for the success at a cost of one hundred and fifty thousand golden dollars and upward for a single estate. They then, in order to keep the labor supply in pace with the increase of production, imported coolies, established agents in the town, supplied the planters with the means of cultivating the land, receiving a mortgage on the crops. So that these merchants are little princes, and, having large outstanding debts to collect, their interests are vested in the peace and continuance for a time of slavery as the only means of realizing the results of their outlay. It is probable this feeling, and the wealthy Cubans, as a rule, desired annexation with the United States, because they thought that their slave interests would not suffer thereby, and they would benefit immensely by the freedom from oppressive and despotic government. The Spanish colonist has the credit of having invented the most ruinous system of finance, and the one least friendly to manufactures and commerce in the world. Since the war they know that annexation must inevitably lead to immediate emancipation, and they are inclined to sing for annexation, simply in the hope that political difficulties between rival nations may secure to them that curse of slavery for a time. But it is quite certain that the general encouragement may have been given to the insurgents for the purpose of intimidating the Spanish Government into granting, rather than an immediate emancipation. But it is not surprising, we say, that a handful of regular soldiers attempt to quell the outbreak of insurrection in Guantanamo.

LYNCH-LAW IN INDIANA.

IT appears that in a certain quarter of Indiana resort to Lynch-law has for some time past been a sort of necessity. The town of Seymour is the central business quarter of a Vigilance Committee which has determined to put an end to a conspiracy organized for the purpose of plunder. The law has proved an inadequate source of protection, because no one could testify against the conspirators without running the risk of assassination. It was under these circumstances, as we are informed, that the Vigilance Committee sprung into being. It consists of the first citizens—farmers, merchants, etc.—of Seymour and its vicinity. If its measures have been unusually severe, it must be remembered that they were necessarily so under the unusual circumstances which led to their execution. Public sympathy has been with this Vigilance Committee from the outset, though many of the acts committed under it "much lay" have met with severe and just condemnation. We do not, on our part, attempt to apologize for the Committee, and shall simply confine ourselves to a narrative of the recent execution of the three RENOS and CHARLES ANDERSON at the New Albany Jail on the 12th of December.

The robbery, which was the immediate cause of this execution, took place last May at Marshfield, on the Jeffersonville Railroad. The train consisted of the engine, tender, baggage, and express car, and two passenger coaches. It had arrived at Marshfield, a deserted village, where it stopped for water. The robbers made a raid upon the train, murdered the engineer, cut the express car from the others, and pushed on toward Seymour. The thieves broke open a safe and took $26,000 in notes and money.

For weeks no clew was found by which to detect the robbers; but, finally, a dispatch was received by the railroad company, stating that at Syracuse, New York, an attempt had been made to offer some of the stolen bonds, and that the person offering them, having been arrested, said he had obtained them from FRANK RENO and CHARLES ANDERSON. These two persons were arrested at Sandwich, Canada. Shortly afterward SIDEON and WILLIAM RENO were arrested in Indiana and lodged in the New Albany Jail. The warrant of extradition for FRANK RENO and CHARLES ANDERSON was issued on the 23d of October, and they were lodged in the same jail.

These were not the entire gang; other confederates had, on the 10, attempted a similar raid but had failed, and three of the gang had been arrested—ELLIOT, CLIFTON, and JARREL. As these latter were, on July 20, being carried to Brownstown, they were seized by the Vigilance Committees and summarily executed.

The Vigilance Committee issued an order announcing its determination to follow up the criminals with punishment equally severe, and appointed a Police Committee whose duty the Committee should suffer harm, every thief upon whom the Committee could lay its hands should be hung.

On the night of several days, MOORE, SPARKS, and ROSENBERG, belonging to the conspiracy, were caught and hung.

But the RENOS and CHARLES ANDERSON, lodged in the New Albany Jail in Floyd County, still remained to be attended to; and it was apprehended that in this case the law would be allowed its usual course. But this anticipation was not verified.

At 8 A.M., December 12, the Vigilance Committee from Seymour, to the number of about 70 men, arrived in New Albany. They were all well dressed and were well armed, many. Each man was armed with a club, revolvers, and a slung-shot. They broke open the jail, attacked the jailer, seized the sheriff, seized their victims, and devoted them to execution. They were in the jail about five minutes ere they had completed their work.

This is the whole story. Our sketch on page 13 shows the manner in which the Committee stationed its guards on the outside.

It is possible that this affair may lead to some complications between the extradition treaty; for FRANK RENO and CHARLES ANDERSON were delivered up on the distinct understanding that they were to receive a fair trial.

HUMORS OF THE DAY.

A HANDSOME young widow applied to a physician to relieve her of three distressing complaints with which she was afflicted. Who said,

"In the first place," said she, "I have little or no appetite. What shall I take for that?"

"For that, Madam, you should take air and exercise."

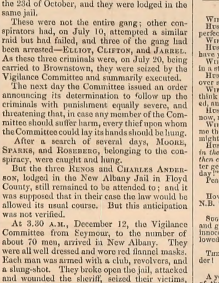
"And, doctor, I am quite hoarse at night-time, and afraid to be seen. What shall I take for that?"

"For that, Madam, I can only recommend that you take a husband."

"Oh! doctor. But I have the blues terribly. What shall I take for that?"

"For that, Madam, you have, besides taking air and a husband, to take the newspaper."

"How," said a gentleman to a friend who wished to secure a situation of importance to a lady without commanding circumstances, "how can you be so certain of her reading the letter, seeing that you have directed it to her husband?" "That I have managed without the possibility of failure," was the answer; "she will open it to a certainty, for I have put the word 'private' on the corner."



The following conversation, illustrative of Parisian life, was overheard lately in the Café Anglaise: "What a pretty woman!" "Yes she is charming." "And that companion, is he your husband?" "Oh, no," replied the friend, "I should say certainly not, for I have seen them driving very often, and, indeed, they were at Baden together."

When lovers quarrel they only prove how much on either side are the straws fixed.

TABLE TALK.

WIFE. "There, that's cooked to perfection!"

HUSBAND (thoughtfully). "Can things be cooked to perfection?"

WIFE (triumphantly). "Yes, indeed, in our house."

HUSBAND (grimly assisting). "Then, my dear, I shall have you put into the oven some day."

WIFE. "You horrid fellow! As if to you keep me in a stew or a broil!"

HUSBAND. "That can't be, else you wouldn't boil over so often."

WIFE (after a silence of some minutes). "Don't you think your conversation is like that gone—flighted, and apparently rather hard to digest?"

HUSBAND (pointedly to the fifth drumstick). "There, now, rattle away with them."

WIFE (testily). "No, I thank you. You used to call me the wife of your bosom, and even now I think you might afford me some of your goose breast."

HUSBAND (helping her as she desired, sotto-voce, to the merits of breast, eschew, "Let me have then exclusively remarks). "On the whole you had better get that set of furs you so fell in love with yesterday."

PEACE was had.

HOW TO PREVENT SEA-SICKNESS.—Keep on shore. N.B. This is a sure preventive!

SUGGESTIVE.—A woman purchased a quart of milk and got a small fish swimming in it. Naturally innocently said he supposed the cow must have swallowed the fish.

THE CRUELEST CUT OF ALL.—A slice of cold shoulder.

A young lady took her younger brother, a little boy of three or four years, to church. The preacher was an earnest man, and spoke with much feeling. Presently she saw the little fellow in tears, and asked him what was the matter with him. He sobbed out, "That man is hollering at me."

SCENE IN A RECORDER'S COURT.

LAWYER. "May it please your Honor, I wish to argue this case."

RECORDER. "Sit down."

LAWYER. "But, Judge—"

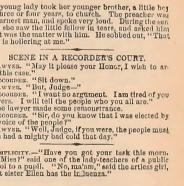
RECORDER. "I want no argument. I am tired of you lawyers. I will tell the people who you all are."

The lawyer made some remonstrance.

RECORDER. "Sir, do you know that I was elected by the voice of the people?"

LAWYER. "Well, Judge, if you were, the people must have had a mighty bad cold that day."

SIMPLICITY.—"Have you got your task this morning, Miss?" said one of the lady-teachers of a public school to a pupil. "No, ma'am," said the artless girl, "but sister Ellen has the lessons."

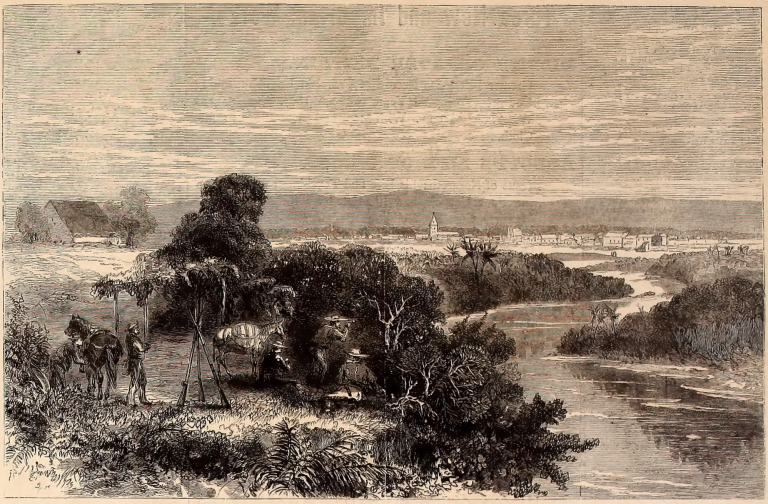


DOWN ON THE PARSON.

Doctor.—"Is your Papa in, my little man? No! Well tell Mr. I called—you know me—Blimber, Dr. Blimber."

Frank Boy.—"Oh, ah! I know: you're the gentleman that Pa says is such a stick in the pulpit!"

ALASKA RELICS.—From E. G. Fast's Collection.—[See Page 13.]



VIEW OF SANTA CATALINA, DISTRICT OF GUANTANAMO, CUBA.—FROM A PAINTING BY CAPTAIN P. JACKSON.—[SEE PAGE 11.]

ALASKA RELICS.

We publish on page 12 thirty-five specimens of Captain E. G. FAST's collection of Alaska relics. The collection was obtained through the aid of agents who scoured the country in all directions. Some of them were obtained by Captain FAST himself from persons who had preserved them as family relics. The whole collection weighs about ten thousand pounds, and comprises articles of wood, metal, bone, ivory, shell, and stone. The illustrations which we publish present some of the most interesting features of the collection.

EXPLANATION OF THE ILLUSTRATIONS.

1. Hair ornament of walrus teeth and amber.
2. Ivory fastener for No. 1.
3. Necklace of walrus teeth and tusks, from grave.
4, 5, 6, 7, 8. Idols or charms of ivory.
9. Ichi—image of death.
10. Mask of wood.
11. Spoon.
12. Club of wood.
13. Two-edged sword, copper trimmings.
14. Copper sword, leather scabbard (modern).
15. Comb of wood.
16. Rattle of wood.
17. Pestle of malachite.
18. Figure in war attire: helmet, coat of mail, sword, and dagger.
19. Copper coin, obverse and reverse. This is the only coin ever struck in Siberia, and was made during the reign of KATHARINE II., in the latter part of the eighteenth century, and called in after her death, the copper ruble, worth more than two cents, its nominal value.
20. Parchment script of Russian Fur Company, burned upon the occupation of the country by the United States.
21. Two single-edged swords of iron, handles of carved wood.
22. Iron sword, human hair on the handle.
23. Wooden club.
24. Idol or charm of ivory.
25. Idol or charm of ivory, taken from grave.
26. Pipe of wood inlaid with shell, taken from a grave.
27. Charm carved of jaw of sea-cow.
28. Spoon carved in horn.
29. Mask taken from ancient grave.
30. Ivory charm.
31. Necklace of walrus teeth and tusks.
32. Charming instrument, used by medicine man.
33. Charm, bone.
34. Charm, ivory.
35. Charm, ivory.

Our readers will be able to obtain a vast amount of valuable information concerning Alaska from a book about to be published by HARPER & BROTHERS, written by FREDERICK WHYMPER. This book gives a very full description of the country and its natural resources, also of the people—their habits, their industries, and their monuments. It is profusely illustrated.

LYNCH LAW IN INDIANA—THE VIGILANCE COMMITTEE AT WORK AT THE NEW ALBANY JAIL.—SKETCHED BY J. ERNEST GALVAN.—[SEE PAGE 11.]

BENNETT'S FLORIMEL, also BENNETT'S COLOGNE-WATER (three sizes).—There is a freshness in these delightful perfumes found in no others. New York Branch, 592 Broadway (Metropolitan Hotel Building). For sale by druggists and fancy-goods dealers in the principal cities of the United States.

OUR readers should notice the advertisement headed "To the Working Classes, etc."

WELLING'S DYSPEPSIA TABLETS cure Indigestion, Heartburn, and Sour Stomach. Fifty Cents per Box. Sold by the druggists. S. G. WELLING.

We have watched the course of so many distressed, emaciated, and forlorn dyspeptics, of worn-out and prostrated females, who have taken a new lease of life, and gradually received vigor, strength, health, and the power of social pleasure from the effects of PLANTATION BITTERS, that we are not surprised at the testimonials daily received. If it is a pleasure to do good in the world, how full must be the measure of the proprietors of these celebrated Bitters.—Mail.

MAGNOLIA WATER.—Superior to the best imported German Cologne, and sold at half the price.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

MOTH-PATCHES, FRECKLES, AND TAN.—Now is the time to clear the complexion for the Winter, from these disagreeable discolorations, by using PERRY'S MOTH AND FRECKLE LOTION. Prepared only by DR. B. C. PERRY, Dermatologist, 49 Bond Street, New York. Order from your Druggist.

NOW Ready.—New Edition, Revised and Enlarged, of the popular work "WELLS' FIFTY MAY HIS OWN LAWYER and BUSINESS FORM BOOK. Sent prepaid on receipt of 50 cts. Agents wanted everywhere. Send for Descriptive Circular of this and other popular works. Address

J. G. WELLS, Publisher, 429 Broome St., N. Y.

MUSIC for HOLIDAY GIFTS.—BOOSEY'S MUSICAL PIANO-FORTE WORKS, elegantly bound, suitable for presentation. Beethoven's Sonatas, complete, 60 Nos.; Mozart's Sonatas, complete, 21; The Operatic Album, containing 100 gems from the principal Operas; The Boosey Book Music-Stand, for Children; Edition of the Menuet, 8d.; Mendelssohn's Songs Without Words, complete; Chopin's Mazurkas and Valses, complete, $2 each; Schumann's Album for the Young, $1 25. Complete Operas, Oratorios, and large collections of Vocal and Piano-Forte Music, in Books, 50 cts. each. The largest and most varied musical catalogue of modern music in the world. Also, just ready, Vols. 6 and 7 of the Boosey & Co. Edition of their newest publications in full sheet or music-size form.

BOOSEY & CO., 594 Broadway, N. Y.

NOT A BIT OF STAIN

Or smart will wherever PAIN PAINT give; but it removes pain as quick as magic. Wolcott's ANNIHILATOR banishes Catarrh from the nose, head and cable to the head. Recollect and get plut bottles, in white wrappers, $1, at druggists.

OUR YOUNG FOLKS

For 1869 will be better than any previous Volume. It will have a capital Story of a Bad Boy, by T. S. ARTHUR; Descriptions of Glass-Making, Cloth-Making, Shoe-Building, Watch-Making, by J. T. TROWBRIDGE; Contributions for Girls; How to Talk, How to Read, How to Write, How to Travel, How to Get on in Society, and How to Work, by Rev. E. E. HALE; Articles on Coral Islands, Coal Deposits, and Earthquakes, by Mrs. AGASSIZ; Biographical Sketches of Noted Mariners and Discoverers, by JAMES PARTON; Articles on American History, by J. H. A. BONE; Declamations, Dialogues, and other attractive and useful varieties of reading, by the best writers, all illustrated by the best artists. TERMS: $2 00 a year. Liberal discount to Clubs. Full Prospectus and Premium List sent free on application.

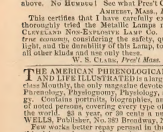
FIELDS, OSGOOD, & CO.,

(Successors to TICKNOR & FIELDS), Publishers, Boston.

"RENEW! "RENEW!" — HARPER'S WEEKLY, HARPER'S BAZAR, and the PICTORIAL FAMILY JOURNAL, $5 00, sent a year for $6 00 by

S. R. WELLS, 389 Broadway, New York.

THE ONLY SAFETY LAMP



SOLD BY ALL DEALERS! CIRCULARS FREE!
AGENTS WANTED EVERYWHERE!
MANUFACTURED BY THE
DEVLIN MANUFACTURING CO.
CINCINNATI, OHIO.

CANVASSERS are clearing over $10 per day selling these Lamps. AGENTS WANTED. Address as above. No Gift Enterprises. See what Peck's Sun says:

AMHERST, MASS., Dec. 1, 1868.

This certifies that I have carefully examined and thoroughly tried the Metallic Lamps made by the CINCINNATI NON-EXPLOSIVE LAMP CO., and I believe in true economy, considering the safety, quality of the light, and the durability of the lamp, they are superior to all other kinds and use only these.

Yours truly, Prof. MOSES A. COLLINS.

THE AMERICAN PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL AND LIFE ILLUSTRATED is a compact and handsome Monthly, the only magazine devoted specially to Phrenology, Physiognomy, Physiology, and Ethnology. Contains portraits, biographies, and characters of noted persons, covering every phase of character in the world. $3 a year, or 30 cents a number. S. R. WELLS, Publisher, No. 389 Broadway, New York.

Few works better repay perusal in the family than the rich and abundant store of instruction and amusement—N. Y. Tribune. Indispensable to the general reader; edited with great ability, and beautifully printed.—Christian Inquirer. It grows in variety and value.—N. Y. Evening Post.

CATARRH.—I CAN CURE ANY CASE of obstruction of the throat or nostrils—stopping head—discharges of greenish, thick, thin, or glairy mucus from the nose, infirmity or externally—pain or fullness between the eyes, constant blowing of the nose, inflammation of the nasal passages, ulceration of the Schneiderian membrane, &c., in the course of a few days or weeks. D. A. SMITH, M.D., No. 69 Henry St., near Grand, Brooklyn.—Patients visited Tuesdays and Saturdays, from nine in the morning till nine at night. Consultation by letter, One Dollar; Remedies sent by express. Consultation at Office free.

Three New and Important Works.

DILKE'S GREATER BRITAIN.

Greater Britain: a Record of Travel in English-speaking Countries during the Years 1866 and 1867. By CHARLES WENTWORTH DILKE. With Maps and Illustrations. 12mo, Cloth, $1 00.

ABBOTT'S LIFE OF CHRIST.

Jesus of Nazareth: his Life and Teachings; Founded on the Four Gospels, and Illustrated by Reference to the Manners, Customs, Religious Beliefs, and Political Institutions of his Times. By LYMAN ABBOTT. With Designs by Doré, De Laroche, Fenn, and others. Crown 8vo, Cloth, Beveled Edges, $3 50.

DR. BELLOWS'S TRAVELS, Complete.

The Old World in its New Face: Impressions of Europe in 1867–1868. By HENRY W. BELLOWS. 2 vols., 12mo, Cloth, $3 50. Vol. II. just ready.

PUBLISHED BY HARPER & BROTHERS, NEW YORK.

HARPER & BROTHERS will send either of the above works by mail, postage paid, to any part of the United States, on receipt of the price.

VELOCIPEDES.

WOOD BROTHERS,
596 Broadway, New York,
Manufacturers of fine Pleasure Carriages, are now prepared to receive orders for the celebrated
PARISIAN VELOCIPEDES,
of their own manufacture, which for durability and beauty of finish are not equaled.

TO THE WORKING CLASS.

I am now prepared to furnish constant employment to all classes at their homes, for their spare moments. Business new, light, and profitable. Fifty Cents to Five Dollars per evening is easily earned, and the boys and girls earn nearly as much as men. Great inducements are offered. All who see this notice please send me their address, and test the business for themselves. If not well satisfied, I will send $1 to pay for the trouble of writing me. Full particulars sent free.

Sample sent by mail for Ten Cents.

Address E. C. ALLEN, Augusta, Maine.

A MONTHLY MAGAZINE FOR YOUNGEST READERS. Twenty-four Pictures in each No. Subscribers for this delightful little Magazine who send their money before January 1, 1869, will receive the Dec. No. gratis. Now is the time to subscribe.

TERMS: $1 50 a year in advance. Liberal discount to Clubs.

A sample No., with Prospectus and Premium List, mailed for 10 cents. Address JOHN L. HOBBY, 13 Washington St., Boston.

WANTED, AGENTS — To SELL THE AMERICAN KNITTING MACHINE. Price $25. The simplest, cheapest, and best Knitting Machine ever invented. Will knit 30,000 stitches per minute. Liberal inducements to Agents. Address AMERICAN KNITTING MACHINE CO., Boston, Mass., or St. Louis, Mo.

CARPETS.—SAVE YOUR MONEY.—CARPETS.

THE BOSTON AND MAINE CARPET CO., Office 149 Hanover St., Boston, Mass., are the agents of 8c, and 20 yards Scotch Carpet, and make it without extra charge when nice of room is sent, or, inserted in making, will send 2 handsomely-painted ClothWindow Shades, value $2 25. For $10 will send 50 yards Tapestry Cottage Carpet, make as above, or send 2 splendid Gilt Bind Shades, value $4 50. Also, Oil Cloths and Shades, when desired, samples of Carpets will be sent, valued from 90 cts. to $5 per yard, from which a choice selection for any room can be selected, saving expense of visiting the city. Extra Inducements to Clubs.

THE PATENT MAGIC COMB

Will color Grey Hair a permanent Black or Brown. Sold every where. Sent by mail for $1 25. Address WM. PATTEN, Treasurer Magic Comb Company, Springfield, Mass.

DON'T YOU DO IT!—Don't get up a Club for the

One-Dollar-Store Trade until you send for the NEW CIRCULAR of WOODRUFF, FENNO, & CO., OLD ONE DOLLAR STORE, 331 TREMONT ROW, BOSTON, MASS.

Full description of our immense stock.

Unprecedented Inducements to Agents and Patrons.

75 YARDS Prime quality Sheeting for $10 and a Club of 100. Other Clubs in proportion.

MAGIC PHOTOGRAPHS.—The Greatest Wonders of the Age. Address, with stamp, W. C. WEMYSS, 3 Astor Place, New York.

HITCHCOCK'S HALF DIME MUSIC.

VOCAL MUSIC, WITH PIANO ACCOMPANIMENT.
NOW READY.

No. 1. Captain Jinks.	No. 5. Not for Joseph.
" 2. Won't you tell me why	" 6. Good-bye Sweetheart
" 3. We'd Better bide a Wee	" 7. I Really Don't think I shall Marry.
" 4. Blue Eyes.	" 8. Prince of Tears.
	" 9. Champagne Charlie.

Other popular melodies and Piano Music in Press. Each of these pieces cover two pages, printed in large, clear type, with colored title page, on fancy Music paper. Can be had of News Dealers, and free, by mail, by enclosing five cents each to the Publisher,

BENJ. W. HITCHCOCK,
108 Spring Street, N. Y. York.
Or 164 Vine Street, Cincinnati, Ohio.

MUSIC OMNIBUS.

1000 of the best Songs, Polkas, Schottisches, Waltzes, Quadrilles, Dances, Comiliones, with calls and figures for dancing written out in full, arranged for the VIOLIN, FLUTE, FIFE, CLARIONET, &c.

Price, $1 25. Mailed.

FREDERICK BLUME, 1135 Broadway, 2d door above 26th St. Branch, 305 Bowery.

To PHOTOGRAPHERS or others:

A Double-Metal Gilt Frame, with Mize, to cover pictures. New and Beautiful. Four Samples rent by mail on receipt of 25 cents. E. N. HICKCOX & CO., Brass Goods, 280 Pearl St., N. Y.

PIANOS, MELODEONS,

and ORGANS,

of six first-class makers, at greatly reduced prices, for cash, during the Holidays, at WATERS'S, No. 481 Broadway, New York. Fifty New and Second-Hand Instruments for Rent, and rent-money applied if purchased; monthly or weekly payments received for the same.

NORTON & CO.,

AMERICAN BANKERS—Paris, France,

Will remove on the 15th of October to their new OFfices under the Grand Hotel—No. 6 RUE SCRIBE. Travelling Americans will find every possible convenience in this new establishment. Letters of Credit issued, and every attention guaranteed.

THE ONLY GENUINE ORIOIDE WATCHES.

$12 to $20.

These watches have a worldwide reputation, are in hunting-cases (gentlemen's) and ladies' sizes; guaranteed exact time-keepers, and sold at the low price of $12 each, and are equal in appearance and wear to gold cases. Also, a large variety of beautifully-chased and enameled watches, $15 and $20 each. Also, hunting-case silver watches. Exercises and home movements. Fifty styles of Gold chains, from $2 to $8. Sleeve-buttons, collar-studs, &c., ladies' sets in great variety, from $8 to $8. $2 Gold, safety keys wanted. Send two red stamps for circular. All goods sent C. O. D. by express. Customers allowed to examine before paying. To any one ordering six watches at one time we will send an extra watch free. Address

JAS. GRANT & CO., Sole Agents,
85 NASSAU STREET, NEW YORK CITY.

ARE WE A GOOD-LOOKING PEOPLE?—See the full article on "AMERICAN FACES," how they compare with foreign, and what they indicate, in the Illustrated PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL for January. Double Number, only 30 cents, or $3 a year.

25 CENTS.—Now is the time to subscribe to "HOME LEAVES." The best, the most popular, and the cheapest monthly published. Each number contains over 40 items, and pays back over to every body. 25 cents will pay for it from now to the end of 1869. Sample copies sent on receipt of stamp to pay postage. Address O. A. ROORBACH, 102 Nassau St., N.Y.

Frank Leslie's Chimney Corner.

A purely literary pictorial. Excluding events of the day, the aim, as to title indicative, is to furnish amusement for the leisure hour. Its contents consist principally of original stories by able writers—including a serial, accounts of remarkable adventures, biographical sketches of self-made men—by which are meant descriptions of manners and customs in remote countries, sketches, fairy stories, enigmas, conundrums, charades, &c. Illustrated with large and spirited engravings, of which there are from fifteen to twenty in each weekly number.

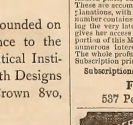
Subscription price, $4 per year.

Frank Leslie's Lady's Magazine.

The leading fashion periodical in America. Each monthly number contains a large colored plate of the latest fashions, from designs sent from Paris as soon as invented, which are this published simultaneously in New York and Paris; also a fourpage uncolored fashion-plate, embracing the various leading styles. These are accompanied with full descriptions and explanations, with numerous other illustrations. Every number contains an original letter from Paris describing the very latest modes, by a lady whose position gives her access to fashionable circles. The literary portion of this Magazine comprises a continued story, numerous interesting tales, poetry, anecdotes, &c. The whole profusely illustrated with fine engravings. Subscription price, $3 00 per year.

Subscriptions should be sent to

FRANK LESLIE,
537 Pearl Street, New York City.



Honey, Glycerine, Orange Flower, Bouquet, and Palm.

In Quality, Style, and Perfume warranted equal to the English, and sold fully 50 per cent. cheaper. Each accounts for the great falling off in the demand for the foreign article, and the unprecedented success of the AMERICAN COMPANY TOILET SOAPS, now sold every where in the United States.

McKEONE, VAN HAAGEN & CO., Sole Manufacturers, PHILADELPHIA and NEW YORK.

$25 KNITTING MACHINE.

WANTED!—Buyers and Sellers for the RICK-FORD FAMILY KNITTER, the most reliable invention for the household ever made. It knits 20,000 stitches a minute, backs and forward, and sets up its own work. Parties are making from $3 to $6 per day at their homes. Over 3,000 sold. Circulars sent free and explicit. RICKFORD KNITTING MACHINE CO., 62 Bromfield St., Boston, Mass.

WHICH is the BEST COMPANY

IN WHICH TO

INSURE your LIFE?

READ THE OPINION OF

HON. WM. BARNES,

SUPT OF THE INSURANCE DEPARTMENT OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK,

AS TO THE BEST

LIFE COMPANIES

TO INSURE IN.

BE SAVE!

"It does not always follow, as is sometimes supposed, that a purely Mutual Company is the most profitable one to the Insured. Mixed Companies, or those substantially Mutual, may by superior skill and other advantages actually make the LARGEST DIVIDENDS of surplus profits to policy holders."—Report, 1868, p. XC.

SAVE BEING SWINDLED.—Save your money by subscribing for the "STAR-SPANGLED BANNER." Exposes fakirs, confidence swindlers, &c. Only 5 cts. a Number. Only 75 cts. a year, and a splendid Premium to every subscriber. NOW IS THE TIME.

Specimens, 6 cents. Send to

"STAR-SPANGLED BANNER," Hinsdale, N. H.

NAPOLEON I.—His Portrait, Character, and Biography, given in Jan. PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL. Only 30 cts. a No., or $3 a year. Newsmen have it. Address

S. R. WELLS, No. 389 Broadway, New York.

USEFUL HOLIDAY PRESENTS.

BARD & BROTHERS,

GOLD PENS,

PEN AND PENCIL CASES, SILVER, RUBBER, AND GOLD-PLATED TELESCOPIC PEN-CASES, TOOTH-PICKS, &c., &c. Circulars sent to Customers.

JAMES D. BARD, Agent, No. 22 Maiden Lane, N. Y.

Merwin, Taylor, & Simpkins,

Manufacturers, Importers, and Jobbers of GUNS, AMMUNITION, CUTLERY, FISHING TACKLE, SPORTING GOODS, &c., &c., 25 Maiden Lane, N.Y. Parr's celebrated Breech-Loading Shot-Guns. BALLARD RIFLES and SHOT-GUNS; EAGLE ARMS CO.'s front-loading Cartridge Revolvers; COLT'S Model Revolvers, and other celebrated Arms and Sporting Goods. Particular attention given to orders by mail.

222 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

Illustrated Catalogues sent on application.

$49 50 MADE by One Agent IN ONE DAY.

Address SHAW & CLARK, Biddeford, Me. Sample machines at less than retail price. Samples and particulars sent free. Address

ASHBURTON & CO., Hinsdale, N. H.

ESTABLISHED 1861.

THE
GREAT AMERICAN
TEA COMPANY

RECEIVE THEIR TEAS BY THE CARGO FROM THE BEST TEA DISTRICTS OF CHINA AND JAPAN, and sell them in quantities to suit customers AT CARGO PRICES.

The Company have selected the following kinds from their Stock, which they recommend to meet the wants of clubs. They are sold at cargo prices, the same as the Company sell them in New York, as the list of prices will show.

PRICE LIST OF TEAS.

OOLONG (black), 70c., 80c., 90c.; best, $1 per lb.
MIXED (green and black), 70c., 80c., 90c.; best, $1 per lb.
ENGLISH BREAKFAST (black), 80c., 90c., $1, $1 10; best, $1 20 per lb.
IMPERIAL (green), 80c., 90c., $1, $1 10; best, $1 25 per lb.
YOUNG HYSON (green), 80c., 90c., $1, $1 10; best, $1 25 per lb.
UNCOLORED JAPAN, 70c., $1, $1 10; best, $1 25 per lb.
GUNPOWDER (green), $1 10; best, $1 50 per lb.

COFFEES ROASTED AND GROUND DAILY.

Ground Coffee, 20 cents, 25 cents, 30 cents, 35 cents: best, 40 cents per pound.

Hotels, saloons, boarding-house keepers, and Families who use large quantities of Coffee, can economize in that article by using our

FRENCH BREAKFAST AND DINNER COFFEE,

which we sell at the low price of 30 cents per pound, and warrant to give perfect satisfaction.

ROASTED (unground), 30c., 35c.; best, 40c. per lb.
GREEN (unroasted), 25c., 30c., 35c.; best, 35c. per lb.

Parties sending Club or other orders for less than Thirty Dollars had better send a Post-office Draft or Money Order, in their orders, to save the expense of collections by express; but larger orders we will forward by express, to "collect on delivery."

Hereafter we will send a complimentary package to the party getting up the Club. Our prices are small, but we intend to sell so low as to make it an object to send no complimentary packages for clubs of less than Thirty Dollars.

Parties getting their Teas from us may confidently rely upon getting them pure and fresh, as they come direct from the Custom-House stores to our warehouses.

We warrant all the goods we sell to give entire satisfaction. If they are not satisfactory they can be returned and we will refund the money in 30 days, and have the money refunded.

N.B.—Inhabitants of villages and towns where a large number reside, by clubbing together, can greatly reduce the cost of their Teas and Coffees about the same rate as charged by the Express company by sending directly to

THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA COMPANY.

CAUTION.—As some concerns, in this city and other places, imitate our name and style of advertising and design, it becomes important that our friends should be very careful to write our address in full, and also to put on the number of our Post-Office Box, as appears in this advertisement. This will prevent their letters from getting into the hands of those imitators.

POST-OFFICE Orders and Drafts make payable to the Order of

"THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA COMPANY."

Direct Letters and Orders as below (no more, no less):

GREAT AMERICAN TEA COMPANY,
Nos. 31 and 33 Vesey Street,
Post-Office Box 5643, New York City.

$500.

I will cheerfully give the above amount to any one who can expose my Dying Hour of Gold Watches. Description of metal and goods sent free on demand.

Prices, from $16 to $22. They are sent C. O. D., with charges. Address (LES. B. HUGUENIN VUILLEMIN, No. 44 Nassau Street, N. Y.

Call and examine for yourselves.

OUR LEADING ARTISTS—Church, Bierstadt, Eastman Johnson, Page, Huntington, Gifford, Dewey, Richards, Gignoux, Conkey, with Agassiz, in the February number of Hurd and Houghton's Picturesque Publication, The Riverside Magazine for Young People. Double No. for January, 20 cents, or $2 a year.

PARLOR FIREWORKS.—A new winter-evening amusement. Sent by mail, prepaid, on receipt of 25 cents per package. Mailed, postpaid, on receipt of the price, by W. HERBERT, 191 Nassau St., N. Y.

SOZODONT.

An Eminent Chemist says:

"Sozodont, Manufactured by R. V. Haynes, N. Y., July 6, 1865.

I have made a chemical analysis of the preparation for the teeth known as "SOZODONT," for Messrs. HALL & RUCKEL, and find that it contains no acid, and ascertain whether it contains substances detrimental to the teeth or gums.

An impartial sample of the "SOZODONT" was purchased by me personally from a leading Drug House of this city, and carefully analyzed for acids and other corrosive or injurious substances likely to have a detrimental action on the teeth or gums, but nothing of an objectionable character was found in its composition. JULIUS G. POHLE, M.D., Analytical Chemist, Late of Dr. JAS. R. CHILTON & CO.

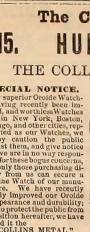
ARCHITECTURAL DEPARTMENT OF THE
Novelty Iron Works,
Nos. 77 and 83 Liberty Street,
Cor. Broadway, New York.

Plain and Ornamental Iron Work of all kinds for Buildings.

THE MAGNETIC POCKET TIME-KEEPER AND COMPASS next pushed for $1, or three for $2. Satisfaction guaranteed. Agents wanted. Circulars free. WALTER HOLT & CO., 102 Nassau St., N. Y.

$10 A DAY FOR ALL. Stencil Tool samples free. Address A. J. FULLAM, Springfield, Vt.

The Celebrated Imitation Gold
$15. HUNTING WATCHES. $20.
THE COLLINS ORODE WATCH FACTORY.



SPECIAL NOTICE.

Our superior Orodite Watches having recently been imitated, and worthless articles sold in New York, Boston, Chicago, and other cities, appreciated as our Watches, we hereby caution the public against them, and give notice that we are in no way responsible for these bogus concerns, and only those purchasing directly from us can secure a genuine Watch of our manufacture. We have recently greatly improved our Orodite in appearance and durability, and, to protect the public from imposition hereafter, we have named it the

"COLLINS METAL,"

and we give notice that any one making use of this name will be prosecuted to the extent of the law.

This metal has all the brilliancy and durability of Gold: can not be distinguished from it by the best jewelers; retains its color till worn out, and is equal to gold excepting in intrinsic value. All our Gentlemen's Watches are Fully-Jeweled Patent Levers, those for Ladies an Improved Escapement, better than a Lever for a small Watch; all in Hunting-Cases, and fully guaranteed by special certificate. The $15 Watches are equal in neatness, style of finish, appearance, and durability, and for time, to a Gold case costing $200. Those for $20 are of extra fine finish, and are fully equal to a Gold Watch costing $200. Chains of every style, from $2 to $8. Also, Jewelry of the Collins Metal in every style.

TO CLUBS:—Where Six Watches are ordered at one time, we will send one extra Watch free of charge.

Goods sent to any part of the United States by express, to be paid for on delivery. Money need not be sent with the order, as bills can be paid when goods are taken from the express office. Customers must say all charges are paid by the express agents; orders must therefore be sent directly to us. Customers in the city will remember that our only Office is

Nos. 37 and 39 Nassau Street, New York, Opposite the Post-Office (Up Stairs).

C. E. COLLINS & CO.

A $500 GREENBACK
Of full value sent free to any Book Agent.
WANTED FOR
Matthew Hale Smith's New Book,
"Sunshine and Shadow in New York."
A Work replete with Anecdotes and Incidents of Life in the Metropolis,
Being the most complete and graphic presentation of both the Baxtary and the Safe Side of New York ever published. Sales-books by the 10,000 Copies! ever sold so rapidly. One Agent sold 80 in 1 day, another 50 and another 36 in 1 day. Another 94 in 7 days. IF You wish to know how Fortunes are made and lost; how Stocks and Men are "Cornered;" how "Corner" tymes" are swindled; how Ministers and Merchants are blackmailed; how Fancy Balls and Concert Saloons fire managed; how Gambling Houses and Lotteries are conducted; how Stock Companies originate and explode, etc., read this book. It tells you about Dives and Lazarus, Rich and Poor, with graphic biographical sketches of its noted millionaires, merchants, etc. A Large Octavo Volume, Finely Illustrated. The largest commission given. Our 32-page circular and full particulars sent free on application. For full particulars and terms address the publishers, A. S. HALE & CO., Hartford, Conn.

Holloway's Ointment and Pills, subjected to the test of public opinion and public trial for over thirty years, have now for a quarter of a century acknowledged the only reliable family remedies in existence.

MR. T. S. ARTHUR.—See the Pictorial Double No. of HARPER'S WEEKLY of December 26, 1868, for portrait and sketch of this eminent writer. Newsmen have a supply. Price 20 cents a copy. Address A. S. R. WELLS, No. 389 Broadway, New York.

Diamonds for the Holidays.

The new ALASKA DIAMOND, or carbonized quartz, equal in brilliancy to the first-class real diamond, set in our own factory, in artistic diamond settings, guaranteed fine gold, and sold by us at one sixtieth of the cost of real diamonds, to which they are equal in every respect except intrinsic value.

Look at our Price-List.

Ladies' Solitaire Finger-Rings, $8 and $10; Solitaire Ear-Rings, $8 and $10; Cluster Finger-Rings, $5, $10, $15; Cluster Ear-Drops, $6, $12, $18.

Cluster Sets, $10 and $25; Cross Sets, $20 and $28.

Gentlemen's Studs, $5, $6, $8, $10, $15, $20; Rings, $8 and $16. Gents' Cluster Rings, $6, $10, and $12.

Cluster Pins, $10 and $12; with Pin, $15. Cross Pins, $6, $10, and $15; Studs, per set, $6, $8, $10.

We do our business direct from our factory, located in a city where we have the requisite machinery for the jewelry.

Each item has $5 should be accompanied with P. O. Order or Registered Letter, and the goods sent by Express. Exceptions will be made to Express, C. O. D., customers paying all express charges. A Large Discount to the Trade. Full Address, with stamp, H. D. STANLEY, WHIPPLE, & CO., Providence, R. I.

BAXTERIAN SYRUPS. WOMAN.—Key-Tay and Stencil Tools & Stencil Plates. Geo. Sanford & Co., Cincinnati.

WANTED.—SALESMEN TO TRAVEL for a Manufacturing Company, and sell by sample. Good wages and steady employment. Address, with stamp, H. D. HAMILTON & Co., 413 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, Pa.

ARCHITECTURAL IRON WORKS,
FOURTEENTH STREET, BETWEEN AVENUES B AND C, NEW YORK.
D. D. BADGER, President.
N. CHENEY, Vice-President.

Fire-proof Buildings of every description, and every kind of Iron Work for Building Purposes, also for Bridges.

DEVERDY JOHNSON—How he looks and conducts himself in his new relations—and why; what our English cousins think of him, and what we think. See January Double No. PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL. New Vol., at $3 a year.

FRESH BUTTER 20 CTS. A POUND.

THE GREATEST INVENTION OF THE AGE.

Two pounds of Butter can be made from one quart of milk in from 3 to 5 minutes, at a cost of 20 cents a pound, by the use of our INEALUBLE BUTTER POWDER. Simple in operation, harmless in use. Sent free to any address on receipt of price, $1—full directions. AGENTS WANTED every where to introduce this great invention. Address

GOEBEL BUTTER CO., 102 Nassau St., New York.

BACK numbers and Volumes of HARPER'S MAGAZINE, WEEKLY, and BAZAR can always be had of A. WINCH, 365 Chestnut St., Philadelphia.

DEPOT, 6 ASTOR HOUSE. FASHION, 10 ASTOR PLACE.

DITSON & CO.,
MANUFACTURERS OF
PIANO-FORTES.
WAREROOMS,
No. 831 Broadway, New York.
SEND FOR CIRCULAR.

DOES the PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL INCULCATE A GOOD THEOLOGY?—See the Article headed "THE INFALLIBLE GUIDE," in January Double No. Only 20 cents, or a year for $2. Address A. S. WELLS, No. 389 Broadway, New York.

$325 A MONTH, AND EXPENSES—28 new articles. R. B SHAW, ALFRED, ME.

BOYS' FUN.—1000 Sold.—HUNTING AND TRAPPING. —THE HUNTER'S GUIDE AND TRAPPER'S COMPANION. A book for Farmers, Trappers, and Boys. Tells how to hunt and trap all kinds of game, from the mink to the bear and deer; how to cure Skins, and how to Dress Furs. Fifth Edition just out. The only cheap and reliable work ever printed. Price only 25 cents. Sent by return mail, postpaid, by HUNTER & CO., Publishers, Hinsdale, N. H.

DOGS.—TWELVE DIFFERENT BREEDS illustrated and described in the Pictorial Double No. PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL for January. Only 20 cents. A new Vol. and a very cheap one. A. S. R. WELLS, No. 389 Broadway, New York.

HOLIDAY PRESENTS,
$10, $15, $20, $25.

WATCH CO., Geneva, Switzerland,
Manufacture on strictly scientific principles, style, finish, durability, and color (15 carat gold) a fac-simile of the most Superb Watches ever produced.
Ladies' and Gentlemen's Size Seven Movements, $10 and $15; Ladies' Chronometers, $20; Ladies' Patent Levers, $25. Gentlemen's Patent Levers, $30. Fac-Simile Watches, Patent Levers, $30. Chronometer Balance, $25. Elaborately engraved.
Patent Levers, Escapements, Engines, Expressmen—the most exacting of our customers—have thoroughly demonstrated the strength, durability, accuracy, and utility of our celebrated watches, and pronounce them invaluable as reliable time-keepers.
Each Watch warranted by special certificate from the Oroide Gold Watch Co. to be perfect time-keepers, and to retain their color equal to gold.
Magnificent Oroide Gold Chain $8, $6, $7, and $10.
Express Co's will exhibit the Watch, &c., when requested, on receipt of express charges both ways. Expressed every where, to be paid for on delivery.
Don't send orders by mail—Don't send any pay for Watches before you see them.
CLUBS FOR SIX WATCHES WILL RECEIVE AN EXTRA WATCH FREE.
Beware of Agents who, to sell their worthless watches, advise purchasers to counterfeit our inimitable Watch with worthless metal watches that tarnish in a week, claiming for them the reputation of our Oroide Gold Watches.
JOHN FOGGAN, President Oroide Gold Watch Co.
Only Office in the United States, No. 78 Nassau Street, New York.

HARPER'S PERIODICALS.

1869 MAGAZINE, WEEKLY, BAZAR 1869

Harper's Periodicals.—As the year draws to a close the time arrives when subscriptions to weekly and monthly journals are in order. Can there be a more suitable present to a lady than a year's subscription to the Bazar, a paper which is not only fashionable, but sensible, and which has a care for the family precisely as well as for the festivities of the party or the ball? Each number contains a pattern and description of value, and it discourses of health, housekeeping, thrift, literature, and dress, in a manner at once pleasing and instructive.

Harper's Weekly is an elder brother, and it has a strong and vigorous life. Its pages are the materials of future history, and its articles on public questions are sound, thoughtful, and timely

Harper's Magazine is the veteran of the monthlies, and is too well known to need mention. During the many years of its life it has had a steady growth and improvement, and nothing has been left undone which could add to the permanent value and interest of the magazine.—Commercial Advertiser: New York.

Now is the Time to Subscribe.

"Unquestionably the best sustained work of the kind in the world."

Harper's Magazine.

The most popular Monthly in the world.—New York Observer.

It is one of the wonders of journalism—the editorial management of which is a work.—Tribune.

It meets precisely the popular taste, furnishing a pleasing and instructive variety of reading for all.—Zion's Herald, Boston.

"A complete Pictorial History of the Times."

Harper's Weekly.

AN ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER.

The model newspaper of our country—complete in all the departments of an American family paper.—HARTFORD CHRISTIAN SECRETARY. Its editorial on the title, "A Journal of Civilization."—N. Y. Evening Post.

The ordinary opinion is that no paper which pays to HARPER'S WEEKLY from week to week form a remarkable series of historical and political events, illustrated, gathered by clear and pointed statements, by good consecutive comments, and from a sound point of view. They are the expression of mature conviction, high principle, and honest feeling, and deserve a place among the best newspaper writing of the time.—North American Review.

An Illustrated Weekly Journal of Fashion, Pleasure, and Instruction

Harper's Bazar.

A Supplement containing numerous full-sized Patterns of useful articles accompanies the Bazar every fortnight, and occasionally an elegant Colored Fashion Plate.

HARPER'S BAZAR contains 16 folio pages of the size of HARPER'S WEEKLY, printed on superfine satin-surfaced paper, and is published weekly.

HARPER'S BAZAR contains, besides pictures, patterns, etc., a variety of matter of especial use and interest to the family, articles on health, on housekeeping in all its branches; its editorial management is conducted in the belief that women are interested in instruct; and it has, besides, good stories and literary matter of merit.—New York Evening Post.

TERMS FOR 1869:

HARPER'S MAGAZINE, One Year.....$4 00
HARPER'S WEEKLY, One Year.....4 00
HARPER'S BAZAR, One Year.....4 00
HARPER'S MAGAZINE, HARPER'S WEEKLY, and HARPER'S BAZAR, to one address, for one year, $10 00; or any two for $7 00.

An Extra Copy of either the MAGAZINE, WEEKLY, or BAZAR will be supplied gratis for every Club of Five Subscribers at $4 00 each, to one remittance; or, six Copies for $20 00, without extra copy.

The Postage within the United States is for the MAGAZINE, 24 cents a year; for the WEEKLY or BAZAR 20 cents a year, payable yearly, semi-yearly, or quarterly, at the office where received. Subscription from the Dominion of Canada must be accompanied with 12 cents additional for the MAGAZINE, and 10 cents for the WEEKLY or BAZAR, to pre-pay the United States postage.

Subscribers to the MAGAZINE, WEEKLY, or BAZAR will find on the wrapper the date to which their subscription expires. Each periodical is stopped when the term paid for has expired. No notice is necessary to give notice of discontinuance.

The Volumes of the MAGAZINE commence with the Numbers for June and December of each year. Subscriptions may commence with any Number. When no time is specified, it will be understood that the publisher wishes to begin with the First Number of the current Volume, and back Numbers will be sent accordingly.

The Volumes of the WEEKLY commence with the first Number of January and July of each year. When no time is specified, it will be understood that the subscriber wishes to commence with the Number next after that of his or her letter.

In remitting by mail, a Post-Office Order or Draft payable to the order of HARPER & BROTHERS is preferable to Bank Notes, since, should the Order or Draft be lost or stolen, it can be renewed without risk to the sender.

In ordering the MAGAZINE, the WEEKLY, or the BAZAR, the name and address should be clearly written. No direction is to be changed, both the old and the new one must be given.

TERMS FOR ADVERTISING IN HARPER'S PERIODICALS.

Harper's Weekly.—Inside Pages, $1 50 per Line; Outside Page, $2 per Line; Cuts and Display, $1 50 per Line—each insertion.

Harper's Bazar.—Inside Pages, $1 50 per Line; Outside Page, $2 per Line—each insertion.

Harper's Magazine.—Inside Pages, $1 50 per Line; Outside Page, $2 per Line—each insertion.

Address HARPER & BROTHERS, New York.

WHAT! NOT GOT IT!—The Pictorial Double Number PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL for January, with thousand of thirty illustrations.—Heredity of Character, Temperaments, and Complexions of prominent Americans; besides an entertaining chapter on Dogs, fully illustrated, and a host of other attractive reading.

EMPLOYMENT.—10,000 Agents wanted. Circulars free. Address J. C. RAND & CO., Biddeford, Me.

THE EPICURE.

HEALTHY-LOOKING INDIVIDUAL. "But, Biddy darlin', sure ye havn't given me a taste of Jelly or a bit of Dessert wid me Turkey and Venison."

COOK (one of those faithful, saving, valuable kind). "Ah! but ye'r always grumbling! ye'r ain't the only one I have to feed and lie for!

Sterling Silver Ware,
AND
Fine Electro-Plated Ware,
of the following trade-marks:

Trade-Mark for Silver. Trade-Mark for Electro-Plate.

MANUFACTURED BY THE
GORHAM MANUFACTURING CO.,
PROVIDENCE, R. I.

Orders received from the Trade only, but these goods may be obtained from responsible dealers every where.
GORHAM MANUFACTURING CO.

J. O. HULL'S SON, New York.
BAY RUM SOAP
The Best Soap in use.
NONE BETTER IMPORTED.

M. J. PAILLARD & Co.
No. 21 Maiden Lane, up stairs, offer for the Holidays the LARGEST and FINEST STOCK of MUSICAL BOXES
ever collected in this city. They have been carefully selected, and can not fail to please the most exacting. PRICES ARE WITHIN THE REACH OF ALL. Popular, Operatic, and Sacred Tunes arranged in a variety of ways.
The TOY MUSICAL BOX is a very desirable plaything for children.

PRINCE & COS ORGANS AND MELODEONS. 43,000, now in use. BUFFALO, N. Y. CHICAGO, ILL.

WANTED—AGENTS—$75 to $200 per month, everywhere, male and female, to introduce the GENUINE IMPROVED COMMON SENSE FAMILY SEWING MACHINE. This Machine will stitch, hem, fell, tuck, quilt, cord, bind, braid, and embroider in a most superior manner. Price only $15. Fully warranted for five years. We will pay $100 for any machine that will sew a stronger, more beautiful, or more elastic seam than ours. It makes the "Elastic Lock Stitch." Every second stitch can be cut, and still the cloth can not be pulled apart without tearing it. We pay Agents from $75 to $200 per month and expenses, or a commission from which twice that amount can be made. Address SECOMB & CO., PITTSBURGH, Pa.; BOSTON, Mass.; or ST. LOUIS, Mo.
CAUTION.—Do not be imposed upon by other parties palming off worthless cast-iron machines, under the same name or otherwise. Ours is the only genuine and really practical sheep machine manufactured.

SEND for the Beautiful New Song and Chorus "FLORENCE McBRIDE." Mailed on receipt of 40 cts. Catalogues free. Address S. BRAINARD & SONS, Cleveland, O.

CALENBERG & VAUPEL'S AGRAFFE PIANOS
RECEIVED THE FIRST PREMIUM IN 1868.
Warerooms and Factory, 359 & 325 West 36th St., N.Y.

COLD WEATHER DOES NOT CHAP or roughen the skin after using WRIGHT'S ARCONATED GLYCERINE VARIETY OF SOLIDIFIED GLYCERINE. Its daily use makes the skin delicately soft and beautiful. Sold by all Druggists.
R. & G. A. WRIGHT, Philadelphia.

DR DE JONGH'S LIGHT BROWN COD LIVER OIL
Is convincingly proved by the highest medical testimony, and by the practical test of successful experience for twenty years in all parts of the world, to be, beyond all question, the purest, the most efficacious, the most palatable, and, from its rapid curative effects, the most economical of all kinds.

CONSUMPTION & DISEASES OF THE CHEST.
DR. DE JONGH'S OIL is administered with extraordinary success in cases of consumption and diseases of the chest. No remedy so rapidly restores the exhausted strength, improves the nutritive functions, stops emaciation, checks the perspiration, quiets the cough and expectoration, or produces a more marked and favorable influence on the local malady.

DEBILITY OF ADULTS AND CHILDREN.
DR. DE JONGH'S OIL possesses unequaled and particular nutritive and restorative properties; hence its marvelous efficacy in debility of adults and children. It revives the natural appetite, improves assimilation, and regulates the functions of digestion and excretion; and gradually restores health and strength to the most feeble and debilitated constitutions.

TRADE MARK.

Dr. DE JONGH'S GENUINE OIL is shipped to the UNITED STATES in Imperial Half-Pint Bottles ONLY, sealed with a Patent Trade-Mark Capsule, every bone opaque, white, top, and bottom, with a blue line on a red ground, and the label, under the wrapper on each bottle, bears THREE SIGNATURES, viz., those of Dr. DE JONGH; of ANSAR, HARFORD & Co.; and of EDW'D GREEY & Co.

SOLE CONSIGNEES,
ANSAR, HARFORD & CO., 77, Strand, London.
SOLE ACCREDITED AGENTS IN AMERICA,
EDW'D GREEY & CO., 38, Vesey St., New York.
Sold by all Druggists, at $1.50 per Bottle.
☞ A Descriptive Pamphlet post free on application.

JOSEPH GILLOTT'S STEEL PENS.
TRADE-MARK: JOSEPH GILLOTT, WARRANTED.
Or Descriptive Name, and Designating Number.
JOSEPH GILLOTT & SONS,
91 John Street, New York.
HENRY OWEN, Sole Agent.

BISHOP & REIN,
JEWELERS,
Under Fifth Avenue Hotel, New York.
DIAMONDS, EMERALDS, PEARLS, CAMEOS, ROMAN, Florentine, Byzantine Mosaics, and other Fine Jewelry and Silver-Ware.
WATCHES of all the principal makers. Sole Agts. of M. F. DENT & CO., 33 Cockspur St., London, Watchmakers to H. M. Queen Victoria.
FRENCH PLATED WARE,
ARTISTIC ORNAMENTS, URNS, TEA-URNS, KNIVES, FORKS, SPOONS, &c., &c.,
Superior to any thing made in this country.
CORAL JEWELRY, a large and choice assortment.
BISHOP & REIN, Under 5th Ave. Hotel, N. Y.

SMITH'S COUGH CARAMELS.
Excellent for the Throat & Lungs.
Sold by Druggists.
J. F. HENRY, Ag't,
21 Park Row, N. Y.

CONSULAR SEAL CHAMPAGNE,
AS IMPORTED FOR NEW YORK UNION CLUB.
TOMES, MELVAIN & Co., Sole Importers,
No. 6 MAIDEN LANE, NEW YORK.

STEREOPTICONS, MAGIC LANTERNS, and Dissolving-View Apparatus, with the improved Calcium Light, and several hundred artistically-colored Photographic Views on Glass, illustrating Art, Science, History, Travels, &c., &c. Priced and Illustrated Catalogue free on application. T. H. McALLISTER, Optician, No. 49 NASSAU STREET, NEW YORK.

OPEN THIS DAY,
THE NEW COLORS IN
DOG-SKIN GLOVES,
SCARFS, and TIES,
WITH AN IMMENSE VARIETY OF SHIRTS, COLLARS,
AND UNDERCLOTHING,
AT EXTREMELY LOW PRICES.
UNION ADAMS,
No. 637 Broadway.

THE AUTOMATIC CLOTHES WASHER and BOILER. JOHN RESOR, Pat. Nov. 29, 1864. Dispenses with labor, worry, and tear.' Decided by the Patent Office to be the only original and first Self-acting Portable Wash Boiler ever made.
(See Decision of the United States Patent Office, Nov. 2, 1868.)
Extract from Journal New York State Fair, 1868.
"The operation of this machine was fully satisfactory, and the Committee award it the First Premium, for the reason that it did its work effectually without rubbing the clothes."
Sample Boiler, No. 8, medium size, $10; or parts for the improvement with Royalty Stamp, $4. Send C.O.D.
Liberal Terms offered to Dealers and reliable Agents.
Resor Iron and Copper Works,
AUTOMATIC CLOTHES WASHER and BOILER CO. OFFICE, 170 CEDAR STREET, NEW YORK.

GREAT REDUCTION IN PRICES.
FOR $350 EACH
We furnish, until further notice, our FOUR-OCTAVE ORGANS, Style No. 1, in solid black-walnut case, plain bed, and, besides Automatic Swell Improved Reed Valves, Improved Bellows, with two Blow Pedals, and other of the celebrated MASON & HAMLIN patented improvements. They have twice the power of Melodeons, with more variety and much better quality of tone.
Five-Octave, Double-Reed Organ, with five stops and tremulant, carved and panelled case.... $125
Five-Octave, Double-Reed, Cabinet Organ, five stops, with the improved VOX HUMANA, a new invention, now first offered, possessing the most wonderful effects; the finest instrument of its size made.....170
Fifty other styles of Organs at proportionate prices.
The MASON & HAMLIN ORGAN are the best in the world; the acknowledged standard of excellence in this department, by Juries of the Paris Special and seventy-five other first prizes. They are now offered at lower prices than are demanded for inferior work.
A new Price-List and Catalogue, with full particulars, issued with a blank note to any address.
THE MASON & HAMLIN ORGAN CO.,
No. 596 Broadway, N. Y.: 154 Tremont St., Boston.

SOMETHING for CHRISTMAS.
Nothing can be more acceptable as a Present for Childhood and New Year's than a GOOD SEWING MACHINE. Such is the "FLORENCE," adapted to all kinds of family work. There is none better. We are therefore warranted to give perfect satisfaction, or money will be cheerfully refunded.
Call and see it in operation, or send for a circular.

BICKFORD KNITTING MACHINE,
One of the best, for all kinds of Knitting, in the world. Price, $80.
DEALERS IN
SILK, COTTON, MACHINE-NEEDLES, Shuttles, Bobbins, Oil, Machine-Trimmings, &c., &c.
SALESROOMS: 505 BROADWAY, NEW YORK; 141 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON.
FOSTER & RICHARDSON,
Successors to C. Parsel & Co.

FURRIER AND HATTER,
Daniel D. Youmans,
717 BROADWAY,
NEW YORK HOTEL.
FURS IN ALL VARIETIES.
IMPORTER OF ENGLISH HATS.

FIRST GUN for the HOLIDAYS.
ESTABLISHED IN NEW YORK CITY IN 1832.
REDFIELD & RICE.
No. 4 MAIDEN LANE,
MAKERS OF THE FINEST GRADES OF SILVER PLATED WARES.
We make our own goods, deposit the silver accurately by weight, and warrant each article by our trademark on the base, and by written guarantee, if preferred. They are equal to the finest grades of English and French wares, are artistic in design, and elegantly ornamented.

CUTLERY,
PEARL, IVORY, and RUBBER CUTLERY in great variety, plated and unplated, in quantities as required.
No. 4 MAIDEN LANE, NEW YORK.

DAGUERREOTYPS COPIED TO LIFE SIZED PHOTOGRAPHS FOR TEN DOLLARS
ROCKWOOD 839 BROADWAY, N.Y.
(SEND FOR CIRCULAR.)

CLOTHING at FREEMAN & BURR's. Every Novelty of Style and Material.
CLOTHING at FREEMAN & BURR's. Overcoats, Business and Dress Suits.
CLOTHING at FREEMAN & BURR's. Boys' and Youths' Suits and Overcoats.
CLOTHING at FREEMAN & BURR's. Fine Piece Goods for Orders to Measure.
CLOTHING at FREEMAN & BURR's. Cardigan Jackets and Furnishing Goods.
SELF-MEASUREMENT. FREEMAN & BURR's. OUR NEW RULES for SELF-MEASUREMENT enable gentlemen in the country to order their clothing from us, with the certainty of receiving PERFECT-FITTING garments.
Rules and Price-List mailed free on application.
FREEMAN & BURR'S Clothing Warehouse,
No. 124 FULTON and No. 90 NASSAU STS., N.Y.

Wm. Knabe & Co.
MAGNIFICENT
Grand, Square, and Upright
PIANOS.
Unapproachable for their IMMENSE POWER OF TONE, GREAT SINGING QUALITY,
Evenness throughout the entire Scale, Easy Action, Workmanship, and Durability, and pronounced Unrivaled by all the
FAMED ARTISTS OF THIS COUNTRY AND EUROPE.
Every Instrument Warranted for Ten Years.
WAREROOMS,
650 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

J. BAUER & CO.,
General Agents and Manufacturers and Importers of Musical Instruments, Strings, and Musical Merchandize.

KALDENBERG & SON, Manufacture of Meerschaum Pipes and Holders, with Monogram, Portraits, &c. Wholesale and Retail. Repairing in all its branches. Send for Drawings and Price-List. Box 6734. Stores: 23 Wall St., 6 John St., 7 Nassau St., corner John.

PIANISTS MATINEE contains National Airs of 20 countries, Opera Melodies, Sonatas, Songs Without Words, Four-handed Pieces, Waltzes, Redowas, Marches, Quicksteps, Easy Pieces Fingered for Beginners, 100 Finger and Contra Dances, 20 Waltzes, 24 sets of Quadrilles (including Lancers, Caledonians, Prince Imperial, The Germans, Grand Duchess, Bella Helene, &c.), with calls. Over 300 pieces of popular music. Forms all the latest compositions of Strauss, Gungl, Faust, Perlow, C. Faust, &c., belay a Musical Library in itself. Price: Boards, Morocco backs, $1; Cloth sides, Turkey Morocco backs and corners, $1.25; same, Full Gilt, the first-class musical present. Sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of price. ELIAS HOWE, 163 Court St., Boston.

MARVIN & CO.'s
CHROME IRON SAFES
ARE THE BEST IN THE WORLD.
265 Broadway, N. Y.

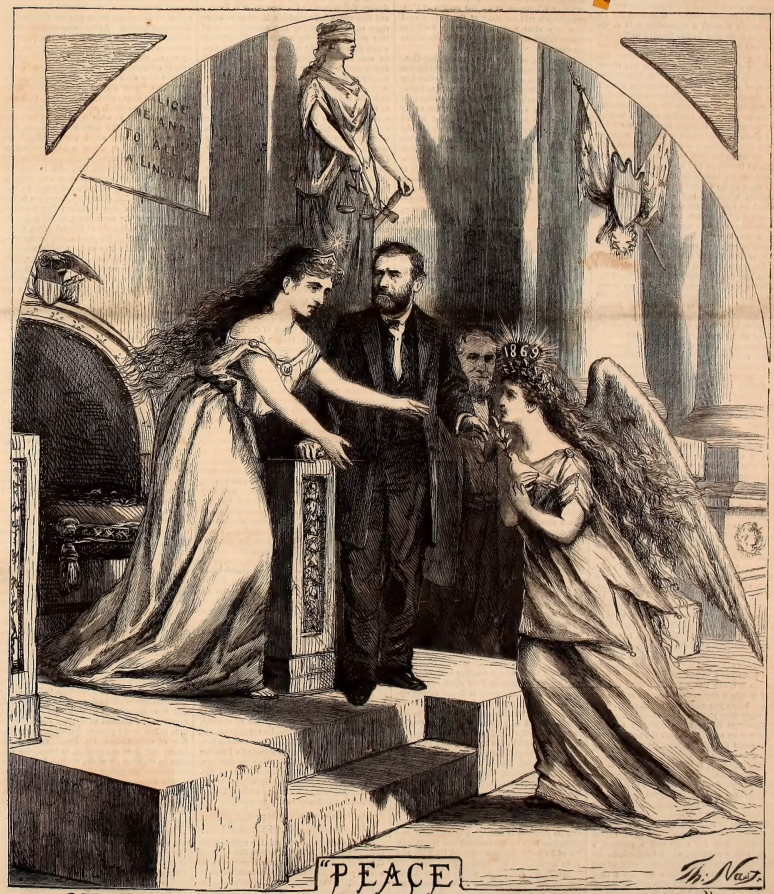
WOODWARD'S Country Homes.
150 Designs, $1.50, postpaid.
Geo. E. Woodward, Architect, 191 Broadway, New York.
Send for catalogue of all new books on Architecture.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

A JOURNAL OF CIVILIZATION.

VOL. XIII.—No. 628.] NEW YORK, SATURDAY, JANUARY 9, 1869. [SINGLE COPIES, TEN CENTS. $4.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE.

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the Year 1868, by Harper & Brothers, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court of the United States, for the Southern District of New York.



"PEACE ON EARTH AND GOOD WILL TOWARDS MEN."

HARPER'S WEEKLY.
SATURDAY, JANUARY 9, 1869.

THE CHRISTMAS EXTRAVAGANZA.

THE holidays are traditionally celebrated in England by extravagant pantomimes. The Drama has found all their resurrence in producing the most laughable absurdities. Harlequin and Columbine, and Cherry and Fair Star, and a hundred more grotesque but less familiar figures, disport themselves upon the stage, to the infinite entertainment of the dear young folks who have been feasting upon plum-pudding and mince-pies of immense magnitude. The most delightfully impossible things, the most absurd, the most startling, are the most vociferously applauded. The Lord of Misrule has his unchallenged way, and with Jack the Giant Killer rips open the paunch of a towering giant, or Hop o' my Thumb saves his brethren from the ogre, the youthful spectators shout and scream with joy. Who has not fancied the sympathetic pleasure of the good manager who prepares these surprises and delights for innocent youth? Who does not see him gazing through a convenient hole at the beaming faces that he has kindled with happiness, and regard him as one of the benefactors of his species? Who can not imagine him catching the contagion of pleasure and cheering lustily the performance he has himself prepared, or making, as it were, projections himself into the audience, and from that point of view congratulating himself upon his great goodness?

We do not live in London, and the holiday pantomime at our theatres is usually a sombre and grave entertainment. But the manager of the White House makes amends for all. He will not let an innocent public feel the holiday antics of Harlequin and his crew, and it is easy to imagine his benign countenance as the curtain drew up on Christmas morning upon the absurdity which he had especially prepared. Indeed, on the occasion the good manager was his own chief performer, and the absurdity was unprecedented. The spectacle was a new version of the old jest of Barataria. The manager himself played the perpetual governor and lawgiver of an island, issued, with all the most laughably preposterous edicts, with an air of supreme and final authority which convulsed the audience with laughter. Indeed, there is nothing in the most amusing pantomime, or the most royal pretense of King Sancho Panza, more ridiculous than the good manager gravely assuming to be the Government of the United States and to dispense with the laws at his pleasure. There is a person, for instance, by the name of DAVIS now under indictment for a capital crime, and in the Christmas pantomime the excellent manager represents himself as waving his august hand and exclaiming, like Harlequin shipping his baton sword upon a cannon-ball and turning it into an apple-dumpling: "Let the laws go to grass, and let DAVIS go free!"

It was a very excellent jest, and the country is greatly indebted to this painstaking manager who, if his efforts to please have not always been successful, has yet never failed to try a new dodge when the old one failed. His comedy, however, is much superior to his tragedy, while it is in pure farce and irrational extravagance that he has kindled most merriment. Indeed, since the extravaganza of swinging round the circle, which had a considerable run, there has been nothing so exquisitely entertaining as the Christmas Amnesty. This entertainment had but one defect in its construction, and that was its limitation to the ruler's own supposed acts. King Sancho in his new amusements would never have been content with regulating Barataria. He would have laid the Continent under his royal rule. So the good author and manager of the Christmas Amnesty ought to have included Europe, Asia, Africa, and the isles adjacent. He should have proclaimed the pardon of all restraints of law, the overthrow of every kind of barrier, the universal removal of disability. For it is an old maxim that what one wish you may or will ask for a million. When you enter Fairy-land it is as easy to take a step of seven leagues as of three feet. When you undertake to call spirits from the vasty deep you may as well—"an honest youth—" go in" to any imaginable number. This was an oversight which the worthy manager would doubtless correct if an opportunity were offered him.

But, unluckily, it will not be. This is his last appearance. After a varied performance of four years, during which—such is the lot of the most self-sacrificing devotees of the public favor—he has been more heartily and deservedly hissed than any previous performer upon the same stage, he leaves it with this extraordinary antic. Humpty Dumpty and other clowns sometimes quit the scene with a grimace, a word, or a movement, which brings down the House; but our present performer, original and irresistible, does not make a leg, nor a face, but with the fervor of Stiggins and the unconsciousness of Chadband, lifts his hands of benediction and exclaims, "Bless-e-es you, my children!" and so vanishes amidst a roar of laughter.

CABINET SPECULATIONS.

THE admirable silence of the President elect has strangely puzzled and somewhat moved the indignation of those who think their advice very essential to the wise government of the country. The speculations upon the Cabinet and the general policy of General GRANT are wholly without knowledge; and the opinion of one man is as good as that of another. Our friends the correspondents are busily making a Cabinet, and an occasional dispatch is received from Washington informs us, with a solemn air of importance, that the General is in favor of economy, and again that he does not approve any waste of the public money; and one asserts that he thinks an extra session desirable, and that he told Mr. OAKES AMES, a representative in Congress from Massachusetts, who, as the Manager of the Credit Mobilier, is understood to make heavy contracts with Mr. OAKES AMES as Manager of the Pacific Railroad, that he doubted the wisdom of giving the public money to that enterprise, of which we all hear considerably more than we all know. Would it not be worth while to collect all the daily papers to publish the speech of Mr. WASHBURN, of Wisconsin, at the last session of CONgress, which told the story of the Pacific road in a very summary, but which for some reason failed to be laid very generally before the country?

Meanwhile, we may be very sure that GENERAL GRANT consults with those whose judgment he values, even at the possible risk of offending those whose opinions he does not care to know. We will not submit his Cabinet to the decision of a vote, he would probably be quite as far from a result as he would be without it, and should the voters happen to agree upon the Secretaries, it would by no means follow that they would make as good a Cabinet as one that he should select for himself. General SCHENCK will probably remain in charge of WAR if he wishes, because General GRANT is known to think him a good Secretary. On the other hand—so easy is it to speculate with the retrospect—there is no doubt that he favors strict economy, and, therefore, he will hardly retain a Secretary of State whose aspirations for territorial extension by purchase show so little symptom of a struggling Treasury. Mr. WELLES's years and often infirmities seem to require release from the arduous toils of office, and as one guess, as he said, is as good as another, it is possible that if Mr. EVARTS wishes to remain Attorney-General, he will do so. General GRANT was, with some of the party that visited Washington to avenge the removal of the President when he was impeached; but we doubt if he considered Mr. EVARTS guilty of any serious offense when he became the leader of the DEFENCE. He probably approved the action of the National Convention, which declined to denounce Mr. PRESIDENT JOHNSON for the VETO MESSAGES, however he differed from the conclusions of those gentlemen. Mr. EVARTS has been always a Republican, and was never deluded into the support of "the policy" of the late Mr. JOHNSON'S Cabinet, as Mr. STANTON did, and although technically Conservative in his general views, there is yet no reason to suppose that a man of such character and ability and political consistency, will be peremptorily set aside.

Of course this assumes that General GRANT'S Cabinet will be composed of men of various shades of opinion within the party that elected him, a supposition which the composition of the cabinets under which he was elected at least make probable.

MR. JAMES FISK, JUN.

THE old test, "I know he was a gentleman by a remark he made," may be applied with infinite charm to the character of Mr. JAMES FISK —Mr. JAMES FISK, JUN.—most honorably and favorably known in the late history of the ERIE RAILWAY. "I know he was a gentleman" by an act he did" would be the correct rendering as applied to Mr. JAMES FISK, JUN. Could any thing be more surprising to any body who knows the facts, who is familiar with stock operations, and especially Erie stock operations, who knows that the sense of honor among operators is fabulously developed—all this must seem to a word too coarse to describe their forbearing charity—could any thing be more surprising than that the Springfield Republican or any other journal should have supposed that any implication have hinted the mere surmise of a suspicion that Mr. JAMES FISK, JUN., being in that line of business, was not the soul of honor and a DAMASCUS blade of integrity? At least Mr. JAMES FISK, JUN., was surprised, and sued the journal for libel. By-and-by Mr. SAMUEL BOWLES, the editor, came up from the City of New York—a city of which it may at least be said that its judiciary is unspotted by suspicion, and illustrious both by the learning and the character of its great magistrates—and his wife, who is an invalid, was with him.

Mr. JAMES FISK, JUN., always anxious to accommodate, as if he knew by his own observation or by that of others—possibly these worthy laborers for hire who are sometimes calumniously called spies—but whom we do not call so, for forearn and the vast possibility of libel suits forbid that we should ever assert or distantly suggest that Mr. JAMES FISK, JUN., employs spies, and we do not so assert or distantly suggest; the conscientious Mr. FISK, we say, anxious to accommodate Mr. BOWLES ("Mr. BOWES, when would it please you to be hanged?"), sent him notice that he had transferred his suit to the New York courts. That must have been a glad tidings to Mr. BOWLES, for if any thing could comfort a Massachusetts man, sued by a New York magnate, it must be the knowledge that the case was to be tried by a New York Erie judge, whatever such a magistrate may be; and if it be a libelous term, of which we have no further say, we declare as libelous intention in using it, meaning merely any upright MANSFIELD, or COKE, or MARSHALL, who sits in Hamilton county—by which we do not mean abodes inaccessible to justice—the New York courts.

At eight o'clock in the evening Mr. BOWLES was talking with some friends at the Fifth Avenue Hotel, when he was roughly seized by some persons who called themselves sheriff's officers, who threw before him a paper which they said was a writ from that CORE of our judiciary, the learned and incorruptible M'CUNN; and they violently hurried Mr. BOWLES to a carriage in waiting, and, in scarcely time as they pulled him along to ask the friend with whom he was talking to tell Mr. BOWLES that he was summoned to see Mr. FISK business." Being thrust into the carriage he was driven rapidly to the Ludlow Street jail, and upon arriving Mr. BOWLES requested the jailer to fur nish him with writing paper, writing to his wife, and to the counsel of Mr. FISK. When the notes were written the jailer said that he could not send them till the next morning after four o'clock, when the friends of Mr. BOWLES began to assemble at the jail, the notes were sent. Mr. DAVID DUDLEY FIELD, the chief counsel of Mr. JAMES FISK, JUN., heard his note and endeavored to find Mr. JAMES FISK, JUN., but in vain. We congratulate Mr. FIELD upon a silent acquittal of any share, or even form of suspicion of meanness and guile, as Mr. JAMES FISK, JUN. Among the higher pleasures of the noble profession of the law to a man of cultivation and refined taste Mr. FIELD must find the opportunity it affords of co-operating with the CORE of our judiciary, M'CUNN, and of serving a public-spirited citizen like Mr. JAMES FISK, JUN.

The Sheriff, whose officers the men who arrested Mr. BOWLES professed to be, was finally discovered by Mr. CHARLES REISS, a friend of Mr. BOWLES, at the house of a Mr. BROWN attending a festivity in honor of the election of the new MAYOR, Mr. A. OAKEY HALL, a gentleman of whom it may be said that his heart's desire is to free the city from the rule of a corrupt ring. Mr. JAMES FISK, JUN., was also there, as was Mr. BOWLES, who reported erroneously just judge to whom Mr. Attorney-General EVARTS is supposed to have referred in his late dinner speech. But the Sheriff declined to do any thing, and when, late in the night, other friends of the prisoner thundered at the Sheriff's door, that worthy officer was so sound asleep after the exhausting fatigue of doing honor to the new Mayor that he could hear nothing. The next morning came a score of friends able and eager to sign any amount of bail-bonds; and after the payment of two hours of fifty thousand dollars each Mr. BOWLES was released. "I knew he was a gentleman by an act he did;" and if any body had entertained any doubt that Mr. JAMES FISK, JUN., is a perfect gentleman he must now be satisfied. That he is a scrupulously honorable and exact man; that he is unyielding, as against evil in all transactions in Erie, was a repulsive slander; that he is in trade the fit peer of Mr. Justice M'CUNN in the law; that all widows and orphans and wards of nations instinctively turn to him when they would invest money safely; that he is a client in whom Mr. DAVID DUDLEY FIELD may take a generous pride, has been long understood; and that the arrest of Mr. BOWLES was not a conspiracy between Mr. JAMES FISK, JUN., Mr. Justice M'CUNN, and the Sheriff of New York, and hugely enjoyed by that urbane new Mayor of whom the city is so proud as a true representative of the great principles of honesty and reform—all this must now be clear to the dullest mind. Such events as this arrest deepen the public sense of security, heighten respect for the law, its magistrates and administrators, and give the down-trodden people of ethic monarchies a glimpse of a Paradise they can not enter. It is in this view that gentlemen like Mr. JAMES FISK, JUN., and Mr. Justice M'CUNN appear not only as types of that conservatism of which the city of New York is the seat, but as boons to humanity.

THE TENURE-OF-OFFICE LAW.

GENERAL BUTLER proposes the repeal of the Civil Tenure bill, and it is stated that General GRANT also favors it. But the President elect has not yet declared himself, and we shall certainly not take his opinions from any body but himself. If he thinks the repeal of the law desirable he will give good reasons for it; but meanwhile the wisdom of the act seems to us plainer than ever. It was passed to restrain the evident danger of an immense executive power ruthlessly used against the will of the people. But, although this was the occasion of its passage, further reflection shows that such restriction of that power in our Government is peculiarly desirable when combined with a system like that of Sir JANCKEN'S Civil Service bill. It is first obvious advantage is its tendency to pacify and purify politics by preventing a national election from being merely a fierce broadside battle; second, that the tenure of the least office is no longer party success only the office and the officer will begin to be more respectable. The chances of public favor for Mr. BUTLER'S bill would be greatly increased, and an element of tranquillity will be introduced into our affairs which can hardly be prejudicial to the public interest.

Another, and a very important, advantage in the law is its relief to the President The chief business of the Executive had become the distribution of patronage. The time that should be given by him, as a branch of the Legislature, to an intelligent consideration of the laws, was consumed by the interminable dispute whether Jones or Jenkins—neither of whom he knew—should be appointed: and whether it were more politic to disappoint Smith and his friends than to disappoint Brown and his friends. Because of the temptation to a use of it to further personal ambition became more alluring, and when Mr. BUCHANAN, the Johnsonian Democrat, retired, quietly informed the civil officers of this country that they were the President's pensionaries, the Pope's "poor gentlemen," and must do as their patron bade, the law was found to have merely stated the inevitable and logical result of the old system. It is what it has been in every other country. The story of the Stuarts and the THIRD in England, which nearly ruined the country and almost drove it into revolution, was one of "placemen:" and LOUIS PHILIPPE'S reign in France, LOUIS NAPOLEON'S, and last all hold upon public confidence and respect, was his vast army of place-holders. In this country it was Mr. JOHNSON'S intention to put Mr. RANDALL'S theory into the Executive service, and to secure the ascendency of his policy by means of the vast army of office-holders, whose fortunes and places were dependent on the price of their offices. The indescribable mischief which could be thus done by a President, whether a minority or a majority President, bent upon his own purposes, wholly regardless of the probable disadvantage in a law of the kind we are considering.

The present JOHNSON'S veto of the Civil Tenure bill was the weakest of all his performances of that kind. He confined himself almost entirely to retrospect and avoided argument. His chief reliance was on the fact that, although very eminent authorities differed upon the constitutional view of the question, yet custom had vested the power of removal in the President's pleasure. The reply to such a statement was conclusive, that experience had shown such a custom to be often prejudicial and always dangerous to the public welfare, and that a bad custom should be corrected by a good law. So also the arguments of the President's counsel during the Impeachment were useless. There was no original difference of opinion upon the constitutional theory which has always continued, and the law of Congress, passed over the veto, was merely the true interpretation so far as Congress was concerned.

Are the general principles upon which the bill was passed less weighty now than they were two years ago? The occasion, of course, does not pressing as it then was. The new President is not only in accord with the convictions and policy of the party that elected him, but his character inspires so profound a confidence that, were the sole power of appointment vested in him, there would be no fear of its misuse. Indeed, the power to appoint is the one in which nothing more strikingly than in the feeling of trust and hope that inspires the country now that General GRANT is to be Mr. ANDREW JOHNSON, contrasted with the gloom and doubt that depressed it during Mr. JOHNSON'S term. But the point we are considering is a principle of wise administration, not of persons. It is one in which General GRANT as a citizen is as much interested as any of us. The President, indeed, is the most conspicuous officer of the Government, and it is urged with warmth that he should, therefore, be allowed to appoint his subordinates. But in the present enormous multiplication of civil offices by the dominant party not know, and does not pretend to know, the persons he appoints; and the reasons for their removal from the power of suspension allowed by the Act—can seldom be so peremptory that they can not await the investigation of Congress, except when they are reasons personal to the President, which are reasons that ought not to prevail.

Even the selection of the President's immediate advisers by himself has never been absolute; it has always been subject to the approval of the Senate; and it was one of the propositions at the beginning of the rebellion that the Senate, which was Democratic, should refuse to ratify Mr. LINCOLN'S nominations. By the present bill the old Cabinet holds office for a month after the new President comes in, unless sooner removed with the consent of the Senate; and the enmity that has always ruled in the confirmation by the Senate of the new Cabinet will, of course, continue, while if the Senate would not remove the Cabinet at the end of the first month, it would not at the end of six months. The point for us to consider is, not whether it is agreeable to a President to remove the Secretaries at pleasure, but whether Mr. Johnson's attempt to turn the War Department to his own purposes does not reveal a peril in administration which should not be tolerated. Otherwise there would be no collision between this President and the Senate upon this subject; for they will generally be in accord politically, and should the President wish to change any member of his Cabinet there would be no trouble. In the extraordinary case, however, when it is not a question of personal spite, but of the public welfare, since the decision must lie somewhere, experience and reflection show that it should rather be with the Senate.

We are inclined to think that the principle of the Civil Tenure bill, as it is better understood, will be more heartily approved. But if the law is to remain, and all present we see no sufficient reason for its repeal, it should be supplemented by the Civil Service bill. If people are to be kept in office, let us have those that are worth keeping, and they ought to be secured, they will be more wisely removed by the old action of the President and Senate.

THE GREAT TUNNEL—HOOSAC TUNNEL.

We stated in our last issue that the contract for the full completion of this work, authorized by the last Legislature of Massachusetts, remained open to determine whether the security for its completion required at first by the Executive, should be given or waived. Instead of giving security in the shape of bonds the matter was adjusted by accepting the stipulation of the contractors not to call for any payments until the State engineer shall certify that the work done, at less than average rates, shall exceed half a million of dollars, and that twenty per cent. of the remuneration shall stand as security for final completion. The contract between WALTER AND FRANCIS SHANLY and the Commissioners was signed on Thursday, the 24th December. The contractors agree to complete the tunnel and four and three-quarter miles of track for the latter end at 6,000 per mile) for $4,592,000. By the first of May, 1869, they are to have the work under such progress as to carry down the central shaft 14 inches daily, and to form from the same 250 feet of tunnel per month. By the first of May, 1870, the central shaft will have been carried down to the level of the tunnel, which they furnish two additional faces, after which the tunnel is to advance at the rate of 4900 feet per year. This will permit its completion in less than four years, but a year more will be granted, although it is expected that the work will be in running order in advance of that time.

This great enterprise, considered a marvel of engineering boldness and skill at the time of its origin, and over which the State has at times wavered, fearful of the issue, may now be considered as amply provided for. It is not at all improbable that the Mount Cenis tunnel owes its origin to this scheme, and the great vigor shown in piercing the Alps has in turn had its effect in the renewed energy of Massachusetts. The length of the Hoosac tunnel is about 4¾ miles, while that of Mount Cenis is 7 miles, 1044 yards. The latter was undertaken in the first instance by Sardinia, within whose territorial limits the mountain was situated, but by the cession of Savoy to France, and the subsequent adjustment of the boundary line, France acquired nearly one-half of the tunnel, and stipulated to pay that proportion of the cost, the work to remain throughout under the charge of the Italian engineers.

The Mount Cenis tunnel is constructed without the advantage of a central shaft, as the mountain attains an elevation above the tunnel of about one mile, while the length of the Hoosac shaft, located between the two spurs of the Hoosac Mountain, is only 1027 feet. When this shaft is completed four faces will be exposed to workmen, with the advantage of parallel tunnels during the progress of the work, and subsequently in operating the road. In order to afford ventilation to the Mount Cenis workmen compressed air must be carried into the tunnel through iron tubes. The air is highly compressed near each portal by means of a mountain stream. This air, which emitted at the heading of torrishes not only a cool atmosphere sufficient for the lungs, but also constitutes a force or power for moving drills and for expelling the vitiated atmosphere. Compressed air for purposes of ventilation and for use as a motive power have been employed on the Hoosac tunnel, and will doubtless be adopted by the new contractors. The act for incorporating the Troy and Greenfield road, on the line of which the tunnel occurs, was passed in May, 1848. The act authorizing a loan of the credit of the State for its construction was passed in April, 1854. The Mount Cenis tunnel was commenced in November, 1857. Massachusetts stands alone in her expenditure, while the Mount Cenis tunnel is connected with the funds of two great empires.

Upon the completion of this line Boston will have two routes to tap our great west whose roads extend through the valley of the Mohawk. One by way of Fitchburg, Greenfield, the Hoosac tunnel, North Adams, and Troy, the other by way of Worcester, Springfield, Pittsfield, Chatham Four Corners, and Albany. It is part of the design to have a separate railroad from the Hudson, to meet the lines on Lake Ontario; and the question arises, what effect these enterprises will have upon the contest between this city and Boston for the command of the Western trade?

The line by way of Springfield encounters an elevation between that place and Pittsfield of 1450 feet above tide, and in the ascent of that to the west to this it encounters an altitude of 1150 to the mile. The line by way of the tunnel rises, at the summit, between Fitchburg and Greenfield, to 1100 feet, and passes through the tunnel at an elevation of 838 feet above tide; but it has no grades steeper than 58 feet, while New York enjoys the benefit of tide-water from Troy or Albany to the ocean, and of a railway (the Hudson River) whose steepest grades are only fifteen feet. They occur at Poughkeepsie in the effort to reach a central point in the village, and now by a tunnel are passing by constructing the road at Poughkeepsie on the shore of the river. The Harlem road is less favorably situated for carrying freight to the city, as it is obliged to pass over the same mountain range through which the Hudson River makes a clean sweep, affording, at the foot of the mountain between Peekskill and Fishkill, a level line for the Hudson River Railroad track.

Except for about 104 days in each year, during which the river is closed by ice, we enjoy the immense advantage of the Hudson River, capable of floating the largest barges at rates for freight with which railroad lines can not compete, and at all times of the year of rates which, when managed with a view to the public interest—an object not long to be delayed—must remove all fears of successful competition, and the Legislature will, we feel the illiberal, for not rejoicing at the energy of Massachusetts.

In extending her enterprise to Lake Ontario she will be responsible for the immense benefit to the advantage which the New York Central enjoys in passing through the Allegheny at the dip at Little Falls. The road and canal there is about 360 feet above Lake Erie, and but about 100 higher than Lake Ontario, whereas the line suggested for competition must pass over the mountain at various points.

The supremacy of New York is assured for all time. It has the inestimable advantage of a canal and line of railroad which descend to the Lake Erie basin, and which, by the completion of a trifling counter elevation, and has only 110 feet to overcome between tide-water and Lake Erie. Our Eastern neighbors must find the productions they seek in the West and in Canada over high summits, while they can reach New York on descending grades at low expenses, except when all the waters of the canal and lines are worked for private interest, with no high regard for that of the public.

If we had no road but the one we should be on a footing with the Atlantic sea-ports south of New York, as its grades are about on a par with those encountered by them. Pennsylvania is constructing a railroad which will overcome elevations in the neighborhood of 1000 feet. North and South Carolina have high and nearly impassable mountains behind them, but South Carolina has built a road into the roads of Georgia, which are constructed around them and through an opening at Chattanooga to another range. The success of the Erie Railroad will be relied upon by many to prove that it was a great error in policy not to confine ourselves to the route indicated by nature for our canal and great lines of railway. WASHINGTON was the first to point it out when in command of the Revolutionary forces located in the valley of the Mohawk, and the first to express the hope that it would be improved. His education as an engineer enabled him at a glance to perceive that New York stood unrivaled in her facilities for intercourse by land and sea, and, consequently, for commercial supremacy.

THE SIMPLE QUESTION.

THE London Pall Mall Gazette, in a long article on the policy of the United States, says that the American type of character is now fully formed, and that it is radically distinct from the English; and it adds, that the two countries are now morally and intellectually independent of each other. It is also of opinion that under such circumstances the common language upon which the English and American newspaper publicists is a misfortune rather than an advantage, because a "common interest plus personal indifference" is an excellent ground for the transaction of business. The special business between us, however, the Pall Mall Gazette does not discuss. Whether England ought to confess that she did wrong, or whether we ought to be satisfied with the money and not claim that England shall change her policy adopted during our war, it does not say.

Very well; as the case stands the situation of England is clear enough. She has laid down a precedent which she must be aware will be used against her. The British Government, in trying to stop the departure of the Alabama, acknowledged that she was an unlawful ship, in other words—a pirate. But then the Government did not forbid the rebel ships the hospitalities of its ports, when it knew perfectly well that they had no ports of their own to enter. May a neutral nation encourage and supply pirates against a belligerent? The precedent of England says that she may. We repeat what we have already asked—why insist upon settling that now? It is not our affair; it is England's. If she is willing to leave the precedent neither we nor any other nation is likely to dispute it from the selfish point of view. It is doubtless decided for the moment she goes to war, and therefore ignominiously binds her over to keep the peace. We are now very likely to insist upon making it a question of war, because we can satisfy ourselves upon cheaper terms.

Nations, like individuals, can only escape certain dishonor by some humble pie. If, as now appears, there is a disposition to pay pecuniary damages for the losses by the Alabama, let us courteously agree and arrange the details. If we stop there, England can not. The British Government must partake of that distasteful pastry, and propose an understanding which will be a recognition of the fatal principle, and which the other great Powers will gladly accept. And why should not this be done—not upon compulsion, of course, but frankly, and honestly, and reasonably? Upon the present principle of national action a Government will hardly apologize for its conduct, but it may imply an apology and make a very sincere expression.

The new Ministry contains at least some men of high qualities, men who would gladly dispense with the more pompous folly of diplomacy, and all that is possible enough to disturb a false sense of national honor. MR. BRIGHT did not hesitate to say at Birmingham that while the British Government had a legal right to recognize the belligerent rights of the rebel States "we had no moral right to do it at the precise time, or in the precise manner in which it was done." It is the spirit inspiring the new Cabinet would do more than MR. REVERDY JOHNSON'S Shakespeare and Milton to settle the Alabama question.

MR. BRIGHT truly says, that whoever tries to create jealousy between the two nations is an enemy of the human race. MR. GLADSTONE, we have reason to believe, shares this feeling at least, and so does MR. LOWE. They have only, then, to propose to the Government of the United States a practical renunciation of the principle upon which England proceeded, and to settle the claims. They necessarily have the initiative. And we are very sure that there is no intelligent and humane citizen of this country who would not hail with the heartiest satisfaction a proposition so honorable, which would allay the ill-feeling that now rankles in so many minds on both sides of the water, and go very far toward removing that international jealousy altogether.

THE OTHER MR. JOHNSON AGAIN.

IT is a kind of orphic and antistrophe. No sooner does MR. REVERDY ANDREW wriggle his swindling died away than there comes a fresh burst from REVERDY falling anew upon the neck, this time of Johnny Crapaud, and weeping over paternal friendship. Our worthy Ministers has been to a banquet of some French friends of the rebels, who wish to lay a cable between Brest and Duxbury, and the Minister of the United States informs them that "each State in the Union is sovereign, and that it the Company wished to carry their wires into Maine, and the State consented, no one could hinder them from going there."

What the mischief, then—the gentlemen who dined Mr. Johnson may have inly asked—can be the mischief did you interfere with the sovereignty of the States for? But they did not audibly ask it, satisfied to hear the American Minister assert the right of a sovereign State to secede.

What more remains for MR. JOHNSON to do to misrepresent his country? In considering the utter failure of his mission, however, there is a melancholy feeling of sympathy for him that so huge a blunder will probably be the last conspicuous act of a long and busy life passed, as it has been, in public service. If his head had ended with his speech advocating emancipation he would at least have been mentioned in our history without a smile.

MR. BLISS IN PARAGUAY.

MR. WASHBURN, late Minister to Paraguay, has arrived in this country, and before this paper is printed may have made some public explanation of the extraordinary manner in which he is reported to have left his recent post. This explanation becomes the more necessary in consequence of the letter of Admiral DAVIS, dated at Montevideo on the 5th of November, in which he says: "MR. BLISS, according to the latest accounts from Paraguay, continues in the service of President LOPEZ, and is engaged in the preparation of a work upon Paraguay."

This certainly is a very different tone. The last information that we, in this country, had from MR. BLISS was a letter from him in which he stated that "the service" of LOPEZ, upon which he was likely to enter, was such as the inmates of Sing Sing render to the State, "a not such as is required of the worst criminals at the gallows. But Admiral DAVIS's letter suggests the picture of a counselor co-operating with President LOPEZ at his conjuring, or of a scholar elaborating a history in studious tranquility. It is curiously at variance with the last account that MR. BLISS gave of himself.

The attention of MR. WASHBURNE must have been called to the very positive expression of opinion which the respect of the circumstances of his departure from Paraguay received, and he will hardly care to leave such injurious reports unnoticed.

PENSIVE MOMENTS.

Joy with youth's dream of beauty blends;
A sunlit glow is round it shed—
Children roses trampled under foot,
Hopes crushed and spirits overhead.
The angels of our happy hearts
Forever radiant we behold,
As those the monkish painters drew
Smile out of solid heavens of gold.

But, ah! fair being, I have learned
The lesson of sedater years,
And from the smiling wreath I turn
To beauty more akin to tears;
To tender loveliness that wins
From sympathy a softer pain,
And touches with diviner force
The chords of rapture in the heart.

The wonder of that perfect face,
The splendor of that peerless brow,
Must claim in every mood to be mine
In that which shapes their beauty now,
When to a twilight calm subdued,
The spirit, strengthened by repose,
Creates a glory of its own,
And bright in every feature glows.

What tender memories of the past
Their hold upon thy tears retain?
What inclinations take the form?
What silenced voices speak again?
What is the rapture, what the woe,
That lily full heart is throbbing from—
The secret of thy inmost life—
In pensive moments such as these?

No sorrow weighs upon thy heart:
It is not sadness moves the hand,
The dreamy depths of those large eyes
No bitter tears of anguish fill,
And yet the lovely face is pale,
And idle pondering is thine,
The silent rapture which alone
In pensive moments we divine.

DOMESTIC INTELLIGENCE.

CONGRESS stands adjourned till January 6.

The Indian Peace Commission is to meet early in January. There seems to be a difference of views between the Commissioners. The Commissioner having the transfer of Indian affairs to the War Department, and the Commissioner of Indian affairs are instructed to take the place of the Indian Bureau. The war is to be carried on while being conducted, as it is now with the views of General SHERMAN. Camps sharply, but mildly, will be established, and in the midst of the Indian territory, in the centre of operations. It is to be hoped that the reservation of the Cheyenne and Arrapahoes, and those of the Kiowa and Comanches, will be located in the country south of the Arkansas of wood and game.

The Board of Education of Brooklyn have voted $3,000, 000 toward the erection of a bridge across East River.

The receipts of 1867-68 amounted to $1,000,000 and the expenditures of Boston. The year previous it was only two millions of dollars. The year previous it was only two millions of dollars.

The new bridge across the Mississippi, between Dunleith and Dubuque, was completed on December 25. Its length is 1760 feet, and it cost $900,000.

The Register of Vital Statistics reports 885 deaths, 801 births, and 113 marriages in New York, and 346 deaths, and the 324 births, and 54 marriages in Brooklyn for 19.

The President on December 24 issued a proclamation locating date December 28, granting full and free pardon to all persons who have participated in the late rebellion, and to all who aided or abetted the same either directly or indirectly.

FOREIGN NEWS.

THE elections in Spain have resulted in the triumph of the Republican party. The Republicans carried the cities of Seville and Barcelona.

The Spanish Government has had advices, making rapid preparations for war. The Prussian Government has called a Congress of Ministers of the Powers of Europe to effect an amicable settlement. It is not likely that the Congress will result in any settlement, even if it is held, as the Sublime Porte declines to yield to the interference or to make a show of force or to transfer the Island to Egypt.

President Sarmiento, of the Argentine Republic, has secured the good offices of Minister M'Mahon toward an amicable settlement with Paraguay.

At this, the Emperor of Brazil has threatened to withdraw his Minister from Asuncion.

Up to the present time 6000 troops have been sent from Rio to reinforce the army in Uruguay, and more are soon to follow.

The eruption of Mount Etna has receded.

A collision between two Egyptian mail steamers recently occurred near Smyrna, and two hundred persons were killed.

A decision has been rendered by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council of England, condemning the practices of "dancing before the sacred images," and bonding "candles" on the altar.

By the last mail we learn that we have news from Paraguay to the 3d inst. The allied forces, under the command of Generals Caxias, made a desperate attack on the fortifications of Itororo-Pequa, but were defeated with a loss of 1,200 killed and wounded.

THE NEW YEAR—1869.—[DRAWN BY WINSLOW HOMER.]

MRS. SANTA CLAUS AND JESSIE BROWN.

You've heard of good old Santa Claus? ay, doubtless, all your life;
Though not of him I'm going to tell, but of his lovely wife,
And pretty little Jessie Brown, an orphan, you must know:
The story it was told to me a long, long time ago.

One stormy night—'twas Christmas-time—when all the children round
Hung up their stockings, knowing well with treasures they'd abound;
Then scampered laughingly to bed, to dream away the night,
Their little hearts all fluttering with gladness and delight.

But there was one poor little girl—her name was Jessie Brown—
Who with her dear grandfather lived here in Brookhaven town;
But he was old and very poor, and oft his tears would fall
Upon the little face of her, his darling one, his all.

This Christmas-eve their scanty meal was eaten in the dark,
Yet Jessie looked as bright and glad as any singing lark;
And when beside her grandpa's knee she lisped her evening prayer
She looked so sweet you would have thought an angel had been there;

Then with the "good-night" kiss she crept into her "trundle" bed,
And, smiling, asked, "Will Santa Claus come, now mamma is dead?"
"I hope he will," her grandpa said, and turned away his head;
Then, on a nail hung up with care, her stocking soon he spied,

With many a threadbare patch, although to mend it she had tried;
And when he thought her fast asleep he took it from the nail,
And by the fire-light you could see his face looked strangely pale.

His fingers trembled as he sighed, "My precious little dear!
Oh, would I had a thousand crowns! I'd put them all in here."

Then in the stocking dropped some nuts, and hung it up in haste,
And, walking to the door, looked out upon the dreary waste.

But as he looked a beauteous form before him did appear:
It was a lady, but she seemed as from some other sphere.

Her mantle all embroidered o'er with glist'ning flakes of snow;

Her hair like sparkling strings of pearls or dew-drops seemed to grow;
Upon her feet were sandals bright of frost-work, such as seen
At morn, when glints of sunlight fall upon the blades of green;
And oh! her eyes they were so bright! like twinkling stars they shone,
As in a gentle, dove-like voice, her errand she made known.

"I am the wife of Santa Claus, and with him came to town,
Because I wished so much to see sweet little Jessie Brown;
You'll not refuse me, I am sure, an entrance at your door;
The good I give the choicest gifts out of my bounteous store."

Then from her head a string of pearls she hastily unwound,
Each pearl a virtue was; their like elsewhere were never found;
And from her pocket forth she drew an hour-glass filled with sand,
That into golden crowns would turn if touched by Jessie's hand.

Then in the stocking, worn and old, she let the jewels fall,
With many other wondrous gifts too numerous to recall,
And filled it up with sugar-plums, the sweetest e'er were known,
And whispered soft in Jessie's ear, "These things are all your own."

A low, sweet whistle then was heard—'twas Santa Claus, they say,
Who, waiting all the while outside, now called his wife away.
To every house they went that night throughout Brookhaven town,
But none such priceless gifts received as little Jessie Brown.

BOOTH'S THEATRE.

THIS new theatre, of which we give a view on page 29, and which is soon to be opened, has its frontage on Twenty-third Street. Mr. BOOTH designs that it shall become, as doubtless it will, the best theatre in this country, both as an edifice and on account of its stage representations.

The building is in the Renaissance style of architecture, and stands 70 feet high from the sidewalk to the main cornice, above which is a Mansard roof of 24 feet.

That part of the building occupied as the theatre proper extends 149 feet along Twenty-third Street, and is divided into three parts, so combined as to form a superb ensemble, with arched entrances at either extremity on the side for the admission of the public, and on the other for the nse of the actors and others employed in the house. Directly in the centre of this frontage are the stage doors, devised for the purpose of securing the most rapid egress of a crowded audience in case of fire or any other sudden emergency. To the left of these doors, and either in the entire front, the building can be reached in five minutes. Between these entrances doors, and on other side, are quadrant and lofty windows, while above them, and forming a part of the second story, are roomy niches, surrounded by carved mouldings, resting on finely sculptured pedestals. Between these columns, at the depths of the recesses, are neat pilasters, containing the elliptic arches that will serve to crown and span the niches, the latter to be occupied by statues of the great dramatic authors and interpreters of every age and nation. The main hall in the centre is flanked on either side by curiously-contrived blank windows. This entire façade, as well as that on Fifth Avenue, is built of the finest Concord granite, from the best quarries in New Hampshire.

THE CHRISTMAS DINNER PARTY.

RUDE BOY.—"Oh! Ah! There comes Venus at Last!"

The interior is subdivided, architecturally speaking, into four heights, the first and low-ground embracing the parquette, circle, and orchestra seats, capable of accommodating eight hundred persons. The second tier is thrown into the dress circle, the third is the family circle, and the fourth constitutes the gallery or amphitheatre. The stage is 65 feet in breadth, and 75 feet in depth, 50 feet to the back flight, and, according to an original conception of Mr. Bouton, is set in a beautiful ornamental frame-work, so as to give the effect of a gorgeous picture to the mise en scene. On either side of the stage the boxes are tastefully arranged on a model style of perfect comfort and elegant ornaments. Immediately opposite, on the other side of the building and in a line with the stage, are the scenes of entry whose doors the ring painting saloon. Parallel with range the green-room, general dressing-rooms, and managers' offices. This part of the building is five stories in height, so distributed as to contain the apartments necessary for the actors, carpenters of hall, and the corps of assistants and gentlemen connected with the theatre. All of these interior subdivisions are, in their construction and finish, upon the most approved appliances for celerity and ease in the manifold operations of the entire company.

The first floor on Seventeenth Avenue, a space of fifty-five feet extending from the corner along Twenty-third Street, is taken up with handsome stores for the retailing and wholesaling of the most philhestic stairways. Above the lower frontage five four stories, divided into saloons and apartments for the use of the first that had such large and commodious studio, the second, or mezzanine story, adapted for residences, and the remaining two stories, with the same altered, are studios on the third, and residences on the fourth range. In the basement beneath the stores, opening on the alley, will be a spacious and neat restaurant, from which, by an original device, dumbwaiters will ascend to the upper portions of the structure, so that individuals and parties may be furnished with meals in absolute privacy. The whole view of this beautiful edifice, as seen from a point opposite the Twenty-third Street and Fifth Avenue façades, is superb. The glittering granite with its exquisitely poised, adorned with rich and appropriate carving, stanuary columns, pilasters, and arches, yet not overladen with ornamentation, and copied by the springing Mansard roof, fringed with its shaped pinnacles, offers a majestic and imposing presence, and forms one of the architectural and artistic gems of our city.

The walls of the entire building are lined with fireproof brick. Architects of this edifice are Messrs. Renwick & Sands.

THE SCHOLAR OF THE OLDEN TIME.

The scholar in the sixteenth century was a far more important personage than now. The supply of knowledge was very small, the demand for them very great. During the whole of the fifteenth and great part of the sixteenth century the chief part of the knowledge came from the scholastic philosophy of the Middle Ages to that of the Romans and the Greeks, and found more and more the old Pagan Art on which Monastic Art had not, and which was yet necessary for the full satisfaction of their craving after the Beautiful. Such a craving of the mind can seen it was natural that the classical scholar, the man who knew Latin and Greek, and more still Greece, should usurp the place of the mediæval teacher of mankind, and that scholars should not find their way to intellectual and artistic luxury, limited and privileged, and all the more redoubtable because its power lay in intellect, and had not yet collected itself into a class.

Those who (whether poor or rich) did not fear the mark and priest, at least feared the scholar, who alone knew the way to the keys of that magic lore by which the old necromancers had built cities like Rome, and worked marvels of enchantment and elemental skill which the degenerate modern could never equal.

If the scholar stooped in a town his hostess probably thought it a claim against her modest alms or vituualism. The penniless knight disposed with him on alchemy and the chances of making gold by the art of transmuting baser metals into gold. The queen or bishop wrote and him in private short casting their motives and finding their fates among the stars. But the statesman, who dealt with more practical matters, found him as an advocate and rhetorician, who could fight his master's enemies with the weapons of Demosthenes and Cicero. Wherever the scholar came he was received as the master of others as long as he was master of himself. The complaints which he so often uttered concerning the cruelty of fortune, the fickleness of princes, and so forth, were probably no more just than than such complaints are now. Then, as now, he got his deserts; and the world bought him at his own price. If he chose to sell himself to this patron and to that, he was used and thrown away; if he chose to remain in honourable independence, he was courted and feared.

LOVE'S CALENDAR.

The rose in the sunshine, Dearest!
Is whispering sweet to me;
The first thing Spring wearest
The memory of thee.

I think of thy voice when thrushes
Are singing their bridal song,
And violets round the bushes
Spread in a purple throng.

I think of thee when May's portal
(The rainbow arch of roses)
Seems like a glimpse of the mortal
Of vanished Eden given.

I think of thee when Death scatters
The yellow leaves in showers,
And the fertile rain-drop patters
In the sere autumn hours.

I thought of thee, Love! when Winter
Hung crystals on each spray,
And when the red oak splinter
Sound bright grim glory away.

I thought of thee when dark treason
Plotted each wind that blew,
But why detail each season?
I love the whole year through!

HOME AND FOREIGN GOSSIP.

The holidays would seem a mockery to multitudes of children were it not for the Christmas Tree Charity. At no time in all the year are the confectionery shops so showy, and children so anxious to taste the sweets which are so temptingly displayed. And since St. Nicholas distributes his offerings of many delightful folks with bright-colored bonbons, it may relieve the elders' parents to be reminded that candies are now usually colored with harmless vegetable substances. The mineral poisons once used for the purpose are now prohibited by the sanitary regulations. Some fancy sweetmeats are decorated with water-color paints, and the amount of the coloring is for convenient rather than for consumption. The ordinary kinds of gum, fruit-paste, and chocolate are rendered by and at suitable times, are not so unwholesome as generally considered. Of course, a child may easily be made sick by eating too many sweets, and is constituted as sugar; and nibbling sugar-plums all day long will seriously impair the digestive processes. But a moderate portion taken after meals will not be injurious. Candies are made of sugar, ginger, lemon, arable, and starch; the flavoring is put in either in boiling or kneading, and is usually an essential oil—a very small quantity of which will impart a strong flavor. The process of making candy varies with the different kinds, and the business is extensively carried on in this city.

About one months ago a young German in New Orleans fell from a high platform, and received his skull in a most shocking manner. It was supposed that he would die in a few hours; but he has lived, and his case has excited much interest among physicians in New Orleans. For a while the whole left portion of his whole body seemed completely paralyzed. Under a novel mode of treatment, which consisted in the application of cold and cold alternately for the whole length of the spine, by means of a special apparatus for the purpose, aided by the administration of ergot, and interrupted electrical currents, the young man gradually improved, and at the end of a week he recovered complete consciousness and the perfect use of his tongue, but it was soon discovered that the recollection of his past life had entirely left him, and he knocked out of his head, and he was obliged to begin over to learn everything. He had to learn to talk, learned many words, and can go about the city by himself. His mind is active, and his new memory good, yet very peculiar. For instance, if told to say "hat," he is as apt to say "horse" or any thing else he has learned; notwithstanding, he objects if he sees he knows the meaning of "hat" and "mule."

In St. Petersburg a curious case of contempt is being tried with offenders condemned to a short term of imprisonment. The model prison is divided into four or five dormitories, each containing 100 men separated from each other by wooden partition walls. To such an extent is a man's individuality respected in this shop, to which shoe-making, tailoring, weaving, and other trades are carried on, that each compartment has been supplied with a view of rejecting all that is bad in the different prisons employed in the Old and the New World, and of adopting all that is supposed to be advantageous. The system has worked so well that Count Sollohub, Governor-General of St. Petersburg, has obtained a fruitful source of disorder, whose experience, as mentioned above, may henceforward be found unnecessary.

Many years ago two ministers were settled over different churches in a Connecticut village. One was a bold gunbearer of old Yale, warm friends, and with undoubted talents. The other expressed a hope that he who had never married, left the more active duties of the ministry to devote himself to books, libraries, and contemporary literature, for which he had the most tenderness. Mr. B——, however, married, had a large family of children, and was obliged to look after his domestic ills. Both of these men lived to a good old age. One day Mr. B—— happened to be in Yale, and marked in his peculiarly gentle manner, "Dr. H——, exactly fifty thousand dollars, sir, exactly fifty thousand dollars, sir, between a poor minister and a library, and he very unwisely chose the latter—very unwisely indeed."

A strong but needless subsistence lamp has been invented. An ordinary lamp is placed in a watertight triangular case. The flame is extinguished and the lamp is admitted by a tube, the free end of which is supported above the surface of the water; and the products of combustion are carried off by a second tube, which is likewise in connection with external air. The air in the lamp is rarefied by the heat of the burning wick, and fresh air from without rushes in to take its place, so that a constant circulation of air is kept up and the lamp burns freely.

Gold has been discovered in Newfoundland. A Halifax paper says that Joseph J. Commerford of that city has recently received for examination a piece of quartz from the eastern coast of Newfoundland, containing much visible gold. The fragment was broken off one of numerous boulders with which, according to the report of the finder, the surface is strewn in a particular locality. The discoverer, himself, did not know the precious metal when he saw it, and fearing that himself to this patron and to that, he was used and thrown away; if he chose to remain in honourable independence, he was courted and feared. born, and inclosing with the fragment a lady who was gazing at a window in the house opposite his studio. He sent glances of admiration up to her window whenever he passed, and she in turn to his room. At length, one day, seeing her in the street, his artistic taste was away with the feeling of admiration, and reaching her, passing with the haste he had made, gasped out, "Oh, miss, your figure is divine! I am dying to paint it." The lady, with a quick movement, put her hand to her head, and then holding it out with her hair at arm's-length, exclaimed, "Take it! there it is! send it back when you are through with it, and stop staring at my window!" Such is the dreadfully jealous spirit that will thrash you for your impudence." The great-fellow artist had seen a chance for "lovely blonde hair" since.

The Australian Mail Steamer Company seems likely to be a success. Reports have been received from officers in the British navy giving the highest commendations of the qualities of the mail steamers, saying it most excellent—nutritious, sweet, and juicy. A supply has been sent to the Cape of Good Hope and to Africa, and to the West indies, by the Controller of the British navy. Besides this, the French Government has ordered several thousand pounds of the meat for the navy and other purposes. The English press is quite interested in the success of this enterprise; and suggests that the general introduction of the preserved meat into families would be a great advantage.

Perhaps no malady produces such depressing and deadly suffering as scrofulosis. Its wretched victims lose all hope of life, and their misery long for death as a release. Yet very little has been done by the medical profession to relieve this affection, and in general those who cross the ocean believe that they must take their chance of enduring its pangs. A very interesting article on scrofula, by Professor Burnett, M.D., was recently published in the New York Medical Journal. Dr. Burnett considers particularly the waters for business or pleasure that we believe the public will find the most universal interest: and as Dr. Barker's high standing in his profession gives special value to his suggestions.

The belief is very general that sea-sickness is often beneficial, and never dangerous to life. Dr. Barker, however, thinks that the danger to health from a sea-voyage is usually proportioned to the freedom from sea-sickness. He also cites several cases where death has occurred in consequence of the exhaustion resulting from this malady. Sea-sickness, he observes, seems to be due to the endless and recurring changes of the relations of the fluids to the solids of the body, and to the nervous system which result from these changes. Drugs will not prevent this functional disturbance. The horizontal position is the only approximation to a cure. An exhausted or depressed state of the nervous system is the consequence often of loss of sleep, want of food, excitement, and bad air, increases the liability to sea-sickness. A long voyage, therefore, is recommended that the Atlantic steamers fatigued and exhausted by their preparations for departure. They are excited by separation from friends, and by apprehensions of the perils of the voyage. They have had no appetite to eat, or strength to digest food. Thus bodily prepared to resist the effects of sea-sickness, they speedily bring it on by keeping up and staying on deck. They have an instinctive idea that it is a kind of moral weakness, which they may conquer by boldly doing the very things to bring it on. For ocean passengers one of the most essential points is the selection of the state-room as regards position, light, size, and ventilation. Of course, the smaller the room the nearer to the centre of the ship the less will be the motion. In going to Europe, it is better to be on the starboard side, and in returning, on the larboard, which will be the sunny side. In screw-steamers, the inside rooms, on the lower deck, are of good size, are often the preferred to the outside ones, on account of ventilation, which is at very little motion in the ordinary fine summer passages, when the port-holes can be kept open, while the windows of the inside room open on a light-well, which is of good size.

The following suggestions for the prevention of sea-sickness, by a writer among who has proved very beneficial to many persons who have tested them, and who himself suffered severely from this affection, and during the whole voyage:

1. Eat regularly and heartily, but without eating the last meal too near the time of sailing. 2. Keep up the habit of digestion is kept up, the strength is preserved, and the system becomes accustomed to the constant change of equilibrium.

3. It is well to commence to take some mild laxative pills, one for example, two or three of the compound blue pill.

4. After having become so far habituated to the motion of the ship to take your meals at the table, not to go on deck, never think of rising in the morning until you have eaten something, as a cup of essential porridge, or a cup of coffee or tea, with rusk-biscuit or toast.

5. If, subsequently, during the voyage, the sea should become unusually rough, go to bed without delay. It is foolish to deny anything when there is no glory to be gained, and nothing may be lost.

The estimated number of prairie chickens sent to market in Illinois during the first two months of the shooting season was not less than 20,000 to 30,000; of quail, 10,000; of wild turkeys, a total of 40 ducks between 200 and 3000. When the Pacific Railroad is opened an immense further expansion of the game trade will probably be looked for. The game has always been a difficulty in the way of extensive exportation, owing to the liability to spoil on a sudden change of weather spoiling the game. This difficulty is now to be overcome by the invention by the introduction of a new kind of refrigerator-car on the principal railroad lines, patented by Mr. C. P. Pike, of Bloomington, Illinois. The first load of wild fowl ever sent from the Pacific coast arrived at New York on the 30th ult. The birds were shipped by the steady advance of civilization. Many farmers also engage in the hunting as a means of a circuit over a reach of their homes at night, and often bagging a sufficient quantity of birds to make their day's shooting a profitable occupation.

When a missionary to South Africa first introduced the plough among the natives the farmer of that country as old chief, who saw what it could do in breaking up the earth, exclaimed, in admiration, "Why, it is worth its weight in gold!" Upon this hint, Mr. Pike, what a plow is worth can easily make an estimate, and ascertain the exact value of a woman in South Africa.

The Dead of Eighteen Hundred and Sixty-eight.

Age	Name,	Office or Position.	Place and Date of Death.
65.	ANDS, Rev. Joshua G., Commissioner Metropolitan Fire Department.		New York, September 21.
82.	ASHOTT, Hon. Amos, Member of Congress from Massachusetts 1843-1849.		Andover, Mass., November 8.
67.	ADAMS, Mrs. Sarah F., widow of Epes Sargent, Author.		Boston, Mass.
47.	ADLER, George J., Author and Philologist.	New York City.	August 24.
68.	ALEXANDER, Rev. Addison, LL.D., Author and Clergyman.		Princeton, Mass. July 16.
61.	ALLEN, William Stickney, Editor, Judge, and Politician.	New Haven, Mo.	June 16.
74.	ANDERSON, Hon. Joseph, Senator, Treasurer, and Author.	Nashville, Tenn.	August 23.
	ANDREA, Cardinal G. Italian Prelate.	Rome, Italy.	May 18.
74.	ARMSTRONG, Gen. Timothy P. U.S.A., Paymaster-General of the Army.		Washington, D.C. March 11.
	ASHDON, R. S. S., Poet, Author, and Politician.	Berkeley, Mass.	August.
	ASHLEY, Hon. James M., Member of Congress, Governor, and Author.		Cleveland, June 17.
	ASHON, Brevet Maj.-Gen. Alexander, U. S. Navy, Minister to Argentine Republic.		Buenos Ayres. Feb.
	ASHTON, Rev. John, D.D., Author and Clergyman.		Charleston, S.C. April 1.
48.	ASHWORTH, Francis Baring, 3d Lord, English Financier.	County Devon, England.	September 4.
83.	BADGER, Hon. George E., LL.D., President U.S. Senate, Author.	New York City.	April 6.
64.	BAILEY, John D., Journalist and Military Critic.	New York City.	August 26.
73.	BAILEY, Hon. Lafayette C., Chief Detective U. S. Secret Service.		July 2.
61.	BARROWS, Willard, Civil Engineer, Surveyor, and Author.	Davenport, Iowa.	January 9.
	BARTHOLDI, Charles, Governor, Author, Journalist and Author.		April 8.
83.	BASCOM, H. L., D.D., Author, and President Pennsylvania College, Gettysburg.
74.	BAYARD, Hon. Richard H., Judge of Court of Appeals.	Wilmington, Del.	April 14.
60.	BEACH, Moses Yale, Newspaper Publisher and Editor.	Wallingford, Ct.	July 19.
70.	BEACH, Rev. Wooster, Author and Clergyman.	Norwalk, Ohio.	Helena, Montana. Sept. 26.
	BEADLE, Samuel J., Merchant and Indian Broker.	New York City.	August 31.
53.	BEARD, Hon. Lewis C., Author.	Lawrence, Kansas.	September 21.
	BEAU, Rear-Admiral Henry H., U.S.N. Osage River, Iowa.		January 3.
70.	BECK, Theodric Romeyn, M.D., Author and Physician.	Albany, N.Y.	June 22.
72.	BENJAMIN, Simeon, Patron of Education and Philanthropist.
70.	BENNETT, Hon. Benjamin, Vermont Jurist.	Riverhead, L. I.	September 1.
	BENNETT, Pierre Antoine, French Advocate and Statesman.	Auguville, France.	November 28.
70.	BERRY, Hon. Edward R., LL.D., Author and Jurist.	Bangor, Me.	November 26.
73.	BEY, Dr. Clot, French Physician and Medical Reformer in Egypt.	Marseilles, France.	August.
70.	BIGELOW, Hon. Erastus B., Editor and Judge.	Boston, Mass.
78.	BIMOD, Rev. Hiram N., D.D., Episcopal Clergyman.	Paris, France.	August 31.
70.	BLANCHARD, Rev. Cyrus, D.D., Author and Clergyman.	Charleston Hospital.	August.
68.	BOSWELL, Judge Benjamin West, Politician and Jurist.	New York City.	August 19.
	BOWEN, Hon. Henry Chandler, Governor and Chief Justice.	Connecticut.
67.	BOWEN, Hon. John H., Member Congress from New York 1851-1853.	Whitehall, New York.	July 2.
64.	BOWEN, Rev. Nathaniel, D.D., Author and Clergyman.	Mich. Chelsea, Mich.	June 25.
82.	BRADBURY, William B., Musical Composer, Vocalist, Teacher, and Author.	Montclair, N.J.	July 11.
67.	BRADFORD, Hon. Alden, Author and Historian.	Boston, Mass.
67.	BRAWLEY, Charles W., Editor, Author, and Publisher.	Portsmouth, New Hampshire.	August 8.
70.	BRIGHAM, Rev. Asa, D.D., Author and Clergyman.	Hartford, Conn.	August 27.
67.	BRIGGS, Charles F., Lecturer on Education, and Author.	Newark, N.Y.	June 22.
67.	BRISBANE, Arthur, Author and Socialist Reformer.	New York City.	April 22.
70.	BROADHEAD, General Sarah of Savannah, Ruler and Author.		August 30.
83.	BROMFIELD, General Sir Henry W., G.C.B., British Army Officer.	Exeter, England.	January 20.
70.	BROWN, Col. Gustavus R., Army Engineer, Author, and Mathematician.	Washington, D.C.	January 5.
63.	BROWN, Rev. J. Newton, D.D., Author, Professor, and Editor.	Germantown, Pennsylvania.	May 25.
	BROWN, Hon. Orville, Cabinet Officer, Colonial Internal Revenue.	Washington, D.C.	May 10.
78.	BRYANT, Dr. Joel, Homœopathic Physician and Author.	Brooklyn, New York.	November 20.
70.	BUCHANAN, Hon. James, Ex-President U.S. 1857-1861, and Author.	Wheatland, Pa.	June 1.
58.	BURR, Hon. Alexander W., Member Congress from Detroit 1848-1851.	Detroit, Michigan.	April 28.
73.	BURTON, Rev. Warren, D.D., Editor in New Orleans and Author.	Louisville, Ky.	March 24.
54.	BURNETT, John, Engraver, Etcher, and Author of Works on Art.	London, England.	May.
	BUSHNELL, Hon. Asahel, Politician and Member of Congress.	Bridgeport, Ct.	March 8.
63.	CADWALADER, Gen. John L., Politician and Political Leader.	New York City.	July 7.
73.	CAMPBELL, Rev. Alexander, Author and Clergyman.	Bethany, Va.	Philadelphia, January 19.
56.	CAMPBELL, Thompson, Prominent Politician in California.	California.	December 7.
70.	CARLISLE, Hon. John G., Member Congress, Author, and Politician.	Covington, Ky.	Sept. 22.
74.	CARTWRIGHT, Most Rev. Charles Longley, Archbishop of, Primate of England.	London.	October 8.
73.	CARTWRIGHT, Peter, Methodist Clergyman and Author.
19.	CARNEGAN, James T. B., Earl of, Commander Light Brigade at Balaklava.	Curlies Castle, Eng.	Mar. 28.
79.	CARNEY, Gen. Christopher (Kit Carson), Guide, Trapper, and Pioneer.	Fort Lyon, Colorado.	May 23.
56.	CASE, Rev. Joel Titus, Presbyterian Clergyman and Physician.	Victoria, Texas.	June 18.
	CASTELMARY, Count, Spanish Statesman.
60.	CHASE, Admiral Sir H. D., British Naval Officer for 48 years.	Southsea, Hants, England.	April 7.
74.	CHEEVER, Rev. Henry Hickey, M.D., Privy Mcl., Col., Lt.-Gov. of Mass. in 1850.	Boston, Mass.	March 22.
56.	CHIES, Pierre Luc Charles, French Scenic Painter.	Paris, October.
74.	CLARK, Rev. Dan, D.D., Author, Methodist Clergyman and Editor.	Cincinnati, Ct.	November 28.
70.	CLAY, Hon. Newell, ex-U. S. Senator, ex-Sec. of Treasury, Southern Politician.	New York City.	Oct. 8.
	COLE, Rev. Thomas, Professor of History and Author.
104.	COLLINS, Mrs. Sarah, Centenarian.	Westfield, N. J.	June 15.
70.	CURTIS, Lieut.-Gen. Joseph J., Commander-in-Chief.	New York City.	August 16.
61.	COOK, Hon. James M., State Controller of New York, and Supt. of Banking.	Saratoga, N.Y.	August 12.

Age.	Name.	Office or Position.	Place and Date of Death.
68.	COOK, John Douglas, Editor of the London Saturday Review.	London.	August 16.
108.	COOLEY, Mrs. Nancy, Revolutionary Pensioner.	Dartown, Ohio.	January 10.
76.	COOPER, Mrs. Julia Dean, actress ("Julia Dean").	New York City.	March 4.
71.	COQUEREL, Athanase, Sen., French Preacher, Orator, and Author.	Paris, France.	January 10.
70.	CORANCEZ, Louis de la Haye, Vicomte de, French Political Writer and Satirist.	Paris, France.	May 7.
78.	CRANSWORTH, Robert Monsey Rolfe, Lord, British Statesman.	London.	May 12.
72.	CRAWFORD, Andrew, Author, Diplomat, Geographer and Ethnologist.	Boston.	July 17.
80.	CRAY, Rev. T. S. D.D., Poet of Baptist College at Broadmead, district, Eng.	Cotham, Bristol.	June 16.
70.	CROWLEY, Joseph, Cotton Manufacturer and Magistrate.	Hanley, England.	October.
	CROWN, Eyre Evans, Editor and Historian.	London.	February 28.
74.	CURRIER, Isaac, M. D., Physician and Author.	Nashua, N. H.	December 16.
	CURTIS, General Stephen B., Lawyer, and Attorney-General of New York.	New York City.	June 8.
74.	CUSHMAN, Rev. Robert W., D.D., Clergyman of the Presbyterian Church.	Reading, Mass.	April 1.
	DALY, Sir Dominick, Governor-General of South Australia.	Adelaide, South Australia.	February 19.
	DANA, Samuel Luther, Author and Publisher.	Lowell, Mass.
83.	DAVIS, Hon. James, Politician and Judge.	St. Albans, Vt.	January 21.
80.	DAVIS, Rev. Henry, M. A., F. S. A., Rector of Hadleigh.	Hadleigh, Essex, Eng.	February 25.
	DEACON, Benajah, U. S. Marshal New Jersey, 1861-1863.	Mount Holly, N. J.	May 18.
	DEAN, Amos, LL.D., Jurist, Author, and Professor of Jurisprudence.	Albany, N. Y.	January 26.
	DE LA VIGNE, Germain, French Dramatist.	Montmorency, France.	December.
	DENNIS, James C., Grave Digger.	Boston.	May 24.
	DILL, Vincent Leonard, noted Sharpshooter in America.	Brooklyn, New York.	January 29.
	DORSEY, Rev. Dr.	Author and Clergyman.	New York City. July 9.
	DOSSETTER, Philip, State Treasurer, N. Y., and Collector Internal Revenue.	Buffalo, N.Y.	April 11.
73.	DOUGLAS, Joseph, New York Pioneer.	Rochester, N. Y.	September 4.
	DOUTY, Capt. Benj. More, U.S.N., Navy Officer 43 years, and Lt.-House Insp't.	Key West, Fla.	Nov. 19.
	DOYLE, Hon. Joseph Fleming, Politician and Journalist.	Canada.	January 3.
	DRAPER, Henry, Director of English Opera and Baritone Singer.	Providence, R. I.	August 9.
	DUFFIELD, Rev. George, D. D., Minister of the Presbyterian Church.	Detroit, Michigan.	June 26.
	DUNNE, Rev. Dr., late Vicar-General Roman Catholic Diocese of Chicago.	Chicago.	December 28.
	DWINELL, Dr. Henry G., Homœopathic Physician.	Lowell, Mass.	December 4.
	DYKMAN, Col. G. W., N. C. Register, and Officer of Vols. in Mexican and late war.	N. Y. City.	May 21.
	ELLIOTT, Charles Loring, N. A., Portrait Painter.
	ELLIOTT, Major Joel M.U.S.A., killed by Indians.	Indian Territory.	November 27.
	ELLSWORTH, Hon. Henry L., Statistician and Author.	Washington, D. C.
	ELLSWORTH, Hon. Wm. W., LL.D., Ex-Gov. & Ch. Justice Supreme Court, etc.	Hartford, Ct.	Jan. 15.
	ELWYN, Alfred L., Author and Philanthropist.	Philadelphia.	Feb. 15.
	ESDO, Dewitt C. M.D., Physician and Medical Professor.	Brooklyn, New York.	December 14.
	EVANS, Rev. Hugh Davis, Author and Clergyman of the Church of England.	Liverpool.	July 9.
	FAIRCHILD, Brevet Brig.-Gen. Cicero W. Vols., U. S. Marshal for Wisconsin.	Milwaukee.	Oct. 24.
	FALLS, Hon. John H., Minister to Portugal, 1861-1865.	Florida, Territory.	November 17.
	FELLER, Madam Henrietta, Founder of Grand Ligne Mission, Canada.	Grand Ligne, Can.	March 27.
	FENNER, Gen. Charles, Civil Officer of the Revolution.	Cincinnati, Ohio.	December 4.
	FESSARD, Philip R., Lawyer and Jurist.	Washington, D. C.	Thursday.
	FIELD, Hon. Thomas P., Member of Congress from Texas.	Galveston, Me.	September 28.
	FIELD, Hon. Jonathan E., Mass. State Senator and Lawyer.	Stockbridge, Mass.	April 22.
	FOWLER, Hon. Joel R., M. C., and Ex-Speaker Texas Assembly.	Austin, Texas.	December 24.
	FOZI, Henry M. ("Occult"), Newspaper Correspondent and Author.	Camden, N.J.	November 15.
	FOURIER, Francis Vernaud, President of Fourierist Society.	Paris.
	FOUQUIER, Leon, French Physicist and Author.	Paris.	February.
	FRANCIS, Simeon, American Editor and Publisher.	Washington, D. C.	January 29.
	FROST, Thomas H., Lieutenant-Governor of Ohio, and Politician.	Washington, D. C.	February 29.
	FOSDYCK, Rev. W. B., Presbyterian Clergyman.	Fort Wayne, Ind.	September 4.
73.	FREEMAN, Edmund B., N. C. Jurist.	Raleigh, N. C.	July 7.
106.	FRENCH, Reverend George, Negro Centenarian.	Shelbyville, Ky.	September 4.
	FROST, Judge Edward, S. C. Jurist.	Charleston, S. C.	July 23.
	FUTVOYE, Rt. Rev. Francis, Archbishop Roman Catholic Church of Canada.	Montreal.	September 9.
	GARDNER, Peter M., Anti-Slavery Pioneer.	Columbus, Ohio.	June 12.
	GARDNER, Thomas, English Lace Engraver.	Nottingham.	July 26.
	GANNON, Mary, Actress.	New York City.	February 23.
	GARRISON, Wendell Phillips, Son of William Lloyd Garrison.	New Haven, Ct.	March 27.
	GAYTES, Brevet Brigadier-General William, U.S.A., Veteran Army Officer.	New York City.	October 7.
	GERSTON, Capital Bernard, California Pioneer.	San Francisco.	May 3.
	GIORDA, Anna Paniovina, Czarina of, Musical Composer.	Moscow.	February.
	GIBSON, Hon. Edmund Physician and Politician.	Fredericksburg, Va.	November 16.
	GIBSON, Rt. Maj.-Gen. Alfred, U.S.A. 39 yrs in Service, in Mex. and late Wars.	Ft. Leavenworth, Ks.	Dec. 26.
	GIBSON, Rev. Wm. M., M.R.C.S., Episcopal Clergyman and Author.	Rome, Italy.	March 26.
	GIBSON, William, M.D., LL.D., Surgeon, Professor, and Author.	Savannah, Ga.	March 9.
	GILLESPIE, William Mitchell, C.E., Author and Professor of Civil Engineering.	N. Y. City.	January 1.
	GILLIAMS, Jacob, M.D., Physician and Naturalist.	Philadelphia.	February 1.
	GILLIS, Rev. James A., M. C. from N. Y., Author and Clergyman.	Cold Spring, N. Y.	July 30.
	GITTODING, Gisbegh, Architect and Fresco Painter.	New York City.	January 3.
	GOODRICH, Rev. Elizur, Congregational Clergyman and Professor.	New Haven, Ct.	March 27.
	GORTSCHAKOFF, Prince Peter Dmitri, Russian Corps Com. and Gov.-Gen. W. Siberia.	Moscow.	April.
	GOULD, Augustus, Judge of Supreme Court of Maine.	Portland, Me.	May 2.
	GRAHAME, Hon. Francis, M. C. Postmaster-General, Politician.	Canandaigua, N. Y.	August 28.
	GRAEVEN, Conivet, French Historical Painter.	Paris.
	GRAY, John, Reputed the last Soldier of the Revolution.	Noble Co., Ohio.	March 29.
	GRAYSON, Col. William, Governor of South Carolina.	Beaufort, S. C.	April 4.
	GREEN, Albert Gorton, Jurist, Author, and Scholar.	Cleveland, Ohio.	January 4.
	GRIGGS, Rev. Chauncey, Clergyman and Author.	Hartford, Ct.	January 3.
	GURLEY, Rev. P. D. D.D.	Presb. Clergyman, Chap. of Congress, and Author.	Washington, D.C.	Sept. 28.
	HALL, George, Ex-Mayor of Brooklyn 1834-1835.	Brooklyn, N. Y.	April 16.
	HALL, George, Connecticut Philanthropist.	Norwich, Ct.	September 3.
	HALL, George W., Clergyman and Author.	Boston.	May 24.
	HALL, Judge James, Author, Antiquarian, and Banker.	Loveland, Ohio.	July.
	HALL, Willis, Attorney-General of New York.	Albany, N. Y.	April 10.
	HALPINE, Brig.-Gen. Chas. G. ("Miles O'Reilly"), Poet, Soldier, and Author.	N. Y. City.	August 3.
	HAMILTON, Capt. Louis L., U.S.A., Son of Alexander Hamilton.	Fortress Monroe.	May 17.
	HAMPDEN, Right Reverend Renn Dickson, D.D., Bishop of Hereford and Author.	London, England.
	HARE, John Davis, D.D., English Church Dignitary.	Hurstmonceaux, Eng.	March 18.
	HARNEY, J. H., Editor Louisville Democrat and Author.	Louisville, Ky.	August 28.
	HARRINGTON, George N. ("Grace Greenwood"), Author.	New Haven, Ct.	May 12.
	HARTWEIG, Ex-Commander Henry J. (Arctic Explorer), Paris, France.	March 29.
	HASSAUREK, Hon. Friedrich, Austrian Minister to Ecuador, 1861-1864.	Texas.
118.	HASKINS, Mrs., born in Burlington, Vt., 1751.	Camden, Ohio.	January 18.
80.	HASSENPFLUG, Mrs. Adolph G., Pioneer Settler of Cincinnati.	Cincinnati, Ohio.	January 18.
76.	HASTINGS, ——, Marquis of, a young English Spendthrift and Rake.	London.	November 10.
	HAVEN, Alexander, French Engineer and Author.	Paris.	May 3.
	HAVEN, Rt. Rev. Cicero S., D.D., Bishop Prot. Episcopal Diocese of Missouri.	St. Louis, Mo.	April 19.
	HAWKINS, Rev. Edward Willes, British Clergyman and Author.	Provost of Oriel College.	London.	Jan. 28.
119.	HEDGEMOSS, Mrs. Jane, Widow, Centenarian.	Brooklyn, N. Y.	December 8.
	HEWIT, Abram S., Southern Merchant and Politician.	New York City.	September 17.
	HERAPATH, John, English Mathematician and Editor Railway Journal.	Lewisham, Eng.	February 24.
	HERBERT, Hon. Sidney, English Cabinet Minister and Author.	London.
	HERRICK, Hon. Anson, Editor, Politician, Member of Congress 1865-1868.	New York City.	February 6.
	HIGGINS, Brigadier-General James ("Acadian Soldier"), Veteran Officer.	Port Berkshire, Eng.	August 28.
	HILDEBRANDT, Edouard, German Geographical Painter.	Berlin, Prussia.	October.
	HOWARD, Lieut.-Colonel Thomas G., U.S.A., Soldier, and Engineer.	Fort Wilson, Ark.	Sept. 28.
	HOWE, Hon. James, Member of Congress from Arkansas 1847-48.	Assassinated.	Monroe, Ark.	Oct. 28.
	HOWARD, Hon. John, Secretary of Commonwealth of Massachusetts.	New York City.	Oct. 15.
	HOLMES-TUE-DAY, Chippewa Indian Chief.	Assassinated.	Crow Wing, Minn.	June 23.
	HOOD, Rev. Dr., Presiding Elder Methodist Episcopal Church.	Boston.	March 1.
	HOSMER, John, M.D., Physician, and President Massachusetts Medical Society.	Boston.	April 17.
	HOUGH, Franklin W., Jurist of Connecticut.
	HOPKINS, Rt. Rev. John Henry, D.D., D.C.L., Epis. Bishop of Vt., and Author.	Rock Point, Vt.	Jan. 9.
	HOWARD, Hon. Rosseau, Politician and Journalist.	Washington, D. C.	May 12.
	HOWARD, Col. Joshua, U.S.A., Paymaster 1861-1868, U. S. Marshal 1851-1854.	Detroit.	July 17.
	HOWE, Rev. Joseph, D.D., Clergyman Ref. Dutch Church.	New York City.
	HOWELL, Rev. Robert, B.C., D.D., Baptist Clergyman and Author.	Nashville, Tenn.	April 5.
	HUGHES, Rev. Stephen, Boston.
	HUGO, Madame, Wife of Victor Hugo.	Brussels, Belgium.	August 24.
	HULL, Brooke, M.D., Homœopathic Physician and Author.	Lancaster, Brooklyn.	July 6.
	HUNTINGTON, Hon. Charles Phelps, Massachusetts Jurist, etc.	Boston.	January 26.
	HUNTINGTON, Hon. Jedediah, Politician and Author.	Oswego, N. Y.	March 23.
	IRVING, Bloomer, Brother and Executor of Washington Irving.	Irvington, N. Y.	August 23.
	JAMES, Rev. William, D.D., Presbyterian Clergyman.	Philadelphia.
	JAMESON, George W., Actor.	Accidentally killed near Yonkers, N. Y.	October 5.
	JAMESON, W. L., Actor.	New York City.
	JESSE, Edward, English Naturalist and Author.	Brighton.	March 28.
	JESSOP, Rev. Francis, LL.D., Author.	Norwich, England.
	JUKES, Right Rev. Francis, D.D., English Bishop of Peterborough, etc.	Peterborough.	September.
	JUKES, Rev. Andrew, B.A., Clergyman of the Church of England.	Bishop's Stortford.	January 9.
	JOHNSON, Rev. Herman, M.D., LL.D., President Dickinson College, Pa.	Carlisle, Pa.	April 3.
	JOHNSON, Hon. John Mercer, Lawyer, Author, and Politician.	Washington, D. C.	December 4.
	JONES, Leonard ("Live Forever Jones"), Monomaniac and perpetual Office-seeker.	Louisville, Ky.	Sept. 14.
	JONES, Admiral Theodoric, British Naval Officer.
	JONSON, Right Rev. Henry Dunlop, D.D., R. C. Bishop of Alton, Ill.	Alton, Ill.	October 2.
	JUDSON, Rev. Geo., D.D., LL.D., Congregational Clergyman and Author.	Philadelphia.	May 30.
	KEAN, Charles J., F.S.A., F.R.G.S., an English Actor and Scholar.	London.	January 22.
	KEASBEY, Commodore Lawrence, U.S.N., Navy Officer 50 years.	Newport, R. I.	November 29.
	KENDALL, Heber C., Mormon Leader, one of First Presidency.	Salt Lake City.	June 22.
	KING, Robert P., eminent Printer and Publisher.	Rochester, N. Y.	January 1.
	KING, W. H. Cutler, Editor New Orleans Times.	New Orleans, La.	August 17.
	KING, Hon. Valentine P., Politician and Journalist.	Washington, D. C.	August 5.
	KIRKES, James B., Publisher and Officer 69th Regiment Volunteers.	New York City.	February 28.
	KNOX, ——, D.D., Dean of Lismore.	Ireland.
	KRAFT, Henry, Ph.D., a German Chemist.	Brooklyn, N. Y.	August 26.
	LAW, Rev. Robert, D.D., Professor of Biblical Criticism.	Edinburgh.	March 15.
	LEBRUN, Rev. Isaac, Ph.D., Rabbi and Author.	Philadelphia.	February 2.
	LEGARE, Hugh F., Author and Magazine Editor.	Charleston, S. C.	September 22.
	LE SAINT, Lieutenant, French Explorer and Geographer.	Abu Kuka, Abyssinia.	April.
	LEVITAS, Reverend, Hebrew Clergyman.	Boston.
	LIMAYRAC, Faulin, French Editor and Political Writer.	Paris.	July.
	LINCOLN, Hon. Levi, Ex-Governor of Massachusetts.	Worcester, Mass.	May 29.
	LINDLEY, Rev. J. H., D.D., Clergyman and President Marietta College.	Greenwich, Ct.	March 22.
	LINDSLEY, Nathaniel Sumner, LL.D., Philologist.	Greenwood, Tenn.	October 16.
	LORD, Daniel, Eminent Counselor in Commercial Law, etc.	New York City.	March 4.
	LORD, Rev. Nathan, M.D., Missionary Physician in India.	New York City.	January 24.
	LOVER, Samuel, Irish Poet and Novelist.	London.	July 8.
	LOWRIE, Hon. D. S. Senator and Lawyer, Foreign Missions.	New York City.	Dec. 14.
	LUNDY, Rev. Francis James, D.C.L., Episcopal Clergyman and Teacher.	Newburgh, N. Y.	April 9.
	LYNCH, Judge Stephen Rowland, Supreme Court Judge and Politician.	Albany, N. Y.	August 27.
	LYON, Rev. John C., Methodist Clergyman and Author.	Cassville, Md.	May 17.
	LYONS, Lord Richard, P. C., D.C.L., Privy Councillor, Diplomatist.	Hereford, Pa.	February 3.
	MACKENZIE, John David, D.C.L., Principal Magdalen Hall, Oxford.	England.	January 24.
	M'CALL, Maj.-Gen. George A., U.S.A., Veteran Officer of Mexican and Florida Wars.	Philadelphia.	Fri. Feb. 26.
	M'CRAE, James Mace, Journalist and Editor.	Washington, D.C.	December 4.

Age.	Name.	Office or Position.	Place and Date of Death.
65.	M'GEE, Thos. D'Arcy, Journalist, Politician, and Canadian Cabinet Officer.	Assassinated at Ottawa.	April 7.
74.	MACKENZIE, William, M.D., F.R.C.S.L., Surgeon, Oculist, and Author.	Glasgow.	August.
85.	MACLEVILLE, Gilbert, Popular Scottish Dramatic Author.	Paris.	December.
	M'MURRAY, William, State Senator New York, and Canadian Pioneer.	1864-1868.	N. Y. City.	May 31
	M'RAE, John, Jr., Governor of Arkansas, Member of Congress 1857-1861.	Dallas, Honduras.	May 20.
72.	MACRAE, Gen. Alexander, U.S.A.
74.	M'VICKAR, Rev. John, D.D., Professor in Columbia College.	New York City.	October 29.
	MADAGASCAR, Rayahovi Mosquées, Queen of, Sovereign.	Antananarivo, Madagascar.	April.
74.	MAGOON, Hon. Charles E., U. S. Treasury Agent.	Washington, D. C.	December 14.
83.	MAGOWNEER, Edward, Sen., Banker and Financier.	Cincinnati, Ohio.	January 15.
83.	MANN, Abijah, Jr., Author.	Cincinnati, La.	Aug. 22.
85.	MANN, Abijah, Jun., Politician, and Member of Congress 1853-1857.	New Orleans, La.	August 28.
74.	MANSFIELD, Hon. Jared, Mathematician.	Washington, D. C.	June 16.
86.	MARSH, John, D.D., Editor, Clergyman, and Author.	Brooklyn, N. Y.	August 4.
	MARSH, Mrs. Caroline, Teacher, Poet, and Author.	Burlington, Vt.	June 25.
87.	MARTUCCI, Carlo, Italian Physicist, Professor, and Statesman.	Leghorn, Italy.	June 24.
65.	MARTIN, Hiram, Ex-Methodist Clergyman and Author.	Madrid, Spain, and	November 24.
83.	MAYNADIER, Brevet Brig.-Gen. Henry E., U.S.A., Major 13th Infantry.	Charleston, S. C.
84.	MEYER, Baron Jacob, Statesman, an Author, and Banker.	Vienna, Austria.	August 31.
	MEYERS, Rear-Admiral William, U.S.N., 50 years in Service.	Utica, N. Y.	September 15.
74.	MICHAUX, Count Gaston, Author.	Paris, France.	November 17.
71.	MILMAN, Henry Hart, D.D., Dean of St. Paul's, Poet and Historian.	London.	September 25.
	MITCHELL, Hon. Alexander, Politician and Capitalist.	Milwaukee, Wis.	December 19.
86.	MOORE, E. Warren, Attorney-General of Louisiana, and Politician.	Jefferson, La.	June 28.
84.	MORALES, Gen. José Tadeo, President of Venezuela 1858-1859.	Caracas, Venezuela.	Nov. 18.
64.	MOREHEAD, Charles S., M. C. 1847-51, Gov. of Ky. 1855-9, M. P. C. 1861, etc.	Washington Co., Miss.	Dec. 23.
74.	MORSE, Richard Cary, Founder and Editor of N. Y. Observer.	Kissingen, Germany.	Sept. 22.
84.	MOWUN, Dr. W. T. G., reputed Discoverer of Etherization.	New York City.	July 15.
	MUNDY, Rev. Hugh, Author and Clergyman.	Bridgewater, Eng.
64.	MUNN, William S., Genre Painter.	Setauket, L. I.	November 19.
	MUSSET, Paul de, Author.	Historian, near Vienna, Austria.	May 24.
	NAGLE, Hon. Leo, Member S. C. Constitutional Convention.	Assassinated, Newberry C. H. S. C.	Oct. 19.
65.	NAMAR, Don Juan Maria, Duke of Valencia, Statesman in Spain, and Prime Minister	Madrid.	April 23.
63.	NEAGLE, John W., M.D., Eminent Colored Physician.	Boston.	November 27.
	NEWTON, Matthew, Adjutant-General of Georgia.	Augusta.	May 31.
81.	NICHOLS, John A., LL.D., Professor Mathematics in College	City of N. Y.	New York City.	Nov. 27.
74.	NICHOLS, Thomas Low, Physician and Author.	Hydropathic Establishment, Malvern,	June 8.
58.	NOYES, Hon. Joseph C. M. C. from Maine 1837-1839, and U. S. Collector.	Portland, Me.	July 20.
	O'BRIEN, Hon. Richard, Jurist and Author.	Brooklyn, N. Y.	February 18.
60.	OAKEY, General Vincent, President of State of Panama.	Panama, Central America.	March 8.
74.	OGDEN, Hon. John Cosse, Jurist, Politician, and Author.	Paris.
49.	OLDS, Rev. M. S., D.D., Episcopal Clergyman.	Washington, D. C.	September 17.
74.	OLMSTED, Denison, LL.D., Astronomer and Professor of Science.	Yale College.	New Haven, Ct.	Dec. 4.
	O'REILLY, Rev. William, Vicar-General of Roman Catholic Diocese of Hartford.	Newport, R. I.	Dec. 30.
85.	PAGE, Hon. Thomas Nelson, Virginia Statesman and Author.	Washington, D. C.	Oct. 19.
74.	PAIGE, Hon. Alonzo C., New York Lawyer and Author.	Schenectady, N. Y.	March 31.
	PARKER, Rev. Joel, D.D., Presbyterian Clergyman.	New York City.	March 30.
	PARKES, William, Civil Engineer and Superintendent Panama Railroad.	Assassinated, Panama.	Sept. 24.
	PARKMAN, Rev. Francis, Author and Scholar.	Brookline, Mass.	March 8.
	PARTRIDGE, Rev. Robert J. P., Epis. Clergyman, Sec. Evan. Ed. Society.	Drowned near Madison, Ind.	Dec. 4.
	PATEN, Col. Abram, Revolutionary Officer.	Albany, Rensselaer Co., N. Y.	August 28.
	PENDLETON, Hon. John S., M. C. from Virginia 1843-1849 and Diplomatist.	Culpepper C. H., Va.	Nov. 20.
	PERKINS, William S., Secretary Legation to Portugal, 1861-1865.	Lisbon, Portugal.	Dec. 1.
80.	PERTHES, Boh. der Ch. Conservative, French Geologist and Author.	Abbeville, France.	August 3.
	PETERSON, Rev. Dr. Ferdinand, Clergyman.	Hoboken, N. J.	October 26.
74.	PINDER, Rev. John Holbeach, Principal of Cuttington and Wells Colleges.	West Atlantic, Eng.	Ap. 16.
74.	PLANCHE, James Robinson, Author and Herald.	London.	May 29.
67.	PLUMER, Professor Jabez, Philosophical Writer and Author.	Lancaster, Pa.	March 24.
65.	POLLARD, Rev. Josiah, Methodist Clergyman and Author.	Cincinnati.	June 24.
	POLLARD, Henry Rives, Editor.	Assassinated, Richmond, Virginia.	November 24.
	POOR, John, Merchant, Columbus, Ga.
83.	POREY, Mrs. Rachel, Revolutionary Pensioner.	Valley Forge, Pa.	August.
61.	POTTER, Hon. Elisha R., Politician and Author.	Kingston, R. I.	March 13.
83.	PRENTISS, Commander George A., U.S.N., 42 years in the Service.	Near Charleston, S. C.	April 8.
	PRESCOTT, Hon. William H., Historian and Author.	Boston.	January 28.
61.	PUTNAM, Rev. Isaac W. D.D., Congregational Clergyman and Author.	Middleboro, Mass.	May 3.
	QUINCY, Hon. Josiah, Politician and Author.	Boston.	December 26.
72.	QUINEY, Miss Susanna, self-taught Scientist.	Lynn, Mass.	September 20.
	RAMSAY, Hon. William, Politician, State Senator of New Jersey.	Assassinated, Cokesbury, S. C.	Oct. 16.
70.	RAPALJE, Mortia Jacob, D.D., Jewish Rabbi and Author.	New York City.	June 23.
74.	REED, Hon. Joseph, Politician and Lawyer.	Germantown, Pa.	November 11.
67.	REED, Lieut.-Commander, John Henry, U.S.N., 31 years in Service.	Genka River, Japan.	January 11.
80.	REYNOLDS, Rev. Dr. John, Presbyterian Clergyman and Author.	Princeton, N. J.	March 29.
	RICHARDSON, Hon. John F., Prot. Epis. Bishop, Rector University.	Rochester, N. Y.	February 10.
	RICHARDSON, Rev. Dr. Richard, Clergyman and Author.	Philadelphia.	May 3.
	RIPLEY, Miss Marianne, Teacher and Writer.	Milwaukee, Wis.	May 4.
	RIVES, Hon. William C., Politician and Author.	Albemarle, Va.	March 25.
	RIVERS, Henry Wheaton, M.D., Army Surgeon and Author.	Providence, R. I.	December 3.
	ROBERTS, Rev. Dr. Benjamin, Clergyman and Author.	Boston.	April 19.
	ROBERTSON, Hon. Anthony L., Chief Justice Superior Court, N. Y.	New York City.	December 18.
	ROBERTSON, Rev. Nathaniel, Baptist Clergyman and Author.	Hamilton, Ohio.	May 3.
	ROGERS, Jacob, Architect and Locomotive builder.	Morristown, N. Y.	August 26.
	ROMAINE, Commander Lewis, U.S.N., Navy Officer.	Washington, D. C.	April 8.
	ROSENTHAL, Hon. Anthony L., Chief Justice Superior Court, N. Y.	New York City.	December 18.
	ROSS, Rev. Dr. Alexander, Presbyterian Clergyman and Author.	Toronto, Canada.	March 31.
	ROSSER, Jacob, Architect and Locomotive builder.	Morristown, N. Y.	August 26.
	ROSSINI, Gioachino Antonio, Composer.	Paris.	November 13.
	ROUSSEAU, Hon. Pierre A., Jurist and Politician of La.	New Orleans.	September 17.
	ROWLAND, Rev. Dr. Aaron, Clergyman.	Philadelphia.	December 1.
	SALISBURY, J. H. W. G. Cecil, 3d Marquis of, British Statesman.	Hatfield House, Herts, England.	April 3
	SCHAUFFLER, Rev. Dr. Clergyman and Author.	Bonn, Prussia, Germany.	Sept. 4.
	SEPTON, John, Eminent English Actor.	New York City.	September 16.
	SERRA, Don Francisco, Spanish Statesman.	Madrid, Spain.
62.	SEWALL, Rev. Samuel, D.D., Congregational Clergyman and Author.	Burlington, Mass.	February 18.
83.	SEWARD, Hon. Samuel, Politician and Lawyer.	Orange, N. J.	1864-67.	Hartford, Ct.	Sept. 8.
81.	SHANNON, Bruce Carleton, Earl of, London.	December 24.
	SHARPE, Rev. Samuel, Author and Scholar.	Clifton, N. J.	January 9.
	SHEPARD, Rev. George C., D.D., Cong. Clergyman and Author.	Boston.	Amherst, Mass.	Dec. 12.
	SHERWOOD, Rev. John, D.D., Presbyterian Clergyman and Author.	Auburn Theological Seminary.	Auburn, N. Y.	Feb. 14.
53.	SHAW, Pike-Sard-Sondock-Phra-Phatamendr-Mahe-Monkiu, King of.	Bangkok, Siam.	October.
	SHIPLEY, Rev. Orby, Clergyman, an Eminent Low Church Leader.	Carlton Rectory, Eng.	June 3.
	SIBSON, Augustus W., Western Journalist.	Kansas City, Mo.	February 14.
	SIMMONS, Rev. Samuel J., D.D., Presbyterian Clergyman.	Hennessey, Eng.	April 18.
	SMITH, Brevet Brig.-Gen. S. Franklin, U.S.A., Major 13th Infantry.	Fort Reno, Wyoming Ter.	August.
	SMITH, Rev. Dr. Asa D., Presbyterian Clergyman and Author.	Princeton, N. J.	France.	August 7.
	SMITH, Sir Henry, late Speaker of Canadian Legislature.	Kingston, Can.	September 18.
	SMITH, Hon. Gerrit, Philanthropist, Politician, and Author.	Peterboro, N. Y.	March 28.
	SMITH, Rev. Joseph, D.D., French Clergyman, and President Franklin College, O.	Greenburg Pa.	Dec. 4.
	SMITH, Rev. Dr. Joseph, Clergyman and Author.	Cincinnati, Ohio.	January 1.
	SMITH, General William R., Wisconsin Politician and Political Leader.	Mineral Point, Wis.	August 29.
	SMYTH, Rev. Dr. Thomas, Presbyterian Clergyman and Author.	Charleston, S. C.	February 28.
	SNYDER, Professor William, Professor in Bowdoin College.	Brunswick, Me.	April 4.
	SOMERVILLE, Rev. Dr. Henry, Clergyman and Author.	Ayr, Scotland.	December 19.
	SOUDER, Capt. Jas., Editor and Author.	Philadelphia.	October 21.
	SPEED, Hon. Joshua F., Jurist and Politician.	Louisville, Louisville Ky.	Aug 4.
	STEELE, Brevet Major-General Frederick, U.S.A.	Fox Mines, Co.	Jan. 12.
	STEELE, Rev. Dr. Asa, Literateur, and Missionary to Africa.	Paris, France.	August 7.
	STEVENS, Thaddeus, Member of Congress and Statesman.	Washington, D. C.	August 11.
	STEVENS, Rev. Dr. Abel, Methodist Episcopal Clergyman and Author.	London.	July 29.
	STILLMAN, Joseph Coyne, Irish Dramatist, Antiquarian, and Author.	London.	July 30.
	STOCKTON, Rev. Thomas Hewlings, D.D., Methodist Clergyman.	Philadelphia.	October 9.
	STORRING, Rev. Charles F. E., D.D., Lutheran Clergyman and Author.	New York City.	May 4.
	STOWE, Rev. Calvin E., D.D., Congregational Clergyman and Author.	Hartford, Ct.	July 4.
	SUTHERLAND, Harriet E. G., Dowager Duchess of, Reformer, etc.	Sutherland Castle.	October 28.
	SWAIN, Hon. David L., President of Philadelphia and Author.	Chapel Hill, N. C.	July 12.
	SWAIN, Hon. David L.D.D., President of University North Carolina.	Chapel Hill, N. C.	Sept. 3.
	TAYLOR, Rev. Isaac, M.A., Author and Scholar.	Hadleigh, Essex, Eng.	December 28.
	TAYLOR, Benjamin Ogle, Wealthy Scholar and Virtuoso.	Washington, D. C.	Home, Italy.	February 24.
	THOMAS, Rev. Benjamin C., Baptist Clergyman and Missionary to India.	New York City.	June 11.
	THOMAS, Rev. Benjamin C., Baptist Clergyman and Missionary to India.	New York City.	June 11.
	THOMAS, Rev. Dr. Joseph, Author and Clergyman.	Talladega, Ala.	November 23.
	THOMPSON, Hon. Waddy, Member of Congress, Diplomatist, and Author.	Tallahassee, Fla.	November 22.
	THOMPSON, Hon. Richard W., Secretary of Navy 1877-1880.	Terre Haute, Ind.	Dec. 9.
	TOD, Hon. David, Governor of Ohio 1862-1864, and Minister to Brazil 1847-1850.	Youngstown, O.	Nov. 13.
	TOM, Chang Yeo, Chinese Giant, 8 feet 3 inches high.	Shanghai, China.	October 9.
	TOMMY, a young Japanese in United States in 1860.	Killed in battle near Newgate, Japan.
	TOWNSEND, Rev. Dr. Clergyman.	Member of Congress from Ohio 1863-1865.	October 26.
	TRENOR, Edward, English Botanist, Discoverer of Oildom or Grape Disease.	Margate, Eng.	March 8.
	TRUMBULL, Rev. Dr. Benjamin, Congregational Clergyman and Historian.	Hartford, Ct.	July 5.
	TUCKER, Hon. John Randolph, Lawyer, Author, and Politician.	Winchester, Va.	May 6.
	VAN BUREN, Maj. Lawrence, neph. of Pres. Van Buren, and P. M. of Kinderhook.	Kinderhook, N. Y.	July 3.
	VANDERBILT, Mrs. Sophia, Eldest Daughter of Cornelius Vanderbilt.	New York City.	January 31.
	VANDERBILT, Mrs. Sophia, Wife of Commodore Vanderbilt.	New York City.	August 14.
	VAN DYCK, Rev. Cornelius V. A., Missionary to Syria.	Beirut, Syria.
	VAN LENNEP, Jacob, Dutch Novelist and Dramatist.	Amsterdam.	August 25.
	VAN RENSSELAER, Hon. Solomon, Founder of Vassar College.	Albany, N. Y.
	VASSEUR, Rev. Robert, D.D., Professor, College President, Editor, and Historian.	London, Eng.	June.
	VATTEMARE, Alexander, Philanthropist and Author.	Paris.
	VERVILLE, Vallet de, French Archæologist and Author.	Paris.	March.
	VIELE, Brevet Brig.-Gen. Egbert L., Soldier and Engineer.		August.
	VIELE, Brigadier-General Sebastian S., an Officer of the late War.	Alexandria, Mo.	August 12.
	VILLAMIL, Don Rafael, Mexican Statesman and Author.	Kalamazoo, Mich.	June 17.
	WALCOTT, Charles M., Sen., English Actor.	New York City.	May 14.
	WALKER, Rev. Dr. Clergyman and Author.		August 29.
	WALLWORK, Count Adrian E. J., French Statesman and Diplomatist.		September 24.
	WARD, Rev. Dr. Clergyman and Author.	Professor Theological Seminary.	Auburn.	London.	April.
	WARD, Rev. Dr. Clergyman and Author.	Professor Theological Seminary.	Auburn.	London.	June.
	WARD, National Bughouse, F.R.S., M.R.C.S.S., English Surgeon and Botanist.
97.	WARNER, Joseph, Revolutionary Officer.	Albany, N. Y.	August 28.
	WELLS, Hon. Samuel, Governor of Maine 1856-1857, and Judge.
	WESTCOTT, Rev. Dr. Clergyman and Author.	First Asst. Librarian British Museum.	London.	February 28.
	WETHERALD, Sir G. A., G.C.B., Governor of Military College.	Sandhurst, England.	April 8.
	WHEELER, Lieut.-General Sir Michael, K.C.B., British Cavalry Officer.	London.	January 27.
	WHITTIER, John Thomas T., M. C. 1858-

WEST POINT AND VICINITY, FROM FORT PUTN[illegible]-FROM

FROM A SKETCH BY THEO. R. DAVIS.—[SEE PAGE 26.]

MY BRIDGE.

I BUILT a bridge when May-crowned youth
Danced near me with his songs and flowers;
It rested on false dreams of truth,
And spanned rain hopes and rainbow hours,
Until Maturity one day
Mockingly laughed my bridge away.

I built a bridge in later days,
Experience lent me lay the plan,
It rested on ambition's ways,
A selfish, toilsome life its span,
Till Wisdom, in the evening's ray,
Calmly rebuked my bridge away.

At last I built a bridge of love,
Resting in depths of tenderness,
And reaching human hearts; to move
The young to cling, the old to bless.
Earth-bound this spans a heavenly ray;
And so it never melts away.

WEST POINT AND ITS VICINITY.

THE Hudson is pronounced, even by foreign travelers, the most picturesque river in the world, not excepting even the far-famed Rhine. Rising among the Adirondacks it pursues an eastward course to Glen's Falls, and there sweeps around southward, following this direction with little deviation to its mouth—a distance of 190 miles. Its banks are elevated and picturesque throughout, not nearly its whole course, in Greene and Ulster counties it almost shuts the Catskills, and just below Newburgh it begins to passage through the beautiful Highlands. From the first discovery of the river its associations have been romantic as well as historical. When Henry Hudson first passed up the stream, in 1609, he hoped to find in that way a passage to the East Indies—the goal of human exploration for two centuries after the discovery of this continent.

The most beautiful portion of the Hudson is that including within the limits of our illustration of WEST POINT AND ITS VICINITY, on pages 21 and 25. The course of the river in our sketch is from left to right, from Newburgh to below Garrison's Station. Here it has the appearance of a lake inclosed by the Highlands.

This vicinity is invested with many literary associations. At Crow Nest Mountain DRAKE wrote "THE CULPRIT FAY," one of the most exquisite of American poems. Below, at Cold Spring, resided GEORGE P. MORRIS, the American poet and editor. On Constitution Island resides MISS WARNER, the author of "The Wide-Wide World."

To the visitor at West Point—51 miles above New York—each wooded height and rocky bluff recalls the stirring scenes of the Revolution. Early in the war the Hudson was of great strategic importance as the principal line of communication between the theatre of military operations and the country lying northward to Canada and the West. In accordance with the instructions of the Provincial Congress Fort Constitution was built on the island now known by the same name, but, on the first appearance of a British force in 1777, was abandoned as untenable. During the next year Fort Arnold (now Fort Clinton) was thrown up on the northeast angle of the plateau at West Point, and other forts were erected on the neighboring heights. A formidable obstruction was also made by stretching a massive chain at its narrowest point a boom of huge short logs, united at the ends by chains. Above this an immense chain—each link weighing fifty pounds—was laid upon the logs, extending from one shore to the other. The Stirling iron-works, where this chain was made, are in the vicinity of Stockbridge Station, 25 miles from West Point. A portion of the chain is preserved, and is to be seen lying in a grove on the west side of the Hudson.

Thus defended, West Point became an American Gibraltar, cutting off New York—then in the possession of the British—from the northern Provinces. In August, 1780, Major-General BENEDICT ARNOLD was assigned to command at West Point; and soon after, in the midst of a period of the deepest despondency on the part of the Americans, he plotted to betray his trust by the surrender of this fortress to the British. ARNOLD'S head-quarters were at the Robinson House (which is still standing), opposite West Point. It was here that General WASHINGTON breakfasted with MR. ARNOLD at the very hour when he himself was flying to New York on the Vulture to escape the consequences of his treason, which, though yet unknown to the Commander-in-Chief, had been already divulged.

One hundred and fifty-seven feet above the river, on a plateau embracing about 80 acres, stands the United States Military Academy, established by Congress in 1801. From the hotel near Fort Clinton, Bull Hill and Bronkneck mountains are seen to the right, rising respectively 1580 and 1137 feet; and, on the left, Crow Nest, towering 1428 feet above the water. In a grove of the crest of the hotel are two guns, one taken during the Revolution, the war of 1812, the Mexican war, and the late rebellion. The buildings connected with the Academy contain objects of great historic interest. The whole neighborhood abounds with memorials of military associations. Here ARNOLD plotted treason; here also WASHINGTON wrought for the salvation of his country. Here were educated ROBERT LEE, PETER BEAUREGARD, and the two JOHNSTONS, who lifted up their arms resolutely but vainly to destroy the Republic: but here also were educated GRANT, SHERMAN, THOMAS, SHERIDAN, and other brave and able officers, to whose wisdom and patriotism the Republic owes its preservation.

MARION'S CHRISTMAS PATIENT.

I.

ON a snowy day in the winter of 1860, and in the sitting-room of a small, unpretentious house at Hackney, two young people sat alone, holding a confabulation of a kind decidedly not agreeable, if one might judge from the expression of countenance with which each regarded the other. Ida Radcliffe was near the window, watching the snow fall, her well-developed figure was held haughtily erect, and her face wore a most unbecoming expression of defiance and sullenness. How it disfigured her! The pretty, regular features and brown curls did not look even appear attractive, even to her lover, who was her companion of that afternoon, and he refrained as much as possible from looking at her.

It was "only a lovers' quarrel" that was taking place. Marion thought of the common phrase which she had nearly spoken many a time, but of which hitherto she had had no practical experience. While her bosom heaved with unmitigated feeling she dwelt upon the word "only," and tried to think as lightly as she had ever done of this phrase, believing that the lovers' quarrel in which she was indulging would soon be cleared up, and that she and Arthur Grove would be greater lovers than ever. But, strive as she would to come about she could not tell, for she was stoldly determined not to "give in" first, and every time she opened her lips to speak to Arthur some fresh cause, which made it more difficult for her companion to try to effect a reconciliation, arose in her misguided, often wounded, and at length sorrowfully indignant.

Arthur Grove was a young man of literary tastes and good ability. He was Marion Marion's father, who was also a literary man; and to him Arthur largely owed a favorable introduction to the world of letters. Mr. Marion had highly esteemed him, for his pure, manly character, no less than for his undoubted abilities; and having only daughters, he was the more wished to see happily married, he had encouraged the intimacy which, naturally enough, sprang up between Marion and her lover. Indeed, he grew was his appreciation of Arthur Grove that more than once Marion had to hear him say, half playfully, half seriously, "Marion, my dear, see that you make yourself worthy of Arthur Grove." This actually stung Miss Marion's vanity, and the result was that Mr. Arthur Grove found that I am not to be won too easily."

However, Arthur Grove was blessed in loving, as many men are, not only by whether their love be fully reciprocated or not. A man of a thoughtful, poetic temperament, of simple, wisdom habits, of much self-control, diligence, ambition, of deep, earnest feeling, he was slow in giving his love to any one; when given it was to remain here forever, to be prized as sacred, as the one maiden to be trusted.

Mr. Marion died in the autumn of 1860, so that he was not permitted to see his hopes consummated by a union between his daughter and Arthur Grove. But he was spared the mortification that it might take place as soon as the young folks could see it practicable. Arthur must first make himself independent, for he had to work with brain and hand for a living, and Marion had no rich dower. Her father died a comparatively poor man, leaving but a modest competency for his widow.

Nine months of mourning had passed by, and now fashion and society were beginning into a new trouble. She had of late been pleased to take it into her head that Arthur's absolute trust in her, and sincere appreciation of her worth, and who happened to pay her small attentions, ought perhaps to be considered a species of indifference. So she resolved to put the matter to the test, getting up a flirtation with a middle-aged bachelor, who was paying a Christmas visit to one of her friends and neighbors.

Arthur listened to her frequent allusions o the "delightful society" of this Mr. Stow with complete indifference. He had met him once in the afternoon of which I am writing that he felt moved to say one word about Marion's new acquaintance. Arthur had promised to be with her at a certain hour, and when he arrived, punctual to the time, he was not a little annoyed surprised to find that Marion had gone out without leaving any message for him—"gone out with Mr. Stow," the servant informed him. Mrs. Radcliffe was up stairs lying down, not so well as usual to-day, so Arthur took a book, and sat down by the window to wait Marion's return.

Half an hour passed by, and then he saw her coming along the road, laughing and chatting with extreme animation with Mr. Stow, with a umbrella, and leaning on his arm. Arthur was surprised about it all, but he was not disposed to be annoyed at what he thought, no doubt, would explain it quite to his satisfaction. But, to his surprise, when she came in, her face bright with the glow of the exercise, she said she did not go up to him with her customary greeting, but stood drawing off her gloves, and said in a cold, hard tone, "I suppose you are very angry with me."

"Indeed I am not," he answered, kindly, "but I should like you to come and tell me the meaning of this."

She misconstrued his words, and replied, snappishly, "What the meaning of what?"

"Just the meaning of your running away when you were expecting me, leaving me to devote myself to solitude for an age, waiting for my lady-love."

"Then I don't choose to give an account of myself every time I stir out of doors," she answered, untying her bonnet with a jerk. "I have been in excellent hands, as no doubt you saw from the window; and it must concern you to know simply that I was safe and happy while out of your sight."

She spoke in a manner, more than the words, stung Arthur sorely. "Why, Marion! what is coming over you?" he said, in surprise. "I can scarcely recognize you; you are so unlike your dear old self. Have I to thank Mr. Stow for this sudden change in you?"

"Ah!" she responded, with a silly forced laugh, "now I see you are actually jealous! Well, it is all right to discover what is in a man before you irrevocably bind yourself to him. Jealous or not, you must know, Arthur, that I am never to be controlled with regard to my friends. I shall always speak to any body and every body I like."

"My dear child, I have no wish to control you in so simple a matter; I can trust to your good sense to do what is right. I don't expect that you will ever shrink from telling me of your acquaintances, or from asking me to let me know about this new friend of yours. You must not be making a quarrel out of nothing. Come, you have not even shaken hands with me yet." He approached her, but she shrugged her shoulder, threw her cloak and bonnet on the sofa, and passed into the recess of the window.

"It is yourself making the quarrel," she said, hardly, "so you needn't reproach me about it; and I really don't care to shake hands with you, Arthur, until you have begged my pardon. You have upset me very much."

"How, Marion? and for what am I to beg your pardon?" he asked, thrusting his hands into his pockets, and looking at her with surprise, almost with pain, that she could be acting in such a petulant and unfair way.

She did not speak, and he resumed. "It would have been kinder in my good little lady had she asked my pardon when she came in, though I did not wish her to do so. She has never been in the habit of the past so to speak, apology for not being strictly faithful to an engagement. But I will gladly beg your pardon, Marion, if you will tell me what I need it for."

"If you have not the sense and feeling to prompt you to ask as a gentleman, you need not expect that I am to be your prompter."

Arthur was silent for a few moments. Then he sat down to write. "Well, really, I am overcome with amazement!"

Marion began to feel remorse, and to think that she had overdone the matter terribly. But she felt that she was lowering herself terribly in his eyes, if she had immediately apologized when she spoke of begging his pardon, and allowed the foolish little affair up at once. But now that he apparently refused to do so, how could she give in? She was angry with him, she had really wronged him, and that thought aggravated her growing remorse. One way was still left to her—to turn the whole affair into a laugh heartily—and then it, heal every bitter feeling with kisses, and hope that the farce might never be changed to tragedy by the misunderstanding just as she was on the point of thus trying to set matters straight, he resumed—

"Yes, I am amazed; but I think I can now discover a clew to the mystery: you are taking this means of giving me a dismissal, of apprising me that you are going to reward me—for all I fear they are changed I can have no doubt. I am sure the old love you had for me would not have permitted you to be so hard, unjust, cruel to me."

"Go on, Sir," replied Marion, in an iron tone, though her heart was beating at his words. "Unjustly your harsh sayings; it is well that I should know you in your true character."

"Yes, indeed, a long ago, Marion," he replied; "but it seems that I did not know you, indeed I had not the faintest suspicion that you could ever be capable of this base, false part. I had adopted milder measures to effect our separation I could have blessed you even in my anger, for I should have had at least tender memories to cherish. But now, nothing will be left me but the mockery of a fond and foolish dream. The recollections of this short week is almost too much for me," he added, "and I will not say more lest I should utter wounding things that I should afterward regret. Good-by, and may you be happy!" He bowed low, and left the room.

"Come in," said Marion, in a firm voice. And the servant appeared, leading a little girl in extreme distress.

"What's the matter?" asked Marion. "Hush! hush, Bertha! one would think you were nearly killed."

"Please, miss, she has cut the tip of her finger very ill, and her poor mother is out, and I don't like to let it, so she sent to ask if you would please to bind it up for her."

The sight of the blood and the thought of the severed finger gave Marion a little thrill, but she kept outwardly calm, dismissed the servant, untied the child's hand, and, after some strips of boiling plaster, which, with steady hands, she soon bound round the tiny maimed finger, Arthur watching her all the while.

"What a nerve you have!" he remarked, quietly. "You would do for a hospital nurse."

"Thank you," she replied, haughtily, for she fancied she detected scorn, depreciation, every thing unpleasant in his words.

Arthur took the hint, and rose to go.

"Well, Marion, is this really to be a good-by?" he said.

"You have acted as though you wished it to be," she replied.

"No; don't say that. You have acted so, Marion."

"Reproaches to the very last," she responded, with proud bitterness. "I care not what happens," she added, rapidly. "Yes, say good-by, and let it be a final one. No doubt it will be for the best for both of us. It would never do to have repetitions of this hour's doings; and I don't see how what has happened can ever be got over. Don't keep me waiting; say good-by at once, and let me go."

He felt like one in a dream as he took her hand, pressed it, and wished her good-by. The word which had aforetimes been so fondly and tenderly spoken, now sounded like a knell: the door of hope was gone from it, and it spoke of nothing but departed joys.

With a flushed face Marion turned to the child, and Arthur Grove left the house.

II.

Arthur walked home to his lodgings in a state of utter bewilderment. He felt somewhat like a mariner who has encountered a sudden storm, which has overwhelmed him with fear, and left him a wreck, and all in so short a space of time that he can say, "But an hour ago my vessel was tight and strong, careering along under smiling skies to its desired haven—and now!"

Going through the snowy streets, Arthur saw nothing, felt nothing. The snow whirled about him—he did not heed it; the cutting wind blew right in his face—he did not heed it. The event of the day was presently around him—he was oblivious of it. To his dulled ear no sound came but an indistinct moaning, like the far-off voice of an angry sea.

He walked like an automaton to his lodgings, and found his way to the door upon reaching, sank down helpless upon a couch. For a long time he lay motionless, with closed eyes, thinking, trying to realize the words that had passed between Marion and himself, and asking himself whether he had been provoking harsh, or unreasonable by her. Then a remembrance wholly acquitted him, though; and then bitter thoughts succeeded the questionings. "She has been fooling me!" he exclaimed, vowing from his heart revenge, "making me to believe in a love which never really existed in her heart for me. Could real love have changed to hate so causelessly, and be so fickle? No, no! I will try to forget her, and at the same time all dreams of love shall be forgotten and subject of mind forever. As I said to her, there are other things to live for besides woman's love. And whatever my fate may be I will try to be equal to it."

Remembering that he had an article to finish and send off to the city that evening, he manfully put down at his desk, and by working found the best antidote to grief that earth can afford. He shook off the feeling of helplessness, then regretted him, and though his first efforts with pen and ink were irksome to him, he presently became quite absorbed with his theme.

Meanwhile, how fared Marion? Having returned from taking little Bertha home, where she had been attending upon the mother, who found her other down stairs, and tea waiting. Mrs. Radcliffe inquired about the doings of the afternoon, and Marion answered that she had been enjoying a long walk in the snow, in the earlier part of the afternoon.

"I hope you took your boots off directly you came in," said Mrs. Radcliffe, anxiously.

"Indeed I did not, mamma," replied Marion, lightly, "and now I believe they have dried on my feet. I had forgotten all about them."

"Marion, Marion!" said her mother, "you want as much looking after as a child. Take them off instantly."

Marion laughed as she stooped to obey. Her face was flushed, and her manner excited.

"My stockings are yet a little damp," she said. "I walked in the thickest snow I could find, it was so delightful. But I suppose it soon penetrated my not over-thick boots."

"You should have a foot-bath, and go to bed immediately," said Mrs. Radcliffe, anxiously.

"Now do so directly after tea, my child, to please me. I will try to entertain Arthur this evening, and excuse you every excuse for me."

"Very well, mamma, I'll go," assented Marion; and not a word of explanation about Arthur did she utter. She was rather glad to get off out of the way, to avoid the inquiries which his nonappearance must lead to, sure to excite. Besides, she felt a little feverish and giddy, and the thought of rest and complete solitude was most welcome to her. So she went up to bed, and Mrs. Radcliffe staid down stairs with her knitting, expecting a well-known knock. But the evening passed away, and no Arthur appeared to tax her entertaining powers.

She and Marion occupied rooms which opened into one out of the parlor. When she went to bed she went into Marion's room, intending to speak of Arthur; but the young girl was asleep, her clothed have crossed close upon her pillow. Mrs. Radcliffe looked at her with tender concern for a few moments, and then returned precipitately to her own room.

The next morning, on awaking, Marion felt very unwell. She was slightly feverish, and her throat was so constricted that she could scarcely recall the events of the preceding day. Yet she had a heavy consciousness that there was something terrible to be remembered, and so she encountered too.

It seemed to her that nothing could be done, at least not by herself. Had she followed the promptings of her better feelings she would have decided to write to him, deploring her folly and waywardness, and apologizing for her rude and unkind behavior to him. But her pride forbade this. "He would think I was stooping to effect a reconciliation; and I'll never stoop to any man," she said to herself. "Besides, I think Arthur is to blame." But how, or for what he was to blame, she had no definite idea.

It was a wretched morning: the snow of the previous day was thawing, and the air was raw and chill. Marion had nothing to do, and the weight of her heart prevented any desire for occupation.

"Arthur did not come last night, my dear," said her mother, presently. "How is it you have not inquired for him?"

"Because I did not expect him, mamma," she replied, in as natural a manner as she could command; "neither do I expect him to-day. Something has occurred which may prevent his coming for a time."

"Any thing serious, Marion?"

"Oh no, mamma," she replied, as she sat down to the piano. She hoped that her playing would put a stop to conversation, and it did.

She played and sang without pause for nearly an hour, when relief came in the person of Mr. Stow, who made his appearance, smiling and affable, with the consciousness that his presence was welcome.

He had brought a book for Miss Marion, and some small talk passed upon it. Then he ventured to opine that she wanted outdoor exercise; and being a believer in walking in all weathers, he moreover ventured to assure Miss Marion that exercise, even on such a day, would be far better for her than enjoying indoors. The walk will be refreshing, and not to make hot-house flowers of themselves. Would she allow him the honor and pleasure of accompanying her on a brisk ramble with?

Marion consented. She was ready to do any thing, go any where, in the fit of listlessness and being a believer in walking in all weathers, then, to forget her foolishness, and the misery it was entailing upon herself. So she got ready, and went out under the protection of her stout friend.

As they walked away from the house, Arthur Grove, as you know, lay dying, and out of sight, and mind, and remembering it; for on awaking that morning all his old love for Marion filled his soul with such a rush that he felt he could not give her every thing, that he must save her from the bitter consequences which a foolish impulse might have caused her blindly to dare. He put aside pride, wounded feeling, bitterness, every thing; and resolved that nothing but a thinly-expressed hint to her that they should part, uttered in cold blood too, should break the bond which he had hitherto thought too strong and too sacred for any earthly power to sever. With this brave and generous resolve he set off to Hackney, as soon as his morning engagements would permit; but when the whole neighborhood that he had spent so many happy hours of his life, he discerned afar off the well-known figure of Marion, and that of the lady of the day before. She did not see him, and he slipped into a shop, sheltered for an article which he wanted no more than the man in the moon, and waited for the coast to pass by. They came walking rapidly; Mr. Stow was talking with great animation, and Marion, leaning on his arm, was listening as if with absorbed attention. Just as they passed the door a light laugh escaped Marion, and she said, gayly, in response to her companion, "That's rich!"

"How happy and light-hearted she is, after crushing me into the dust of despair!" thought Arthur, with a whitening face, as he left the shop and hurried along, he scarcely knew whither; but not in the direction of those two. All his revived hopes were blasted again, and now he set his heel upon them and crushed them out of existence.

He found himself at a railway station in a few minutes, and in a short time was again in the whirl and turmoil of City life. It suited him just then: it was typical of the state of his agitated mind.

III.

It was not to be wondered at that Marion never had cold, deliberate thought for an hour or two in the mire with Mr. Stow on such a morning. Had she been in bright and happy spirits, she might have greatly repelled the advances of disease; but in such a frame of mind as she was, now depressed almost to lifelessness, now agitated by contending emotions, and all the while full of terrible suspense, she was an easy prey for any malady.

The next day she was confined to her bed by low fever. For many days she was hovering between life and death. In her ravings she mingled the names of Arthur and Mr. Stow with such irrelevance, bewildering, abjuring, reproaching, entreating in most piteous fashion. Her mother wondered and sorrowed, wondered, too, this day after day passed by without Arthur's coming or sending.

At length she wrote to him, begging him to come; but, to her disappointment, her letter was returned, with the information that Mr. Grove had left England suddenly.

There was, therefore, nothing to do but to wait for Marion's recovery to get a solution to this mystery. But the poor old mother was not just never to get it; for before Marion regained sufficient strength for much conversation, Mrs. Radcliffe succumbed herself to fever, and the two lay in the house together, helpless.

At this juncture Mrs. Radcliffe's maiden sister, Miss Hallwell, arrived to take charge of the two invalids. She was highly qualified for such a task; for she had for many years given almost her whole attention to the sick.

Under her regimen Marion rapidly recovered, and then she would not be diverted from assisting in tending her poor mother, who lay in a very precarious state. Marion concealed her grief as much as possible from her aunt; but in silence she sorrowed deeply to see her mother suffering and sinking day by day, and to think that the fault lay at her door.

"Oh if she will only recover," said Marion, with bitter tears, as she sat by her bedside in the twilight one afternoon watching her, "if she will only recover, my whole life shall be devoted to her! I will never, never cause her another moment's trouble!"

But she did not recover: she died, and Marion was left a desolate orphan. Oh! the desolation of those first weeks of bereavement! Marion had never imagined any thing like it before. And her sorrow was aggravated by the bitterest remorse, self-reproaches, agonizing penitence for her sin against her lover, which had entailed all this subsequent misery upon her. It was to her like being in a furnace heated seven times; but out of it she came purified, a new creature, full of goodness, humility, and love.

Such was the spirit in which Marion arose from the dust of her sore affliction; and, having left her aunt's well-nursing now at that crisis, Marion's first were at once directed into paths of usefulness.

"Come with me, my child," said dear old Dr. Christian's wife to her, "and you will be suffering." And the elder and the younger went forth to it together.

Marion had unbosomed herself to her aunt, hiding nothing about her willfulness and cruelty to Arthur Grove.

"Child, child!" she exclaimed, with tears, on hearing the story, "what if you have ruined him? Men have been ruined so—body and soul. How could you so abuse him in misery!"

Then, seeing how this augmented Marion's distress, she added, soothingly: "Well, we will trust but for him, that the past may be repaired as far as possible."

Miss Hallwell was an energetic woman, and though childish in many things, she would frighten an ordinary women out of their wits to think of accomplishing. She was about London, here, there, and every where, and knew all the ins and outs conditions of people. "I will soon get tidings of some sort of Mr. Grove," she said, sanguinely, and she did get tidings, and found out out-of-the-way offices until she succeeded, and the news she carried home to Marion was, that on a certain afternoon in the month of December (it was now February) Mr. Grove had called on a friend of his who was about starting to America; and he begged to be allowed to accompany him; that there and then he wound up the few little affairs that bound him to England, and within a week he was on his way across the Atlantic. Whither he was bound, or what he intended doing, Miss Hallwell could not learn.

"I can only pray for him," said Marion, quietly, as she received this news.

But the news was the echo of the thunder of war, sickening, though made faint by distance, came booming across the Atlantic; and hearts in England ached with fear for those fighting in America. It filled Marion full of foreboding, and her thirst for information about the terrible civil struggle was so great that she secretly endowed every bit of news that the papers could give. All the harrowing details of battle she took in; long lists of casualties she pored over by her, all in the vain hope of seeing the name of an imaginary volunteer. Little did she think as she read the prosy accounts of the every-day life any conflict in one of the daily papers that the long columns had been penned by Arthur Grove's own hand. He was not in the thick of the battle, as she feared; but he was following in the wake of one of the armies as a chronicler, not as a fighter.

The great wave of blood that washed out the cause of slavery in that mighty continent ebbed at the battle-fields rolled away, and the land once more breathed the air of peace.

Meanwhile Marion pursued her blessed task unstintingly. No news had reached her either to nurture or kill "the hope that keeps alive despair." Every day in her prayers she commended her much-wronged and now greatly-beloved friend to God, and she tried to believe that he was safe somewhere in the Good Father's keeping. And Christmas an experienced nurse at one of the West End hospitals fell suddenly ill, and Miss Hallwell at once proposed replacing her by Marion. The offer was accepted, and the lady was approved as substitute and ensconced in the accident-ward.

On the afternoon of Christmas-eve a new case was brought in. A gentleman had fallen back in getting to the top of an omnibus, and, while quite unconscious remained, had required to be taken to the nearest hospital. He was brought in, in an unconscious state, and, his injuries having been ascertained and attended to, he was borne over into Marion's care. He had a broken leg and a fracture of the ribs. He was a thin, middle-aged man, with a pale, benevolent face. Marion surveyed him critically by the dim gas-light, as he took his first sleep after the operation. He was a girl, with only a light brown arch of hair on the upper lip; this man had a full, dark brown beard, which was flecked with gray on the cheeks of his face and fell on his breast. Then this face was old, and there were lines in the forehead, she saw, as he stirred in his sleep and turned his face toward the light.

"Arthur would not look such an elderly man as that, even after the lapse of years," she said. But I detect a likeness to him in every stranger I see," said Marion, as if to chide herself for her affectionate weakness.

Still, after she had gone noiselessly from bed to bed to look at her patients, she went hovering round the stranger again, and stood gazing at him like one fascinated. "He is certainly like Arthur," she said, mentally: "if I could see his eyes I might determine better. In six years he would look older, of course, and he might have grown a beard in that time. I wonder—here she paused and moved away, for he put his hands to his head restlessly and opened his eyes for a moment. Then he lay still many minutes, and Marion resumed, watching him at a distance—

"I wonder can it, can it be he? If so, how can I act? what ought I to do? If it be really he, how changed he is! how dreadfully altered, and I the cause! Poor dear! But how dare I say that? He may be the darling of another; and how could I endure to hear it? O God! if that be part of the punishment I have to bear, help me to bear it, I entreat thee!" she inwardly ejaculated, closing her eyes, and lifting her face, which had grown pale as she thought on these things.

When she unclosed her eyes, which were dewy with tears, she saw that her new patient had his eyes open, and was regarding her curiously. In a moment she controlled herself, became once more the calm, self-possessed nurse, and, approaching him with affectionate interest, she said, softly, "Do you want any thing?"

As the words fell on his ears he looked hard at her, but on her speaking with her face in shadow, and, not to keep her waiting too long for an answer, he replied, with a lovable's pettishness, "I hear, dear! I've just realized that I am in a hospital, doomed to a four or five weeks' weary sit down!"

"You must lie perfectly still, or you will displace your leg," said Marion, as he seemed disposed to dislodge his whole body: "the more quiet you are the sooner you will be released from this bed-bondage. Are you easy? Can I give you any thing, or do any thing for you?"

"No, thank you."

"Would you like any friends sent to, to be made aware of your misfortune?"

"No, thank you; I have no friends," he said, shortly. And then he fixed his eyes upon her, and stared hard, as she endured it for several seconds, and then she was about to turn away, when he said, appealingly, "Nurse, don't go."

"Can I give you any thing?" she said, slightly confused.

"Yes; water, please."

He knew that she was being her close enough, for she had to lift his head. She did so very gently, and held the water to his lips. He drank slowly, and as he did so, all the while, so that she felt the color mounting to her face; but the light was dim, and when she replaced his head she felt sure she made a strong effort, and regained her composure. A thrill of recognition passed through each heart, but both remained silent. Marion sank down as a distance, and, shading her face with her hand, pretended to be absorbed in a book. Her new patient watched her intently, and the unutterances hung of her bosom, and wondered what he ought to say or do. What would come of this strange meeting? Was it a dream, or was that indeed really Marion Radcliffe? If so, what train of circumstances had brought her there? Love or hate was the fulfilling the position of nurse?

Marion, too, was wondering whats she ought to say or do. She could feeling which filled her heart was one of intense thankfulness.

"Here he is, actually in my presence, under my care; and here he must remain, safe and restful, for some weeks. Thank God for this blessed knowledge!" she said, fervently.

A long time passed by in silence. Marion moved about to one and another as she saw she was needed; but she did not again approach her new patient. Presently the night-nurse came to relieve her, and she gladly glided out of the ward.

The night-nurse, a strong, middle-aged woman, went the rounds of the ward to look at her patients, and made a pause opposite the new one. He was broad awake, and appeared restless.

"Are you comfortable?" she asked him, kindly.

"Yes, thank you. Will you tell me who is the nurse that was here just now?" he said, eagerly.

"That is Miss Radcliffe: she is a lady who assists whenever she is needed, not a regular nurse."

"Thank you. Will she come to-morrow?"

"Yes, I believe so."

He asked nothing more, but lay thinking, thinking unceasingly all the night.

Marion, too, was awake all through its long, cold hours, thinking and praying.

It was with a trembling heart that she went to her post the next day. She felt that a crisis in her history had come, and she half dreaded to meet it. "I will meet it in the strict and simple discharge of my duty," she resolved; "then, whatever may come of it, I shall have the blessed consciousness that I have done just what I ought to."

Marion passed on, speaking to one and another, and came to the new patient. She paused then, and he called, "Nurse!"

She approached him. "Have you no word for me?" he said, laying his heavy eyes on her with a yearning expression. "Don't you recognize a poor old friend?" he added, putting his hand out to her bed-clothes for hers. She gave it, and he held it firmly. "Marion, speak!" he whispered.

She sank down on the side of his bed, and felt choking with repressed tears. "Can you really forgive me, Arthur?" she said, at length.

He drew her hand to his trembling lips, and held it there, with his eyes closed. When he reopened them they were wet with thankful tears.

"Can we be dear friends again?" he said, in a low voice.

"If you will, Arthur," she replied.

"If I will! Oh, Marion! I never, never willed to be any thing but that; and yet how cruelly we were severed! It seems now like a hideous dream that has darkened the best years of my life. Why was it? How was it? I have never yet been able to answer those questions. And is the lone darkness to give place to light at last? Is the heart really to return to its resting-place, Marion?"

"If it will," answered Marion, with bowed head. "But, Arthur, you have so much to forgive. I can not expect—" She paused, unable to proceed.

He still held her hand, and gazed at her with those moist, sunken eyes.

"This is the best of days on which to have feuds forgiven, wrongs forgotten, and all discord and dissension give place to sweet peace and good-will. It is the day of days on which I'd choose to be restored to the happiness I've so long lost. There is nothing, no hindering hideous, which love can not readily forgive and overlook. I am convinced that my Marion could do nothing which I could not forgive. Come, long, long ago, Marion, dearest," he said, fervently, though in the same very low voice; "but we can not enter upon any such other Freudeleg, merely as such. I am sure I couldn't be satisfied with it; could you, Marion?"

She blushed assent to her forehead, but she did not speak.

"No, no," he resumed, "it must be the old, warm love, which has never yet died. It has been shut up here in my bosom, secretly kept for the only woman I ever loved or could love."

HUMORS OF THE DAY.

An old lady, who was in the habit of declaring after the occurrence of an unusual event that she had predicted it was once day very gloomily said to a neighbor, "Mrs. Jones, I've just got tired of her continual "I told you so." Rushing into the house breathless with excitement, he dropped into his chair, elevated his muscle, and exclaimed: "Oh, wife, wife, what—what—what do you think now?" The old bride cow has gone and ate up our prickadoes!" The old lady was really unfortunately waiting to hear the last word she broke out at the top of her lungs. "I told you so! I told you so! You always would let it stand out of doors."

A respectable old Irish lady was walking along a country road one day, when suddenly her indignation was aroused on beholding the untidy abode of a small Irish farmer who had his dunghill in front of his house, whereupon the old lady exclaimed, "Fine me, dear me! how I do hate to see a house with its rear in the front!"

"Is Mr. Jones in?" asked an Irishman of the porter in an hotel.

"No," was the reply; "will you leave your name?"

"Och, murther, do you think I'd be after going home without a name!"

A witness in a late divorce suit kept saying that the wife had a very retaliating disposition—that she "retaliated for every little thing." "Did you ever see her husband kiss her?" asked the wife's counsel. "Yes, Sir, often." "Well, what did she do on such occasions?" "She always retaliated, Sir."

"John," said a master to his boy apprentice, as he was about starting on a short journey, "you must accept of my place while I am absent." "Thank you, Sir," demurely replied John, "but I'd rather sleep with the boys."

NEW-YEAR'S DAY—1869

1. The Individual who has but one Call to make, and makes it with all his Children.

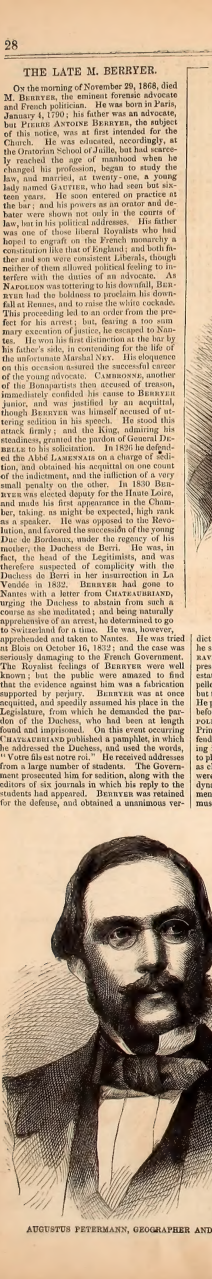
2. Many Happy Returns of the Day indeed!"

THE LATE M. BERRYER.

On the morning of November 29, 1868, died M. BERRYER, the eminent forensic advocate and French politician. He was born in Paris, January 4, 1790; his father was an advocate, but PIERRE ANTOINE BERRYER, the subject of this notice, was at first intended for the Church. He was educated, accordingly, at the Oratorian School of Juilly, but had scarcely reached the age of manhood when he changed his profession, began to study the law, and married, at twenty-one, a young lady named GAUTIER, who had seen but sixteen years. He soon entered on practice at the bar; and his powers as an orator and debater were shown not only in the courts of law, but in his political addresses. His father was one of those liberal Royalists who had hoped to engraft on the French monarchy a constitution like that of England; and both father and son were consistent Liberals, though neither of them allowed political feeling to interfere with the duties of an advocate. As NAPOLEON was tottering to his downfall, BERRYER had the boldness to proclaim his downfall at Rennes, and to raise the white cockade. This proceeding led to an order from the prefect for his arrest; but, fearing a too summary execution of justice, he escaped to Nantes. He won his first distinction at the bar by his father's side, in contending for the life of the unfortunate Marshal NEY. His eloquence on this occasion assured the successful career of the young advocate. CAMBRONNE, another of the Bonapartists then accused of treason, immediately confided his cause to BERRYER junior, and was justified by an acquittal, though BERRYER was himself accused of uttering sedition in his speech. He stood this attack firmly; and the King, admiring his steadiness, granted the pardon of General DEBELLE to his solicitation. In 1826 he defended the Abbé LAMENNAIS on a charge of sedition, and obtained his acquittal on one count of the indictment, and the infliction of a very small penalty on the other. In 1830 BERRYER was elected deputy for the Haute Loire, and made his first appearance in the Chamber, taking as might be expected, high rank as a speaker. He was opposed to the Revolution, and favored the succession of the young Duc de Bordeaux, under the regency of his mother, the Duchess de Berri. He was, in fact, the head of the Legitimists, and was therefore suspected of complicity with the Duchess de Berri in her insurrection in La Vendée in 1832. BERRYER had gone to Nantes with a letter from CHATEAUBRIAND, urging the Duchess to abstain from such a course as she meditated; and being naturally apprehensive of an arrest, he determined to go to Switzerland for a time. He was, however, apprehended and taken to Nantes. He was tried at Blois on October 16, 1832; and the case was seriously damaging to the French Government. The Royalist feelings of BERRYER were well known; but the public were amazed to find that the evidence against him was a fabrication supported by perjury. BERRYER was at once acquitted, and speedily assumed his place in the Legislature, from which he demanded the pardon of the Duchess, who had been at length found and imprisoned. On this event occurring CHATEAUBRIAND published a pamphlet, in which he addressed the Duchess, and used the words, "Votre fils est notre roi." He received addresses from a large number of students. The Government prosecuted him for sedition, along with the editors of six journals in which his reply to the students had appeared. BERRYER was retained for the defense, and obtained a unanimous verdict of acquittal for all his clients. In 1834–35 he successfully defended D'ARGENSON, DE PUYRAVEAU, and GARNIER PAGES; and in 1836 was presented by the French Legitimists with the estate of Angerville, which his difficulties compelled him to offer for sale in the following year; but the party again raised a subscription for him. He paid a visit to CHARLES X. in his exile shortly before his decease. On the trial of LOUIS NAPOLEON for his attempt at Boulogne in 1840, the Prince chose BERRYER and MARIE as his defenders, and BERRYER made a bold speech, saying it was natural that the Prince should desire to place himself at the head of the French nation as chief mourner for NAPOLEON, whose remains were then on their way from St. Helena. His dynasty had been elected by 4,000,000 Frenchmen, and he was the heir to that throne. He must be treated like those of other deposed dynasties, and condemned simply to exile. At the end of the same year France was roused by the success of Sir C. NAPIER at Acre, and the peaceful address of the French Ministry was fiercely debated. BERRYER, in his speech against it, called on the Chamber to make a protest which would gladden the spirit of that great enemy of England. BERRYER was one of the French deputies who attended the mock Court of the Count de Chambord in Belgrave Square in 1843; but he spoke powerfully in his own defense and that of 3000 other French subjects, and in indignant protest against a paragraph of the royal address reflecting on them. He attacked the Ministry in the same year for disavowing the acts of Admiral DUPETIT THOUARS in ruining Tahiti; and in 1845 he urged the plea of liberty of conscience against the law to exile the Jesuits. At the Revolution of 1848 BERRYER made no sign, but was chosen deputy for the Bouches du Rhone. During the Republic he said little, but was opposed to LOUIS NAPOLEON, and protested against the repeal of the law exiling the Bourbons, for the curious reason that the Count de Chambord, a monarch kept illegally from his throne, could not accept permission to enter his own kingdom. BERRYER joined with the party that endeavored to destroy the power of the President and to impeach him; but when the coup d'état of December 2, 1851, had been effected, he ceased to take an active part in politics. He endeavored to effect a reconciliation between the branches of the Bourbons. He was bâtonnier of the French bar in 1852, and was elected an Academician in 1854, when he did not, as was customary, pay a complimentary visit to the head of the Government. When MONTALEMBERT was prosecuted, in 1858, for publishing his celebrated "Debate on India in the English House of Commons," he intrusted his defense to BERRYER; and in 1861 BERRYER was counsel for Miss PATERSON in her suit against the representatives of JEROME BONAPARTE. He allowed himself to be nominated as a candidate in 1863 for the representation of the Bouches du Rhone, and was returned along with THIERS and M. MARIE. In the Imperial Chamber of Deputies BERRYER did not take a very active part. He spoke in 1867 in favor of the French intervention in Rome, and made an indignant protest against the attacks on the French press by the Count de Kerveguen.

When, recently, a movement was set on foot to erect a monument to BOUTIN, a victim of the coup d'état, BERRYER was one of those who came forward to subscribe publicly as a protest against the prosecution commenced by the Government. This was the last political action of his life.

THE LATE M. PIERRE ANTOINE BERRYER, FRENCH ADVOCATE.



AUGUSTUS PETERMANN, GEOGRAPHER AND EXPLORER.

DR. PETERMANN

AND THE GERMAN POLAR EXPEDITION OF 1869.

AUGUSTUS PETERMANN, the organizer of the German North Pole Expedition of 1868, and also of several African exploring expeditions, was born on the 18th of April, 1822, at Bleicherode, near the Harz Mountains. After passing through the school in his native village he was sent, when fourteen years of age, to the Gymnasium at Nordhausen, where he showed great taste for geographical study. In 1839 he attended BERGHAUS's celebrated School of Geographic Art, in Potsdam, and made rapid progress in his favorite studies, and soon assisted the proprietor of that institution in the preparation of his Physical Atlas. After this he went, in company with LANGE, a fellow-student in BERGHAUS's institution, to Edinburgh, where both of the young men labored indefatigably on A. KEITH JOHNSTON's Physical Atlas. They made frequent excursions to the Highlands, always with a scientific object in view. PETERMANN, on leaving Edinburgh, went to London, where, through the friendship of Baron BUNSEN, at that time Prussian Embassador to the court of St. James, he was aided in his geographical plans, and formed the acquaintance of Sir ROBERT MURCHISON, SMYTH, WASHINGTON, and other distinguished geographers. PETERMANN, while in London, prepared two maps of the British Isles, one of them describing the hydrographical relations, river-plan, and net-work of railways, and the other representing all the English statistics. He was appointed Geographer to the Queen.

In 1849 PETERMANN set on foot the plan by which the English Government sent out an expedition, accompanied by several German scientific men, under the charge of BARTH, to Central Africa. BARTH's two companions, RICHARDSON and OVERWEG died in Africa, and PETERMANN reinforced the solitary traveler by sending him DR. EDWARD VOGEL, who was at that time an assistant in BRORP's Observatory, in Regent's Park. This expedition, notwithstanding VOGEL's sad fate, was the beginning of that brilliant series of German exploring expeditions which was conceived and organized by PETERMANN. At the solicitation of BERNHARD PERTHES, of Gotha, PETERMANN returned to Germany, and settled in Gotha, where he took charge of what is now the celebrated PERTHES's Geographical Institute. He then commenced the publication of his geographical periodical (the Mittheilungen), which is universally acknowledged to be without a rival. In 1860 he organized an expedition for throwing light upon the fate of the unfortunate VOGEL, and sent HEUGLIN, STEUDNER, MUNZINGER, KINZELBACH, HANSAL, and SCHUBERT in charge of it. This expedition has been of incalculable service for African exploration; but PETERMANN, not satisfied with what he had done, sent out another one under BEURMANN, with the design of crossing the desert from the north to Wadai. The brilliant results of the expeditions of GERHARD ROLFS and MAUCH, the former of whom reached the hitherto inaccessible region of the Sahara, and the latter the almost unknown border-lands of the Republic of Transvaal, likewise owe their origin to PETERMANN.

Turning his attention in another direction, he resolved on an expedition to the North Pole, and, though nobody volunteered to defray the expenses, he issued an appeal to the German people, urging them to assist in the undertaking. Advancing the money himself, he sent out the expedition, in charge of Captain CARL KOLDEWEY, on the 24th of May, 1868. After the expedition had sailed the contributions came in to such an extent that they amounted to twenty thousand dollars, which were double the total expenses of the expedition. The little vessel, the Germania, commanded by Captain KOLDEWAY, was only eighty tons burden, and yet, in the short space of nearly five months, she reached the highest latitude of any exploring expedition since SCORESBY, who ascended to 81° 30'. On the return of the expedition a cordial welcome awaited it at Bremen, where a dinner was given in honor of PETERMANN, and a committee was formed for the purpose of organizing a larger expedition of similar character, to be sent out in 1869. To PETERMANN's credit, it must be said that, remembering his own early struggles, he has taken a great interest in young men having the requisite skill and taste for successful exploration, and has aided them both by counsel and means.

It is DR. PETERMANN's belief that the Pole can only be reached by the sea. His theory is that, by following the direction of the Gulf-stream—the current of warm water which passes round the north of Europe—vessels might be launched between the icebergs of Spitzbergen and Nova Zembla, because on this side the danger is not so great as at Smith's Strait. On this route he expects to find the Polar Sea free above 83° and 84°.

CARL KOLDEWAY, CAPTAIN OF THE "GERMANIA."

BOOTH'S NEW THEATRE, TWENTY-THIRD STREET AND SIXTH AVENUE, NEW YORK.—PHOTOGRAPHED BY ROCKWOOD.—[SEE PAGE 21.]

THE ARMY REUNION AT CHICAGO.

THE immense congregation of officers and soldiers assembled at Chicago on the 15th and 16th of December were representatives of our volunteer armies. Many were present who also belonged to the regular army, but they were not there on that account. This annual reunion has not, nor is it likely ever to have, any bearing upon partisan conflicts. Nevertheless it has great political significance; it is not simply the manifestation of military pride, or the expression of that fratenuity which always exists among soldiers who have perilled their lives in the same cause; it is something more—it is the intelligent recognition by our armies not only of the great work which they have accomplished, but also of the patriotic motives which called them to arms. The Chicago meeting was a token of our national strength and of national unity. General SHERMAN, in his address to the soldiers at the Queen's House, reminded them of this when he said: "Happily, my friends, you did not belong to that class of our people to whose hearts was implanted from youth the pernicious doctrine of State power, that the citizens should love a part of the country better than the whole."

THE ARMY REUNION AT CHICAGO—BANQUET IN THE HALL OF THE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE, DECEMBER 16, 1868.
[SKETCHED BY W. LONG PALIN.]

The armies of the Cumberland, the Ohio, the Tennessee, and of Georgia have each a separate organization, and this meeting was the reunion of all four. We give an illustration of this event on page 24. In the evening of the 20th there was a grand banquet in the hall of the Chamber of Commerce, at which General SHERMAN presided. Besides numerous table toasts the devices of the generals of the various armies who participated in the celebration, together with many memorials of the late war.

BURNETT'S COCOAINE is a perfect hair-dressing for preserving and beautifying the hair, and rendering it dark and glossy. No other compound possesses the peculiar properties which so exactly suit the various conditions of the human hair. It is the best and cheapest hair-dressing in the world. For sale by all druggists.

PRANG'S AMERICAN CHROMOS.—The author of "Happy Channel" writes of PRANG'S chromo of "The Cherries"—"Perhaps the best criticism I could give it would be to repeat a remark of a little child, who, on seeing the picture, said to me why I did not eat them."—Transcript.

291 HAST TWENTY-THIRD STREET, N. Y.

DEAR SIR,—For three weeks past I have been using your PLANTATION BITTERS. For more than four months past I have been suffering from what my doctor said was nervous prostration, being unable to endure hardly any physical or mental labor without great fatigue. But I find not used the Bitters a week, before I was conscious of their benefiting me as nothing else had, and I have continued to gain very rapidly since, till now I am able to be about my usual household duties. To all who are afflicted with general debility I can testify from experience that the Bitters are invaluable. Yours, truly,

MARGARET B. STONE.

MAGNOLIA WATER.—Superior to the best imported German Colognes, and sold at half the price.

DYSPEPSIA TABLETS cure Indigestion, Heartburn, and Sour Stomach. Fifty Cents per Box. Mailed for 60c. Sold by druggists. B. G. WELLS, 311 Broadway.

ADVERTISEMENTS

GRAND DUCHESS, BELLE HELENE, and other popular QUICKSTEPS, compiled for Piano Solo, with Overture and whole of music. Fifty Cents each. Complete Orchestra, and large collections of Vocal and Piano-forte Music, in Books, Fifty Cents each. The cheapest and most extensive catalogue of modern music in the world. Also, just ready, free to any dealer, Sweet & Co.'s Catalogue of their Newest publications in full sheet or music-size form.

SWEET & CO., 644 Broadway, N. Y.

LOOK OUT!

Don't touch it, unless in pure white wrappers, both WOLCOTT & PAINE PATENT, for pain, and his ANODYNAL-YON, for cholera. Take none other, or you are cheated. Sold by all druggists.

MUSIC OMNIBUS.

1000 of the best Songs, Polkas, Schottisches, Waltzes, Quadrilles, Dances, Cotillions, with calls and figures for dancing written out in full, arranged for the VIOLIN, ZITHER, FIFE, CLARIONET, &c.

Price, $1 25. Mailed.

FREDERICK BLUME, 1125 BROADWAY, 2d door above 26th St. Branch, 288 Bowery.

Merwin, Taylor, & Simpkins,

Manufacturers, Importers, and Jobbers of GUNS, AMMUNITION, CUTLERY, FISHING-TACKLE, SPORTING GOODS, &c., &c. Sole Agents of W. R. PAYNE'celebrated Breech-Loading Shot-guns. BALLARD RIFLES and SHOT-GUNS; EAGLE ARMS CO.'s Breech-loading Cartridge Revolvers; COLT'S Model Revolvers, and other celebrated Arms and Sporting Goods. Illustrated descriptive price-list free on application.

205 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

Illustrated Catalogues sent on application.

RENEW!" "RENEW!" is HARPER'S WEEKLY $4 50, and the PICTORIAL PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL, $3 00, sent a year for $6 00 by

S. R. WELLS, 389 Broadway, New York.

PIANOS, MELODEONS,
& ORGANS.

of six first-class makers, at greatly reduced prices, for cash, during the holidays, at WATERS'S, No. 481 Broadway, New York. Fifty New and Second-hand instruments for Rent, and rent-money applied if purchased; monthly installments received for the same.

$25 KNITTING MACHINE.

WANTED—Buyers and Sellers for the HICKOK FAMILY KNITTER, the most reliable invention for the household ever made. It knits 10,000 stitches a minute, runs backward and forward, and sets up its own work. Parties are making from $5 to $8 per day with their looms. Circulars and specimens of plain and ornamental work sent free. Address HICKOK KNITTING MACHINE CO., 32 Bromfield St., Boston, Mass.

THE

Union Pacific

RAILROAD COMPANY

OFFER A LIMITED AMOUNT OF

First Mortgage Bonds

AT PAR.

NINE HUNDRED AND SIXTY MILES

of the line west from Omaha are now completed, and the work is going on through the winter. As the distance between the finished portion of the Union and Central Pacific Railroads is now less than 400 miles, and both companies are pushing forward the work with great energy, employing over 20,000 men, there can be no doubt but that will be Open for Business in the Summer of 1869.

GRAND LINE TO THE PACIFIC

The regular Government Commissioners have pronounced the Union Pacific Railroad to be FIRST-CLASS in every respect, and the Special Commissioner appointed by the President says:

"Taken as a whole, THE UNION PACIFIC RAILROAD IS BEST WELL CONSTRUCTED, AND FIR GENERAL ROUTE FOR THE LINE EXCEEDINGLY WELL SELECTED. The energy and perseverance with which the work has been urged forward, and the rapidity with which it has been executed, are without parallel in history, and in grandeur and magnitude of undertaking it has never been equaled." The Report states that any deficiencies that exist are only those incident to all new roads, and that could not have been avoided without materially retarding the progress of the work. Such deficiencies are supplied by all railroad companies after the completion of the line, when and wherever experience shows them to be necessary. The Report concludes by saying that "the country has reason to congratulate itself that this great work of national importance is so rapidly approaching completion under such favorable auspices."

Besides a donation from the Government of 12,800 acres of land per mile, the company is entitled to a subsidy in U. S. Bonds on its line as completed and accepted, at the average rate of about $30,000 per mile, according to the difficulties encountered, for which the Government takes a second lien as security. The company have already received $25,168,000 of this subsidy, of which $1,280,000 was paid December 0th, and $640,000 December 14th.

Government Aid—Security of the Bonds.

By its charter the company is permitted to issue its own FIRST MORTGAGE BONDS to the same amount as the Government Bonds, and no more, and the bonds are a First Mortgage upon the whole road and all its equipments. Such a mortgage upon what, for a long time, will be the only railroad secured the Atlantic and Pacific States, is the highest rank as a safe security.

The price for the present is PAR, and accrued interest at 6 per cent. from July 1, 1868, in currency. Subscriptions will be received in New York,

At the Company's Office,

No. 20 Nassau Street,

and by

John J. Cisco & Son, Bankers,

No. 59 Wall Street,

and by the Company's advertised agents throughout the United States.

Bonds sent free, but parties subscribing through local agents will look to them for their delivery.

SIDNEY DILLON, CISCO, Treasurer,

DECEMBER 12TH, 1868. Vice-President.

In New York.

THE ONLY GENUINE ORIOIDE WATCHES.

$12 to $20.

These watches have a world-wide reputation, are in hunting-case (ladies' and gentlemen's sizes), guaranteed exact time-keepers, and sold at the low price of $12 each, and are equal in appearance and wear to gold cases. Also a large assortment of Beautifully chased and enameled watches, $16 and $20 each. Also, hunting-case silver watches, American movements. Fifty styles of Oroide chains, from $2 to $8. Gents' plain, sleeve-buttons, collar-buttons, and ladies' sets in great variety, from $3 to $8. Rich Jewelry, all kinds, always wanted. Send two red stamps for circular. All goods to be paid for on delivery. Customers allowed to examine before paying. To any one ordering six watches at one time we will send an extra watch free. Address

GAS. GERARD & CO., Sole Agents,

85 NASSAU STREET, NEW YORK CITY.

EVERY MAN HIS OWN PRINTER.

CHEAPEST AND BEST.

Price of Presses, $8, $12, $16, $23, $30. Price of Office, $75, $30, $90, $45, $60, $75, $90, $105, $120.

LOWE FRESS CO., 22 Water St., Boston.

To PHOTOGRAPHERS or others:

A Double-Metal Gilt Frame, with Mica, to cover pictures. New and Beautiful. Four Samples sent by mail on receipt of 28 cents. T. N. HICKCOX & CO., Brass Goods, 280 Pearl St., N. Y.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.—Let no sufferer from chronic dyspepsia or liver disease despair; this remedy will inevitably performe the task. Disorder has abandoned, and restore the patient to health.

Frank Leslie's Chimney Corner.

A purely literary pictorial. Excluding events of the day, its aim, as to form and indication, is to furnish entertainment for the leisure hour. Its contents consist principally of original stories by able writers—including a serial, accounts of remarkable adventures, biographical sketches, and fireside men—with portraits, descriptions of manners and customs in remote countries, short poems, fairy stories, enigmas, conundrums, charades, &c. Illustrated with large and spirited engravings, of which there are from fifteen to twenty in each weekly number.

Subscriptions, $4 per year.

Frank Leslie's Lady's Magazine.

The leading fashion periodical in America. Each monthly number contains a large colored plate of the latest fashions, from direct sources from Paris as soon as invented, which are thus published simultaneously in New York and Paris; also a four-page monthly fashion-plate, embracing the various leading styles. These are accompanied with full descriptions and explanations, with numerous other illustrations. Every number contains an original letter from Paris describing the very latest modes, by a lady whose position gives her access to the highest circles. The literary portion of this Magazine comprises a continued story, numerous interesting tales, poetry, anecdotes, &c. The whole profusely illustrated with fine engravings. Subscription price, $3 per year.

Subscriptions should be sent to

FRANK LESLIE,

537 Pearl Street, New York City.

HITCHCOCK'S HALF DIME MUSIC.

VOCAL MUSIC, WITH PIANO ACCOMPANIMENT.

NOW READY.

No. 1, Captain Jinks. No. 5, Not for Joseph.
" 2, Do you tell me " 6, Good-bye Sweetheart
Why, Robbin? " 7, I Really Don't think I
" 3, Will you be late a Will Marry.
Wen. " 8, Praise of Tears.
" 4, Blue Eyes. " 9, Champagne Charley.

Other popular melodies and Piano Music in Press. Each of these pieces contains 3 pages, printed in large, clear type, with colored title page, on heavy Music paper. Can be had of Newsdealers, and free, by mail, by enclosing five cents each to the Publisher.

H. M. HITCHCOCK,

25 Spring Street, New York.

Or 154 Vine Street, Cincinnati, Ohio.

IMPROVED ALUMINIUM BRONZE HUNTING-CASED WATCHES.

$500.

I will cheerfully give the above amount to any one who can surpass my imitation of Gold Watches. Description of metal and process sent on demand.

Prices, from $16 to $22. They are sent C. O. D., with charges. Address JULES D. HUGUENIN VUILLEMIN, Manufacturer, Le Locle, Switzerland. Call and examine for your self.

DEMOREST'S DIAMOND SOUVENIR.

A miniature Rose and Gem of a Book. Bound in Gilt. Containing 100 pages of Poetry, Fun, Useful Receipts, Music, and other Entertaining Literary Items, all in Diamond Type. 36 cts., 36 pts, per Dozen. $2 per 100. Mailed free on receipt of price. 838 Broadway, N. Y. Do not fail to procure a copy.

SAVE BEING SWINDLED.—Save your money by getting the "STAR-SPANGLED BANNER." Exposes humbugs, and contains 40 columns of news. Number. Only 10 cents. A splendid Premium to every subscriber. NOW IS THE TIME. Specimens, 10 cents.

"STAR-SPANGLED BANNER," Hinsdale, N. H.

LA GRANDE VICTOIRE.

I.X.L.

By a simple adjustment of the improved buckle this Skate can be worn by either a gentleman or lady. Ladies' dress. Complete with key. Economy both warrant ladies in giving it a preference over all others. R. T. & E. MEYER, Sole Patentees and Manufacturers, 37 PARK PLACE, NEW YORK.

VICK'S

FLORAL GUIDE FOR 1869.

The first edition of ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND OF VICK'S ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE OF SEEDS AND BULBS IN THE FLOWER GARDEN is now published. It makes a work of 150 pages, beautifully illustrated, with about 320 FINE WOOD ENGRAVINGS OF FLOWERS AND VEGETABLES, and is

ELEGANT COLORED PLATE,

A BOUQUET OF FLOWERS.

It is the most beautiful, as well as the most instructive Floral Guide printed, giving plain and thorough directions for the Culture of Flowers and Vegetables.

The Floral Guide is published for the benefit of my customers, to whom it is sent free without application, but will be forwarded to all who apply by mail, for Ten Cents, which is not half the cost. Address

JAMES VICK, ROCHESTER, N. Y.

SOZODONT.

An Eminent Chemist says:

439 BROADWAY, N. Y., July 3, 1868.

I have made a chemical analysis of the preparation for the teeth known as "SOZODONT," for Messrs. HALL & RUCKEL, the object of the analysis being to ascertain whether the ingredients were detrimental to the teeth, or gums.

An impartial examination of the "SOZODONT" was purchased by me personally from a leading Drug House and the Compound was subjected to the acids and other corrosive or injurious ingredients likely to have a detrimental action on the teeth or gums, but nothing of an objectionable character was found in its composition. JULIUS G. POHLE, M.D., Analytical Chemist, Late of Dr. JAS. R. CHILTON & CO.

MAGIC, MYSTERY, & MIRTH.

Sent free on receipt of a stamp. Address W. HEPBURNE, 102 Nassau St., New York.

100 PHOTOGRAPHS OF BEAUTIFUL WOMEN sent by mail for 25 cts. Send for Circular. Address C. SEYMOUR, HOLLAND, New York.

HARPER'S PERIODICALS.

MAGAZINE, 1869 WEEKLY, 1869 BAZAR

Harper's Magazine, Weekly, and Bazar. These three periodicals have the highest circulation which they have received from the press, and the support which has been given them by the reading public. Whether our conductors their beautiful and instructive illustrations, or the literary matter subject of domestic or foreign importance—their literary merit, which has given them the highest rank in the general literature—or their judicious editorial management—they must be considered pre-eminently the three best family periodicals in the world.—The Advance: Chicago.

Now is the Time to Subscribe!

"Unquestionably the best illustrated work of the kind in the world."

Harper's Magazine.

The most popular Monthly in the world.—New York Observer.

It is one of the wonders or journalism—the editorial management of HARPER & BROTHERS.

It needs precisely the popular taste, furnishing a pleasing and instructive variety of reading for all.—Zion's Herald, Boston.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE by far more reading-matter for the money than any American magazine; and we think we may safely say than any other as a family magazine in the world.—Packard's Monthly, Jan., 1869.

In this specialty of illustrated articles HARPER'S stands pre-eminent and unapproachable. The supremely beautiful, since the artistic excellence of its arts has been so steadily improved as to have long since reached as if it were pushed by competition.—New York Evening Post.

"A complete Pictorial History of the Times."

Harper's Weekly

AN ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER.

The model newspaper of our country—complete in all the departments of an American family paper; and its editorial management has earned for it a right to the title, "A Journal of Civilization."—N. Y. Evening Post.

The supreme excellence of HARPER'S WEEKLY as a pictorial historian will excite the sincerest admiration. Its engravings are unsurpassed and publishers are turned to dust.—New York Commercial.

The various topics and public questions with which HARPER'S WEEKLY from week to week form a remarkable series of historical records.—Boston Post.

Its columns are filled with able and clear discussions of the political questions which agitate the country. They are the expression of mature conviction, and of a high and strong feeling, and take their place among the best newspaper writing of the time.—New American Review.

An Illustrated Weekly Journal of Fashion, Pleasure, and Instruction.

Harper's Bazar.

A Supplement containing numerous full-sized Patterns of articles of dress accompanies every fifth number, and occasionally an elegant Colored Fashion Plate.

HARPER'S BAZAR contains 16 folio pages of the size of HARPER'S WEEKLY, printed on superfine calendered paper, and is published weekly.

HARPER'S BAZAR contains, besides pictures, patterns, etc., a variety of reading matter especially suited to the family; articles on health, dress, and housekeeping; in all its branches. Its editorial matter is specially adapted to the circle it is intended to interest and instruct; and it has, besides, always the best literary matter of merit.—New York Evening Post.

It has the merit of being worthy of conveying instruction, of giving excellent patterns in every department, and of being well stocked with good literary matter.—Baltimore American and Reflector.

To dress handsomely at small cost HARPER'S BAZAR will be the aim and ambition of the women of America.—Boston Transcript.

TERMS FOR 1869:

HARPER'S MAGAZINE, One Year..... $4 00
HARPER'S WEEKLY, One Year..... 4 00
HARPER'S BAZAR, One Year..... 4 00

HARPER'S MAGAZINE, HARPER'S WEEKLY, and HARPER'S BAZAR, to one address, for one year, $10 00; or two copies for $7 00.

Back Numbers can be supplied at any time.

The Volumes of the MAGAZINE commence with the Numbers for June and December of each year. Subscriptions may commence with any Number. When no time is specified, it will be understood that the subscriber wishes to begin with the first Number of the current Volume, and back Numbers will be sent accordingly.

The Volumes of the WEEKLY commence with the year. When no time is specified, it will be understood that the subscription is intended to commence with the first number after the receipt of his order.

A Complete Set, Postpaid, in Neat Cloth Binding, for Preservation or Binding, will be sent by Express, Postage Paid, for $2 00 per Volume.

A Complete Set of the Current Volume of the WEEKLY, when sent by Express, Postage Paid, for $2 50 per Volume.

Single Volumes of the MAGAZINE for Three Years back, in Cloth Binding, will be sent by Express, Postage Paid, for $2 50 per Volume.

Cloth Cases, for Binding, will be sent by Express, Postage Paid, for 50 cents each.

Remittances should be made by Post-Office Money Order or Draft payable to the order of HARPER & BROTHERS is preferable to Bank Notes, which are frequently not current, and if lost or stolen, it can be renewed without loss to the subscriber.

In ordering the MAGAZINE, the WEEKLY, or the BAZAR, the name and post-office address should be written plain. When the direction is to be changed, both the old and the new one must be given.

TERMS FOR ADVERTISING IN HARPER'S PERIODICALS.

Harper's Magazine,—Whole Page, $200; Half Page, $100; Quarter Page, $50—each insertion; or a Page, one space, $1 50 per Line, each insertion.

Harper's Weekly,—Inside Page, $1 50 per Line; Outside Page, $2 00 per Line—each insertion.

Harper's Bazar, $1 per Agate Line; Cuts and Display, $1 50 per Line—each insertion.

Address HARPER & BROTHERS, New York.

ESTABLISHED 1861.

THE
GREAT AMERICAN
TEA COMPANY

RECEIVE THEIR TEAS BY THE CARGO FROM
THE BEST TEA DISTRICTS OF
CHINA AND JAPAN,
and sell them in quantities to suit customers
AT CARGO PRICES.

The Company have selected the following kinds from their stock, which they recommend to meet the wants of families. They are sold at cargo prices, the same as the Company sell them in New York, as the list of prices will show.

PRICE LIST OF TEAS.

OOLONG (black), 70c., 80c., 90c., 1, best, $1 per lb.
MIXED (green and black), 70c., 80c., 90c.; best, $1 per lb.
ENGLISH BREAKFAST (black), 80c., 90c., $1, $1 10; best, $1 20 per lb.
IMPERIAL (green), 80c., 90c., $1, $1 10; best, $1 25 per lb.
YOUNG HYSON (green), 80c., 90c., $1, $1 10, best, $1 25 per lb.
UNCOLORED JAPAN, 90c., $1, $1 10, best, $1 25 per lb.
GUNPOWDER (green), $1 25; best, $1 50 per lb.

COFFEES ROASTED AND GROUND DAILY.

Ground Coffee, 20 cents, 25 cents, 30 cents, 35 cents; best, 40 cents per pound.

Hotels, saloons, boarding-house keepers, and Families who use large quantities of Coffee, can economize in that article by using our ROASTED BREAKFAST AND DINNER COFFEE,
which we sell at the low price of 30 cents per pound, and warrant to give perfect satisfaction.
ROASTED (unground), 30c., 35c.; best, 40c. per lb.
GREEN (unroasted), 25c., 30c., 35c.; best, 35c. per lb.

CLUB ORDER.

PORTSMOUTH, MASS., August 26, 1868.
To the GREAT AMERICAN TEA COMPANY,
31 and 33 Vesey Street, New York.
GENTS: The people here will not let me alone. They say I have got hold of the cord, and that I have got to send another order for them. So here you have it. We had the ships of the cord since the 6th of May last, making five hundred and forty-five days since the sixty-four tea chests you gave me that date.
Hoping this will be as good as former packages, I remain Yours, &c., JOHN W. HAWKINS.

10	No. Uncol'd Japan, Mrs. Kempton...at	$1 00	$10 00
6	" Imperial.....at	1 25	7 50
8	" Young Hyson...A. L. Cummings, at	1 25	10 00
3	" Imperial.....Eliza Stephens...at	1 25	3 75
4	" Coffee.....J. L. Chapman...at	40	1 60
4	" Gunpowder.....G. A. Watrous...at	1 00	4 00
4	" Imperial.....P. Taylor.....at	1 25	5 00
4	" Young Hyson...J. Hopkins.....at	1 25	5 00
4	" Coffee.....Same.....at	40	1 60
3	" Gunpowder...Jos. Stephens...at	1 00	3 00
4	" Young Hyson...Wm. H. Doraty...at	1 25	5 00
3	" do. do. H. Mahler.....at	1 25	3 75
2	" do. do. N. Newcomb...at	1 25	2 50
2	" do. do. Jonathan Campbell...at	1 25	2 50
2	" Gunpowder...Judge Miller...at	1 00	2 00
2	" do. do. A. Cole.....at	1 00	2 00
9	" Imperial.....Mrs. Bird.....at	1 25	9 50
			$74 35

Parties sending Club or other orders for less than Thirty Dollars, will oblige by enclosing a Draft or Money with their orders, to save the expense of collections by express; but larger orders we will forward by express, to collect on delivery."

Hereafter we will send a complimentary package to the party getting up the Club. Our profits are small, but we will be as liberal as we can afford. We send our wholesale price packages for clubs of less than Thirty Dollars.

Parties getting their Teas from us may confidently rely upon getting them pure and fresh, as they come direct from the Custom-House stores to our warehouses.

We warrant all the goods we sell to give entire satisfaction, and if they are not satisfactory they can be returned at our expense within 30 days, and have the money refunded.

N.B.—Inhabitants of villages and towns where a large number reside, by clubbing together, can reduce the cost of their Teas and Coffees about one third (besides the Express charges) by applying directly to

"THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA COMPANY."

CAUTION.—As some concern, in this city and other places, use our name and style of advertising and doing business, it is important that our friends should be very careful to write our P. O. Box, as also to put on the number of our warehouse, to prevent the said concern from getting into the hands of some imposition.

POST-OFFICE Orders and Drafts make payable to the Order of

"THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA COMPANY."

Direct Letters and Orders as below (no more, no less):

GREAT AMERICAN TEA COMPANY,
Nos. 31 and 33 Vesey Street,
Post-Office Box 5643, New York City.

DUNHAM & SONS,
MANUFACTURERS OF
PIANO-FORTES.
WAREROOMS,
No. 831 Broadway, New York.
SEND FOR CIRCULAR.

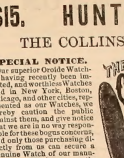
NORTON & CO.,
AMERICAN BANKERS—Paris, France,
Will remove on the 15th of October to their new rooms, No. 59 Rue de Richelieu, from the Grand Hotel—No. 6 RUE SCRIBE. Travelling American will find every possible convenience in this new establishment. Letters of Credit cashed, and every possible guarantee given.

25 CENTS. Now is the time to subscribe to "MAPLE LEAVES," the best, the most popular, and the cheapest monthly published. Each number contains matter of interest and importance to every body. 25 cents will be sent for it from now to the end of 1869. Postage stamps sent on receipt of stamps to pay postage. Address G. A. ROCKWELL, Montreal, P. Q.

PARLOR FIREWORKS.—A new winter-evening amusement. Perfectly harmless. Price 25 cents per package. Mailed, postpaid, on receipt of the price, by W. HEPBURN, 102 Nassau St., N. Y.

The Celebrated Imitation Gold
$15. HUNTING WATCHES. $20.
THE COLLINS ORODE WATCH FACTORY.

SPECIAL NOTICE.
Our superior Orodite Watches having recently been imitated, and worthless Watches sold in New York, Boston, Chicago, and other cities, represented as our Watches, we hereby caution the public against them, and give notice that we are in no way responsible for these bogus concerns, and only those purchasing directly from us can secure a genuine Watch of our manufacture We have recently greatly improved our Orodite in appearance and durability, and, to protect the public from imposition hereafter, we have named it the
"COLLINS METAL,"
and we give notice that any one making use of the name will be prosecuted to the extent of the law.
This metal has all the lasting and durability of Gold; can not be distinguished from it by the best judges; retains its color till worn out, and is equal to gold excepting in intrinsic value. All our Gentlemen's Watches are Full-Jeweled Patent Levers; those for Ladies an improved Escapement, better than a Lever for a small Watch; all in Hunting-Cases, and fully guaranteed by special certificate. The $15 Watches are equal in neatness, style of finish, general appearance, and for time, to a Gold one costing $60. The $20 Watches are of the same fine finish, and are fully equal to a Gold Watch costing $300. Chains of every style, from $1 to $8. Also, a large lot of the Collins Metal in every style.
TO CLUBS.—Where Six Watches are ordered at one time, we will send one extra Watch free of charge.
Goods sent to any part of the United States by express, to be paid on delivery. Money need not be sent with the order, as bills can be paid when goods are taken from the express office. Customers must pay all express charges. We charge no Agents' orders must therefore be sent directly to us. Letters should be directed as follows:



CASES OF THE COLLINS METAL (IMPROVED ORODE).

In the city will remember that our only Office is
Nos. 37 and 39 Nassau Street, New York, Opposite the Post-Office (Up Stairs).
C. E. COLLINS & CO.

WHICH is the BEST COMPANY
IN WHICH TO
INSURE your LIFE?
READ THE OPINION OF
HON. WM. BARNES,
SUPT OF THE INSURANCE DEPARTMENT OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK,
AS TO THE BEST
LIFE COMPANIES
TO INSURE IN.
HE SAYS:
"It does not always follow, as is sometimes supposed, that a purely Mutual Company is the most profitable one to the Insured. Mixed Companies, or those substantially Mutual, may by superior skill and other advantages actually make the LARGEST DIVIDENDS of profits to policy holders."—(Report, 1868, p. XX.
"orphis profits to policy holders."—(Report, 1868, p. XX.

ARCHITECTURAL IRON WORKS,
FOURTEENTH STREET, BETWEEN AVENUES B AND C. NEW YORK.
D. D. BADGER, President.
N. CHENEY, Vice-President.
Fire-proof Buildings of every description, and every kind of Iron Work for Building Purposes, also for Bridges.

FRESH BUTTER 20 CTS. A POUND.
THE GREATEST INVENTION OF THE AGE.
Two pounds of Butter can be made from one pound, by the use of our INVALUABLE BUTTER POWDER. Simple in operation, harmless in use. Sent free to any address on receipt of price, $1—full directions. AGENTS WANTED every where to introduce this great economizer. Address
GOODEN BUTTER CO., 102 Nassau St., New York.

GHOSTMAKERS.—Something very important. Address, with stamp, H. A. Gilbert, Lawrence, Mass.

$100 to $250 PER MONTH guaranteed, by Agents for the Home Sewing Machine. Salaries paid weekly to Agents or a large commission allowed. Address Home Sewing Machine Co., Orange, Mass.

$49.50 MADE by One Agent IN ONE DAY. New Cheap Sewing Machine, suitable for all. Single machines at less than retail prices. Sample and particulars free. Address
ASHUELOT S. M. CO., HINSDALE, N. H.

HOLIDAY PRESENTS,
$10, $15, $20, $25.
GENUINE ORODE GOLD WATCH CO.,
Geneva, Switzerland.
Manufacture, on strictly scientific principles, style, finish, durability, and reliability, 14 carat gold, in all kinds of the most curious and costly description of Gold Watches. They are made with the Genuine Orode Gold Lever. They are made with the Genuine Orode Gold Lever. Gentlemen's Five-Size Watches, Patent Levers, Jewelled in Gold Settings, Guarantee for 25 years. Gentlemen's Fine Swiss Movement, $10 and $15; Ladies' Chronometer, $20; Ladies' Patent Lever, $25. Express Co's will call at the residence of our customers—have Gold Chains, $5, $6, $7, and $10. Express Co's will enable the Trade to procure Watches at express charges both ways. Expressed every where, to be paid for on delivery. Send your orders to parties who make you pay for Watches before you see them. CLUBS FOR SIX WATCHES WILL RECEIVE AN EXTRA WATCH FREE. The universal demand for our specialties have induced unprincipled persons to counterfeit our watches by the use of the word Orode in various forms, claiming for them the reputation of our Orode Gold Watches.
JOHN FOGGAN, President Orode Gold Watch Co.
Only Office in the United States, No. 78 Nassau Street, New York.

AMERICAN COMPANY
TRADE MARK
RICHNESS AND PURITY
TOILET SOAPS
MCKEONE, VAN HAAGEN & CO.
Honey, Glycerine, Elder Flower, Bouquet, and Palm.
In Quality, Style, and Perfume warranted equal to the English, and sold for 50 per cent. cheaper, which accounts for the great falling off in the demand for foreign goods. Ask your Druggist for them. Manufactured by AMERICAN COMPANY, TOILET SOAPS, now sold throughout the United States.
McKEONE, VAN HAAGEN & CO., Sole Manufr's,
Philadelphia and New York.

THE MAGNETIC POCKET TIME-KEEPER AND COMPASS sent postpaid for $1, or three for $2. Satisfaction guaranteed, or money refunded. Circulars free. WALTER HOLT & CO., 102 Nassau St., N. Y.

New Glee Book Just Published.
THE GREETING: A Collection of Glees, Choruses, and Part-Songs. By L. O. EMERSON, Author of "The Jubilate," "Harp of Judah," "Golden Wreath," "Merry Melodies," &c. The pieces contained in this book are nearly all new. A large number have been contributed by Mr. L. O. Emerson, and the whole will be found a possess unusual attractions for Societies, Clubs, and Amateur Singers. Price, $1 25 per Dozen. Mailed postpaid. OLIVER DITSON & CO., Publishers, 277 Washington St., Boston. C. H. DITSON & CO., 711 Broadway, New York.

HOOP LA! Funniest Toy out!—See Lifelike Wooden Men on the Trapeze. Will set the whole town in a roar. By mail, 75 cents; 3 for $2 00.
ELLIOTT, HALE & CO., 11 Nassau St., N. Y.

WHY will you work for $1 50 per day, when you can make $50 a week in our new business? Can be done in any locality. We have all the new and useful articles never before introduced, and wanted in every house. Samples sent on receipt of 10 cents. Address WALTER HOLT & CO., 102 Nassau St., N. Y.

BOYS FIX—Send 25 cents for Catalogue of the HUNTER'S GUIDE AND TRAPPER'S COMPANION. A book for Trappers, Trappers and Boys. How to catch and trap all kinds of game, from the mink to the bear and deer. Also, many ideas, from the mink to the bear and deer. Also, many ideas, from the mink to the bear and deer. Also, many ideas

CHRISTMAS.—CAUTION TO FATHERS.

Little Mr. BINKS as he appeared last Christmas Eve, in his attempt to delight his children as Santa Claus at midnight.

N. B.—His courageous wife had not been informed of his purpose.

Sterling Silver Ware,
AND
Fine Electro-Plated Ware,
of the following trade-marks:

Trade-Mark for Silver. GORHAM MFG. CO. Trade-Mark for Electro-Plate.

MANUFACTURED BY THE
GORHAM MANUFACTURING CO.,
PROVIDENCE, R. I.

Orders received from the Trade only, but there goode may be obtained from responsible dealers every where.
GORHAM MANUFACTURING CO.

TRADE MARK
PURE WINES PRESSED from as FINE FRUIT
as is PRODUCED IN THE WORLD.

A stock of Wines shipped direct from the parent house in San Francisco and from the company's vineyards at Los Angelos.

Before purchasing wines for home consumption, gentlemen, by visiting our store, can satisfy themselves that pure, full-bodied American wine can be made without sugar.

The wines are open for the thorough inspection which it is hoped the public will extend to them.

WILSON, MORROW, & CHAMBERLIN,
45 Murray Street, New York.

LIFE SIZED PHOTOGRAPHS
TEN DOLLARS
ROCKWOOD, 839 BROADWAY, N.Y.

DON'T READ THIS BUT CALL AT HALSTED'S FOR YOUR SKATES. ALL THE LATEST STYLES at REDUCED PRICES! 163 BROADWAY & 154 FULTON ST., N. Y.

M. J. PAILLARD & Co.,
No. 21 Maiden Lane, up stairs, offer for the Holidays the LARGEST and FINEST STOCK of MUSICAL BOXES
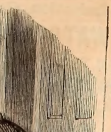
ever collected in this city. They have been carefully selected, and can not fail to please the most fastidious. PRICES ARE WITHIN THE REACH OF ALL. Popular, Operatic, and Sacred Tunes arranged in a variety of ways.
THE TOY MUSICAL BOX is a very desirable plaything for children.

RADDESDORF & SON, Manufacturers of Monochrom Pipes and Holders, with Amber-tips, Patentin, &c. Wholesale and Retail. Repairing in all its branches. Send for Drawings and Price-List. Box 5784. Store 29 Wall St., 6 John St., 71 Nassau St., corner John St.

Agents Wanted.
FOUNTAIN PENS—3 styles. 12 pens, 36 sts. ; one gross, $2; Gold Pen, 16 carats, $1 60. One dip writes 8 pages. Sells quick. Keener, pencil-sharpener, and pen-holder combined, 20 cts.; 11 for $1 00; postpaid. Agt. agrees make $60 per week. Address Monroe Fountain Pen Co., 413 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, Pa.

COLTON
DENTAL ASSOCIATION, the originators and only Headquarters of Nitrous Oxide Gas for certain Painless Teeth-Extraction. We have the autographs of 21,000 patients testifying to the above. Never had one accident. OFFICE, 19 COOPER INSTITUTE.



VELOCIPEDES.
WOOD BROTHERS.
596 Broadway, New York,
Manufacturers of fine Pleasure Carriages, are now prepared to receive orders for the celebrated
PARISIAN VELOCIPEDES,
of their own manufacture, which for durability and beauty of finish are not equaled.

SMITH'S COUCH CARAMELS.
Excellent for the Throat & Lungs. Sold by Druggists. J. F. HENRY, Agt., 21 Park Row, N.Y.

CONSULAR SEAL
CHAMPAGNE,
AS IMPORTED FOR NEW YORK UNION CLUB.
TOMES, MELVAIN & CO., Sole Importers, No. 6 MAIDEN LANE, NEW YORK.

OPEN THIS DAY,
THE NEW COLORS IN
DOG-SKIN GLOVES,
SCARFS, and TIES,
WITH AN IMMENSE VARIETY OF
SHIRTS, COLLARS,
AND UNDERCLOTHING,
AT EXTREMELY LOW PRICES.
UNION ADAMS,
No. 637 Broadway.

A HOLIDAY GIFT.—Deafness & Catarrh cured. The A Patent Organic Vibrator fits into the ear, not perceptible, removes hanging noises to a head, enabling hearing as clear as distinctly at public assemblies. Treatise on Deafness & Catarrh, with means of relief & cure, sent free. Dr. T. H. Stillwell, 198 Bleecker St., N. Y.

Dr DE JONGH'S
LIGHT-BROWN COD LIVER OIL
Is convincingly proved by the highest medical testimony, and by the practical test of successful experience for twenty years in all parts of the world, to be beyond all question, the purest, the most efficacious, the most palatable, and, from its rapid curative effects, the most economical of all kinds.

CONSUMPTION & DISEASES OF THE CHEST.
DR. DE JONGH'S OIL is administered with extraordinary success in cases of consumption and diseases of the chest. No remedy so rapidly restores the exhausted strength, improves the nutritive functions, stops emaciation, checks the perspiration, quiets the cough and expectoration, or produces a sounder and more healthful influence on the local malady.

DEBILITY OF ADULTS AND CHILDREN.
DR. DE JONGH'S OIL possesses unequalled and peculiar nutritive and restorative properties; hence its marvelous efficacy in the debility of adults and children. It revives the natural appetite; improves, maintains, and regulates the functions of digestion and assimilation; and entirely restores health and strength to the most feeble and deteriorated constitutions.

TRADE MARK. DR. DE JONGH'S GENUINE OIL is shipped to the UNITED STATES in Imperial Half-Pint Bottles ONLY, sealed with a Label—Trade-Mark Capsule, color blue opposite, white fog, stamped with a blue dish on a red shield, and the label, under the signature of the sole bottler, bears THREE SIGNATURES, viz.: those of Dr. DE JONGH; ANSAR, HARFORD & CO.; and of EDWARD GREEY & CO.

SOLE CONSIGNEES,
ANSAR, HARFORD & CO., 77, Strand, London.
SOLE ACCREDITED AGENTS IN AMERICA,
EDW'D GREEY & CO., 38, Vesey St., New York.
Sold by all Druggists, at $1.50 per Bottle.
☞ A Descriptive Pamphlet post free on application.

THE LARGEST, CHEAPEST, & BEST JOURNAL OF ITS CLASS IN THE WORLD!
MOORE'S
RURAL NEW-YORKER,
THE GREAT NATIONAL
RURAL, LITERARY, AND FAMILY WEEKLY.
VOL. XX., FOR 1869,
Vastly Enlarged and Improved!
Moore's Rural New-Yorker, long known as the Best and Largest-Circulating Journal of its Class on this Continent, commenced its Twentieth Year and Volume, January 2, vastly Enlarged and Improved, and under the most favorable auspices—with a bonafide Edition of One Hundred and Fifty Thousand Copies! Nearly DOUBLE ITS FORMER SIZE, and correspondingly Improved in Contents, Style, and Appearance.

Contents of the RURAL of Jan. 2.
RURAL ARCHITECTURE.—Description of a Circular Mansion, with Engraved Elevation and Plan; Our Designs and Desires.....5
FIELD CULTURE.—How to Manure best with Clover: The Farm Work for January: Cotton Culture in the South. Wheat—Its Present and Future Production; Premium Potato Crop.....6
FARM ECONOMY.—Cattle Racks and Feed-Boxes (Illustrated); Grain Bowers; Subsoil Plow; Cheap Cement Wells Described.....6
SHEEP HUSBANDRY.—New York Wool Growers' Association; Change in the Wool Market; Count's Advice; Sheep Shearing; Scours; Smooth Fleeces; The Winter; Sheep Literature.....7
DAIRY HUSBANDRY.—Dairy Products; A Review of the Dairy Interest, and Present and Future Prospects; Making Butter in Winter; How Butter is Flavored; The Country Cheese Market; Dairymaid's Association.....7
POMOLOGICAL.—A Chapter on Crab Apples; Fruit for Extreme Northern Latitudes (Illustrated); The Catawba Grape; Table Grapes—Their Culture; Overdone? What I did during the Week in my Orchard and Garden; Illinois Grape Growers' and Wine Makers' Society.....8
Review of the N. Y. City Grape Market for 1868; Pomological Gossip, including Hybridizing Fruits, Green-houses, A New Grape, Fruits on Trees, Origin of Pears, Pears Recommended on Thin, Occidental Society, Protecting Strawberries, The Almond Tree, Nutmeg Melon, Trouble about Ripening Fruit, Wild Goose Plum.....9
FLORICULTURE.—The Pansy (Illustrated).....9
ARBORICULTURE.—Trees in the City—A Remedy Suggested for Caterpillars; The Sycamore Recommended for Shade, and the Ailanthus Denounced; About Christmas.....9
HORTICULTURAL NOTES.—Missouri Horticultural Society; Hotbeds; Bean Pilaster; The Experimental Garden at Washington; Adams County (Ill.) Horticultural Society.....9
THE POULTRY YARD.—This Department; Model Poultry House (Illustrated); Common as Improved Poultry; Poultry Show Premiums; The First Exhibition of the Columbarian Society; Secret for Poultry; Pennsylvania Poultry Society.....10
THE APIARIAN.—Bee Culture—Improved Hives; Bought Bees Made (Illustrated); Singular Migration of Bees.....10
ENTOMOLOGICAL.—The Seed-Corn Maggot (Illustrated).....10
EDITORIALS, &c.—Vol. XX.—Prefatory; Good Morrow; The Farmer's Calling Sublime; Rural New-Yorker Sweet Corn, including the following topics; Sowing, Keeping, Cook'ng, Clean in the Bibble, Evergreen and European Larch Seed, Chinese Yam, A Few Names, Use and Use of Plow, Mulching Trees, Ox-Yokes, Planting Chestnuts, of Fish Guano, Peach Pits Wanted, Axes, Vine.....11
RURAL NOTES AND QUERIES.—A Special Notice to Contributors; Information about Lands Wanted; Advertising Rates; Rural New-Yorker Seed Merchant Wanted; Convention of Presidents of Agricultural Societies; Swine Breeders' Convention; Book-Keeping; Missouri State Board of Agriculture; Ohio Ag'l Convention; Hatching Eggs by Steam.....12
HYGIENIC INFORMATION.—Physiology and Hygiene; Seasonable Suggestions—To Prevent and Relieve Coughs, Colds, &c.....11
SCIENTIFIC AND USEFUL.—Popular Scientific Lectures—The Telephone and its Revelations; Useful and Scientific Notes.....11
DOMESTIC ECONOMY.—Preliminary Table Talk.11
THE REVIEWER.—New Publications Reviewed.....12
HISTORICAL.—The Mormons (Illustrated).....13
STORIES FOR HERALDRY.—The Vivecute; or the Mystery at the Blue Springs.....13
ART AND ARTISTS.—The Latest Art Gossip.....14
LADIES' PORT-FOLIO.—Madame de Staël; Gossip Fashions and Modes.....14
MODES AND MANNERS.—The Latest Styles; Sewing Machines.....15
SABBATH READING.—Religion at Home and Abroad; A Denuesee Sunday-School.....15
NEWS DERARTMENT.—Domestic and Foreign News.....16
THE MARKETS.—Reports of latest Live Stock, Grain, Provisions, Fruit, Wool, and other Markets.17
PERSONAL ITEMS.—Fifty-four Paragraphs.....18
THE NEWS CONDENSED.—Sixty-one News Items.....19
FOR YOUNG PEOPLE.—Reading for Farmers' Sons; Susie's New Doll; The Rural Four-Year Olds.....20
THE PUZZLER.—Miscellaneous Enigmas; Answers to Puzzles; Illustrated Rebus; Charade. 20
POETRY.—Woman's Aspiration, page 15; The Sunset Land, page 15; The Old Year and Testament, page 13; Disposing of People, page 20
ILLUSTRATIONS.—Circular Mansion, Front Elevation and Principal Floor, page 5; Cattle Racks and Feed-Boxes of Little Cost, and Rack and Manger, page 6; Crab Apples (9 figures), page 8; Tuscan Red, Silas and Silvery Grey Varieties of Native Poultry House (3 figures), Queenly, page 9; Model Dauphin, page 10; Pansy (Illustrated), page 9; Bee Culture (5 figures), page 10; Entomology, &c. (8 figures), page 11; Mormon Hill, or Hill Cumorah, page 13; One Answer's Four-Year-Old Prize Rebus, page 20.

The aim is to make the Rural

THE BEST WEEKLY IN AMERICA!
And with Offices in New York City and Rochester—the Heart of a famed Rural and Commercial Metropolis, and Flower City of Western New York—we can promise unsurpassed facilities for accomplishing its object. Remember it is not a monthly or semi-monthly of only 24 or 32 pages a year, but a Large and Beautiful Weekly of 52 Numbers! In nearly doubling its size, its Price is NOT increased.

TERMS OF VOL. XX., FOR 1869:
Single Copy, $3 a Year; Five Copies, $14; Seven for $19; Ten for $25, &c., with very liberal Premiums to Club Agents. For sale by all Newsdealers. Price Ten Cents. Now is the Time to Subscribe and form Clubs! Liberal inducements to Local Club Agents. Specimens, Show-Bills, &c., sent free. Money Orders, Drafts, and Registered Letters may be mailed at the risk of the Publishers.
Address
D. D. T. MOORE,
41 Park Row, New York, or Rochester, N.Y.

HARPER'S WEEKLY

A JOURNAL OF CIVILIZATION

VOL. XIII.—No. 620.] NEW YORK, SATURDAY, JANUARY 16, 1869. [SINGLE COPIES TEN CENTS. $4.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE.

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the Year 1869, by Harper & Brothers, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court of the United States, for the Southern District of New

WINTER SPORTS—ICE-BOATS ON THE HUDSON.—[PHOTOGRAPHED BY SLEE BROTHERS.]

ICE-BOATS ON THE HUDSON.

THE ice-yacht is a boat on skates, and is impelled by the wind in the same manner as an ordinary yacht. There has been for some time at Poughkeepsie, in this State, an Ice Yacht Club, modeled after the New York Yacht Club. Thus the frozen waters of the Hudson do not by any means impede the winter navigation of the river; indeed, with a strong wind and upon a smooth surface of ice, one of these ice-boats will attain a speed of one mile per minute, thus outrunning the locomotive, and literally flying with the speed of the wind.

For several winters a race has been contemplated between these singular yachts; but the condition of the ice has never been favorable at the time agreed upon. Our illustration on this page shows the fleet at Poughkeepsie. This fleet consists of eight boats: the Flying Cloud, owned by IRVING GRINNELL; the Icicle, by JOHN ROOSEVELT; the Snow Squall, by THEODORE V. JOHNSTON; the Una, by AARON ISNIS; the Flying Dutchman, by THEODORE VAN KLEEK; the Haze, by JOHN JAY ISNIS; the Restless, by Commodore O. H. BOOTH; and the Snow Flake, by THOMAS PARISH.

THE FIRE AT LYNN.

WE give on this page an illustration of the destructive conflagration at Lynn, Massachusetts, on the morning of the 20th of December. The Lyceum Hall, in which the fire originated, was totally destroyed; and the high wind spread the flames rapidly across the street to Frazier's Block, which contained four large shoe-manufac-

DESTRUCTIVE CONFLAGRATION AT LYNN, MASSACHUSETTS, DECEMBER 20, 1868.—[SKETCHED BY A. H. BERRY.]

HARPER'S WEEKLY.
SATURDAY, JANUARY 16, 1869.

CONGRESS AND GEORGIA.

CONGRESS will now address itself to work. There is no election at hand to retard or paralyze it. The country has expressed its will plainly both as to the general policy of reconstruction and of the financial policy. The questions that remain are of expediency and detail.

One of the first of this kind is what is known as the Georgia question, arising from the doubt thrown upon the conformity of the action of that State to the intention of the Reconstruction Act. Of course it is not a matter of hair-splitting or of special pleading. Congress intended to secure equal political rights among the citizens; and if by any quibble or strained construction or interpretation, or by any serious oversight in the law, that purpose has been defeated, it is the duty of Congress to remedy the difficulty. Congress certainly did not mean that any disabling laws of the old slavery system should deprive any new citizen either of his right to vote or to be voted for. There is no jungle of any kind; and if it should appear that the Legislature was organized in contravention of the spirit of the reconstruction law, or, on the other hand, that its exclusion of the colored members was literally valid under the constitution adopted, there ought to be no delay in such action as will prevent any evasion of the mischief.

Georgia has not yet been recognized as a State reorganized according to the will of Congress, and that will is supreme upon the subject. The people have settled that point. The argument for doing nothing is not, therefore, one of constitutional principle, it is solely one of expediency. Senator TRUMBULL, who is as understood to favor the inaction of Congress, can show that it will be better for the welfare of all the people to do so than that Congress should acquiesce in the expulsion of the colored members, and in the participation in the organization of incompetent persons—in other words, if he can show that it is expedient that in the case of Georgia the requirements of the Reconstruction Act should be disregarded; or if he can prove that they have been literally observed, and that the consequences are likely to be generally advantageous, he will be entitled to the sympathy of the Senate and of the country. But he should avoid vows of generalization; for the case is exceptional, and he should remember—as no undoubtedly will—that the substance is much more important than the form. Senator TRUMBULL is an acute, an able, an experienced, and an independent legislator, and he does not speak at random. We therefore anticipate his remarks with peculiar interest.

There is one consideration which we feel sure will not escape him. He knows, of course, how hostile the old sentiment of the Southern States is to the new political element. He knows how singularly unfortunate the freedmen are from their previous condition, and in the extreme difficulty which they experience of obtaining land. He has seen in the conduct of the late election under what kind of practical terrorism they live; and he knows, with all intelligent men, that terrorism is at this time merely latent, and would immediately actively manifest itself upon the slightest opportunity. He must perceive, of course, that the paramount necessity of the situation is the abiding conviction of the hostile element in the lately disturbed States of irresistible determination on the part of country that this persecution of the freedmen must cease. Now it can not be abolished by law. It will indeed be very slowly removed even under the most favorable circumstances. But every thing, upon the part of Congress or of Northern sentiment, which seems to tolerate this persecution, is incalculable harm to the welfare of every one of those States. It encourages the suspicion that there is no more real sympathy for the freedmen in the loyal States than in the others, and that at last the Northern will be tired out, and will abandon the negro to his "natural condition."

How foolish such a view is it is unnecessary to point out, but it is equally unnecessary to deny that it exists. How injurious, also, such a view is to the general tranquillity is obvious. It becomes then a very important element in any question of expediency that the moral weight of Congressional action tend to emphasize still more strongly the fact that the national purpose in this matter is as fixed as ever. The Senate may therefore very properly ask itself whether if a literal obedience to the Reconstruction Act defeats in a vital point the very intention of the law, it will recognize a State which uses the letter to defeat the spirit; while if the literal obedience be not proved, it may with equal cogency inquire whether the unexpediency of countenancing the exclusion of the colored members of the Georgia Legislature is not necessarily greater than that of excluding the States itself until the purpose of its restoration is secured.

The difficulty with Democratic reasoning in this country since the year 1860 has been its total disregard of the controlling fact of the situation, which was civil war. It has constantly implied that the nation must submit to destruction, if only the constitution in its letter could be carried against it. Prove that the nation had no constitutional right to take every usual means of war to preserve its existence, and it was reasoned at once that the war was over and the rebels did before the war began. They had satisfied themselves that it was unconstitutional for the Union to make war by force. Such a conclusion was the simple ecstasy of folly. This Democratic reasoning, peremptorily baffled by the war itself, has been sedulously continued since active hostilities ended. It has conducted the reconstruction debate as it did the war debate. This, too, was part of the same exquisite folly. The war is over, and the civil victorious party has settled the foundations of peace. This is the principle which Congress affirmed and the President denied, and which the people have again and again and now finally settled. We hope that no strain of the kind of reasoning of which we speak will be heard in the debate upon the Georgia question. It is a question not of the right of the State; it is solely an inquiry in what way, upon a fair consideration of all the circumstances, the equal political rights of all the people of Georgia may be most fully secured.

REPEAL OF THE TENURE-OF-OFFICE ACT.

THERE is a forcible cession of opinion in many leading Republican papers in favor of the repeal of the Tenure-of-Office Act. But we still fail to see any sufficient reason for it. The arguments for repeal seem to be substantially two; one, that the law was made to baffle the evident bad intention of the President; and the other, that it has done no good, and is likely to do none, positively or negatively. We were never filled upon the whole with a worse class of gentlemen than the present occupants. There is, indeed, another consideration of much which is plausible but, under the actual circumstances, not cogent—that the President, as the chief executive officer of the Government, ought to appoint and remove his own subordinates, if he does not, it is unfair to hold him responsible for the proper execution of the laws.

Let us briefly examine this argument. It is plain that the Constitution does not take this view of executive responsibility: for it does not allow the President alone to appoint officers, except by consent of Congress, while the Senate is associated with him in the appointment of all others; and if the Senate will not confirm his officers he nominates he is as much baffled as when if Congress will not pass a law at his suggestion. The argument, that his executive responsibility fairly requires that the President have the uncontrolled power of removal, is equally good for the unrestricted power of appointment.

But as a matter of fact, the President, under the old system, knew nothing whatever of the character and capacity of the majority of the officers he nominates than the country at large. Mr. ANDREW JOHNSON, indeed, who has made himself more familiar with the details of office-holding than any other man, and whose Civil Service bill is already approved by the most thoughtful and intelligent, says, in a late speech in Boston before the American Social Science Association: "All that is known of the men who apply for office in the various Departments who appoint them to office is the recommendations they bring. These are often false, and the result is that many are incompetent to perform the duties of the office to which they go. Now, by the theory of the argument we are considering, the President is responsible for all these officers. They are virtually appointed by the heads of Departments upon the recommendation of certain politicians, and the Senate, if there be a feud between the branches of the Government, merely registers the nomination. As a local politician, or a ring of such politicians, urge a man upon the Secretary, not upon grounds of character and fitness, but purely of party service, and often of a kind that should send the man to Coventry if not to Sing Sing; the Secretary names him to the President, the President to the Senate, and the Senate to the people. The President feel any responsibility for such a subordinate? Does any body believe that he does, or that he can in any account for the faults of the officer by any body who understands the nature of the case? If, indeed, charges are made against the officer, the President under the old system might peremptorily remove him. But under the tenure bill he may suspend him, and may then proceed to prove his fault or his incapacity to the Senate—a process which prevents removal merely at the freak, or worse, of the chief Executive.

Again, if it be true that, under the tenure bill, the offices are filled with no inharmonious clashes as is alleged, the original difficulty is certainly with the President who nominated them. If he is dissatisfied he can suspend them and expose them, and the Senate will remove them. The President, under both the old and new systems, has the initiative. And if it be true that the office-holders, as a class, are worse than ever before, it is not because the Senate keeps them in, but because the President does not ask to have them turned out. The repeal of the tenure bill would not turn them out unless the President chose to remove them; and to suppose that the bill would hamper General GRANT in his desire to remove incapable and dishonest officers is to assume that the Senate wishes to retain them. But if it does it is surely unfit to have any part in the appointments which the Constitution—a part which is given to it by the Constitution. If the Senate wishes to have bad men in office it will reject the nomination of good men. If it wishes good men in office it will not oppose the President's proposition to remove bad ones.

This last consideration is the answer to the remark that the President may be trusted, and need not be bound as the present President is. Undoubtedly he may be trusted, but must the Senate be distrusted? If the President nominates good men he seems to him and to the Senate, upon the representations made, worthy of appointment and he is confirmed; it is unreasonable therefore to suppose that when the President learns that he was mistaken and suspends the officer the Senate will agree with him and remove him. If the Senate ought to be, as it constitutionally is, a check of the appointing power, it has not yet been shown why it should not be a part of the removing power. If it be replied that the Constitution did not make it so, it is enough to say that the Constitution does not forbid it, and that experience shows the wisdom of such a provision.

The Civil Service bill has passed because the conduct of President JOHNSON had revealed how great a peril lurked in a custom which was becoming traditional. Is it wise to remove a defense against a plain peril in the Executive office because the next incumbent of that office is universally trusted? General GRANT may possibly be trusted, and he is, as he lives, and as long as he lives nobody has any reason to suppose that he would be less worthy of confidence than now. But the regulation of the executive power is not the affair of men, however fully loved and trusted; it is a question of the national welfare.

THE CIVIL SERVICE.

CONGRESS could not begin its work more auspiciously than by passing the Civil Service bill of Mr. JOHNSON. It is a measure of the most obvious public advantage, and receives the heartiest and most general public approval. Indeed, there has been no argument against it, and yet every body is aware of a strong and hidden opposition. When a measure so necessary, so economical, and in every way so advantageous, is framed, and not immediately passed, there is some secret reason for the delay. This reason is exposed by Mr. JENCKES himself in the following speech. In answer to the question, Who should be admitted to the offices which the bill covers? he said: "Every citizen of the United States of the requisite age, with the proper known health and character to stand investigation, and with sufficient learning to perform the duties of the office which he seeks, shall be a candidate for admission. A fixed mode of this kind is at the root of every thing which could be called patronage. The proposed measure would tend to emancipate every servant of the republic from the servitude of office; every man who received a commission from the United States would know that he received it from the people, and he should hold it so long as he served the people well and efficiently."

This would be the end of the present great and glorious trade by which the man who gets up a campaign club, procures speakers, dines them, drives them to the meeting, pays for the posters, hunts up the voters and brings them to the polls, gets the newly-elected officeholder after election, or upon the Committee of his district, or upon the prominent member of the party next in order. This is commended as a faithful and zealous, and recommended to an office as a reward of merit. The gentlemen who "engage actively in the canvass" in this way, and the candidates who feel the need of henchmen, and are conscious of an obligation to be discharged; and the Committee who feel that encouragement comes from dispensing favors; and the prominent members of the party in the neighborhood who like to be persons of consequence, and who wish to be able to count upon faithful coadjutors at a pinch, are a very considerable part of the voting population, and are all opposed to the Civil Service bill.

Patronage is the key of the present miserably corrupt and inefficient system of the civil service. Patronage is the explanation of the feeling with which office-holders and office-seekers, as a class, are regarded. Patronage is the explanation of very much of the awful waste that prevails in the civil service. Patronage is the ladder by which the most unfit persons climb into Congress. Patronage is the greedy monster preying upon the fair form of public virtue, against which every patriotic hand longs to strike a decisive blow. Patronage is barter in politics. Indeed, it shows itself every where, and every where it is a corrupter and a pest. Mr. JENCKES declares that his bill would cover about forty-three thousand places, among which would be twenty-four thousand now within the gift of the Departments. But there were twenty-seven thousand postmasters and three or four thousand officers of the grade nominated by the President which do not come within the bill. He says that the number of names upon what is known as the Blue Book, in Washington, has increased from seven or eight hundred in the time of JEFFERSON to sixty thousand at present.

There will remain, even with Mr. JENCKES's bill, a great many offices to be filled in the old way, or in the old way made better by a wise Tenure-of-Office bill. But with the two bills together the improvement in the economy and character of the civil service will be incalculable —and so agreeable that we shall all try to see how all offices in the administration, except some of the highest, may be filled by this excellent system.

THE MISSOURI SENATOR.

THE telegraph states that Senator DRAKE, of Missouri, and some other gentlemen have returned to that State to defeat CARL SCHURZ as a candidate for the Senate of the United States. The reason which is understood to determine their action is one of general interest, upon which it is worth while to say a word. It was urged, during the canvass in General BUTLER'S district, that his election was a local matter, with which it was extremely impertinent for "outsiders" to interfere. We should like to know what citizen of the United States is an "outsider" in regard to the Congress that is to make laws to govern him. There is no citizen of the Essex District more interested in the course of its representative upon national questions than any citizen of California or New York. Moreover, as the Republican party is a national party, every member of it has an equal interest in its general policy, and an equal right to express his opinions of the expediency of its nominations; while citizens of the United States and honest men will not hesitate to hold their public interest to criticise public men and their conduct every where and always. If knavery is any where proposed, if improper candidates are any where nominated, if political corruption is any where favored, it will not be suffered to plead that it is local, so long as there is an in dependent press in the country.

We say this much, not because we insinuate or suspect any foul play in the opposition to Mr. SCHURZ, but to dispose of a very foolish fear that our political interests in candidates expire at our State lines. When the State of New York sends Representatives and Senators to Congress it sends them as much for Missouri as for itself. They are not to legislate for New York, but for the country; and if in their characters or views, or the grounds upon which they are supported or resisted, there be points of general public concern, we trust that they will be presented, in Missouri as in New York, in the utmost force.

The reason of the opposition to Mr. SCHURZ is understood to be the resolutions which he introduced as supplementary to the Chicago platform, and which were unanimously adopted. These resolutions commended the conduct of men like General LONGSTREET and others, who, having served in the rebellion, were frankly co-operate in reconstruction upon the basis of justice and equal rights, and favored the removal of all political disabilities as fast as may be consistent with the safety of the loyal people. Mr. SCHURZ certainly never appeared to greater advantage than in the chair of the temporary Presidency of the last National Republican Convention. His address was which we have mentioned admirably completed the Platform, and did as much as any part of the work of the Convention to commend the party to the renewed confidence of the country. They expressed then, and they express even more forcibly now, the prevailing sentiment of the great of its elected President. That sentiment is equally removed from vindictiveness and sentimentality. It recognizes the necessity which the second of the resolutions of Mr. SCHURZ expresses, and says, the principles of the Declaration of Independence the true foundations of the Government, with which exceptions only in the application as are absolutely necessary.

It is certainly only by a resolute ingenuity of misconception that such sentiments as those contained in the resolutions should be supposed to favor "traitors," or to aim at giving political supremacy to the late rebels. Does the Republican party favor "traitors"? Exactly as much as Mr. SCHURZ, for it enthusiastically approved his views. Did we all conduct the late campaign upon the ground of promoting "rebels" to power? Exactly as much as Mr. SCHURZ, and he no more than the rest of us. We all cordially supported the platform of which his resolutions were an essential part and a chief ornament. We are all in the same category. If he is guilty, so is General GRANT, so are all the rest of us. If we are innocent of laboring to promote "rebels," so is Mr. SCHURZ. If he is unwonted in the Senate because of his regard for the allies of Messrs. SEYMOUR and BLAIR—two gentlemen formerly known in our politics—then Senator FESSENDEN must be seen home again, and JOHN G. WHITTIER must be rejected as hopelessly "conservative."

Such an objection in itself is futile. It is important only as it may affect those who do not reflect closely upon the situation and upon the words in which the Chicago resolutions were expressed. If, indeed, there are those who would perpetually disfranchise any considerable number of citizens, without regard to the condition of the country and with no reference to the public safety, they are merely blind or addictive partisans who are not to be counted in the Republican party, and whom its Convention has excluded by the terms of its platform. They only can be considered Republicans in the party sense who substantially accept the party declaration of principle and policy. That demands the removal of political disability as fast as is consistent with the safety of the loyal people. Every Republican Senator is honorably pledged to that policy, while every one must, of course, determine for himself when the time has arrived, and what is the best method for removing disabilities. But unless Senator FERRY and Mr. CAMERON are to be suspected as "others," certainly Mr. SCHURZ, whose opinions the party has expressly ratified, may pass untainted. The Republican serves his party best who aims to remove all political disabilities of every kind just as fast as the welfare of the loyal people permits and no faster. That does not seem to us a reason for excluding a man otherwise qualified from the Senate, but for sending him to it.

RESUMPTION OF SPECIE PAYMENTS.

A PAMPHLET with this title has been issued from the press of LITTLE, BROWN & Co., of Boston, containing fifty-eight pages of printed matter, the production of ROBERT TREAT PAINE, Jun., an historical name. As newly-appointed Bank Master, we have plan of resumption to present we hope that Mr. PAINE'S pamphlet, which will doubtless be examined, may be imitated in at least one respect, to save the eyes of those who are diligently searching for light. It is printed on good paper, in clear, large type. Mr. PAINE admits that a prompt enforced construction of the currency will cause distress and panic, a view which he supports with unanswerable arguments; but yet he proposes as early a day for absolute resumption over the whole Union without mitigation as the 1st of July, 1870, and that, too, whether the crops of 1869 shall be a failure or otherwise. As we read the production we could not help regarding it merely as the most complete answer to its own position. Mr. PAINE fixes the whole cost of resumption at $22,135,000. We are aware that not any one who has exhibited such familiarity with many of the laws of money and industry which the pamphlet presents should have made so gross an error. The loss to the debtor interest, which is the one to be mainly affected by sudden resumption, is the difference between the value of their debts measured in the meagre amount of the money we should have to procure, and by the redundant paper issues which now prevail. Instead of a cost of only about twenty-two millions it would be hundreds of millions, and it is this which makes immediate resumption an impossibility.

We do not propose to propound a theory, but to state the facts of the situation. There is a mysterious connection between the price of every object of human desire which is the subject of sale and the quantity of money in circulation. Political economists have attempted to prove the relation which the one bears to the other, and many rules have been, to their satisfaction, established. One law which they assert is that, in that in the proportion in which you increase or diminish the quantity of money in circulation, you increase or diminish, other things being equal, the price of property and its products. There is still another law in which they are agreed. That the proportion which the money of a country bears to the value of the whole mass of its property is very small. It amounts, according to the estimate of some, to about one-fifteenth or fifth of the annual yield.

If it be allowed that prices are raised or lowered, other things being equal in the proportion in which money is increased or diminished, what will be the effect of a sudden return to specie payments? A gold dollar is now worth, measured by legal tenders, 135¾ or thereabout; and assuming that the difference is accurately adjusted it would be a fair inference that the gold price of commodities and the legal-tender price show a like difference. By returning to specie payments the difference would disappear and the property owned in the United States would afterward be measured by the improved standard. There are some peculiar reasons why prices would not fall to a common level with those of the residue of the world. By the tariff, for instance, we prevent direct competition on the part of foreigners with the industry of this country, and may maintain higher prices here than would be possible if they were not compelled to pay the duties we levy. In outside markets, however, we are unable to obtain more for our products than other nations obtain for theirs of a like character. We have also the inestimable advantage of new and rich lands; of better agricultural machinery; and a superiority in the quality of much that is produced by agricultural labor. All other things being equal the general fall of prices would produce one common level in the price of those objects of universal desire which commerce exchanges.

That a fall would take place in the price of property from lopping off the excess, in very nearly the proportion in which it was raised by the expansion, can not be doubted. In this sense we regard it as of the deepest interest to the United States to return to specie payments at the earliest practicable moment; it is essential to the success of the scheme to proceed with caution in the tremendous change which such a step would occasion.

Mr. PAINE estimates the amount of debt upon which it would operate as eight thousand millions of dollars. Mr. GREELEY at one thousand millions, over and above what would be usually be liquidated by offsetting one against another.

It must be borne in mind that the Legal-Tender Act operates upon all debts due by States, counties, towns, by banks, savings-banks, railroad and insurance companies, as well as upon the great mass of private debts due by mortgage, note, and simple by private individuals. Mr. M'CULLOCH supposes that at least seven-tenths of the British population are in the constant habit of receiving and paying incomes; and if this estimate shall be deemed extravagant in this country, it may be assumed that six-tenths at least are in that situation.

Mr. DAVID A. WELLS, in a recent pamphlet issued in 1864, entitled "Our Burdens and our Strength," stated his belief that the total available property of the United States in 1863 was twenty thousand millions. Although it had been officially assessed in that year at only sixteen thousand one hundred and fifty-nine millions, which sum included the slaves, who were valued at nineteen hundred and thirty-six millions. He rated the increase of property at two thousand millions per annum, which, added to $16,000,000,000, would make the total at twenty-six thousand millions of dollars, as the present valuation of our taxable property. Mr. DE BOW estimated our agricultural products in 1850 at sixteen hundred millions. Our manufacturing products for 1855, as stated by Mr. ERASTUS B. BIGELOW in his able work on the tariff, was two thousand and seventy-four, while one hundred and six thousand six hundred and sixteen dollars, making together $2,619,106,616. This was the joint product of the capital and industry of the country for that period, and probably furnished the principal basis for Mr. WELLS's estimates.

We have no means of arriving at the true amount of the debt; but, in view of the bold and speculative spirit of our people, it is not exravagant to suppose that the public and private debts of the United States, exclusive of those of the United States, exclusive of the national debt, amount to at least $5,000,000,000. It is upon this mass of property, producing annually a national copy-product, that the policy of a considerable reduction of the money of the country is to operate; and, whether the debtors of the United States consist of seven-tenths or seven-tenths, or less, it is certain that they constitute a large majority of the people, who are unwilling to allow such an experiment upon their fortunes.

The amount of paper currency—consisting of legal tender and National Bank notes and the fractional currency—is estimated at two hundred millions of dollars. The amount of gold in the United States, including that in the Treasury, in the banks, in the Pacific States, and in private hands, is supposed to not exceed one hundred and seventy millions, but its effect on the prices of commodities, excepting in the Pacific and in some parts of the Southern States, is neutralized by the policy of the Government in keeping it out of circulation, and assuming that the quantity of money is now one-fourth larger than it would be under a proper system, its reduction in that proportion would affect the nominal value of all property in a correspondent degree. This change would fall with immense severity upon the interest which is least able to bear it, the large debtor interest.

The present dilemma of the people of the United States is one from which they should be extricated at the earliest moment compatible with the general safety. The country had been debauched with paper-money before the war so extensively that there was no choice left but to continue it in circulation and place it on a legal basis. The quantity issued was in excess of our necessities, all the numerous business of an active people had become adjusted to the amount in circulation, and there can be no greater hardship than that of a too sudden resumption.

If gold contracts made hereafter shall be legalized by Congress, and if the banks shall be required to hoard the gold received for interest on their bonds, and be compelled otherwise to amass it, we shall by degrees, if favored with good crops, grow up to a position of real strength. Time will render us able to greatest fortitude to reach the end. It should be our earnest endeavor to avoid precipitate action and its consequences—a certain increase of paper-money. In stating the price of gold at 135¾ we are not to be understood as maintaining its accuracy. On the contrary, it is the cheapest article for purposes of exportation.

The fact that it is made available here only for duties and for interest on the Government bonds—the principal must also be paid in them hereafter—has driven the excess over and above what is required for these purposes to other countries. Americans abroad complain of the high cost of living in Italy and France, which is due to this cause, as the area has become diminished within which the previous metals circulate. The large production of gold in California and Australia furnishes more than foreign nations require.

In the time of one of the CHARLES'S Bishop ANDREWS, who was paid happily on an annuity of £16 per annum, mentioned that when young he could deal in charities on this sum. "Why so I is, my liege," he asked, "that I can do this no longer." The discovery of America had quadrupled the gold in Europe, which was then isolated, and had quadruped prices. This was corrected by the subsequent extension of commerce, and prices will fall in Europe when the United States, by becoming specie paying, shall call for a wider diffusion of the precious metals.

MR. GLADSTONE'S CABINET.

UPON another page we give a gallery of portraits of the new British Cabinet, with those of Mr. FORSTER and Mr. STANSFELD, who, although not in the Cabinet, occupy prominent places in the Government. Of the Cabinet itself, the most important names are those of Mr. GLADSTONE, Mr. BRIGHT, and Mr. LOWE, respectively First Lord of the Treasury, President of the Board of Trade, and Chancellor of the Exchequer. Of their associates, the names best known in this country are those of LORD CLARENDON, Foreign Secretary; the DUKE OF ARGYLE, Secretary for India; and Mr. GOSCHEN, of the POOR-LAW BOARD. The Postmaster-General, LORD HARTINGTON, is also somewhat notorious in this country for his insolent conduct when here in wearing a rebel badge at a ball in the presence of Union officers and ladies. Of those in the Government, but not in the Cabinet, besides Mr. FORSTER and Mr. STANSFELD, the names of LORD CARLINGFORD, Mr. LAYARD, Sir JOHN COLEBROOK, and the Duke of DUFF, are familiar to many; while EARL SPENCER, the new Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland, is not much known.

Of the Radical members of the Cabinet every one, we believe, is a University man except JOHN BRIGHT. The Prime Minister, Mr. GLADSTONE, is just fifty-nine years old. He entered Parliament at twenty-three, and graduated at Oxford in 1847 to 1865 for the University of Oxford. He has been almost continuously in public life, beginning as one of Sir ROBERT PEEL'S Conservatives, and ending by asking JOHN BRIGHT to take office with him. He is distinguished as an author and scholar; and he and his colleagues, Mr. BRIGHT and Mr. CHICHESTER FORTESCUE, are the only Englishmen of the Cabinet. He is a man of spotless character, and of an intellect so judicial as sometimes to make him appear inconsistent and indifferent to party or property. The Rt.-Hon. Klaus still continue to drive out Northern Democrats.

George S. Twitchell, Jun., was convicted of the murder of his master-in-law on the 10th inst.

On New-Year's Day John T. Hoffman was inaugurated Governor of New York in the City Hall Park.

The report of the Fire Marshal of Chicago for the year just closed shows the total loss by fire to be $2,468,000. The police of the city during the year have made 19,000 arrests, and there was $37,800 worth of property stolen. There were 1,200 births, 3,000 deaths, 4684 marriages, and 6345 births.

Mr. Taylor, the Indian Commissioner, has received an address from delegations of the Cherokee, Choctaw, and Creek Indians asking an investigation into the facts of the Washita battle. They claim the investigation will prove that Black Kettle was friendly. General Sherman reports from St. Louis, January 8, as follows:

"I have just heard from General Sheridan. He has received from Superintendent Hyde with the Seventh Cavalry and the Nineteenth Kansas Volunteers on the Washita. He has had no fighting. He reports that he has possession of Satanta and Lone Wolf, who, he thinks (if the Kiowas surrender them), are already. Sheridan and Hazen are now together, and can settle the matter perfectly."

FOREIGN NEWS.

PRESIDENT LOPEZ, of Paraguay, is reported to be disposed to submit full satisfaction to the United States for the wrongs suffered by American citizens.

Ten thousand more troops are about to be dispatched to Cuba and Porto Rico. Santiago is still besieged by the insurgents, and the inhabitants are suffering from the scarcity of provisions. The Government authorities have been organizing regiments of colored soldiers.

Another colliery explosion is reported to have taken place in England in the Haydock Colliery. Twenty-five dead bodies were taken out of the mine, and how many others remained was uncertain.

The Conference on the Eastern Question difficulty was to be held on the 9th.

The Liberal successes in Spain lost 400 killed.

The Chinese embassy has arrived in Paris.

DOMESTIC INTELLIGENCE.

A BILL is about to be presented before the Ohio Legislature, providing for the extension of the limits of Cincinnati by adding thirty square miles to the present area.

Governor Brownlow, of Tennessee, is in favor of a new State to be made by the separation of East from Middle and West Tennessee.

A grand ball was given at Delmonico's in this city on the evening of the 9th inst., in honor of Professor S. P. B. Morse, the father of modern telegraphy. Chief-Justice Chase, the British Minister, Edward Everett, Professor Goldwin Smith, Bayard Taylor, David Dudley Field, William C. Bryant, and other prominent gentlemen were present and participated in the festivities.

The Registrar of Vital Statistics reports 867 deaths, 729 births, and 113 marriages in the city, and 198 deaths in Brooklyn, during the week ending January 9th.

Reports from Augusta, Arkansas, represent that affairs in certain portions of the State are very much unsettled, and that there is a great loss of life and loss of property. The Ku-Klux Klans still continue to drive out Northern Democrats.

George S. Twitchell, Jun., was convicted of the murder of his master-in-law on the 10th inst.

On New-Year's Day John T. Hoffman was inaugurated Governor of New York in the City Hall Park.

The report of the Fire Marshal of Chicago for the year just closed shows the total loss by fire to be $2,468,000. The police of the city during the year have made 19,000 arrests, and there was $37,800 worth of property stolen. There were 1,200 births, 3,000 deaths, 4684 marriages, and 6345 births.

Mr. Taylor, the Indian Commissioner, has received an address from delegations of the Cherokee, Choctaw, and Creek Indians asking an investigation into the facts of the Washita battle. They claim the investigation will prove that Black Kettle was friendly. General Sherman reports from St. Louis, January 8, as follows:

"I have just heard from General Sheridan. He has received from Superintendent Hyde with the Seventh Cavalry and the Nineteenth Kansas Volunteers on the Washita. He has had no fighting. He reports that he has possession of Satanta and Lone Wolf, who, he thinks (if the Kiowas surrender them), are already. Sheridan and Hazen are now together, and can settle the matter perfectly."

FOREIGN NEWS.

PRESIDENT LOPEZ, of Paraguay, is reported to be disposed to submit full satisfaction to the United States for the wrongs suffered by American citizens.

Ten thousand more troops are about to be dispatched to Cuba and Porto Rico. Santiago is still besieged by the insurgents, and the inhabitants are suffering from the scarcity of provisions. The Government authorities have been organizing regiments of colored soldiers.

Another colliery explosion is reported to have taken place in England in the Haydock Colliery. Twenty-five dead bodies were taken out of the mine, and how many others remained was uncertain.

The Conference on the Eastern Question difficulty was to be held on the 9th.

The Liberal successes in Spain lost 400 killed.

The Chinese embassy has arrived in Paris.

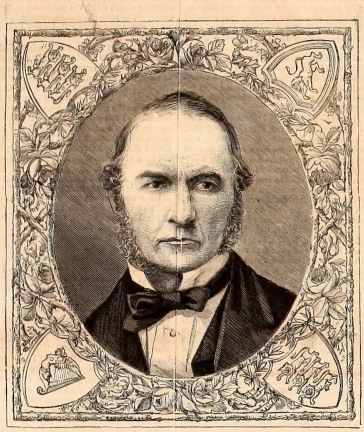
THE LORD CHANCELLOR.

EARL DE GREY AND RIPON.

THE EARL OF KIMBERLEY.

THE RIGHT HON. H. A. BRUCE.

THE EARL OF CLARENDON.



THE RIGHT HON. W. E. GLADSTONE.

EARL GRANVILLE.

THE RIGHT HON. EDWARD CARDWELL.

THE DUKE OF ARGYLE.

THE RIGHT HON. ROBERT LOWE.

THE RIGHT HON. H. C. E. CHILDERS.

THE RIGHT HON. JOHN BRIGHT.

THE MARQUIS OF HARTINGTON.

THE RIGHT HON. J. S. GOSCHEN.

THE RIGHT HON. CHICHESTER FORTESCUE.

W. E. FORSTER, ESQ.

JAMES STANSFELD, ESQ.

THE RIGHT HON. W. E. GLADSTONE AND HIS CABINET.—[SEE PAGE 35.]

THE LORELEI.

"FLOWS the Rhine as flowing wine,
Bright in its unrest,
Sweet with odors of the vine;
Heaven in its breast."

So the boatman Hugo sung,
Long, long ago,
By the Lurley-berg that hung
In the sunset glow.

At that fateful rock, upraised
From its sunny base,
Suddenly the boatman gazed
With a stricken face.

On its summit, wondrous fair,
Shining angel-wise,
Sat a maid, with golden hair
And besetching eyes.

From a shoulder's rosy sphere
All the robe that slid,
Ripple-bright and water-clear,
Rather show'd than hid.

As her hair her fingers through (Fingers pearly white)
Slowly pass'd, the diamond dew
Fell and broke in light.

But a gold harp from her feet
Lifted she ere long,
And its music, pulsing sweet,
Fed a wondrous song.

And the boatman, drifting fast,
Listen'd to his cost;
On the rocks before him cast!
In the whirlpool lost!

Then the Lorelei's luring form
Faded from the eye,
As a cloud fades, rosy warm,
In a purple sky.

MORE LIGHT, AND BRIGHTER.

A DISCOVERY has recently been made in France by MESSRS. TESSIE DU MOTHAY and MARECHAL, which, it is thought, may lead to results very beneficial to mankind by greatly facilitating the production of artificial light for purposes of illumination. The discovery in question is that of a process for procuring a cheap and abundant supply of oxygen gas.

The characteristic of oxygen in the economy of nature seems to be analogous to that which CALHOUN, at a certain period of our history, attributed to the old United States Bank in relation to the cotton market. It is the great avaricious holder. In other words, its tendency to enter into combination with other substances, and to hold to the combination when made, is very strong. It springs to its union with them when brought into such relations with them that its affinity can be exercised with great avidity, and clings to the union, when it is effected, with great persistency, and with great force. It is the violence of the action which it exerts in its combination with hydrogen by which the light and heat and the other phenomena attendant on combustion are evolved.

In the atmosphere, which is the great reservoir of free oxygen, the gas is very much diluted. In consequence of this the rapidity of its union with a combustible is impeded, and the effect diminished. In order greatly to increase the intensity of combustion, and the rapidity of the evolution of light and heat which results from it, we have only to obtain and present to the combustible an abundant supply of oxygen in a pure state.

But this has hitherto been a work of great difficulty. Of course, the very strength of affinity from which the light, heat, and mechanical force result when oxygen enters into a combination operates with equal power to prevent a dissolution of the union for the purpose of recovering the oxygen in a separate state.

The substance from which it has been found practically most feasible to separate oxygen, when required for processes in chemistry and in the arts, is an oxyd of manganese—the base of this substance, the metal manganesium—having the property of loosening its hold upon it more readily than most other substances. But even this decomposition has hitherto been possible only by a process so difficult and slow, and has involved such a consumption of material, as to make the procuring of any considerable supply of the gas a very tedious and expensive work. The discovery about to be described reveals a method of separating the element from its combination with manganese, or rather of drawing a supply of it from the atmosphere through the agency of manganese—with great facility, and without any consumption of material at all—so as to furnish a cheap and an abundant supply for any purpose required.

The process is in itself so ingenious, and so curious, and at the same time so simple, that it is an object of great interest in itself, independently of the value of the result. The discovery originated in the ascertaining of two facts—namely: First, that if a current of steam passes over a certain compound of manganese, called manganate of soda, it will abstract and carry away a considerable portion of the oxygen, which can afterward be separated and secured by the simple condensation of the steam; and, Secondly, that if a current of air be passed over the partially deoxydized compound, the compound will recover from the air the portion it had lost. When this is done a new current of steam may be employed to take off a second portion, to be followed by a new current of air, to restore it again. And so on indefinitely.

THE LORELEI.—[SEE POEM.]

It will be observed that by this process the real source of the oxygen obtained is the atmosphere—the manganese being merely the stepping-stone, as it were, by which it passes from its state of diffusion and freedom in the circumambient air to purity and confinement in the gasometer.

With this explanation of the nature of the process, the structure and use of the apparatus are easily to be understood. In the centre is seen a furnace, in which the cylindrical retorts for containing the manganate of soda are set in brickwork, with a fire-place below. These retorts we so connected by pipes that the steam or air admitted to them circulates freely through them all. The steam is prepared in the boiler at the left, marked L, whence it is conveyed to the retorts by the subterranean conduit, w, w.

The steam, after passing through the retorts, and taking up from the material within them its charge of oxygen, passes off by the pipe on the right side of the furnace, in the direction of the arrow, to the condenser, R. Here the steam is condensed, the water flowing down into the receiver below, while the gas is conveyed by the pipe seen on the right of the condenser, by the subterranean conduit, o, o, to the gasometer, G.

As soon as the steam has conveyed away all the oxygen which it can receive from the manganate in the retorts, the faucet at the point where the pipe conveying it leaves the boiler—seen at the left extremity of the boiler—is shut off, and the apparatus for pumping in air is brought into play. There is a rotary pump for pumping air at V, which is worked by a small cylinder, piston-rod, and fly-wheel, seen over the boiler. The air is forced by the pump into the reservoir E, whence it passes by the pipe a, a, a and its connections into the retorts, carrying with it a supply of oxygen, to restore what was abstracted by the steam. The process is continued in this way—a current of steam to abstract oxygen, and a current of air to restore what was lost, being passed through the retorts alternately as long as is desired.

The only expenditure in the process is that of fuel in the fire-box of the boiler on the left, to supply force for impelling the air and producing and impelling the steam. The cost of this being very little, the inventors claim that by this method a cheap and abundant supply of oxygen can be obtained, by means of which the intensity of the light produced by combustion for illuminating purposes, and of the heat in various mechanical process, can be vastly increased without any additional consumption of combustible material.

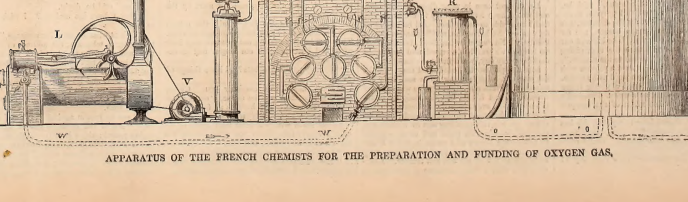
WINTER AT SEA.

OUR illustration on page 40 is engraved from one of those characteristic and effective drawings which MR. WINSLOW HOMER so well knows how to conceive and execute. As our readers will remember, it is from the same hand which produced "Christmas Belles" and "The New-Year," in the two last Numbers of this journal.

The subject is at this season a suggestive one. Winter off our northern coast is to the sailors a trying season, and tests the endurance and temper of the heartiest and jolliest tar. And what story can be sadder than that of a shipwreck in winter? We are now just beginning to get the full details of the recent loss of the Hibernia off the Irish coast. Think of Mr. BATES, the second officer of that ill-fated vessel, who with two comrades—after having witnessed the sufferings and death of all the others who embarked with them in a life-boat—survived the cold and storms of a wintry ocean through twelve long weary days and nights! It was only a few weeks since that a steam-packet laden with passengers very narrowly escaped shipwreck off our coast. It had sprung a leak, and had been pumping water for several days, and finally the vessel sank, but not before she had reached a spot off Sandy Hook, where the disaster was unaccompanied by loss of life. In the pleasant comforts of our homes, let us not forget "those who go down to the sea in ships."

THE BOURBONS.

ALL the living members of this family are descended from Louis XIII. of France, who had two sons—Louis XIV. and Philip Duke of Orleans (the latter is now represented by Louis Philippe, Count of Paris, who claims the crown of France). Louis XIV. married the eldest sister and heiress of Charles II. of Spain, and had an only son, who died before him, leaving three sons—the first was Louis Duke of Burgundy (who was the father of Louis XV., and is now represented by Count de Chambord, who claims the crown of France as Henry V.); the second, Philip V. of Spain (in right of his grandmother), married twice (his second wife being heiress of the Duchy of Parma), and left five sons—the three eldest (Louis, Ferdinand VI., and Charles III.) were successively Kings of Spain, and the fourth was (in right of his mother) Duke of Parma, and is now represented by Robert of Parma. Charles III. left five sons—viz., Charles IV. of Spain, Ferdinand I. of Naples, Gabriel, Anthony, and Francis. Ferdinand of Naples is now represented by Francis II. Charles IV. of Spain married Louisa of Parma, his cousin, and left three sons—viz., Ferdinand VII. (the father of Isabella II.), Don Carlos (who claimed the throne as heir male of his brother Ferdinand), and Francisco. Don Carlos left three sons—1st, Carlos Count of Montemolin, who claims; 2d, three or four years ago without issue; 2d, Don John (the father of the present claimant and two other sons); and, 3d, Don Ferdinand. The third son of Charles IV., Don Francisco, left a large family, and his eldest son is the husband of Isabella II. It will be thus seen that the eldest, or French branch, is represented by the Count de Chambord; the second, or Spanish, by the Count de Montemolin; the third, or Neapolitan, by Francis II.; the fourth, or Parmasan, by Robert Duke of Parma; and the fifth, or junior French, by the Count of Paris.



APPARATUS OF THE FRENCH CHEMISTS FOR THE PREPARATION AND FUNDING OF OXYGEN GAS, BLESSING IN DISGUISE.

MIDNIGHT eyes were stiffened with the last night's tears,
And my brave school-too bravely to weep,
Oppress with sorrow past and future fears,
Too weary to awake—too sad to sleep.

With restless hand I drew away the blind
To look where lay the morning dull and gray:
I heard no whisper of the cold night wind,
I saw no gleam to chase the gloom away.

Round His a mourning veil on every hill
Hung cheerless mist, thro' which the dark dawn crept;
The rain-drops on the trees lay cold and still,
Like tears for one who in his sleep hath wept.

Softly I turned and hid me down again
Till sorrow's leaden trance my sense did steal,
As those who lulled by very weariness of pain
Forget their grief a while and cease to feel.

So passed the hours away, and I awoke;
But while I slept the world had traveled on—
The damp mist rolled away, the morning broke,
And, pouring radiance forth, uprose the sun.

The purple hills were tinged with living light,
The grass was waving in the sunshine merrily,
The spiders from the dank hedge-tops of the night
In rainbow showers were glittering from the trees.

Then my heart melted too, and the deep gloom
Passed like the morning evening mist away;
The sun shone warm and bright into my room,
And I rose up from my dull trance to pray.

O God, most merciful! Is it ever so?
While thankless men bask but the present pain,
And lies steeped in the weariness of woe,
Thy step is drawing near to heal again.

THAT BOY OF NORCOTT'S.

CHAPTER XIV.

A GOOD-BY.

WHILE I strolled into the garden to select a table for our dinner, Eccles went in search of Mr. Delorme, and thought he had effected to my that the important duty of drawing the cork should be confided to the host, I could plainly see that my respected tutor accepted his share in that high responsibility.

I will only say of the feast in question that, though I was daily accustomed to the admirable dinners of my father's table, I had no conception of what exquisite devices in cookery could be produced by the skill of an accomplished restaurateur, left to his own fancy, and without limitation as to the bill.

One thing alone detracted from the perfect enjoyment of the banquet. It was the appearance of Mr. Delorme himself, white-cravatted and gloved, and evidently in full dress. It was an attention that he usually reserved for great personages, royalties, or high dignitaries of the court; and I was shocked that he should have selected me for the honor, not the less as it was only a few hours before he and I had been drinking Champagne with much clinking of glasses together, and interchanging the most affectionate vows of eternal friendship.

I could see my chief to salute him, but, as he deposited the tureen upon the table, he stepped back and bowed low, and retreated in this fashion, with the same humble reverence at every step, till he was lost in the distance.

"Sit down," said Eccles, with a peculiar look, as though to warn me that I was forgetting my dignity; and then, to divert my attention, he added, "That green seal is an attention Delorme offers you—very rare Bordeaux—a bottle of his own peculiar Johannisberg. Let us drink his health. Now, Digby, I call this something very high preferment."

It was a theme my tutor understood thoroughly, and there was not a dish nor a wine that he did not criticise.

"I was always bogging your father to take this cook, Digby," said he, with a half sigh. "Even with a first-rate artist you need change, otherwise your dinners become manneristic, as men have become of late years."

He then went on to show me that the domestic cook, always appealing to the small public of the family, was narrowed in his views and bounded in his resources. He compared them, I remember, to the writers in certain religious newspapers, who must always go on preaching higher and higher as the palates of their clients grow more jaded. How he worked out his theme afterwards I can not tell; for I was watching the windows of the house, and stealing glances down the alleys in the garden, longing for one look, one word, one greeting, of my lovely partner of the night before.

"I see, young gentleman," said he, evidently nettled at my inattention, "your thoughts are not with me."

"How long have we to stay, Sir?" said I, reverting to the respect I rendered him at my lessons.

"Yes have thirty-eight minutes," said he, examining his watch: "which I purpose to apportion in this wise—eight for the douceur, five for the cheese, three for the dessert, five for coffee and a glass of curaçoa. The bill and our parting compliments will take the rest, giving to three minutes' walk across to the station."

These sort of pendantries were a passion with him, and I did not interpose a word as he spoke.

"What, a pine-apple?" cried a young fellow from an adjoining table, as a waiter deposited a magnificent pine in the midst of the bouquet that adorned our table.

"Monsieur Delorme begs to say, Sir, this has just arrived from Lucknow."

"Don't you know what that is?" said a companion, in a low voice; but my hearing, ever acute, caught the words—"He's that boy of Norcott's."

I started as if I had received a blow. It was time to resent these insolences, and make an end of them forever.

"You heard what that man yonder has called me?" said I to Eccles.

"No; I was not minding him."

"The old impertinence—'That boy of Norcott's.'"

I arose, and took the cane I had laid against a chair. What I meant to shout to the fellow I felt I should launch some insolent provocation. As for what should follow, the event might decide that.

"I'd not mind him, Digby," said Eccles, carelessly, as he lit his cigarette, and stretched his legs on a wooden bench. I took no notice of his words, but walked on. Before, however, I had made three steps my eyes caught the flutter of a dress at the garden door. It was only one of the last folds of some floating muslin, but it was enough to rout all other thoughts from my head, and I flew across the walk with lightning speed. I was right, it was Pauline. In an instant I was beside her.

"Dearest, darling Pauline!" I cried, seizing her round the waist and kissing her cheek before she well knew, "how happy it makes me to see you even for a few seconds!"

"Ah, mildred, I did not expect to see you here," said she, half frightened.

"I am not mildred; I am your own Digby—Digby Norcott, who loves you, and will make you his wife to-day."

"Ma foi! children don't marry—at least demoiselles don't marry them," said she, with a saucy laugh.

"I am no more an 'enfant,'" said I, with a passionate stress on the word, "than I was last night, when you never left my arm except to sit at my side at supper."

"But you are going away," said she, panting, "else why this traveling dress, and that sac strapped at your side?"

"Only for a few weeks. A short tour up the Rhine, Pauline, to see the world, and complete my education, and then I will come back and marry you, and you shall be mistress of a beautiful house, and have every thing you can think of."

"Vrai?" asked she, with a little laugh.

"I swear it by this kiss."

"Pardie, monsieur! you are very adventurous," said she, repulsing me: "you will make us not regret that you are going so soon."

"Oh, Pauline! when you know that I adore you, that I only value wealth to share it with you, that all I have in the world is yours—"

"And that you haven't got full thirty seconds left for that admirable object," broke in Eccles. "We must run for it like fury, boy, or we shall be late."

"I not go."

"Then I'll be shot if I stay here and meet your father," cried he, turning away.

"Oh, Pauline, dearest, dearest of my heart!" I sobbed out, as I fell upon her neck; and the wild folly of the moment burst into its infernal discord as I clasped her to my heart.

"Come along, and confound you!" cried Eccles; and with a push he caught me and Pauline on the other, I was hurried along down the garden, across a road, and along a platform, where the station-master, with his hand uplifted, waved and swore in a very different mood from that in which he smiled at me across the supper-table the night before.

"We're waiting for that boy of Norcott's, I vow," said an old fellow with a gray mustache; and I mauled his nose in token recognition.

Unlike my first journey, where all seemed confusion, trouble, and annoyance, I now saw every pleasant face, and felt myself the cynosure of event. We were on the great tourist road of Europe, and it seemed as though every one was bound to some event of interest or pleasure. Even, too, was a pleasant contrast to the courier who took charge of me on my first journey. Nothing could be more genial than Eccles's manner. He treated me with a perfect equality, and by that greatest of all flatteries to one of my age, induced me to believe that I was actually considerable to himself.

I will not pretend that he was an instructive companion. He had neither knowledge of history nor feeling for art, and rather amused himself with sneering at all the solemn humbugs of our fellow-travelers as the practice was safe with. But he was always gay, always in excellent spirits, ready to make light of every inconvenience of the road, and, as he said himself, he always carried a quart bottle of condensed sunshine with him against a rainy day; and I found his knowledge I can say his supply seemed inexhaustible.

His cheery manner, his bright good looks, and his invariable good-humor won upon every one, and the soonest and least genial people thawed into some show of warmth under his contagious pleasantry.

He did not care in what direction we went, and would have left it entirely to me to decide, had I been able to determine. All he stipulated for was—"No barbarism, no Oberland or glacier humbug. No Saas-Thal, no Simplon excursions. So long as we travel in a crowd, and meet good cookery every day, you'll find me charming."

Into this philosophy he inducted me. "Make life pleasant, Digby: never go in search of annoyances. Duns and disagreeables will come of themselves, and it's no bad fun dodging them. It's only a fool ever keeps their company."

A more shameless immorality might have revolted me, but this peddling sort of wickedness, this half-jesting with right and wrong—giving to morals the space of a counter, and with a certain kind of address was practicable—was very seductive to one of my age and temper. I fancied, too, that I was becoming a consummate man of the world, and his praises of my proficiency were unsparingly bestowed.

Attaching ourselves to this or that party of travelers, we would go off here or there, in any direction, for four or five days; and though I usually found myself growing fond of those I became more intimate with, and sorry to part from them, Eccles invariably wearied of the pleasantest people after a day or two. Incessant change seemed essential to him, and his nature and his spirits flagged when denied it.

What I least liked about him, however, was a habit he had of "rating" me on—his own name for it—before strangers. My knowledge of languages, my skill at games, my little musical talents, he would parade in a way that I found positively offensive. Nor was this all, for I found he represented me as the son of a man of immense wealth and a rank commensurate with his fortune.

One must have gone through the ordeal of such a representation to understand its vexations, to know all the impertinences it can evoke from some, all the shrewd attentions from others.

I feel a hot flush of shame on my cheek now, after long years, as I think of the mortifications I went through. Eccles would suggest that I should buy some princely chateau that we saw in passing, or some lordly park alongside of which our train would halt.

As to remonstrating with him on this score, or, indeed, on any other, it was utterly hopeless; for he was so far that it never as likely he would amuse the first group of travelers we met by a ludicrous version of my attempts to coerce him into good behavior.

One day he pushed my patience beyond all limit, and I grew downright angry with him. He had been indulging in the harmless sort of half-flirtation with a young lady, a fellow-traveler, which, not transgressing the bounds of small attentions, does not excite remark or rebuke.

"Don't listen to that young gentlemen's blandishments," said he, laughing, "for, young as he looks, he is the deepest dog I know. Come, come, don't look as though you'd strike me, Digby, but deny it if you can."

We were, apparently for me, coming into a station as he spoke. I sprang out, and traveled three-class the rest of the day to avoid him, and when we met at night, I declared that with one such libertymore I'd part company with him forever.

He was profuse in his apologies, but assured me I should not be offended again almost made me ashamed of my complaint. We shook hands and were reconciled, and vowed we were better friends than ever.

What it cost him to abandon this habit of talking me over before strangers, how keenly it touched one of the chief pleasures of his life, I was, as I thought, soon to see in the altered tone of his manner. He felt himself betrayed into easy flippancy he used to wield, and a facility with strangers that once seemed like a special gift with him. But it was in vain to rally him out of this half depression, but it was clear he was not a man of many resources, and that I had already outgrown my tutor.

While we thus journeyed he said to me one day, "I find, Digby, our money is running short; we must make for Paris. It is the nearest of the places on our letter of credit."

I assented, of course, and we bade adieu to a pleasant land, with which we had been travelling, and who were bound for Dresden, assuring them we should meet them on the Elbe.

Eccles had grown more and more and more serious; not alone had his gayety deserted him, but he grew absent and forgetful to an absurd extent; and it was from some great preoccupation he had told of him. During the entire of the last day before we reached Zurich he scarcely spoke a word, and when that he had received some letters at Schaffhausen, I attributed his gloom to their tidings. As he had not spoken to me of his affairs, I felt ashamed to intrude myself on his confidence and kept silent, and not a word passed between us as we went. But what telegraphic banker, a certain Mr. Heinfetter, to order rooms for us at the hotel; and as we alighted at the door the gentleman awaited us was there to meet us.

"Herr Eccles," said he, eagerly, lifting his hat as we descended. Eccles moved forward with him, and, taking his arm, walked away to some distance, leaving me alone and unnoticed. For several minutes they appeared in closet confab, their heads bent close together, and at last I saw Eccles shake himself free from the other's arm, and throw up his hands in the air with the gesture of wild despair. I began to suspect some disaster had befallen our remittances, that they were lost or stolen, and that Eccles was overwhelmed by the misfortune. I own I could not participate in the full measure of the misery he seemed to feel for me, and I lighted a cigar and sat down on a stone bench to wait patiently his return.

"I believe you are right; it is the best way, after all," said Eccles, hurriedly. "You say you'll look after the boy, and I'll start by the ten o'clock train."

"Yes, I'll take the boy," said the other; "but you'll have to be sharp and use no time. They will be sequestering the moment they hear of it, and I half suspect old Engler will be before you."

"But my personal effects? I have things of value."

"Hush, hush! he'll overhear you. Come, young gentleman," said he to me, "come home and sup with me. The hotel is so full, they've no quarters for you. I'll try if I can't put you up."

Eccles stood with his head bent down as we moved away, then lifted his eyes, waved his hand a couple of times, and said, "By-by."

"Isn't he coming with us?" asked I.

"Not just yet: he has some business to detain him," said the banker, and we moved on.

CHAPTER XV.

A TERRIBLE SHOCK.

HERR HEINFETTER was a bachelor, and lived in a very modest fashion over his banking-house, and as he was employed from morning till night I saw next to nothing of him. Indeed, he said, had been called away, and though I eagerly asked where? by whom? and for how long? I got no other answer than "He is called away," in very German English, and with a stolidity of look fully as Teutonic.

The banker was not talkative: he smoked all the evening, and drank beer, and except an occasional monosyllabic comment on its excellence, said little.

"Ach, ja!" he would say, looking at me fixedly, as though assenting to some not exactly satisfactory conclusion his mind had come to about me—"Ach, ja!" And I would have given a good deal at the time to know to what peculiar feature of my fortune or my fate this half-compassionate exclamation extended.

"Is Eccles never coming back?" cried I, one day, as the post came in, and no tidings of him appeared; "is he never coming at all?"

"Never, no more."

"Not coming back!" cried I.

"No; not come back no more."

"Then what is I say there for? Why do I wait for him?"

"Because you have no money to go elsewhere," said he, and for once he gave way to something he thought was a laugh.

"I don't understand you, Herr Heinfetter," said I: "your letter of credit, Mr. Eccles told me, was on your house here. Is it exhausted, and must I wait for a remittance?"

"It is exhaust; Mr. Eccles exhaust it."

"So that I must write for money; is that so?"

"You may write and write, mein lieber, but it won't come."

Herr Heinfetter drained his tall glass, and, leaning his arms on the table, said, "I will tell you in German, you know it well enough." And forthwith he began a story, which lost nothing of the pain and misery it caused me by the unsympathizing tone and stolid look of the narrator. For my readers' sake, as for my own, I will condense it into the fewest words I can, and omit all that Herr Heinfetter inserted either as comment or censure. My father had eloped with Madame Vincent! They had fled to Inspruck, from which my father returned to the neighborhood of Belgium, to offer Clermont a meeting. Clermont, however, preferred to his bands a reparation he liked better—my father's back-book, with a number of signed but unfilled checks. These he at once filled up to the last shilling of his credit, and drew out the money, so that my father's first check, London was returned dishonored. The villa and all its splendid contents were sequestrated, and an action for divorce filed with ten thousand pounds laid as damages, already commenced. Of three thousand francs, which our letter assured us at Zurich, Eccles had drawn two thousand, he would have taken all, but Heinfetter, who prudently foresaw I must be got rid of some day, retained one thousand on his own way. Eccles had gone, promising to return when he had saved his own effects, or what he called his own, from the wreck; but as four lines had come from him to say the smash was complete, the "huissiers" in possession, seals on every thing, and "not even the horses reserved without a gendarme present in full uniform."

"Tell Digby, if we travel together again, he'll have to complain of my paying for it as for a man of fortune; and, above all, advise him to avoid Brussels in his journeyings. He'll find his father's creditors, I'm afraid, more attached to him than Mademoiselle Pauline."

His letter wound up with a complaint over his own blighted prospects, for, of course, his chance of the presentation was now next to hopeless, and he did not know what line of life he might be driven to.

And now, shall I own that, ruined and deserted as I was, overwhelmed with sorrow and shame, there was no part of all the misery I felt more bitterly than the fate of her who had been so fatally abandoned to me—who had nursed me so tenderly in sickness, and been the charming companion of my happiest hours. At first it seemed incredible to me. My father seemed to her had ever been coldness itself, and I could only lead myself to believe the story by imagining how the consciousness of his own baseness acted with drive the unhappy woman to extreme protection against his barbarity. It was as well I should think so, as it served to soften the grief and assuage the intensity of the sorrow the event caused me. I cried over it two entire days and part of a third, and so engrossed was I with this affliction that not a thought of myself or of my own destitution ever crossed me.

"Do you know where my father is?" asked I of the banker.

"Yes," said he, dryly.

"May I have his address? I wish to write to him."

"This is what he send for message," said he, producing a telegram, the address of which he had carefully torn off. "It is of you he speak. 'Do what you like with him, except bother me, or let him live with you.' And now, mein lieber, to my credit, and let him understand he has no more to expect from Roger Norcott."

"May I keep this paper, Sir?" asked I, in a humble tone.

"I see no reason against it. You," muttered he. "As to the moneys, Eccles have drawn eighty pound; there is forty remain to you."

I sat down and covered my face with my hands. It was a habit with me when I wanted to apply myself fully to thought; but Herr Heinfetter suspected that I had given way to grief, and be-gen to cheer me up. I at once undeceived him, and said, "No, I was not crying, Sir; I was only thinking what I had best do. If you allow me I will go up to my room, and think it over by myself. I shall be calmer, even if I hit on nothing profitable."

I passed twelve hours alone, occasion.lly dropping off to sleep out of sheer weariness, for my brain worked hard, traveling over a wide space, and taking in every contingency and every antecedent I could think of. I might go back and seek out my mother; but to what end, if I should only become a dependent on her? No; I was sure that I should try and obtain some means of earning a livelihood ever so humble, abroad, than spend the disgrace of my family at home. Perhaps Herr Heinfetter might accept my services in some shape; I could be any thing but a servant.

When I told him I wished to earn my bread, he looked doubtingly at me in silence, shaking his head, and saying, at last, "Nein, niemals, nein, in every cadence of despair.

"Could you not try me, Sir?" pleaded I, earnestly; but his head moved sadly in refusal.

"I will think of it," he said at last, and he left me.

He was good as his word. He thought of it for two whole days, and then said that he had a correspondent on the shore of the Adriatic, in a little-visited town, where no news of any man's history was like to reach, and that he would write to him to take me into his counting-house in some capacity—as clerk, or possibly a shipping-agent, till I should prove myself worthy of being advanced to the desk. It would be hard work, however, for I was a mere Opposh in a new land, and they were people who gave themselves few indulgences, and their dependents still fewer.

He wrote to-day—the last the house of Hodnig and Opposh had been a wealthy firm formerly, but that Hodnig had over-speculated, and died of a broken heart; that now, after years of patient toil and thrift, Opposh had restored the credit of the house, and was in good repute in the world of trade. Some time back he had written to Heinfetter to send him a young fellow who knew languages and was well-bred.

"That's all I said," said I, ventur to tell him that I recommended you for these?"

"Let me have a look," said I, quickly.

"I will write your letter out for you, then, and you shall set out to-morrow for Vienna; thence you'll take the train for Trieste, and so, you'll reach Fiume, where Herr Oppovich lives."

I thanked him heartily, and went to my room. On the next morning I was followed on my way. Ho. I was no longer to be the pampered and spoiled child of fortune, surrounded with every appliance of wealth, and waited on by servants and retainers. I was now to travel modestly, to fare humbly, and to ponder over the smallest outlay, for I had but a little more than a quarter of greater need. But of all the changes in my condition none struck me so painfully at first as the total disregard and neglect with which that immediately followed my fallen state. People who had no concern with my well-to-do condition, who could take no possible interest in my prosperity, had been courteous to me hitherto, simply because I was prosperous, and were now become unconcerned at the reverse, for no other reason, that I could see, than that I was poor.

Where before I had met willingness to make my acquaintance, and an almost cordial reverence, I was now to find distance and reserve. Above all, I discovered that there was a general distrust of the poor man, as though he were more open to temptation than the rich, and were more especially exposed to rash influences, and more likely to yield to them.

I got some sharp lessons in these things the first few days of my journey, but I dropped down at last into the third-class train, and found myself at ease. My fellow-travelers were not polished or very cultivated, but in one respect their good-breeding had the superiority over that of finer folk. They never questioned my right to be saving, nor seemed to think the worse of me for being poor.

Herr Heinfetter had counseled me to stay a few days at Vienna, and provide myself with clothes more suitable to my new condition than those I was wearing.

"If old Ignaz Oppovich saw a silk-lined coat, he'd soon send you about your business," said he. "Well as to that fine watch-chain and the trinkets, you have only to appear with it once to get your dismissal."

It was not easy, with my little experience of life, to see how these things should enter into an estimate of me, or why Herr Ignaz should not earn him with other attributes of mine than such as touched my clerkship; but as I was entering on a world where all was new—where not only the people, but their prejudices and their likings were all strange to me—I resolved to approach them in an honest spirit, and with a desire to conform to them as well as I was able.

Lest the name Norcott, appearing in the newspapers in my father's case, should connect me with his story, Heinfetter advised me to call myself after my mother's family, which sounded, besides, less highly born, and I had my passport made out in the name of Digby Owen.

"Mind, lad," said the banker, as he parted with me, "give yourself no airs with Ignaz Oppovich; do not turn up your nose at his homely fare, or handle his coarse napkin as if it hurt your skin, as I have seen you do before. From his door to destination there is only a step, and bethink yourself twice before you take it. I have done all I mean to do by you, more than I shall ever be paid for. And now, good-by."

This sort of language grated very harshly on my ears at first. I had resolved to bear my lot courageously, and conform, where I could, to the tone of those I had come down to.

I thanked him, then, respectfully and calmly for his hospitality to me, and went my way.

HOME AND FOREIGN GOSSIP.

At the recent complimentary dinner given at Delmonico to Professor S. F. B. Morse, on December 29, the following telegram was read by Cyrus W. Field:

"LONDON, December 29, 1868.

"CYRUS W. FIELD, New York:

"The members of the Joint Committee of the Anglo-American and Atlantic Telegraph Companies heard with pleasure of the banquet to be given this evening to Professor Morse, and have to greet that distinguished telegraphist, and with him all the other memorials of the season.

J. C. DRAKE, Secretary."

Mr. Field stated that he had sent a telegram to London in the morning, with the information that a dinner was to be given in honor of the inventor of the line, Mr. Morse. The answering telegram, dated "London, 4 o'clock P. M., December 29," was received by Mr. Field at 12.50 o'clock P. M. the same day—which statement awakened laughter as well as applause, and gives a vivid idea of the flashing's speed.

Arrangements have been made to have photographs taken of the vessel placed in the hands so that every one having lost friends will have better facilities for identification. Beneath each likeness is a card, with all the attendant circumstances explained, and the place of burial designated.

Some months ago the Board of Excise ordered an analysis to be made of liquors sold by retail dealers in the city. The chemist, from thirty-eight samples of whisky and brandy, found only three that he could call "good"—five were "fair." Some of the flavors he described as resembling "rancid butter, smoll," "vinegar," "tea," "pine shavings," and "winter-green." Agreeable, very!

The yacht Henrietta, with General Van Allen and party, has sailed from the port of New York for a cruise among the islands of the Antilles. The Henrietta, whose sea-worthiness has been repeatedly tested, is a splendid vessel, and will stress the seas. She carries a crew of nine men, all told, and will probably be absent on this cruise two or three months.

The annual report of the Commissioners of Fisheries, Mr. Livingston Stone, the eminent salmon breeder of New Hampshire, related his experience in New Brunswick in endeavoring to obtain salmon ova for the Pacific waters of California. The greatest prejudice existed there against the work of obtaining fish spawn for stocking the Pacific waters. Eight years ago the first shipment of living salmon in the Miramichi River were confiscated, and every possible obstacle was put in their way by the local authorities. Thirty-two thousand salmon were successfully shipped to the United States and safely deposited. The Miramichi swarmed with salmon, and now every thing is in proper running order for the shipment of ova. Mr. Stone will, next spring or next year, if the consent of the Canadian Government be obtained, proceed to bring the ova of salmon from Labrador to our rivers.

Somebody living in Portland, Maine, is said to be possessed with the idea that the world is soon to suffer a second deluge. So he is converting his entire property into an ark. He has had it built in the old, flat-bottomed, square-stemed, with round bows, and no keel shape of the Noachian craft. He intends to launch it, but will simply store it with provisions, and proceed to keep house in it, prepared, at any time for the coming of the waters.

The report has come from abroad that Gustave Doré and Lamartine, the poet, are engaged in one of the latest account is that Doré proposed to the Swedish songstress, and was rejected. The lady told him she would think of the matter six months, and then give him a definite answer. At the end of that time she said she could not marry him. But Doré seems not to consider this a positive refusal, and is still persevering.

The general plan for the new Post-office in Boston has been decided upon, and work upon it will soon be commenced. The building will cost $1,000,000, and is expected to be completed in 1871.

Illinois has discovered a new species of wealth in the Hochstetter Antimony Mine, at Joliet. After boring through one building stone and a thick bed of white marble, the workmen struck a vein of ore. The drilling dust, on being subjected to chemical analysis, developed unquestionable evidences of the presence of cinnabar. Mr. H——— and his violin alone remained. The minister, aware of the situation, announced to the congregation that he would read the hymn, but as there was no one present who could be relied on to sing, he would read it. Mr. H——jumped up, and this addressed the minister: "Mr. ———, it is for me to say that there will be no such singing and drilling this morning!" Without further comment he struck up his favorite and popular hymn alone. The choir were all in their places in the afternoon.

A professional hospital nurse in Geneva, Switzerland, has been detected in wilfully killing nine patients by giving them bellsdonna. As her perfect accuracy has been proved, various nurses per cirmes have been suggested—as, the mere passion for exercise, a desire to be conspicuous in the exercise of death; a desire to exercise her power, and a mere wish to get rid of the more troublesome cases.

It is estimated that not less than 129,000,000 feet of lumber will be cut in the St. Croix Valley during the present winter; and that about 800 men and 900 horses and oxen will be employed in this business.

The series of Sunday evening lectures given by Dr. Willard Parker in the old Bethel Mission House connected with Plymouth Church, have been very successful. The audience has increased with those specimens early earnest to understand God's physical laws concerning themselves.

A runaway railroad train is something uncommon. But a short time ago on the Lake Shore Railroad a couple of passenger cars and a number of baggage-cars got into some difficulty on a heavy grade, and while all the employés were busy trying to settle it they broke away from the brakes, and rushed down the grade toward Cleveland. The speed increased, and the passengers, who were quietly seated inside, supposed the conductor was making up for lost time. So he was, but he had a good deal more than he thought he could manage. Meanwhile the railroad men, in great consternation at the flight of the train, hastened to make the engine all right, put it on the track, and went in pursuit of the fugitives, which they finally overtook, standing quietly, as if waiting for a motive power.

An interesting entertainment was given in Washington, last week, at the residence of the Italian Minister, Count Bertinatti. This was a fancy dress party for children, in which a burlesque of royalty constituted a leading feature. About seventy young folks were present, and the entertainment commenced with crowning Miss Nellie Grant, daughter of the President elect, queen of the evening. She was conducted to her throne, and Master Thornton, son of the English Minister, placed by her side as her consort. After various appointments were made, the young queen announced that she was ready to deliver her royal Message to the Senate. It was read by her lady-in-waiting, and was most happily expressed and enthusiastically received. The youthful subjects were then invited to draw tickets from an urn which, on being opened, was found to be empty, were exchanged for valuable presents. The whole affair was heartily enjoyed by all present.

The sons of the President's family gave a large party last week. About three hundred invitations were issued, and the great East Room presented a merry scene when all the juveniles were gathered there. Dancing was the amusement of the evening, and a magnificent supper-table was spread for the young folks. This entertainment was given by the President in honor of anniversary of his birthday.

The Evening Mail relates in brief a scene which recently occurred in one of our city restaurants. A Irishwoman, live American entered and took a seat at a table.

"Waiter."

"Yes, Sir."

"Pork and beans—quick!"

The pork and beans were brought.

Before baking the first mouthful the gentleman again proceeded:

"And, waiter—say a nice pie?"

"Yes, Sir."

"Bring me a piece—and have it here in just three minutes!"

The man "came to time" within two minutes—he brought a nice mince-pie just five minutes after he had begun on the pork and beans, and within nine minutes from the time he sat down he had paid his bill and moved out of the restaurant. No wonder that dyspepsia is a national evil!

Last of the 13,000 persons committed in France during nine successive years, 192 were committed by persons under sixteen years of age.

An aggrieved case of the "Grecian Bend" was observed a short time ago at the Custom-house at St. Albans. A lady from Montreal was examining some silks—sewed in her under-clothing to the value of about 300. She was detected and arrested.

A Boston exchange says that it was stated at the recent Woman's Suffrage Convention that in the city of Boston women own and hold upon $8,000,000 of real estate, and $18,000,000 of personal property. Eighty in sixty out of the 1,200 public school-teachers of Massachusetts are women; yet women are not represented on the State Board of Education or upon the town committees. In Boston, where the average of the smallest town in the State, he elected one woman for a member of the School Committee last year placed three women on its school committees.

When, after great struggles, the momentous question of "women's rights" is settled, and it is unanimously decided that she is capable of understanding what is for their interest, it is probable that one of the first things she will vote into existence in this city will be a public park, which is so important as a smoking-car. And if we rightly interpret the irrepressible disgust which the women view the filthy habits of some men in the cars, a goodly number will be quite ready to lend their aid to improve matters. The outward appearance of the men in the cars we can sit opposite or near a "spitter" in our city cars without being intensely annoyed and disgusted.

HUMORS OF THE DAY.

A "COOL CHARACTER"—"Jack Frost."

"LOOSE" HEARING—A motto in fire-works.

POOR FELLOW!—A young gentleman of our acquaintance, who is being asked, a day or two ago, whether he didn't very much admire Dickens's "Carol," said he didn't know, as he owned no Own Carol-ine!

A person who had been listening to a very dull address, remarked that every thing "went off well," especially the applause.

A young fellow was taking a sleigh-ride with a pretty girl, when he met a minister who was celebrated for tying the "double knot" in matrimonial knot at short notice. He stopped his sleigh and saluted, hurriedly:

"Can you tie a knot or me?"

"Yes," said Brother B——, "I guess so; what do you want it done?"

"Well, right away," was the reply; "its a lovely Sunday, and I'm on the highway!"

"Oh yes; this is as good a place as any—as safe as the church itself."

"Well, then, I want a knot tied in my horse's tail, to keep it out of his eyes!" thought the wicked wag, as he drove rapidly away.

A little three-year-old was considerably excited on the other day by seeing the cat kill a mouse. The next day she asked her brother, suddenly:

"Who ever kills mice?"

"Oh! who feeds the birdies, mamma?"

"God feeds them."

"Mamma, who made the cats to catch mice?"

"God made them."

The little one was thoughtful a moment, and then asked, energetically:

"Does God keep a cat?"

The mother told her she would tell her all about it when she got home, but for the present she had better go play with her India-rubber doll.

The Farmer's Magazine is, of course, one of the "Quarterlies."

"COME SCREW"—Fellows of course, one of the Wise.

A MAIDEN'S "PSALM OF LIFE."

Tell me not in idle jingle
"Marriage is an empty dream!"
For the girl is dead that's single,
And girls are not what they seem.

Life is real! life is earnest!
Single blessedness a fib!
"Miss thou art, to rest entrenest!"
Has been spoken of the rib.

Not enjoyment, and not sorrow,
Is our destined end or way:
But to act that each to-morrow
Finds us nearer marriage-day.

Life is long, and youth is fleeting,
And our hearts, though light and gay,
Still, like pleasant drums, are beating
Wedding marches all the way.

In the world's broad field of battle,
In the bivouac of life,
Be not like dumb, driven cattle!
Be a heroine—a wife!

Trust no future, however pleasant,
Let the dead Past bury its dead!
Act—act in the living Present!
Heart within and hope ahead!

Lives of married folks remind us
We can make our lives sublime,
And, departing, leave behind us
Such examples as shall "tell."

Such examples, that another,
Wasting time in idle sport,
A forlorn, unmarried brother,
Seeing, shall take heart and court.

Let us, then, be up and doing,
With a heart on triumph set!
Still combining, still pursuing,
And each one a husband get.

At an hotel dinner a gentleman observed a person sat opposite to him to touch pick with his knife and then use the same service to his neighbor. Wishing to apprise him of his mistake, he said, "I beg your pardon, Sir, but you are using Mr.——'s tooth-pick." "I know I do. Do you think that I am not going to return it?"

MEM. OF OUR OWN PHILOSOPHER.—People who are always in hot water must be rather soft.

"I'll bring you down to the hard-pan of truth, Sir!" said a lawyer to a fellow-passenger in the cars. "Very well," was the reply; "that's the pan, I suppose, that you just floated in."

"A MELANCHOLY REFLETION."—The top of a bald head in a looking-glass.

SUGGESTIONS ABOUT PRESENTS.

A liquor-case is a good thing to present to the precincts of a temperance society, for all will always be sure to keep it carefully where it won't be hurt.

Fire-screens are a pleasant thing to present to literary gentlemen, as they never have over a dozen or two sent them by lady admirers in the course of the year.

To an old gentleman with false teeth a gold cookstick is a useful and appropriate present.

For very small children it is well to buy fresh-painted toys; for those of a larger growth afford them other pleasures besides those designed by the manufacturer.

In buying any thing for a gentleman who smokes, always select one of the short-clay imperishable articles which are to be found in the fancy-goods stores. Cigar-cases that will keep the tobacco moist, and cigar-cases with springs which no human being but a monkey can hope to work, are abominations. Cigars that are very difficult to ignite, smell frightfully, and send a shower of sparks over the clothing when you attempt to extinguish them.

For your wife, mother or boot-black buy some elegant title of Brice-a-Brac: it is their affair if they haven't got a husband to remain at home to get them on, and not yours.

If you have a strong Calvinistic friends, a pack of playing-cards or an opera-glass will be a very fitting surprise for them; and a gift of a good many volumes of dry sermons is appropriate for your fashionable young friend.

In buying books for children select a good, disinterested, and unmarried child who puts his spending-money in the missionary-box.

The best present for an insane man—Presence of mind.

For a deaf man—New (Y)ear's present.

"How long can a fool live?" asked a lawyer of a witness that he was examining.

"I don't know, Sir, exactly. How long have you lived?" was the answer.

GOOD WORDS FOR THE YOUNG.—"Dinner's ready."

IN ANSWER TO MANY INQUIRIES

AS TO HOW HE "STANDS" THIS COLD WEATHER, TODDLETON REST-FULLY, BUT FIRMLY, CALLS ATTENTION TO THE ABOVE ELUCIDATION OF THE ENIGMA.

WINTER AT SEA—TAKING IN SAIL OFF THE COAST.—DRAWN BY WINSLOW HOMER.—[SEE PAGE 37.]

CUSTER'S INDIAN SCOUTS CELEBRATING THE VICTORY OVER BLACK KETTLE.—[SKETCHED BY THEO. R. DAVIS.]

THE INDIAN WAR.

THE Indian Peace Commission of 1867 accomplished greater harm than benefit. Treaties were entered into with the Cheyennes, Arrapahoes, Kiowas, Comanches, and at the recommendation of the Commission the Powder River country was abandoned. This latter action was construed as the result of timidity on the part of the Government, and immediately the Sioux extended their depredations to the Pacific Railroad, on the Platte, while the Indians south of the Arkansas attempted to drive the whites out of the Smoky Hill country.

Last August the Cheyennes took the war-path, and the valleys of the Saline and Solomon rivers became the theatre of a relentless savage war. It was at first supposed that the Cheyennes were about to attack a hostile tribe, but soon the mask was laid aside, and in less than a month one hundred whites fell victims to the tomahawk and scalping-knife. The chiefs of the Arrapahoes had promised to proceed to Fort Cobb and get their annuities, and thence withdraw to their reservation. Instead of fulfilling their promises, they began a series of depredations on the line between Fort Wallace and Denver, in Colorado Territory. The Kiowas and Comanches about the same time entered into an agreement at Fort Zarah to remain at peace, and left with that impression fixed on the minds of those who represented the Government. The next information was that the Kiowas and Comanches had joined the Cheyennes and Arrapahoes. General SHERIDAN, taking the practical view of the condition of affairs within the limits of his department, at once transferred his head-quarters to the field, and commenced preparations for a determined war. General SELLY'S fight near this point, FORSYTH'S gallant fight on the Arrikaree fork of the Republican, CARPENTER'S and GRAHAM'S fight on the Beaver branch of the Republican, General CRAIG'S decisive fight in the same vicinity, and General CUS-

THE SCALPED HUNTER.—[PHOTOGRAPHED BY WM. S. SOULE.]

CUSTER'S COMMAND SHOOTING DOWN WORTHLESS HORSES.—[SKETCHED BY THEO. R. DAVIS.]

TUS'S annihilation of BLACK KETTLE'S band in the battle of the Washita, besides a number of small engagements, is the fighting record of three months. It would be a low estimate to say that at least 300 warriors have been killed since the war broke out. Two hundred and fifty are officially accounted for. The dexterity of the Indian in getting off his dead would largely increase the official count, which is based upon an accurate knowledge of the Indian loss from those who seen carried off, or which fell into the possession of the troops. Nor have the wounded been estimated; and it is quite natural to suppose that for a loss of two hundred and fifty warriors killed many more were wounded, of which a fair proportion may be called mortally, and subsequently died.

The desperation of the fighting at the battle of the Washita may be judged from the fact that no male prisoners over eight years of age were taken.

One of our illustrations on page 41 represents General CUSTER'S command shooting down the poor stock captured from BLACK KETTLE'S band. Another represents the Indian scouts of CUSTER'S command celebrating the victory over BLACK KETTLE'S band. These scouts are Osages and Kaws. The celebration took place at night around a large wood-fire, encircled by officers and men who formed a ring corresponding to the ords in number—the front rows sitting down or kneeling. The ceremonies were enlivened by music from the military bands. Two scouts at a time, by the Indian drummers, sat Generals SHERIDAN, CUSTER, FORSYTH, and staff-officers. The Indians were highly painted, and adorned with shields, spears, war-bonnets, bows, whistles, and other foggery.

A third cut represents the body of RALPH MORRISON, killed and scalped by the Indians near Fort Dodge, Kansas. A correspondent from Fort Dodge sends us the following description:

Messrs. Editors:

The above is probably the only picture ever taken on the Plains of the body of a scalped man, photographed from the corpse itself, and within an hour after the deed was done.

The 7th December Mr. RALPH MORRISON, a hunter, was murdered and scalped by the Cheyenne Indians within less than a mile of this post. Mr. WILLIAM S. SOULE, chief clerk in Mr. JOHN E. TAPPAN'S trading establishment, a practical artist, availed himself of the opportunity to benefit science and gratify the curiosity of every lover of the horrible, and counterfeit presentment of the body literally on the spot.

The nose of the remains is delineated exactly as left by the savages, the horrible contortion of the facial features, the apertures left by the deadly bullet, the hacking scalp, the gaping wounds, the despoiled body of the victim, all are true to life, anomalous as the presentment of death may seem.

It is a satisfaction to know that the Indians suffered severely for their bloody act, two being killed by a percussion-shell from a Parrott gun belonging to the ordnance of Fort Dodge, served with admirable precision by Ordnance-sergeant HUGHES.

The Indians were promptly pursued, and two more of their saddles emptied by our scouts, whose chief, Mr. JOHN G. HUNTER, is represented on the right of the picture. The officer is Lieutenant READE, Third Infantry. In this connection it may not be amiss to say that Mr. ACTON is referred to, although unknown to Eastern journals, is one of the most experienced and daring scouts on the Plains. He has escaped as many as many marks of his adventurous life. Years ago he was wounded in the head and face by arrows in an encounter with the Kiowas, between whom and the present site of Fort Dodge. October 8, next year, while scouting on the Arkansas River, of the Upper Ride Corps, his right hand was literally cut in two by a tomahawk thrown by a wounded Arapahoe chief. In April, 1868, his thigh was broken by a shot from an Indian in a fight between Fort Craig and Seldon, New Mexico. In the summer of 1860 the Cheyennes and Sioux drove into his right knee near Bent's Fort, Colorado Territory; and during the succeeding year a band of Texas desperadoes left him apparently dead after a bloody fight about sixty miles from Fort Garland, New Mexico.

All of these mishaps, however, did not prevent this hardy frontiersman from doing invaluable service for the Union during the war, in the service of which he was wounded in the back the evening before the battle of Antietam.

Such men are seldom met with, and when known deserve well of the country.

A. B. C.

OUR ABSENT FRIEND.

I.

I FEEL I am placing myself in somewhat a false position, confessing as I do from the outset, that I am about to reveal no absent friend's faults, and have a laugh with you over his eccentricities; and yet he is such a dear old friend—if he reads this paper and recognizes his own portrait, I shall expect him to forgive me.

When first I became acquainted with George Therold I thought him a little foolish and a good deal curiously. He was immensely tall, his legs appeared to be made entirely of his body by strings, and to move independently. His clothes were by no means gone and quaint in fashion, and as if expressly made to suit the angles of his figure. He was also notable in the streets by the large and spotted scarf, from which, like lynx's ears, rose his high stiff collar; by his hat on the very back of his head, and a large eye-glass set in antique gold.

I met George Therold first in Devonshire, where I was spending Christmas week at a friend's country house. He came into the library with his hat on, and retained it during the entire visit. I remember there was snow on its crown and brim, which made it appear all the more eccentric. The children of the house followed in his rear like a little tornado, and before he was well seated, climbed on his knees, put snow-balls into the pockets of his swallow-tail coat, and paraded his umbrella.

He was too near-sighted to perceive, or too good-natured to notice the smiles which passed like electricity from lip to lip, and as to the children's somewhat overpowering attentions, he only exclaimed from time to time, in a good-humored abrupt tone,

"Oh! you villains; keep quiet, you little villains."

An appeal which I am bound to state had little effect on their juvenile minds.

Diana, one of my fair hostesses, rose to his assistance, and dispatched the youngsters to the school-room. Then, taking the vacant chair (she had been previously sitting beside me), she inquired after the health of his family. He appeared curiously uncertain on this point, judging by his answers. He first stated, classing them all under one head, that "they were all quite well, thank you." But when questioned upon individually, one had a headache, another a sprained ankle, and two or three were suffering from influenza.

Diana informed him in return that her mother, Lady Waldron, was also ill, and suffering tortures from earache. He looked at her vacantly, and then, under a vague impression that some sort was going its round, he broke into a short laugh.

When he rose to depart he walked into the library-pane instead of the door, and required to be once again came to his assistance, but even she could not repress a laugh when she perceived the melted snow dripping off the right shoulder of his swallow-tail coat. He bore the discovery with perfect good temper, put their remains into the hands of the astonished servant who held his house smiling as he had come in. When he was fairly gone, my amusement, which had been pent up in the hall by Diana's presence, broke my countenance, heralding a burst of laughter from the assembled party.

"How you have never seen him before? Do you mean to say you have never met 'our absent friend'? Why he's known all over the country by no other name."

I ventured to ask, hesitatingly, "was he at all in command of the militia?—quite—quite—"

"Perfectly," replied Diana, "I understand what you mean. He is perfectly right, I can assure you; and as for his family, I can only tell you and every one of us put together."

I was aware that my face assumed a somewhat supercilious expression, and she continued eagerly:

"I don't mean, of course, that he's rich, because he's an absent church mouse, but he's more so immensely clever. He's a first-rate astronomer, mathematician, and naturalist, is not that enough? and then he's the only child of a widow in the world. His poor mother is paralyzed, and he wheels her all over the country in her bath-chair. He never seems to get cross or cold-blooded, and walks right through them. He carries her up and down stairs every day of her life, and never, when she asks him, has he failed to run into town in his dressing-gown and carpet-slippers! So now you ought not to laugh at him—you ought to respect him, and you know you do."

I was afraid he did not seem to relish them." I found him located in the very heart of the city, at the top of rather a dilapidated house, and I speedily ached before I reached the summit, but he gave me ample time to rest them, as he kept me fully ten minutes waiting after I had knocked.

At length it opened, and he appeared upon the landing in an Indian-patterned dressing-gown and scarlet slippers.

"How are you? Very glad to see you," he said, quite affectionately, though I saw at a glance he had not the faintest notion who I was—

"Very glad to see you. Come in, that's a good fellow, and take a seat by the fire. This is very cold weather. Eh?" and then one by the arm he led me into his room. I must remark here there was no fire, neither was the morning such as called for one. He, however, explained that the proposal he had originally made, and drew in a horse-hair arm-chair beside the empty grate. I observed he looked both pale and somewhat thin when I had first seen him. I apologized for disturbing him, and, receiving a something in his greeting which fell short of recognition I reminded him where we had met, and who bade me visit him.

"Ah! yes," he said, "ah! yes; she's a good girl. She's a dear girl. How is she? Ah! yes." He sat looking at me, and rubbing—together—a peculiar habit of his—and added abruptly, "Diana Waldron is going to be married?"

"Yes; I—I believe so."

"Who's the lucky fellow, do you know?"

"Well, really, I believe I am."

"You? You don't say so." He looked up at me with a sudden brightness, for his eyes seemed generally covered with fog. "I wish you joy, old fellow. You've drawn a prize. You must come and dine with me to-night, and drink her health." Again he chafed his hands violently and fell into a sudden gloom.

"Certainly, with pleasure. At what hour do you dine?"

"Six o'clock sharp."

"All right." I took up my hat to go.

"Or, stay. If seven suits you better you may come at seven."

"Yes be quite as convenient to me."

"Very well; six let it be." He opened the door to let me out, and I went down the staircase in a state of mixed amusement and pity.

At six o'clock sharp I tramped up them again, and presented myself at his chambers. I knocked with my walking-stick several times, but as there was no answer, and the door lay slightly ajar, I walked in.

My friend was particularly absent on this occasion; in fact, he was not at home, neither was there any sign of dinner being at, or odor of dinner. I sat down in the arm-chair to await his return. I was not accustomed to dine before seven, so had deny me a little acquaintance. I amused myself meantime glancing round the apartment and taking in its contents.

On the table the supper dinner ought at this moment to have been smoking in fragrant hospitality, stood a tall, dirty jug, and the table-cloth was covered with mould; close beside it was a microscope and box of slides, and under this a MS. My curiosity prompted me to the and look further. The MS. was headed, "Some remarks on the cuticle of the frog's eye, as seen under the microscope." Another MS. lay beside this again; it was headed, "Planetary revolutions and lunar influences, with notes on rivers, lakes, and tidal currents."

On a chair beside the table lay a picture on its face. I raised it to see if it were a portrait; but it proved to be a copy of that de la Roche's exquisite picture of the Floating Martyr, executed by our absent friend's own hand, as his initials in the corner showed. It was a rough copy, certainly, but he had contrived to catch, with perfect faithfulness, the wonderful beauty and purity of the face. It was, evidently, his ideal type of female loveliness. There were innumerable cases of insects and butterflies arranged round the walls of the apartment; but in vain I searched for any law digests, or the well-known cover of Blackstone's Commentaries; no, in fact, any thing touching on the profession to which he was to be called.

"If any poor wretch wanted a wife to look after him and his affairs," I said, " whether his daughter had as yet published any of her writings.

"No, no, not as yet," observed the old gentleman, crossing his knees and drawing down his gray mustache: "but we intend to do something of the kind. I am no great judge, but she seems to be getting on nicely; she often meets your friend there," he added, with a whisper, "she has taken quite a fancy to him, she has the strangest notions for a girl of her age, but I generally find there is some sense at the bottom of them all."

The old soldier would have gone on babbling about his child forever, I think, if dinner had not been placed on our table, and he moved away.

After dinner, walking home with poor George, I ventured to place the matter before him again.

"I say, Harold, that old Colonel is as rich as Crœsus. The men at the club say he is worth nearly a million, and I've made a discovery of you! That girl is the next you in the library must be Miss Lawrence, his daughter, for he told me to-night she had taken a fancy to you; why not go in for her at once, man, and your fortune is made!"

My strong friend startled me by his hoarse laugh; he withdrew his hand from my arm, so as to chafe his palms with unwonted vigor.

"Sell myself to that Croesus! Give up my glorious freedom for a woman with the head of Medusa and the tongue of a Cobra—ha, ha!" He thrust me in the side again, and made no further allusion to the subject.

Imagine then, good reader, my surprise on my return to London some three months later, to hear that George, "our absent friend," George Therold was on the eve of matrimony, and that with the very girl whom his millionaire host so indignantly repudiated.

The rest of my absent friend's history must therefore be written from hearsay information, instead of from personal observation; but, believe me, this information I have gathered with great care, and have derived from the two best sources.

After my departure for Devonshire and for marriage, George still continued to make the British Museum his home, the comfortable warmth of the library and surrounding men far more acceptable as the winter weather drew on; but he wrote to me from time to time, and I found so by snatches in letters to be both interesting and entertaining. He told me his literary hours were still hammed by the Gorgon; she was growing more excellent daily, and he feared he performed him she was writing a book on natural history for young people; she had asked him all sorts on many points, and had even gone so far as to hint delicately that a review from his pen might be the making of her book. But as far as I could guess, the heart of George Therold still remained untouched.

One eventful morning, in the month of November—excited to me, as it was the morning of my wedding-day, but also a period to be long remembered by two others—George Therold made his way as usual to the gates of the British Museum.

He was late, very late, he had been correcting some proof-sheets for a friend in the Temple, but even though he had only an hour left to enjoy his daily luxury, and the snow was falling heavily, he could not make up his mind to absquish it. He found his way to his customary seat, drew out his manuscripts, and placed his inkstand, pen-knife and comforter on the padded table before him.

The Gorgon was in the Museum, but down at lunch, for her books and papers were heaped around upon her desk. George fell at once, as he always did, heedlong into his work, oblivious of all surrounding circumstances. What he was at his head to be gave his heart to also—and one spoke through the other. He was lost then, I say—lost to space and to mundane circumstances; he was among the planets, fixing the temperature of Mars, or measuring the belt of Saturn.

But, hush! there was a step drawing near: a sound of velvet or cashmere sweeping the neat Red floor, a whisper of mouth at his shoulder, and the smallest of white hands laid upon his table.

Had she found him again? Oh, horrors! Oh, had ever Gorgon so little a hand? or Cobra so beguiling a whisper?

"I beg your pardon, Sir, but may I lift off these papers?" and a lady, leaning forward, sought to gather some manuscripts from the desk before him.

George Therold pushed back his chair and stood up, covered with ruddy shame and awkward embarrassment.

"I beg yours, Madam; for I fear I have taken your place."

"Pray, do not disturb yourself. I have finished my work for to-day, and my father is waiting for me outside." But the blush on her cheek was the purest carmine, and her manner the essence of refinement.

She gathered her papers in her hand, gave Therold a gracious bow and a nice smile, and went out, carrying with her the lost peace of a bachelor's lifetime.

There had been spectators of the scene; the Gorgon had returned to her desk, and her illsuppressed titter had broken the hush of the hall. A young literary clerk was still laughing when Therold resumed his seat. But the atmosphere of Mars was no longer ascertainable —the belt of Saturn was broken, and Venus, forsaking the firmament, had chained him to earth with her girdle.

When an absent man falls in love, his case is desperate. All the concentration of an intense, and often a great mind, is brought to bear on one object, and he becomes a nonentity to all others.

His case would be hopeless too, as well as desperate, owing to his manifold blunders, were it not that women invariably look on absent men as objects of gentle compassion and tender respect. They treat them as a different race to ordinary men—creatures to whom they bend the knee of homage, while they extend the hand of pity; and pity is akin to—we all know what.

From the fatal effects of the encounter in the library of the British Museum on the seventh of November George Therold never recovered. He went through his work, it is true, faithfully; but that was labor now which had been joy. He went to his desk in the library, but for what? To catch a glimpse of those fairy hands in static study, comparable only in its calm innocence and serene repose to the Floating Maryr of Fuel de la Roche.

The Gorgon's library labors were ended, and she disappeared for a season; and this winter "took the vacant chair beside him." She also was writing a book on natural history; she also collected volumes around her, and was helped by obsequious clerks; but there was a womanly earnestness of purpose and intentness of plan visible even in the trivial of her manifold acts.

But all things came to an end, and so did her literary labor also. George Therold saw her when the word "Finis" at the foot of her manuscript; heard the little triumphant sigh over a pleasant work happily accomplished, and feared she was lost to him forever.

After a month's absence, for lack of better information, he duly questioned the door-keeper. The man was obtuse at first, but poor George's whispered queries were too vague.

"It is the lady, Sir, with the gray dress and the black bonnet?"

"I don't remember the exact color of the dress," sighed George; "but—but—the lady who—who—sometimes sat near me."

"Next you, Sir; close to the door?"

"Yes; close to the door."

"Oh! then I know well; that is Miss Winter, Sir. Her father has a fine business in the city, and the young lady is about bringing out a book, I hear."

"Thank you," said George, "her name is Miss Winter?" and he turned away down the passage and out into the court-yard. The name "Winter" sounded cold, and "the city," the way the book was progressing.

I must now pass over a space of two months, for during that time my absent friend can recall no one event worthy of record. I remember and remember at whose house he dined on Christmas or New-Year's Day, or whether he had any dinner at all; I remember his being entertained as a visitor. But on a certain evening in January, during the miserable week when the doors of the British Museum are closed, some of the books were left at the chambers of George Therold.

One came from the office of the ——— newspaper, for the purpose of review, and was published by an eminent city firm.

The other came from the office of the Daily ———, and was published by a benevolent half-profit system, and by a strange coincidence both books were on the same subject, and heralded into the public world by almost the same date.

Poor George set himself down in his old armchair by the fire, and placed the new books on the reading-table before him. He remembered every circumstance of this evening with a ghastly distinctness; the very cover of the mutual half-profit system, the very paper, the very gilding. He read its title-page wearily, paused a moment over the name, "Natural History of Table Land," and then looked at the author's name and dedication: "By Miss Winter, and dedicated with most respect and gratitude to her companion in literature, George Therold, Esq."

There was a sharp thrill in his chest, and the pages went on with a trembling hand. He felt an unexpected happiness within his grasp. He was going to read her thoughts, to study her minute opinions of her labors, and to watch her gentle spirit stooping to childhood's ears.

Eight o'clock—ten o'clock—eleven! Therold sat over his book unmoved. Midnight found him closing the crimson covers, grave and decided; what matter what the verdict, for now the head must speak truth, though the heart rise up in rebellion!

Long words, false statements, dry matter, exploded theories, all entomological rubbish! Now for the heart's verdict. Alas! human nature is weak, and the title-page had scarcely left his fingers before even the case was heard; the reviewer's cheeks blanched in the strife, but love conquered.

A guilty conscience needs no accuser. George knew it were vain to make the experiment. So, trimming his lamp afresh and laying his manuscript aside, he drew the second volume to him. What interest, what fresh chord could its sober cover or dull title-page strike in his breast?

"A Chase after Butterflies, and other Child-dren: dedicated to my dull Nephew, Jack, by Miss Lawrence." Miss Lawrence—was the Gorgon's father in it, too, he thought, but his hand, and he could crush it in his bitterness; he is in the humor to wield the disarming bludgeon cruelly and cruelly he has given a cog to his heart, let him satisfy his head now. The print is good, the paper is toned, but the matter must be bad.

At four o'clock the volume was closed, with an almost epaschical groan, and again the true head spoke the verdict.

Easy words, modest talent, graceful pictures, truth made easy, vivid language, a genuine covering to every, from the first initial letter to the last word—finis.

The reviewer's knife might wound it, but not kill; it must rise in the end triumphant; but it was written by the Gorgon, whose hissing titter still rang discordant in his ears. The second review was written, its pages were pelsied with cold criticism and damned with faint praise. The oil was exhausted in the lamp, was dying out, and George, still hugging fondly the words of the gaudy title-page, lay down to rest.

Morning came cold and gray; he rose unrefreshed, and, putting the reviews in his pocket, went down into the street, crossing over to the shop where he usually breakfasted. He told me since he was in the act of raising his coffee-cup to his mouth when the utter meanness of his conduct burst upon his mind; he set down the cup untasted, rose up, drew the reviews from his swallow-tailed coat, and placed them in the heart of the coffee-room fire.

Whether he made his breakfast or not after this sudden act he can not remember; he knows that hour or in the day he was at his club, and there met Colonel Lawrence, who asked him had he seen his daughter's book? He answered shortly that he had, and immediately hung up his hat and left the room. When he got out into the street he found the hat was not his own, but he had taken the correct number to meet again the Gorgon's father; he returned to his chambers, and, taking up the books, recommenced the task of utter self-torture.

He took Miss Winter's first, he was determined to put himself out of pain at once. He wrote and wrote, folding his work with each sheet under the pen, he was cutting the one link which might have bound her to him. Her innocent confidence must be crushed and again to prevail against such cruelty; but he turned his face from it. It is true he gleaned out the few sentences which were good, and gave them honorable, but they were few and far between. He suggested improvements, held out hopes of doing better, and then fell to work with a heavy heart.

The next review he treated with the natural honesty of his nature; he gave it full credit for its easy simplicity and adaptation to the ages for which it had been written. He recommended it to mothers and teachers, and wound up with a hearty encouragement and promises of future successes. He went out, dropped the reviews into the editors' boxes, and felt he does not remember where, but half over London, till hunger beckoned him into a strange eating-house, and sleep drove him homeward—unknown to bed.

A fortnight later he was sitting in his room, cold and miserable, his fire having gone out, when a knock came at the outer door to ascend him. He rose up, with a dejected countenance, and went out to open it; he lifts had been one chaotic misery since he read his own reviews in the morning papers. He had not even taken courage to make his usual pilgrimage to club or museum; he had not met the Colonel at the former, or the ill-used Miss Winter at the latter.

He opened his door unguardedly, like the foolish goat in the fable, and the wolf came in, in the person of Colonel Lawrence.

"Good-morning, Mr. Therold; this is rather an early hour, I fear, for intruding upon your privacy?"

"Not at all—pray walk in."

"I came to ask you, in the old veteran, following Therold into his sanctum, "whether you could have taken my hat from the club in mistake for your own? It was a white felt one, with a narrow band of black silk braid, and this one, I think, is yours, for your initials are printed inside."

George knew the old hat well. It was his mother, who, long ago, knowing her son's infirmities, had worked his name in the crown.

"This one, then, I suppose is yours," George said, removing a white hat from the bald head of a lay figure that kept the corner.

The Colonel received it with a good-tempered smile, refusing to hear any apologies, and sat down.

"Well, Mr. Therold," he said, bustling a little nervously, and evidently uncomfortable in his thoughts, "I believe people are not expected ever to know who are the writers of articles and reviews in our daily papers, but I believe I shall not be far wrong in thanking you for the very flattering notice of my daughter's book in the——"

"I scarcely know what you allude to, Colonel," said Therold, "you have nothing to thank me for at all—nothing, nothing—"

"Pho! I feel I have, my good friend. You have made an old man very proud—very proud and happy; and my daughter herself is full of gratitude. She has written here now in bed that I may induce you to dine with us this evening at Eaton Square, and give her an opportunity of thanking you herself."

Poor Therold attempted some bungling apologies and excuses, but the Colonel would hear of none. Dinner was to be at seven; only one or two friends, and his house was No. —.

Our absent friend had all his life looked upon a dinner-party as one of the greatest earthly bores. He had never been to one without committing some grave error, such as coming in the wrong house, or without calico handkerchief, or without gloves; but he was hopelessly in for this one, and he must despair he set about overhauling his wardrobe.

He looked particularly well in evening clothes. A cold bath, and the profusion of brushing his hair, no one could have said any thing but that he was a fine, handsome young fellow as he presented himself in the hall of Eaton Square five minutes before seven.

His watch, which had only been set going for the occasion, was too fast, and none of the company had arrived. The Colonel was the sole occupant of the drawing-rooms. They were luxuriant flowers, the numerous fires were burning in the highly polished grates, the chandeliers were a blaze of light. There was a luxurious scent of Indian sandal-wood and rose leaves; but the dreaded meeting with the Gorgon lay before him, and Therold's heart felt like a mow-ball beneath his ribs. She was coming; he heard the well-known, strong-minded footstep on the stairs. He stood up, and absently lifting the fire-screen, Colonel Lawrence raked the fire with vigor. The door opened; it was not the Gorgon this time. It was a child—a fine curly-headed, high-spirited boy—who bounced in leaving the door wide open behind him.

"Well, Jack, my boy," cried the Colonel, stretching out his arms skirmishingly, "is Aunt Mary never coming down? run up and tell her Mr. Therold has arrived."

"She is coming, uncle—she is following me." There was no mistake about it this time. He heard the rustle of silk and muslin on the staircase outside, and the sound of a footstep, and then a great coward as he was, Therold turned his face to the wall.

The Colonel's genial voice recalled him to his senses in time to see her enter. The chandelier spun round and emitted a pale phosphorescent light; the flowers gods laughed at the pale damsels. The Colonel had ten heads and a thousand tongues, for the Martyr of Paul de la Roche had landed in at the open doorway, and laid her hand in his.

"My daughter, Mr. Therold. Are you old friends, or must I introduce you?"

"Old friends," replied the Martyr, with the smile of an enchantress, "at least we have seen each other often enough to feel as such." She sat down on the cover of the velvet sofa, and motioned to George to take the chair next her; but he, stunned and helpless, remained rooted to the wall.

There was some grand mistake somewhere; perhaps he had gone into the wrong house; perhaps the Colonel was somebody else; perhaps he was not himself, and ought to explain how it happened, but more guests were arriving, and explanations were impossible.

He was desired by the Colonel to take Miss Lawrence down to dinner; she slipped her hand within his arm, and the great snow-ball at his heart instantly began to thaw. He knew that she was beside him through dinner-time, but how all this wonderful transformation had happened he could not guess.

During the pauses in the conversation he tried to think it out, which absence of mind caused some fish knives to be given—Miss Lawrence had him for a glass of water; he poured it out, bowed, and drank it himself; when his soup-plate was removed, he composed himself on the receipt of the dessert dish opposite to him, and began to peel it as if it were an apple: and when the ladies rose after dinner, he accompanied them to the drawing-room.

Once up stairs he discovered his mistake, but was too shy to speak. Miss Lawrence, however, did not seem in the least put out; on the contrary, taking him a little aside, she said she was glad to have a quiet moment with him for his most flattering review.

George blushed up to his very ears tingled, for out of the chaos of his mind rose up the midnight conflict for truth, and the nature of the review he had written.

"I am sure," he hesitated, "it is I who ought to feel flattered, Madam, at your condescension in dedicating your book to—so unworthy an object."

Miss Lawrence looked puzzled, she walked over to the table and took up a book as she passed.

"Why," she said, with a little laugh, "do you call poor Jack an 'unworthy object?' Come over here, Jack, and show yourself; I can tell you he's one of the best boys, and cleverest boys, in the world, only he doesn't know a snail from a caterpillar. I suppose now that I've written a natural history on purpose for him, he ought to learn it —ought he not, Mr. Therold?" Jack rubbed his curly head against her arm, and stared, openmouthed, at the tall intruder.

"There," continued Miss Lawrence, handing the volume to George lifted from the table to peep George, "there—that copy is for you, with the author's compliments. I have written your name on the fly-leaf."

George knew the cover well, but he opened it, nevertheless; the title-page, too, was familiar, "A Chase after Butterflies: for our Old Children," dedicated to my dull Nephew Jack, by Miss Lawrence;" but as he read it again, scales seemed to fall from his eyes—the clew to the labyrinth was found—Miss Lawrence was not the Gorgon, neither was the Gorgon Miss Lawrence, neither had Miss Winter ever written a line—nor the Gorgon a good one. The dedication he had hugged in guilty happiness for days, had been the writer's selfish snare. Now in good truth he held something more precious to his heart—not a thing to cut off the eyes of over a volume of worthless rubbish, but his own name, in her own handwriting, on a book full of the first bright thoughts of an innocent child-author.

Little remains now to be added to my story; for, from this evening out, all went as smoothly as a marriage-bell.

When I returned to town, a happy man myself, and longing that others should follow my good example, I met George Therold in the street—his hat was on the top of his head; his swallow-tails had disappeared with the birds from whose backs they took their name; the satin stock had given place to a neat neck-tie. The good fairy, in the Pantomime of Life, had waved her wand over them, and all was changed.

He was going to be married in a week; some explanations ensued. I had to learn the history of the books, of the midnight temptation, and the dinner-party, with the happy issue. I wished my friend joy with all my heart, and accepted on the spot for my wife and self to witness the ceremony.

That morning was fine, the church was crowded, the bridesmaids were charming, the bride was divine, but, alas! at the last moment it was discovered the bridegroom had forgotten the ring. The bride only laughed; it was plain to see she would make him a happy man, every one who looked at her could see that; but the circumstance, trivial in itself, only proved that, to the end of the chapter, poor George must still lay claim to the title of "Our Absent Friend."

SERGEANT GONZALES, A PARAGUAYAN SOLDIER.

MARSHAL CAXIAS, COMMANDER OF THE ALLIED FORCES IN PARAGUAY.

A PARAGUAYAN SENTINEL AT HIS POST.

THE WAR IN PARAGUAY.

IT is now very evident that the fall of Humaita was not the end of the war which has been so fiercely waged for four years between the small Republic of Paraguay on the one side, and the great empire of Brazil, assisted by the Republic of Uruguay and the Argentine Confederation, on the other. Driven from the strong position of Humaita, LOPEZ moved up the river to Villeta within twenty miles of the capital, Asuncion; here by recent accounts he has been attacked in force, but repelled his assailants with heavy loss. It is reported that the Allies were about to attempt a flank movement on Asuncion; but the success of such strategy is very doubtful, for even if CAXIAS reaches Asuncion he will find it a heap of ruins; and depending, as he must, on the iron-clad fleet for the daily sustenance of his troops, with LOPEZ on his flank and rear cutting off all other supplies, the capital will be a prize too highly paid for. These after all are only conjectures; what we do know is, that the Paraguayans are still making a gallant stand; and that the Triple Alliance, which had more than one weak point at its inception, is showing signs of disruption. SARMIENTO, President of the Argentine Confederation, has proposed terms of peace to LOPEZ, and Don PEDRO has in consequence threatened to withdraw his envoy. If this be true the Treaty is broken, and LOPEZ will make peace with his enemies in detail; but whether finally successful or not, the Paraguayans have shown themselves a brave and warlike people.

Individual instances of courage are never wanting in any protracted war; but if our readers will look at our sketch of the prisoner on this page, they will see the portrait of as brave a fellow as ever fought for home and freedom.

GONZALEZ was a Sergeant in the Paraguayan army who fought alone against ten Brazilian soldiers, but at last was induced to surrender; and when asked why he had fought against such unequal odds, answered: "I fought because I am valiant, as are all Paraguayans."

The other sketch is of a Paraguayan soldier on his post as sentry. The feeling of awe in which the Dictator LOPEZ is held, an occurrence on board the English gun-boat Doterel will exemplify. This vessel had rescued some unfortunates from the wreck of the steamer Marques de Olinda in July, 1865. One of the Paraguayans had his abdomen pierced by a rifle-ball, and was suffering acutely from peritonitis (inflammation of the bowels), which caused him to groan in his anguish, when another prisoner, a sergeant, approached him and in the Guarani language thus harangued him: "Dog of a bad Paraguayan! are you not ashamed to let the enemies of your country hear you complain, and give them reason to laugh at you? The glory of having been wounded fighting for that country does not appear sufficient without crying for sympathy in your sufferings? Do not let me hear another groan from you or I shall report you to the highest power," meaning, of course, Field-Marshal LOPEZ. From that moment the poor sufferer never uttered a moan, although he died in four hours afterward, evidently in dreadful torture. Some might call this "stoicism or stupidity;" to us it appears the perfection of discipline, and a manifestation of great moral and physical courage.

SPAIN—SIGNATURE AT MADRID OF THE PETITION FOR THE ABOLITION OF SLAVERY.—[SEE PAGE 46.]

CARDINAL ANTONELLI.

GIACOMO ANTONELLI, Cardinal, Secretary of State, President of the Ministerial and State Council of the Papal States, Prefect of the Apostolic Palaces, and President of the Congregation in connection with St. Paul's Cathedral, was born at Sonnino, near Terracina, Italy, April 2, 1806. On account of the ability which he displayed as a student in the great seminary of Rome, he was raised to the prelacy by Pope GREGORY XVI., received the appointment of Recorder of one of the superior criminal courts, was sent as delegate to Orbieto, Viterbo, and Macerato, and subsequently received the Cardinal's hat. After the death of GREGORY, he became the confidential adviser of the present Pope, PIO NONO, who appointed him Under-Secretary of State for the Interior, and Minister of Finance to the second Apostolic Exchequer. In 1849, after the Pope's arrival at Gaeta as a fugitive, the Cardinal was made Secretary of State, and has held this position ever since.

In connection with our portrait of the Cardinal, we publish the following extract from the diary of an ex-Jesuit, giving an account of an interview between the writer and the Cardinal in 1864:

"Cardinal ANTONELLI dwells in the Vatican, one story higher than the Pope, and his visitors are obliged to ascend six flights of stairs. In the ante-room, one meets with a mixed throng of the greatest variety: priests, abbots, bishops, zouaves, and people of all callings, sit here together. A prebendary, in a long black robe, sees us under. He sits down at my side, tells me of the last illness of his Holiness, and, finally, enters into a tedious conversation about the fine arts, during which he praises SASOFERATO as the real Madonna painter.

"At last, after impatient waiting and anxious anticipation, the dreaded moment arrived at which my humble self was to be announced. His Eminence had been long since in possession of my credentials. As soon as the prebendary opened the fatal door, and I was about to exclaim, 'Scusi, Eminenza, la mia libertà, ma essendo a Roma—' a black coil suddenly thrust itself toward me, as if sent forth from a rebounding spring; I was seized by both hands, and a pair of jet-black eyes were fixed upon me with a piercing gaze.

"'Mon cher! Mon cher!'

"I felt as though I had been suddenly attacked.

"The cabinet of His Eminence is extremely small. A secretary, behind which the Cardinal sits, occupies the greater part of the room; and between the secretary and the window two or three chairs, at most, can be placed. The audiences granted by His Eminence are therefore *tête-à-tête*s. I sat down—two hands seized the long black robe with red lace, and carefully adjusting it in the usual folds for sitting, and the black coil receded. Then one hand placed the red cap properly upon the head, and the conference with His Eminence had begun.

GIACOMO ANTONELLI.

"The broken French which vibrated through the air offended my delicate ear, and I therefore several times attempted to converse in the Italian language; but my Italian was not heeded by the Secretary of State of PIO NONO, he interrupted me again and again in French. Sainted MEZZOFANTI!

"The Cardinal since 1850 has been Prime Minister of the Ecclesiastical State, in daily concourse with French diplomatists and officers, almost sufficated with French correspondence, and yet he handled the language like a porter or a cicerone, to say nothing of his pronunciation.

"Those who have not seen Cardinal ANTONELLI would find it difficult to believe that such a face exists. His Eminence might safely be sent through the entire Roman Catholic world to recruit believers as soldiers in a crusade for the Holy Father. Every believer would step aside, and every policeman inquire for his passport. His face is divided into two halves, which must have been brought together from two distinct periods in the history of creation. The upper half is Egyptian or Asiatic; beneath black hair roll in large circles a pair of restless eyes. But if we consider them from a physical stand-point we find them exquisitely beautiful; they are light-colored, bright upon very dark ground; they are the beautiful eyes of the beast of prey of the desert; but their uncertainty and continual motion, their perpetual rolling, shooting, and darting, are so demoniacal that we need wish no better eyes for the actor of Mephistopheles. They are the eyes of a Sphinx, in which lurks the embryo of a human soul not yet in existence; they are the first opening of progressive nature striving to become human, but unable to do so for the want of one single attribute, and therefore mysterious, terrifying, awe-inspiring. Just at the moment when we would clothe familiarity with devout love we are overcome and made to shudder. The lower part of the face is yet further back in past ages at least two hundred thousand years. At the time when that mouth and that chin were created there were no human beings upon the earth. Every thing was still gigantic and amphibious. Those muscles of the face show what must have been the business of those brothers of fire and air—they go constantly to and fro seeking whom they may devour, even though no prey is in sight. The corners of the mouth travel back and forth continually as far as the ear. A new horror seizes us every time the mouth is opened. But Cardinal ANTONELLI has beautiful teeth, which are constantly exposed to view.

"Thus sat before me the last incarnation of the Roman ecclesiastical polity. My eyes, to escape from that mouth of the primeval world, flew up toward the Egyptian eyes, and now I understood with terror the black pupils which so passionately moved in a circle. They fix themselves for a destructive leap, they encompass and twine around their selected victim, and as soon as the prey writhes in the chaws of love it is thrust between those teeth, whence there is no deliverance.

"What was the subject of our conversation? Of course, dear reader, we did not express our real thoughts. He bombarded me with his sphinx-like eyes while I fixed in my mind his portrait. I heard, as in a dream, something about Rome; the magnitude of her objects of art; then I heard myself saying, 'Rome is a Paradise, a Sisyphus; the fine arts cost much labor; my eyes were dazzled with the sun of beauty.'

"Once I was arroused somewhat from my dream by hearing the Cardinal speak of the care which the Papal dynasty had always bestowed upon the fine arts, or when he spoke of things yet to transpire, viz., the extension of the Christian museum in the Lateran. I was the more astonished when I heard him say that RAPHAEL'S paintings in the Vatican would not be restored, but copied. 'Une bonne idée,' I replied.

"The Roman restorations of art are just as bad as their restorations of political affairs. I told the Cardinal about MAILAUD, about the Lord's Supper of LEONARDO DA VINCI; I lamented the barbarity of the French, who behaved as badly there as the legions of the Mumii at Corinth.

"Sneeringly, and exhibiting his teeth, His Eminence remarked that the grand army of NAPOLEON I. had encamped in the arcades of the picture-gallery, and that we could not know what might yet happen. It seemed to give him a tiger-like joy to scandalize the French.

WRECK OF THE "UNITED STATES," ABOVE CINCINNATI, OHIO.—[SEE PAGE 46.]

"The Vatican and the picture-gallery came next. I remarked that the most magnificent painting in the Vatican was the "The Murder of the Innocent Infants." He listened attentively. This picture seemed to be entirely unknown to him. I relieved him of his embarrassment by saying that RAPHAEL'S 'Transfiguration' eclipsed all of the other paintings there, which he before that betrayed a paltriness like innocent infants. He exclaimed, loudly, 'Vous avez raison! vous avez raison!' which he repeated at least six times.

"I was in a perfect agony, for I verily imagined that he was about to embrace and kiss me. Then I would have been lost.

"Finally I rose and asked his pardon for having intruded upon his precious time in such a trifling manner. He weighed very pleasantly. Thrice he grasped my hand, assured me of his favor, and declared that all my desires during my stay in the Institution Germanicum, ay, in Rome itself, as far as the sciences, the libraries, etc., were concerned, should be gratified.

"I was delivered—dismissed. The prebendary and the throng of servants in the ante-room made me bows of ninety degrees. Why? My watch answered the query. I had spent an hour in the cabinet of the all-powerful Cardinal."

ABOLITIONISM IN MADRID.

THE recent elections for members of the Spanish Cortes has resulted in the triumph of the Monarchical party; Seville and Barcelona, however, have elected Republican members. Still remains to be seen whether the decision which the Cortes are sure to give will be peaceably acquiesced in by the people. Among the other reforms which have grown out of the revolution is the movement for the abolition of slavery in the Spanish colonies. We give on page 44 an illustration representing the citizens of Madrid signing a petition for the accomplishment of the end. In Cuba, between 1858 and 1862, there were liberated 9461 slaves. Many are liberated every year by private document, and many children of slaves are registered as free, their liberty being obtained by gift of the masters or by the payment of 30 before birth. The census of 1862 gave the number of slaves in Cuba as 436,495. In Porto Rico there were in 1860 81,709 slaves and 241,142 free blacks. The slaves constituting about one-fourteenth of the entire population of the island.

WRECK OF THE "UNITED STATES" AT CINCINNATI.

IN our paper of December 26 we published an illustration and descriptive account of the disaster which occurred on the Ohio December 4, resulting in the destruction of the United States, one of the finest steamers that navigated that river. On page 45 we present our readers a view of the scene of this disaster as it now lies exposed to view above Cincinnati, where it is daily visited by thousands of people.

FROM A LONG-ESTABLISHED AND WELL-KNOWN HOUSE.—"We have sold BURNETT'S EXTRACTS (for cooking purposes) for several years, and believe them equal to any we have had hitherto, and find them gradually growing in the public favor." ACKER, MERRALL, & CONDIT, Grocers. NEW YORK, September 5, 1868.

JOSEPH BURNETT & CO., Sole Proprietors, 692 Broadway, New York; 27 Central Street, Boston.

THESE EXTRACTS are for sale every where.

PRANG'S AMERICAN CHROMOS are the theme of admiration of all who have seen them.—Boston Critic.

FIVE YOUTH'S PARTS.—The Youth's Companion, in its new form of sixteen pages, is one of the handsomest weeklies published. The first Number, just issued, is filled with a great variety of delightful reading—has five illustrations—taken as a whole, is certainly a most attractive sheet for either young or old. Many years ago, when it was the first published by Mr. Willis, many boys and girls thought there was no reading to be compared with it. This Number shows that while it has grown in years it has also grown in vigor, interest, and brilliancy. It is for sale by all newsdealers.

PLANTATION BITTERS are especially recommended to clergymen, public speakers, and persons of literary habits and sedentary life, who require clear mental faculties, which can only be obtained by a relish for food, and a perfect digestion. Delicate females are certain to find in these Bitters health and strength.—Tribune.

MADDOCK'S WATER.—Superior to the best imported German Cologne, and sold at half the price.

DYSPEPSIA TABLETS cure Indigestion, Heartburn, and Sour Stomach. Sold by druggists. Depot 21 Park Row. Sold by druggists. S. G. WELLING, 371 Broadway.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

GRAND DUCHESS, BELLE HELENE, and fifteen other popular Operas, complete for Piano-forte Solo, with Overture and whole of music. Fifty Cents each. Complete Overtures, and large collections of Vocal and Piano-forte Music, in Books, Fifty Cents each. The cheapest and most extensive catalogue of modern music in the world. Also, just ready, free to any address, BOOSEY & Co.'s Catalogue of their newest publications in full sheet or octavo size form. BOOSEY & CO., 644 Broadway, N. Y.

$325 A MONTH, AND EXPENSES.—28 new articles. H. B. SHAW, Alfred, Me.

THE Union Pacific
RAILROAD COMPANY
OFFER A LIMITED AMOUNT OF THEIR
First Mortgage Bonds
AT PAR.
NINE HUNDRED AND SIXTY MILES
of the line west from Omaha are now completed, and the work is going on through the winter. As the distance between the finished portion of the Union and Central Pacific Railroads is now less than 400 miles, and both companies are pushing forward the work with great energy, and expect over 80,000 men, there can be no doubt that the whole
GRAND LINE TO THE PACIFIC
Will be Open for Business in the Summer of 1869.
The regular Government Commissioners have pronounced the Union Pacific Railroad to be FIRST-CLASS in every respect, and the Special Commission appointed by the President says:
"Taken as a whole, THE UNION PACIFIC RAILROAD HAS BEEN WELL CONSTRUCTED, AND THE GENERAL ROUTE FOR THE LINE EXCEEDINGLY WELL SELECTED. The energy and perseverance with which the work has been urged forward, and the rapidity with which it has been executed, are without parallel in history, and in grandeur and magnitude of undertaking it has never been equaled." The Report states that any deficiencies that exist are only those incident to all new roads, and that could not have been avoided without materially retarding the progress of the great work. Such deficiencies are supplied by all railroad companies after the completion of the line, when and wherever experience shows them to be necessary. The Report concludes by saying that "the country has reason to congratulate itself that the great work of national importance is so rapidly approaching completion under such favorable auspices."
The Bonds are issued from the Government of 12,800 acres of land per mile, the company is entitled to a subsidy in U. S. Bonds on its line as completed and accepted, at the average rate of about $30,000 per mile, according to the difficulties encountered, for which the Government takes a second lien as security. The company have already received $25,000 per mile of subsidy, of which $1,280,000 was paid December 6th, and $640,000 December 14th.
Government Aid—Security of the Bonds.
By its charter the company is permitted to issue its own FIRST MORTGAGE BONDS to the same amount as the Government Bonds, and no more. These Bonds are a First Mortgage upon the whole road and all its equipments. Such a mortgage upon what, for a long time, will be the only railroad connecting the Atlantic and Pacific States, takes the highest rank as a safe security.
The price for the present is PAR, and accrued interest at 6 per cent. from July 1, 1868, in currency.
Subscriptions will be received in New York,
At the Company's Office,
No. 20 Nassau Street,
and by
John J. Cisco & Son, Bankers,
No. 59 Wall Street,
and by the Company's advertised agents throughout the United States.
Bonds sent free, but parties subscribing through local agents will look to them for the delivery.
JOHN J. CISCO, Treasurer,
December 15th, 1868. New York.

SPIT, SPIT;
HAWK, HAWK. Why don't you use WOLCOTT'S ANTIBILIATOR—plut bottles $1—and get rid of Catarrh? Sold by all druggists.

A GOOD THING.—A PICTORIAL MAGAZINE OF HUMAN SCIENCE, for 1869, containing Rhinology, Physiognomy, Physiology, Phrenology, and Psychology; their application to HUMAN IMPROVEMENT—Physically, Intellectually, and Spiritually. The PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL is only $3 a year; or, to Clergymen and to clubs of ten, only $2; with either of HARPER'S Periodicals, only $6. Address
S. R. WELLS, No. 389 Broadway, New York.

IT is a first-class family journal.—N. Y. Evening Post. Edited with marked ability.—Boston Journal. Very Instructive.—N. Y. Christian Advocate. Always up to a high standard of liberality.—Medical Gazette. Filled with valuable matter.—Examiner. Deservedly popular all over the land.—Inland Ocean.
AGENTS WANTED. Liberal Premiums given.
SAMPLE NUMBER, THIRTY CENTS.

ARTIFICIAL GEMS AND JEWELRY.
Diamonds, Pearls, Rubies, Sapphires, & Emeralds (Set to GOLD and SILVER) that can not be distinguished in wear from real Jewels;
AMBER AND JET.
At 808 BROADWAY, OPPOSITE ELEVENTH STREET.
P. H. MAGAURAN.

DUNHAM & SONS,
MANUFACTURERS OF
PIANO-FORTES.
WAREROOMS,
No. 831 Broadway, New York.
SEND FOR CIRCULAR.

THE YOUTH'S COMPANION
WEEKLY PAPER FOR YOUNG PEOPLE AND THE FAMILY.
Illustrated by Finely-Executed Cuts.
It is an eight-page paper, and, without exception, the Largest and Cheapest Juvenile Publication in the country.
Some of the most Fascinating and Brilliant Writers contribute to its columns, among whom are MRS. HARRIET BEECHER STOWE,
E. STUART PHELPS,
MRS. LOUISE CHANDLER MOULTON,
FAULDU CHARLES, and others.
Its articles are mostly original, thoroughly practical in their character, wide-awake, and entertaining.
Subscription price, $1 50 a year. For sale by all Newsdealers. Price, Four Cents Single Copy.
With a circulation of nearly 50,000 each week, the Companion is one of the best mediums for advertising in New England. For Terms, address T. C. EVANS, Advertising Agent, 106 Washington Street, Boston.
PERRY MASON & CO., Publishers, Boston.

IF An Agent's Book. IF
LOSSING'S 1812.
AGENTS WANTED
FOR LOSSING'S PICTORIAL HISTORY
OF THE
WAR OF 1812.
TO BE COMPLETED IN TWELVE FORTNIGHTLY NUMBERS.
FIFTY CENTS A NUMBER.
Nearly 1000 Illustrations.
PICTORIAL FIELD-BOOK OF THE WAR OF 1812; or, Illustrations, by Pen and Pencil, of the History, Biography, Scenery, Relics, and Traditions of the Last War for American Independence. By BENSON J. LOSSING, LL.D. With 883 Engravings on Wood, by Lossing and Barritt, chiefly from Original Sketches by the Author. 1068 pages, 8vo.
The Cheapest and Handsomest Subscription-Book Ever Published.
This superb illustrated work, similar in plan to the author's Field-Book of the Revolution, forms a connected history of the whole country from the close of the Revolution, in 1783, to the end of the second war with Great Britain, in 1815. It is the most perfect, attractive, and useful volume, and indeed the only one on the subject ever offered to the public.
NOW READY.
Specimen Numbers sent postpaid on receipt of 25 cents.
HARPER & BROTHERS, PUBLISHERS, NEW YORK.

MUSIC OMNIBUS.
1600 of the best Songs, Polkas, Schottisches, Waltzes, Quadrilles, Marches, Operas, with calls and figures for dancing written out in full, arranged for the VIOLIN, FLUTE, PIANO, CLARIONET, &c.
Price, $1 25. Mailed.
FREDERICK BLUME, 1125 BROADWAY, 53 door above 25th St. Branch, 105 BOWERY.

SOZODONT.
An Eminent Chemist says:
439 BROADWAY, N. Y., July 8, 1865.
I have made a chemical analysis of the preparation for the teeth known as "SOZODONT," for Messrs. HALL & RUCKEL, the object of the analysis being to ascertain whether it contains substances detrimental to the teeth or gums.
An impartial sample of the "SOZODONT" was purchased by me personally from a leading Drug House of this city, and carefully analyzed for acids and other corrosive or injurious ingredients likely to have a deleterious action on the teeth or gums, but nothing of no objectionable character was found in its composition.
JULIUS G. POHLE, M.D., Analytical Chemist.
Late of Dr. JAS. R. CHILTON & CO.
TILTON'S STATIONERY.
Initial Stamping done without extra Charge.
OUR BOXES, Containing 1 Quire Note, filled with assorted sizes of paper, with envelopes to match. The FASHION BOX, French paper, of different patterns and sizes, with envelopes to match.
Price of either Box, $1 00.
Stamped with any initial desired, and
SENT BY MAIL,
postpaid, on receipt of price. Address orders to
TILTON & COMPANY,
161 Washington St., Boston.
IMPROVED ALUMINUM BRONZE HUNTING-CASED WATCHES.

$500.
I will cheerfully give the above amount to any one who can surpass my imitation of Gold Watches. Description sent free. Circulars and goods sent free on demand.
AMBER AND JET
from $16 to $20.
They are sent C. O. D. with privilege. Address JULES D. HUGUENIN VUILLEMIN, No. 44 NASSAU STREET, N. Y.
Call and examine for yourself.
MAGIC, MYSTERY, & MIRTH.
Sent free on receipt of a stamp, by HARPER & BRO., 169 NASSAU ST., New York.
STATE RIGHTS for sale of a valuable Patent lately secured—which fortune in any State. Address INVENTOR, Box 2438, New York. Sample $2.

HARPER'S PERIODICALS.
MAGAZINE, 1869. WEEKLY, 1869.
BAZAR.
Harper's Magazine, Weekly, and Bazar. These three periodicals fully meet the high encomiums which they have received from the press, and the support which has been given them by the reading public. Each number we consider their beautiful and instructive illustrations, which have been furnished at no expense of domestic or foreign importance—their literary merit, which has given them the highest place in the current literature—or their judicious editorial management—they must be considered unsurpassed by those of any similarly periodicals in the world.—The Advance: Chicago.
Now is the Time to Subscribe.
"Unquestionably the best sustained work of the kind in the world."
Harper's Magazine.
The most popular Monthly in the world.—New York Observer.
It is one of the wonders of journalism—the editorial management of HARPER'S MAGAZINE.
It meets precisely the popular taste, furnishing a pleasing and instructive variety of reading for all.—Zion's Herald, Boston.
HARPER'S MAGAZINE by far more reading-matter for the money than any American magazine; and we think we may say that it is upon the whole the best family magazine in the world.—Packard's Monthly, Jan., 1869.
In this specialty of illustrated articles HARPER'S stands unrivaled and unapproached. Its literary superiority been abused, since the artistic excellence of its cuts has been so steadily improved the last few years studied as if it were pushed by competition.—New York Times.
"A complete Pictorial History of the Times."
Harper's Weekly
AN ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER.
The model newspaper of our country—complete in all the departments of an American family paper.—HARPER'S WEEKLY has earned for itself a place by its title, "A Journal of Civilization."—N. Y. Evening Post.
The articles upon public questions which appear in HARPER'S WEEKLY from week to week form a remarkable series of brief political essays. They are distinguished by clear and pointed statements, by good common-sense, by independence and breadth of view. They are the expression of mature conviction, high principle, and honest zeal. They are, in short, among the best newspaper writing of the time.—North American Review.
An Illustrated Weekly Journal of Fashion, Literature, and Art.
Harper's Bazar.
A Supplement containing numerous full-sized Patterns of useful articles accompanies the paper every fortnight, and occasionally a large Colored Fashion Plate.
HARPER'S BAZAR contains 16 folio pages of the size of HARPER'S WEEKLY, printed on superfine calendered paper, and is published weekly.
HARPER'S BAZAR contains, besides pictures, patterns, etc., a variety of matter of especial use and interest to the family circle. Fashion, dress, and housekeeping in all its branches; its editorial matter is especially adapted to the circle it is intended to interest and instruct; and it has, besides, good stories and literary matter of merit.—New York Evening Post.
It has the merit of being sensible, of conveying information, of giving practical pictures in every department, and of being well stocked with good reading matter.—Watchman and Reflector.
To dress according to HARPER'S BAZAR will be to dress in accordance with the wishes of the women of America.—Boston Transcript.
TERMS FOR 1869:
HARPER'S MAGAZINE, ONE YEAR..... $4 00
HARPER'S WEEKLY, ONE YEAR..... 4 00
HARPER'S BAZAR, ONE YEAR..... 4 00
HARPER'S MAGAZINE, HARPER'S WEEKLY, and HARPER'S BAZAR, to one address, for one year, $10 00; or any two for $7 00.
An Extra Copy of either the MAGAZINE, WEEKLY, or BAZAR will be supplied gratis for every Club of FIVE Subscribers at $4 00 each, without extra copy.
The Postage which the United States is for the MAGAZINE 36 cents a year, for the WEEKLY or BAZAR 20 cents a year, which must be paid quarterly, at the office where received. Subscriptions from the British Provinces must be accompanied with 24 cents additional for the MAGAZINE, or 10 cents for the WEEKLY or BAZAR, to prepay the United States postage.
Subscribers to the MAGAZINE, WEEKLY, or BAZAR will find on each wrapper the Number with which their subscription commences. Subscriptions are always taken to commence with the first Number of the current volume.
The Volumes of the WEEKLY commence with the first Number of each year. When a specific time is not mentioned, it will be understood that the subscriber wishes to commence with the Number next after the receipt of his order.
In remitting by mail, a Post-Office Order or Draft payable to the order of HARPER & BROTHERS is preferred to Bank Notes, since, should the Order or Draft be lost or stolen, it can be renewed without loss to the owner.
In ordering the MAGAZINE, the WEEKLY, or the BAZAR, the name, post-office, county, and State should be plainly written. When the direction is to be changed, both the old and the new one must be given.
TERMS FOR ADVERTISING IN HARPER'S PERIODICALS.
Harper's Magazine.—Whole Page, $250; Half Page, $125; Quarter Page, $70—each insertion; or, for a less space, $1 50 per Line, each insertion.
Harper's Weekly.—Outside Page, $1 50 per Line; Outside Page, $2 00 per Line—each insertion.
Harper's Bazar.—$1 00 per Line; Cuts and Display, $1 50 per Line—each insertion.
Address HARPER & BROTHERS, NEW YORK.

ESTABLISHED 1861.

THE

GREAT AMERICAN

TEA COMPANY

RECEIVE THEIR TEAS BY THE CARGO FROM THE BEST TEA DISTRICTS OF

CHINA AND JAPAN,

and sell them in quantities to suit customers

AT CARGO PRICES.

The Company have selected the following kinds from their stock, which they recommend to meet the wants of clubs. They are sold at cargo prices, the same as the Company sell them in New York, as the list of prices will show.

PRICE LIST OF TEAS.

OOLONG (black), 75c., 80c., 90c.; best, $1 per lb.
MIXED (green and black), 75c., 80c., 90c.; best, $1 per lb.
ENGLISH BREAKFAST (black), 80c., 90c., $1, $1 10; best, $1 25 per lb.
IMPERIAL (green), 80c., 90c., $1, $1 10; best, $1 25 per lb.
YOUNG HYSON (green), 80c., 90c., $1, $1 10; best, $1 25 per lb.
UNCOLORED JAPAN, 90c., $1, $1 10; best, $1 25 per lb.
GUNPOWDER (green), 75c., 80c., 90c.; best, $1 per lb.

COFFEES ROASTED AND GROUND DAILY.

Ground Coffee, 50 cents, 70 cents, 80 cents, 85 cents; best, 90 cents per pound.

Hotels, saloons, boarding-house keepers, and Families who now large quantities of Coffee, can economize in that article by using our which we sell at the low price of 30 cents per pound, and warrant to give the best satisfaction.

FRENCH BREAKFAST AND DINNER COFFEE,

ROASTED (unground), 30c., 35c.; best, 40c. per lb.
GREEN (unroasted), 25c., 30c., 35c.; best, 35c. per lb.

CLUB ORDER.

To the GREAT AMERICAN TEA COMPANY,
31 and 33 Vesey Street, New York.

GENTS: The people here will not let me alone. They say I know what tea is, and what it is not. I have got to send another order for them. So here you have it; in the shape of a club order. Please send over the 6th of May last, making five hundred and forty-four dollars and sixty-four cents. I hope you received you since that date.

Hoping this will be as good as former packages, I remain

10 lbs. Uncolor'd Japan, Mrs. Kempton...at $1 00...$10 00
1 " Imperial.....Mrs. Bird.....at 1 00.....1 00
1 " Young Hyson...A. L. Cummings, at 1 25.....1 25
1 " Imperial.....A. L. Cummings, at 1 25.....1 25
1 " Coffee.....J. L. Chapman...at 40.....1 60
1 " Gunpowder.....A. Watrous...at 1 00.....1 00
1 " Imperial.....T. Taylor.....at 1 25.....1 00
1 " Young Hyson...T. Taylor.....at 1 25.....1 00
1 " Coffee.....at 80.....1 60
1 " Gunpowder...John Stephenson...at 1 00.....1 00
1 " Young Hyson...Wm. H. Dorsty...at 1 25.....1 00
1 " do. do. ...Mrs. Hilton.....at 1 25.....1 00
1 " do. do. ...N. Newcomb...at 1 25.....1 25
1 " do. do. ...Scott Campbell...at 1 25.....1 00
1 " Gunpowder.....Judge Miller...at 1 50.....1 50
1 " do. do. ...A. Gale.....at 1 00.....1 00
2 " Imperial.....Mrs. Bird.....at 1 25.....2 50

$74 65

Parties sending Club or other orders for less than Thirty Dollars will be charged a Post-office Draft Money with their orders, to save the expense of collections by express; but larger orders we will forward by express, to "collect on delivery."

Hereafter we will send a complimentary package to the party getting up the Club. Our profits are small, but we will be as liberal as we can afford. We send no complimentary packages for clubs of less than Thirty Dollars.

Parties getting their Teas from us may confidently rely upon receiving them pure, as they always come direct from the Custom-House stores to our warehouses.

We request that the people we sell to give entire satisfaction. If they are not satisfactory they can be returned at our expense within 30 days, and have the money refunded.

N.B.—Inhabitants of villages and towns where a branch house is desirable, by clubbing together can reduce the cost of their Teas and Coffees about one third. Address Express charges by sending directly to

"THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA COMPANY."

CAUTION.—As some concerns, in this city and other places, imitate our name and style of advertising and doing business, we hereby state that our friends should be very careful to write our address in full, and also to put on the words of our Post-Office box, as appears in this advertisement. This will prevent their orders from getting into the hands of base imitators.

POST-OFFICE Orders and Drafts make payable to the order of

"THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA COMPANY."

Direct Letters and Orders as below (no more, no less):

GREAT AMERICAN TEA COMPANY,
Nos. 31 and 33 Vesey Street,
Post-Office Box 5,643, New York City.

100,000 Copies Sold of the

JUBILATE,

and 125,000 of the

HARP OF JUDAH.

Two admirable books of Sacred Music for Choirs, Singing-Schools, Musical Conventions, &c. By L. O. EMERSON. Every Choir and Singing-School should have them, for they will be sure of giving satisfaction. Price of each, $1 50. Specimpages sent gratis. A liberal discount made on quantities. OLIVER DITSON & CO., Publishers, 277 Washington St., Boston; C. H. DITSON & CO., 711 Broadway, New York.

$25 KNITTING MACHINE.

WANTED—Buyers and Sellers for the BICKFORD KNITTING MACHINE, the most reliable invention for the household ever made. It knits stocking stitches as fast as you can turn the wheel, and sets up its own work. Parties are making from $2 to $5 per day at their homes. Our new Book of instructions is plain and explicit. BICKFORD KNITTING MACHINE CO., 28 Bromfield St., Boston, Ms.

NORTON & CO.,

AMERICAN BANKERS—Paris, France,

Will remove on the 15th of October to their new Offices under the Grand Hotel—No. 6 Rue Scribe. Travellers, Americans in all every possible convenience in this new establishment. Letters of Credit cashed, and every attention guaranteed.

The Celebrated Imitation Gold

$15 HUNTING WATCHES $20.

THE COLLINS OROIDE WATCH FACTORY.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

Our superior Oroide Watches having recently been imitated, and worthless Watches sold in New York, Boston, Chicago, and other cities, represented as our Watches, we hereby caution the public against them, and give notice that we are in no way responsible for these bogus concerns, and only those purchasing directly from us can be sure of genuine Watch of our manufacture. We have recently greatly improved our Oroide in appearance and durability, and, to protect the public from deceptive breezing, we have named it the

"COLLINS METAL,"

and we give notice that any one making use of this name will be prosecuted to the extent of the law.

This metal has all the brilliancy and durability of Gold: can not be distinguished from it by the best judges; retains its color (all worn out, and as much as gold or gold excepting its intrinsic value. All our Gentlemen's Watches are Full-Jeweled Patent Levers; those for Ladies an improved Escapement, better than a Lever for a small Watch; all in Hunting-Cases, and fully guaranteed by special certificate. The Gift Watches are equal in neatness, style of finish, general appearance, and for time, to a Gold one costing $100. Those for $20 are of extra fine finish, and will be fully equal to a Gold Watch costing $200. Chains of every style, from $2 to $6. Also, Jewelry of the Collins Metal in every style.

TO CLUBS.—Where four Watches are ordered at one time, we will send one extra Watch free of charge.

Goods sent to any part of the United States by express, to be paid for on delivery. Money need not be sent with the order, as bills can be paid when goods are taken from the express office. Customers must pay all express charges. We employ no Agents; orders must therefore be sent directly to us. Customers in the city may call and examine goods.

Nos. 37 and 39 Nassau Street, New York, Opposite the Post-Office (Up Stairs).

C. E. COLLINS & CO.

Alaska Diamonds.

The new ALASKA DIAMOND, or carbonado crystal, equal in brilliancy to the real diamond, mounted at our own factory, in artistic diamond settings, guaranteed fine gold, and sold by us at one-tenth the cost of the real diamonds, to which they are equal in every respect except intrinsic value.

Look at our Price-List.

Finger-Rings, $4, $5, $6, $8, $10, $12, $15, $20, $25, $30, $40, $50, $75, $100, $125, $150, $175, $200, $225, $250, $275, $300, $325, $350, $375, $400, $425, $450, $475, $500, $525, $550, $575, $600, $625, $650, $675, $700, $725, $750, $775, $800, $825, $850, $875, $900, $925, $950, $975, $1,000.

Cluster Finger-Rings, $10, $12, $15, $20, $25, $30, $35, $40, $45, $50, $55, $60, $65, $70, $75, $80, $85, $90, $95, $100, $110, $120, $130, $140, $150, $160, $170, $180, $190, $200, $210, $220, $230, $240, $250, $260, $270, $280, $290, $300, $310, $320, $330, $340, $350, $360, $370, $380, $390, $400, $410, $420, $430, $440, $450, $460, $470, $480, $490, $500, $510, $520, $530, $540, $550, $560, $570, $580, $590, $600, $610, $620, $630, $640, $650, $660, $670, $680, $690, $700, $710, $720, $730, $740, $750, $760, $770, $780, $790, $800, $810, $820, $830, $840, $850, $860, $870, $880, $890, $900, $910, $920, $930, $940, $950, $960, $970, $980, $990, $1,000.

Ear-Drops, $3, $4, $5, $6, $7, $8, $9, $10, $11, $12, $13, $14, $15, $16, $17, $18, $19, $20, $21, $22, $23, $24, $25, $26, $27, $28, $29, $30, $31, $32, $33, $34, $35, $36, $37, $38, $39, $40, $41, $42, $43, $44, $45, $46, $47, $48, $49, $50, $51, $52, $53, $54, $55, $56, $57, $58, $59, $60, $61, $62, $63, $64, $65, $66, $67, $68, $69, $70, $71, $72, $73, $74, $75, $76, $77, $78, $79, $80, $81, $82, $83, $84, $85, $86, $87, $88, $89, $90, $91, $92, $93, $94, $95, $96, $97, $98, $99, $100.

Cluster Ear-Drops, $6, $7, $8, $9, $10, $11, $12, $13, $14, $15, $16, $17, $18, $19, $20, $21, $22, $23, $24, $25, $26, $27, $28, $29, $30, $31, $32, $33, $34, $35, $36, $37, $38, $39, $40, $41, $42, $43, $44, $45, $46, $47, $48, $49, $50, $51, $52, $53, $54, $55, $56, $57, $58, $59, $60, $61, $62, $63, $64, $65, $66, $67, $68, $69, $70, $71, $72, $73, $74, $75, $76, $77, $78, $79, $80, $81, $82, $83, $84, $85, $86, $87, $88, $89, $90, $91, $92, $93, $94, $95, $96, $97, $98, $99, $100.

Scarf-Pins, $3, $4, $5, $6, $7, $8, $9, $10, $11, $12, $13, $14, $15, $16, $17, $18, $19, $20, $21, $22, $23, $24, $25, $26, $27, $28, $29, $30, $31, $32, $33, $34, $35, $36, $37, $38, $39, $40, $41, $42, $43, $44, $45, $46, $47, $48, $49, $50, $51, $52, $53, $54, $55, $56, $57, $58, $59, $60, $61, $62, $63, $64, $65, $66, $67, $68, $69, $70, $71, $72, $73, $74, $75, $76, $77, $78, $79, $80, $81, $82, $83, $84, $85, $86, $87, $88, $89, $90, $91, $92, $93, $94, $95, $96, $97, $98, $99, $100.

Cluster Pins, $10 and $12; with tail, $20; Cross Pins, $6, $10, and $15. Sleeve Buttons, $6, $8, $10, and $15. Cluster Pins, $10 and $12; with tail, $20; Cross Pins, $6, $10, and $15. Sleeve Buttons, $6, $8, and $15.

We do our business direct from our factory, located in a city which has a world-wide reputation for its fine jewelry.

Orders less than $5 should be accompanied with P. O. Order or Registered Letter, and the goods sent free. Exceeding that amount, goods will be sent C. O. D., to pay all express charges. A Large Discount to the Trade.

STANLEY, WHIPPLE, & CO., Providence, R. I.

VELOCIPEDE WHEELS.

MANUFACTURED BY

S. N. BROWN & CO., Dayton, Ohio.

They also make a prime article of Spokes and Hubs for light Carriage and Buggy Wheels. Send for Price-List.

"IT STILL WAVES."—The "STAR-SPANGLED BANNER." Look at Feb. Number. Stories, Sensational, Romantic, Comical. Comic Pictures. 40 columns and 8 pages crammed full of splendid reading. Show your money by reading "Humbugs Exposed, That "32 Sewing Machine" and "Dollar Sewing Machine" humbug. Money Swindle, the "Butter" Humbug—all other Swindles and Humbugs—Read them in the "STAR-SPANGLED BANNER" for Feb. Only 75 cents a year, and the Publishers "IT'S WAVES." Are already with the Feb. Jan. No. can still be had. Now is THE TIME. Send 75 cents and receive the Feb. No. and the Numbers to all not perfectly satisfied. Feb. Number, with Extra Premium List, mailed free. Sold by Six Cents. Send for it. It will save you Dollars. Address "STAR-SPANGLED BANNER," Boston, N. H.

10TH THOUSAND HUNTER'S GUIDE AND ART OF TRAPPER'S COMPANION. How to hunt and trap all kinds of valuable game. How to Dress, Cure, Preserve furs, make Traps and Boats. A Maine trapper writes: "It's worth $5." I already with the help taught more game in two weeks than in all last winter." It will pay every Boy, Farmer, Trapper, &c., to own one. 9000 sold in two months. Only 25 cts.; Six for $1. Sent postpaid by HUNTER & CO., HINSDALE, N. H.

THE WILSON SHUTTLE SEWING MACHINES. Cheaper than Lows of others. Agents Wanted. Manufactured by the WILSON SEWING MACHINE CO., Cleveland, O.

DON'T YOU DO IT!—Don't get up One-Dollar-Sales Trade until you send for the NEW CIRCULAR OF BRUFF, PEIRCE, & CO., Gun One Dollar Store, 634 Tremont Row, Boston, Mass. Full description of our immense stock. Unprecedented inducements to Agents and Patrons.

75 YARDS a Club of 106. Other Club Supplies.

$10 A DAY FOR ALL. Stencil Tool samples free. Address A. J. FULLAM, Springfield, Vt.

HUNTING WATCHES

CASES

OF THE

COLLINS METAL

(IMPROVED OROIDE).

HOLIDAY PRESENTS. $10, $15, $20, $25.

GENUINE OROIDE GOLD WATCH CO.

Geneva, Switzerland.

Manufacture, on strictly scientific principles, style, finish, durability, and color (18 carat gold) a fac-similie of the most expensive and costly description of Gold Watches. They are manufactured with Hunting Cases. Ladies' and Gentlemens' Size for $10 and $15. Ladies' Patent Levers, $15. Ladies' Chronometers, $20. Ladies' Patent Levers, with Chronometer Balance, $25. Fac-Simile Waltham Patent Levers, $20; Chronometer Balance, $25. Elaborately engraved. Railroad Conductors, Engineers, Expressmen—the most exacting of our customers—have thoroughly demonstrated the strength, durability, accuracy, and utility of our celebrated watches, and pronounce them invaluable as reliable time-keepers. Each Watch warranted by special certificate from the Oroide Gold Watch Co. to be perfect time-keepers, and to retain their color equal to gold. Magnificent Oroide Gold Chains, $2, $6, $7, and $10. Express Co's will exhibit the Watch, &c., when requested, on receipt of express charges both ways. Expressed every where, to be paid for on delivery. Don't send orders to parties who make you pay for Watch before you see them. EXTRA WATCH FREE. The universal demand for our specialties have induced unprincipled persons to counterfeit our Watches and Trade-Marks, thereby seriously injuring the reputation of our Oroide Gold Watches. Beware of them.

JOHN FOGGAN, President Oroide Gold Watch Co.

Only Office in the United States No. 78 Nassau Street New York.

HITCHCOCK'S HALF DIME MUSIC.

VOCAL MUSIC, WITH PIANO ACCOMPANIMENT.

NOW READY.

No. 1. Captain Jinks.
" 2. Won't you tell me why, Robbin?
" 3. We'd Butter bide a while Here.
" 4. Blue Juniata.

No. 5. Not for Joseph.
" 6. Good-bye Sweetheart
" 7. I Really Don't think I shall Marry.
" 8. Praise of Tears.
" 9. Champagne Charlie.

Other popular melodies are in Press. Piano Music in Press. Each of these pieces cover two pages, printed in large, clear type, on fine tinted paper. Sent by mail, postpaid. Can be had of News Dealers, and fee, by mail, by sending the price to the Publisher,

BEN. W. HITCHCOCK,
No. 1 Nassau Street, New York City.
Or 164 Vine Street, Cincinnati, Ohio.

WANTED—AGENTS—$75 to $200 per month, everywhere, male and female, to introduce the GENUINE IMPROVED COMMON SENSE FAMILY SEWING MACHINE. This machine will stitch, hem, fell, tuck, quilt, cord, bind, braid and embroider in a most superior manner. Price only $15. It is fully warranted for five years. We pay $75 per month and expenses, or allow a large commission, to agents making less than that amount. It makes the "Lock Stitch" alike on both sides, and will sew, seam and fell from fifteen hundred to two thousand stitches per minute. It is the only low-priced machine in the market which cannot be run under the head of "chain stitch" machines, and is confidently recommended to the public as the best low-priced machine ever offered for sale. Address, or apply personally to, SECOMB & GRAY, Pittsburgh, Pa.; BOSTON, MASS.; or ST. LOUIS, MO.

CAUTION.—Do not be bamboozled by other parties palming off worthless machines, under the same sense or other wise. Ours is the only genuine and really practical cheap family machine.

WANTED — AGENTS — To Sell the AMERICAN LIGHTNING CHURN.

Price $10. Is simplest, cheapest and best Churning Machine in use. Churns in from 2 to 5 minutes. Agents wanted in every town. Inducements to Agents. Address, AMERICAN KNITTING MACHINE CO., Boston, Mass., or Ft. Lyon, Col. T.

Honey, Glycerine, Elder Flower, Bouquet, and Palm.

In Quality, Style, and Perfume warranted equal to the English, and sold fully 50 per cent. cheaper, when accounts for the great falling off in the demand for the foreign soaps, and the unprecedented success of the AMERICAN COMPANY TOILET SOAPS, now sold over where in the United States.

McKEONE, VAN HAAGEN & CO., Sole Manuf'rs,
PHILADELPHIA and NEW YORK.

PARLOR FIREWORKS.—A new winter evening entertainment. Specialty for agents. Price 25 cents per package. Mailed, postpaid, on receipt of the price, by RICHARDSON & CO., 167 Nassau St., N. Y.

WANTED.—SALESMEN TO TRAVEL for Good Manufacturing Company, and sell by sample. Call at Manufactory, 149 Fulton Address, with stamp, A. D. HAMILTON & CO., 413 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, Pa.

"RENEW"! "RENEW"! — HARPER'S WEEKLY, for 1869. Terms, $4 a year. PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL, $3 00, sent a year for $6 00 by

S. R. WELLS, 389 Broadway, New York.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT will cure the worst case of chapped and cracked lips and hands in one night, producing a soft ripe color in the lips that nothing else will give.

Frank Leslie's Chimney Corner.

A purely literary periodical. Excluding events of the day, its aim, as its title indicates, is to furnish amusement for the leisure hour. Its contents consist principally of original stories by able writers—including a serial, sequences of remarkable adventures, biographical sketches of self-made men—with portraits, descriptions of manners and customs in remote countries, short poems, fairy stories, enigmas, conundrums, humbles, &c., illustrated with large and spirited engravings, of which there are from fifteen to twenty in each weekly issue.

Subscription price, $4 per year.

Frank Leslie's Lady's Magazine.

The handsom fashion-period in America. Each monthly number contains a large colored plate of the latest fashions, from designs sent from Paris as soon as invented, while it also has published simultaneously in New York and Paris; also a four-page uncolored fashion-plate, illustrating all the new and useful styles. These are accompanied with full descriptions and explanations with numerous other illustrations. Every number contains an original letter from Paris describing the costumes worn by ladies of the highest rank, and gives key-notes to fashionable society. The literary portion of this Magazine comprises a continued story, numerous interesting tales, poetry, anecdotes, &c. The whole profusely illustrated with fine engravings. Subscription price, $3 00 per year.

Subscriptions should be sent to

FRANK LESLIE,
537 Pearl Street, New York City.

U.S BLUE BOOK, A REGISTER OF ALL OFFICERS, CIVIL AND MILITARY, &c., under the U. S. Government, and the SALARIES. Price, Cloth, $1; Paper, 50c. Agents wanted in every City and Town. Sent free of postage on receipt of price. Address DIMMICK & CO., Publishers, 111 Fulton St., N. Y.

FRESH BUTTER 20 CTS. A POUND.

THE GREATEST INVENTION OF THE AGE.

Two pounds of Butter can be made from one quart of milk in from 3 to 5 minutes, at a cost of 20 cents a pound, by the use of our LITTLE BUTTER POWDER. Simple in operation, harmless in use.

Sent free to any address on receipt of price. Full directions. AGENTS WANTED every where to introduce this great discovery. Address

GOSHEN BUTTER CO., 102 Nassau St., New York.

ARCHITECTURAL DEPARTMENT OF THE

Novelty Iron Works.

Nos. 77 and 83 Liberty Street,
Cor. Broadway, New York.

Plain and Ornamental Iron Work of all kinds for Building.

WHY will you work for $1 50 per day, when you We can make $30 a week in our new business? Can be carried in the vest pocket. Sells at sight. Sample articles never before introduced, and wanted in every house. Circulars sent free. Address, with stamp, WALTER HOLT & CO., 102 Nassau St., N. Y.

25 CENTS.—Now is the time to subscribe to "MAPLE LEAVES," the best, the most popular, and the cheapest monthly published. Each number contains many interest and valuable articles for only 25 cents per year. Specimen copy sent on receipt of stamp to pay postage. Address O. A. ROORBACH, 102 Nassau St., N. Y.

100 PHOTOGRAPHS OF BEAUTIFUL WOMEN and Children sent to any address for $1 00. Address C. SEYMOUR, HOLLAND, New York.

The New Books of the Season

PUBLISHED BY

HARPER & BROTHERS, NEW YORK.

Sent by mail, postage paid, on receipt of price.

DILKE'S GREATER BRITAIN. Greater Britain: a Record of Travel in Anglo-speaking Countries during the Years 1866 and 1867. In two vols. 12mo, Cloth, $3 50.

BELLOWS'S TRAVELS, Complete. The Old World in its Web of Life and Progress. Cloth, $2 50.

1868. By HENRY W. BELLOWS. 2 vols., 12mo, Cloth, $2 50. Vol. II. just ready.

ABBOTT'S LIFE OF CHRIST. Jesus of Nazareth: his Life and Teachings; Founded on the Four Gospels, and Illustrated by Researches into Modern Customs, Religious Beliefs, and Political Institutions of His Times. By LYMAN ABBOTT. With Engings by Dore, De Laroche, Feau, and others. Crown 8vo, Cloth, $2 50; Half Calf, $4 50.

DU CHAILLU'S WILD LIFE UNDER THE EQUATOR. Wild Life under the Equator. Narrated by Young People. By PAUL B. DU CHAILLU, Author of "Discoveries in Equatorial Africa," "Adventures in Africa," "Journey to Ashango Land," &c. With numerous Engravings. 12mo, Cloth, $1 75.

MISS BROUGHTON'S NOVELS. Adventures in the Apache Country: a Tour through Arizona and Northern Mexico. With Notes on the Silver Region of Nevada. By J. ROSS BROWNE, Author of "Yusef," "Crusoe's Island," "Land of Fire," "Peril of Deep Money," "The Land of Thor," &c., &c. With Illustrations. 12mo, Cloth, $2 50; Half Calf, $4 50.

BECHER'S SERMONS. Complete in Two Volumes. Sermons by HENRY WARD BEECHER, Plymouth Church, Brooklyn. Selected from Published and Unpublished Discourses, and Revised by their Author. In Two Volumes, 8vo. With Steel Portrait by Halpin. Cloth, $5 00.

DALTON'S PHYSIOLOGY. A Treatise on Physiology and Hygiene. For Schools, Families, and Colleges. By J. C. DALTON, M.D., Professor of Physiology in the College of Physicians and Surgeons, N.Y. With Illustrations. 12mo, Cloth, $2 00; Leather, $2 50.

SOL. SMITH'S THEATRICAL MANAGEMENT. Theatrical Management in the West and South for Thirty Years. Interspersed with Anecdotes and Sketches, Autobiographically given by SOL. SMITH, Retired Actor. With Fifteen Illustrations and a Portrait of the Author. 8vo, Cloth, $2 00; Paper, $1 50.

The New Novels.

NATURE'S NOBLEMAN. By the Author of "Hagarene's Record," &c. 8vo, Paper, 50 cents.

THE WOMAN'S KINGDOM. A Love Story. By the Author of "John Halifax." Illustrations. 8vo, Paper, $1 00; Cloth, $1 50.

THE GORDIAN KNOT. By SHIRLEY BROOKS. 8vo, Paper, 50 cents.

THE MOONSTONE. By WILKIE COLLINS. Illustrations. 8vo, Cloth, $2 00; Paper, $1 50.

HARPER & BROTHERS will send any of the above books by mail, postage paid, to any part of the United States, on receipt of the price.

A SCHOOL FOR SAVAGES; or, Teaching the Young Idea not to Shoot.

BIG INJUN. "White man, hold on; we want to Big Talkee."
GENERAL SHERIDAN. "No, no. I'll Whip you first, then you can Big Talkee afterward."

POLICEMAN. "Hallo! What's the Matter—are you Hurt?"
BOFFIN (feebly). "Not (hic) least in the World. Shimply (hic) waitin' for a Fren'!"

Sterling Silver Ware,
AND
Fine Electro-Plated Ware,
of the following trade-marks:

Trade-Mark for Silver. GORHAM MFG. Co. Trade-Mark for Electro-Plate.

MANUFACTURED BY THE
GORHAM MANUFACTURING CO.,
PROVIDENCE, R. I.

Orders received from the Trade only, but these goods may be obtained from responsible dealers every where.
GORHAM MANUFACTURING CO.

GET THE BEST ORGANS,
AT PRICES OF INFERIOR WORK.

New Inventions; New Styles; Greatly Reduced Prices; A First-Class Organ for $50; Lowest Prices Printed and alike to all; New Illustrated Catalogue now ready, and free to every applicant.

The MASON & HAMLIN ORGAN CO.,
154 TREMONT ST., BOSTON, or 596 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

PRINCE & COS. ORGANS AND MELODEONS. 43,000, now in use. BUFFALO, N. Y. CHICAGO, ILL.

Merwin, Taylor, & Simpkins,
Manufacturers, Importers, and Jobbers of GUNS, AMERICAN CUTLERY, FISHING-TACKLE, SPORTING GOODS, &c., &c. Sole Agents of W. H. PAYNE'celebrated Breech-Loading Shot-Guns. BALLARD RIFLES and SHOT-GUNS; EAGLE ARMS CO.'s Front-loading Cartridge Revolvers; Colt's Model Revolvers, and other celebrated Arms and Sporting Goods. Particular attention given to orders by mail.
285 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.
Illustrated Catalogues sent on application.

DON'T READ THIS
BUT CALL AT HALSTED'S AND TRY FOR YOUR SKATES. ALL THE LATEST STYLES at REDUCED PRICES. 740 BROADWAY & 164 FULTON ST., N. Y.

MARVIN CO.'s
CHROME IRON SAFES
ARE THE BEST IN THE WORLD.
265 Broadway, N. Y.

BELLE MAHONE'S REPLY,
"At the Gate I wait for Thee." Beautiful New Song and Chorus. Sent to any address on receipt of 30 cts.
S. BRAINARD & SONS, Cleveland, O.

CALENBERG & VAUPEL'S
AGRAFFE PIANOS
RECEIVED THE FIRST PREMIUM IN 1868.
Warerooms and Factory, 393 & 395 West 36th St., N.Y.

COLD WEATHER DOES NOT CHAP or roughen the skin after using WRIGHT'S ALCOVATED GLYCERINE TABLET OF SOLIDIFIED GLYCERINE. Its daily use makes the skin delicately soft and beautiful. Sold by all Druggists.
R. & G. A. WRIGHT, Philadelphia.

CONSULAR SEAL
CHAMPAGNE,
AS IMPORTED FOR NEW YORK UNION CLUB.
TOMES, MELVAIN & CO., Sole Importers,
No. 6 MAIDEN LANE, New York.

FREDERICKTOWN, O., November 2, 1868.
LIPPINCOTT & BAKEWELL:
Dear Sirs,—For the benefit of all whose desires or necessities make it their business to chop with an axe, I would say: Try the Red Jacket. It cuts deeper than the common bit. Being round on the cut, it does not stick in the wood. Every chopper with the common axe must discover that there is as much labor and strength expended in taking the axe out of the cut as in making the blow. This with the Red Jacket is all avoided, and from one third to one half the labor is saved in cutting the same quantity. By putting in the same labor that is necessary with a common axe, you can easily make at least thirty-three per cent. more wood in the same time. You are safe in letting any honest man try your Red Jacket on these tests, and if it fails refund him his money.
Respectfully yours, HARRY BALDWIN.
For sale by all responsible hardware dealers and the manufacturers, LIPPINCOTT & BAKEWELL, Pittsburgh, Pa., Sole Owners of Colburn's and Red Jacket Patents.

SOMETHING for CHRISTMAS.
Nothing can be more acceptable as a Present for Christmas and New Year's than a GOOD SEWING MACHINE. Such is the "ELDORADO," adapted to all kinds of family work. There is none better. Every Machine warranted to give perfect satisfaction, or money will be refunded after a fair trial.

BICKFORD KNITTING MACHINE,
One of the best, for all kinds of Knitting, in the world. Price, $30.

DEALERS IN
SILK, COTTON, MACHINE-NEEDLES, Shuttles, Bobbins, Oil, Machine-Trimmings, &c.
SALESROOMS: 595 BROADWAY, NEW YORK; 141 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON.
FOSTER & RICHARDSON,
Successors to C. PATCH & CO.

$20 A DAY—TO MALE AND FEMALE AGENTS.—to introduce the BUCKEYE $20 SHUTTLE SEWING MACHINES. Stitch alike on both sides, and is the only Licensed Shuttle Machine in the market sold for less than $40. All others are infringements, and the seller and user are liable to prosecution and imprisonment. Full particulars free.
W. A. HENDERSON & CO., Cleveland, Ohio.

SURGICAL TRACTS on the Treatment of Thirty Diseases which prospective are most subject, mailed for 8c Stamp. Reuse A. Dahels, M.D., Consulting and Operative Surgeon, 144 Lexington Ave., N.Y.

VELOCIPEDES.

WOOD BROTHERS,
596 Broadway, New York,
Manufacturers of fine Pleasure Carriages, are now prepared to receive orders for the celebrated
PARISIAN VELOCIPEDES,
of their own manufacture, which for durability and beauty of finish are not equaled.

IT WILL COST YOU
nothing but your address and return (8c.) postage, sent us before February 20th, to secure a chance of getting one of 1 Gold Watches or of 50 Gold Pens which we shall give away, without favor, on said date. Object: to introduce our manufactures.
I. E. BOSSARD & CO., Allentown, Pa.

KALDENBERG & SON, Manufacturers of Meerschaum Pipes and Holders, with Monograms, Portraits, &c. Wholesale and Retail. Repairing in all its branches. Send for Drawings and Price-List. BOX 6734. Stores: 23 Wall St., 6 John St., 71 Nassau St., corner John St.

DR. DE JONGH'S
LIGHT-BROWN COD LIVER OIL

Is convincingly proved by the highest medical testimony, and by the practical test of successful experience for twenty years in all parts of the world, to be, beyond all question, the purest, the most efficacious, the most palatable, and, from its rapid curative effects, the most economical of all kinds.

CONSUMPTION & DISEASES OF THE CHEST.
DR. DE JONGH'S Oil is administered with extraordinary success in cases of consumption and diseases of the chest. No remedy so rapidly restores the exhausted strength, improves the nutritive functions, stops emaciation, checks the perspirations, quiets the cough and expectoration, or produces a more marked and favorable influence on the local malady.

DEBILITY OF ADULTS AND CHILDREN.
DR. DE JONGH'S Oil possesses unequaled and peculiar nutritive and restorative properties; hence its marvelous efficacy in debility of adults and children. It revives the natural appetite, improves assimilation, and regulates the functions of digestion and assimilation; and entirely restores health and strength to the most feeble and deteriorated constitutions.

TRADE MARK.

DR. DE JONGH'S GENUINE OIL is shipped to the UNITED STATES in Imperial Half-Pint Bottles ONLY, sealed with a Patent Trade-Mark Capsule, a silver blue square, white top, stamped with a blue fish on a red shield, and the label, under the wrapper, on each bottle, bears THREE SIGNATURES, viz.: those of Dr. De Jongh; of Ansar, Harford & Co.; and of Edward Greet & Co.

SOLE CONSIGNEES,
ANSAR, HARFORD & CO., 77, Strand, London.
SOLE ACCREDITED AGENTS IN AMERICA,
EDW'D GREET & CO., 38, Vesey St., New York.
Sold by all Druggists, at $1.50 per Bottle.
☞ A Descriptive Pamphlet post free on application.

Henry Ward Beecher
PREACHING IN EVERY HOUSE EVERY SUNDAY.

PLYMOUTH PULPIT.
The Only Authorized Reports of Mr. Beecher's Discourses.
Issued weekly, in neat pamphlet form, well printed, on good paper, available for binding, containing Sermon and Prayer.
Price 8 cents; $8 per year; $1.76 per half year.
Subscriptions received by the publishers.
The Trade supplied by the American News Co.
CONANT'S PATENT BINDERS mailed free on receipt of 50 cents.
J. B. FORD & CO.,
164 Nassau St., Printing-House Square, New York.

THE AUTOMATIC CLOTHES WASHER and BOILER. John Rese, Pat. Nov. 29, 1864. Dispenses with labor, wear, and tear. Decided by the Patent Office to be the only original and first Self-Acting Portable Wash Boiler ever made.
(See Decision of the United States Patent Office, Nov. 3, 1868.)
From Journal New York State Fair, 1868.
"The operation of this machine was fully satisfactory, and the Committee award it the First Premium, for the reason that it did its work effectually without rubbing the clothes."
Simple Boiler, No. 8, medium size, $10; or parts for the improvement, with Royalty Stamp, $4. Send C.O.D. Liberal Terms offered to Dealers and reliable Agents.
SEND STAMP FOR CIRCULAR.
AUTOMATIC CLOTHES WASHER AND BOILER CO. DEPOT, 19 CORTLANDT STREET, NEW YORK.

Wm. Knabe & Co.
MAGNIFICENT
Grand, Square, and Upright PIANOS.
Unapproachable for their IMMENSE POWER OF TONE, GREAT SINGING QUALITY,
Evenness throughout the entire Scale, Easy Action, Workmanship, and Durability, and pronounced Unequaled by all Others.
FAMED ARTISTS OF THIS COUNTRY AND EUROPE.
Every Instrument Warranted for Ten Years.
WAREROOMS,
650 BROADWAY, New York.

J. BAUER & CO.,
General Agents and Manufacturers and Importers of Musical Instruments, Strings, and Musical Merchandize.

J. C. HULL'S SON,
New York.
BAY RUM SOAP
The Best Soap in use,
NONE BETTER IMPORTED.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

A JOURNAL OF CIVILIZATION.

VOL. XIII.—No. 630.] NEW YORK, SATURDAY, JANUARY 23, 1869. [SINGLE COPIES, TEN CENTS
$4 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the Year 1869, by Harper & Brothers, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court of the United States, for the Southern District of New York.

823 A H Reading Room 828

THE HARP GIRL.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.
SATURDAY, JANUARY 23, 1869.

INDEPENDENT JOURNALISM.

THE imprisonment of MR. BOWLES for a night was followed by an invitation to a public dinner, signed by the Governor of Massachusetts and many of the most prominent citizens of Boston. MR. BOWLES declined the dinner in a letter which is an admirable plea for the independence of the newspaper press. Indeed, as journalism enlists the services of more and more men of ability and experience whose success puts them beyond the necessity of selling their principles with their papers, it has the opportunity of becoming a greater power than ever, and of exercising the most wholesome influence upon political and party action. Indeed a body of journals, in various parts of the country, which, by their character and sagacity, have become leading papers and valuable property, by their independent criticism of men and measures could make themselves the most important power in the land.

Hitherto MR. WENDELL PHILLIPS, commanding attention by his great oratorical gifts and his unflinching judgment of public affairs by his moral standard, has been himself a power. When he speaks his words are telegraphed over the country as if he were the spokesman of a great party announcing a policy. Yet his speeches are but individual criticisms and suggestions. They have been heeded by statesmen, however, and he has often proved to be but a year or two ahead of a party. There was a fine burst of sarcasm in the winter of 1865, when he delivered a lecture called "The South Victorious," but in 1868 it was agreed that the election would virtually decide whether or not the South was victorious. The unique position of MR. PHILLIPS is due to his independent and vigorous criticism. In manner he is often repelled, angered, and even disgusted. He has certainly not been spared by the newspapers; and his suggestions have not, in every judgment, been always wise, nor his criticism just. But his attitude, that of the fearless, conscientious, able, and eloquent critic is precisely that which the ideal journalism should constantly show.

We believe that they are beginning to feel it as never before. Hitherto the newspapers that called themselves independent have been too often merely the meanest trimmers and pudders. They have apparently thought independence consisted in abusing one party to-day and another party to-morrow. But we do not know one truly independent journal in the country whose sympathies are not with one of the two great parties. The man who thinks that both are equally bad, and who does not care which prevails, is a man without opinions, or without principle, or without perception, and in either case is wholly unfit to be an editor. But the more deeply an independent journal sympathizes with the principle and purpose of a party the more strenuously will it censure its follies and errors, the more bravely will it criticise its candidates and leaders, for the purpose of keeping the principle pure, and of making the success of the party a real blessing. The public will gradually learn that only in such papers can they find true statements of events, with comments that aim at the public welfare, and not merely at a party success. In such also, and only in such, will public men be considered impartially, and the plain testimony of an independent press will thus be to elevate the national life and character, and to keep party-spirit within its due bounds.

But only as really able men enter the profession of journalism is such independence possible. Hypercriticism, cynicism, captiousness, persiflage, are not its characteristics, but you found conviction, tact, knowledge, humor, and good temper. Fifty such journals from Maine to California, prosperous, sparkling, vigorous and vigilant would rattle the dry bones of party hacks, and instill a most wholesome terror in charlatans of every kind.

SOME OF GOVERNOR HOFFMAN'S VIEWS.

IN his Message to the Legislature of New York GOVERNOR HOFFMAN touches upon many of the political questions that now interest the country and the State. He protests against what he calls the tendency to centralized power in the General Government, as shown by a proposition to vest in Congress the control of the suffrage in the States. But hitherto, the Governor will probably agree, the danger has been lain in a centralizing tendency. The rebellion proceeded upon the assumption that the opposite principle under Democratic domination had become so universal that the General Government was already virtually destroyed. The rebels were mistaken, but their error was demonstrated at a fearful cost; and the problem for statesmen now is not how to decentralize the General Government, but how to invest it with power enough to fulfil the guarantees of the Constitution. The fear of centralization in this country, in the ordinary sense, is puerile.

GOVERNOR HOFFMAN truly says that the Constitution provides that the electors of each State shall have the qualifications of electors of the most numerous branch of the State Legislature; but it also provides that the United States shall guarantee to each State a republican form of government. Now the extent of the suffrage practically determines the republicanism; and how, therefore, can it be true that the subject is constitutionally put beyond the action of Congress?

GOVERNOR HOFFMAN enters at length upon the question of city government, and opposes the commissions which have been established in the city of New York and elsewhere. He alleges that they have given to the political majority the power of governing the majority, and declares that to limit it unnecessarily is to admit the failure of the republican system. That is a conclusion which by no means follows. If, however, the test of a good government be economy and security, there would undoubtedly be a very large number of intelligent voters in the city of New York who would unhesitatingly declare that the government of that city by Tammany Hall was a decided failure. But the people of the State are the political community with which we have to deal, and they are to govern the State in such a manner as experience and the nature of things show to be most expedient for the general welfare. Experience has shown that it is better apparently on account of the inhabitants of local divisions to manage their local affairs; but whenever experience has shown that such a course is not best the people will take a different course.

In the State Constitutional Convention of 1867 Judge DALY of New York reasoned from the medieval cities as the models of liberty and popular rights to modern cities. It was a singular misconception of the subject, because it is wholly impossible to establish any analogy between the citizens defending themselves against baronial encroachments and the citizens regulating a part of their domain. To make his analogy good, he should have asserted the right of any squad of citizens to deny the authority of the whole. The supreme power resides in the whole body, and the local authority is derived from them. If the Democratic and his party rested their cause upon the assertion that the public order, health, and security of the city would be in error and in danger unless and if they were left entirely to the control of the residents of the city, their position would be very much stronger than when they talk of rights and the republican principle. But GOVERNOR HOFFMAN will not forget that the Police Commission was originally formed at the earnest request of the Democratic executive of party, and that he himself commended it as the best system ever devised. Nor can he deny, for every body knows, that the sense of public security is a thousandfold greater under the new system than under the old.

The Governor is one of the leaders of a party which absolutely controls the Legislature. At these elections, when necessary, his party friends, as in the last election, perpetrate the most enormous frauds. They hoped and expected to ensure the State by such means, and they partially succeeded. If they could only have uncontrolled sway, if the people of the whole State would only submit to the part of their domain should be managed entirely without regard to their will, the Tammany ring would be satisfied, but the people would soon find that they were the first victims of their own folly.

JOBS.

THE number of jobs that the Lobby hopes to push through Congress is appalling. Every kind of enterprise is to receive the aid of the Government. When the public debt is enormous and its pressure upon every individual severe, and when therefore economy should be peculiarly the public policy, private interests are about to descend in a flood and attempt to prolong and perplex the pressure. The universal argument for every private enterprise which is seeking assistance is a public benefit. But the answer is generally conclusive, that if it be really a public benefit the interested part of the public will pay for it. To say that it is manifestly unfair to compel the whole public to pay for it. Every lawful private enterprise is, to a certain sense, a public benefit. Every road opened, every fine building erected, may be called a public benefit. Shall the Government, therefore, keep shop or give money to those proposing to build?

Nothing has more satisfied the country than the reported opposition of the new President to every scheme of private jobbery. Every day and nothing, we believe, is more creditable to the administration of Governor FENTON in this State than his vetoes of such projects. It is impossible to say that there are not certain enterprises of this kind to which a government may not wisely lend aid, but the rule must be that enterprises which are not promising enough to pay for themselves by tempting the investment of capital are certainly not promising enough for an outlay of public money. A great state or a great country, we are told by the earnest advocates of magnificent public expenditures, ought not to be niggardly. A state, says some ardent theorizer or resolute Lobby agent, can not be imperial if it is miserly. But does it, therefore, follow that it may be imperial by being wasteful or dishonest? A Pacha who scatters gold as he rides and wears a jewelled sabre may be a very magnificent potentate, but the ruin he leaves behind him, out of whom that splendor is extorted, are inexpressibly wretched. The greatness of a nation is not shown by vast public expenditure, but by private enterprise and public economy. Is not this, we might ask our friend the theorizer, the greatest nation in the world, and can any of its chief officer to be lodged accordingly? Shall he live in a small White House while a petty Duke of Brunswick lives in a noble palace? Shall we not instantly build a dwelling worthy the chief magistrate of so great a people? MR. MILLER, of Pennsylvania, answers, "By all means," and proposes a magnificent Executive mansion.

But it is not the big brush that makes the great painter. It is not by spending money, however rich he may be, but by the manner of spending it that a man reveals his wisdom. If Congress is to grant money to one man or company upon the plea of the public benefit, it can not refuse other men and companies; and upon what conceivable principle are such grants to be equitably divided? In the old times, twenty years ago, when it used to subsidize steamships to Europe it was apparently no reason why it should not equally subsidize the ferry to Hoboken. It was the business of the advocates of the subsidy to show that it was essential to the national welfare that those particular ships should be kept afloat at the common charge; but it was not shown. If, however, that could be reasonably urged in any case, it would be an argument very difficult to answer.

One of the strongest arguments against immediate and absolute free trade is, that a people will very naturally object to pay a certain tax in the form of protection, if there be a just expectation that the abolition of the tax would lead directly to some other impost which would weaken the nation against the aggression of a power that might reduce its liberties. Its tariff tax is then the price which it gladly pays for liberty; and it is a hundredfold more precious than the freedom of buying in the cheapest market. If it can be shown that a nation can be in excess of those liberties without the tax, the argument of course is overthrown. But to show that in the present international situation would not be an easy task.

But how can the Lobby, then, there can hardly be two opinions among intelligent and patriotic men that the proposed grants of public money to all kinds of private enterprise are highly which Congress ought resolutely to withstand.

THE DISPENSING POWER.

THE question raised by Senator FERRY'S resolution in regard to the authority of the President to issue an Amnesty Proclamation like that of Christmas Day is very important. Is it the constitutional intention of the pardoning power that it shall not only cover a universal jail delivery, but shall release all persons not even charged with offenses? In other words, is the pardoning power a dispensing power? If the principle upon which the President's act is justified be carried to its logical end, as Senator CONKLING stated, why the Governor of New York may not make a clean sweep, not only of convicts, but of persons charged with crime and indicted. Such an interpretation of a power in its nature so limited, and the purpose of which is so obvious, is plainly absurd.

As usual, when the President does a foolish thing, there is a vehement assertion that he is only following the example of President LINCOLN. But President LINCOLN issued a proclamation of amnesty, he did it during war, and as a measure of war. Its object was to weaken the rebellion, but it failed. But when LEE surrendered to President LINCOLN without consulting Congress, had issued an amnesty to every body who had been in rebellion, Congress would have promptly and properly had forfeited, releasing them from any legal prosecution, and staying all action of Congress upon the subject, the country would, undoubtedly, have been glad to see the President meant well; but undoubtedly, also, Congress would not have submitted to be summarily set aside, and to have its authority thus asserted in its theory. The case is more absurd when, as now, Congress has passed laws affecting the condition to which the President assumes to restore the late rebels, and when one of them is under indictment. It is merely an attempt to make "my policy" prevail, so far as possible, by an arbitrary use of power.

It is the more foolish because Senator FERRY had himself proposed virtual amnesty by Congressional action in the only way in which it is practicable; namely, by removing the disabilities which Congress has imposed. If the President had had only in view the restoration of the rebels, he could surely have awaited an action which, had Congress adopted it, would have brought him into harmony with it before its retirement. And that action failed he might have carried it in hand at the session to do alone what Congress had declared should not be done. But the President has his personal ends and his belligerent spirit to gratify. To declare every late rebel restored to his former condition, with all its privileges, was to make a direct conflict with Congress, which has declared some of them disabled at its pleasure, and this is the course which he has followed.

There can be little doubt, we presume, that the extraordinary authority claimed by the President will be denied by Congress, and that he will be again taught that it is the people of the United States, by their representatives, who are to determine the conditions upon which rebel States and citizens are to be restored to their former relations. It is a lesson which he will refuse to heed, and he will leave his Presidency profoundly impressed that the people are fools for not letting him have his way. Perhaps in his future retirement, as President BUCHANAN devoted himself to proving that he was the most patriotic of men, so President JOHNSON will undertake to show that he was right and every body else wrong.

THE SUPPLY OF FOOD TO GREAT BRITAIN.

THE returns of the Board of Trade of the United Kingdom for the last ten months of the year 1868 show that their imports of food of all descriptions amount to over seventy-seven millions of pounds sterling, or, in our currency, over five hundred millions of dollars. This includes articles which are subsequently exported, such as tea, coffee, and spices; but it is probable that for the whole year 1868 the amount named will not be far from the value of what is consumed of imported food. Notwithstanding that such a sum is annually required over and above the home production of food, to support their population of about thirty-two millions, MR. MECHI, of Tiptree Hall, tells the London Farmers' Club, on the strength of what he calls his twenty-five years' experience as a farmer, that Great Britain could profitably feed all her people, without foreign aid, if she thought proper to do so."

MR. CAIRD, another authority relied upon by Englishmen, published in March, 1868, a pamphlet on the food supply, in which he shows that it is the opposition in which their interests in England it becomes necessary, in order to furnish them with fresh milk, sweet butter, and other food such as is supplied from daily pasturage, to devote land from grain crops, and apply it to dairy purposes. MR. CAIRD supposes that 477,000 acres have been changed in this manner since 1846. MR. MECHI would not only arrest this change, but divert the twenty-five millions of acres (among which are some marshes) now devoted to meadows and pasturage, mainly to cultivation with the plow. In order to accomplish this object he assumes that 44½ millions of acres could be cultivated in the effective manner in which he manages his farm of 170 acres, which would call for an addition to agricultural laborers in the proportion in which he employs them over what is usual. The labor (he says) employed per acre is $16 66 per acre, the labor of the United Kingdom is probably only $5 00 per acre. This would require a fearful transfer of capital from manufactures, and their application to agriculture, on a scale to interfere with manufacturing industry, which is shown to be much more profitable than agriculture. To this MR. CAIRD adds that so now, what would it be if the former were increased and the latter diminished? No labor-ers could be found, and wages paid over the agricultural. MR. MECHI's scheme, therefore, must be regarded as wholly impracticable, although it will be wise to guard against the effect of fear of which brought as has largely influenced throughout the kingdom by providing means of irrigation wherever the supply of running streams and the shape of the land permit; which, however, can not be added to the quantity artificially watered.

MR. MECHI uses the opportunity of an address to his neighbors to speak more or of this "good season" as applied to wheat, knowing full well that his interesting views would carry this expression to those countries which supply England with what is required to make up for her deficiency of food. MR. CAIRD, in the pamphlet referred to, states the cost of wheat imported in England in 1863 at £36,000,000, of which £6,100,000 was paid for foreign, and that its cost in 1867 was £70,000,000, of which £35,500,000 was paid for foreign. The difference in the foreign importation of £27,400,000 was caused (said MR. CAIRD) by a bad season —a difference which constitutes a powerful motive for and encouragement to the farmer to the extent of the enormous wants which the drought has occasioned.

The Saturday Review, in its 12th of December number, admits that all other crops but wheat are sadly deficient in quantity, and that wheat, which it claims to be excellent in quality, has been exceeded in quantity. This is what we have contended for, with this exception, that spring wheat, which is quite largely sown, was generally defective, and that winter wheat sown in very light soils was frequently plowed in. The Mark Lane Express admitted this during the prevalence of the drought, from which the influence is strong that the quantity is considerable below the average production; but it is now freely admitted that the extensive loss upon other crops calls for a much larger consumption of wheat than is usual. Much of it is now fed to cattle; but we suspect that the quality of what is thus fed is inferior, for if it were otherwise it would be cheaper to exchange it for Indian corn, which would doubtless be done at a time when the necessity of importing both descriptions of grain is well known. The Saturday Review forcibly says that the loss in spring corn, the root crops, and the hay and grass crops deprive them of the means of feeding cattle, although there may be no deficiency of bread, and expresses the fear that potatoes will not keep. This corresponds with what we have claimed at various times, and the opinion will no doubt arise why there is not a present larger demand for our agricultural productions. The question is one of great importance to the whole country, as we have little to export besides, and our financial condition is such as to call for the best prices we can obtain.

The English market early in July last compares about as follows with that of the first part of this month. No. 2 wheat was then 11*s.* 6*d.* to 12*s.* per 100 lbs., it is now 10*s.* 3*d.* Old Indian corn then 35*s.* to 35*s.* 6*d.*, now 31*s.* 6*d.* per 480 lbs. Oats 3*s.* 6*d.* to 3*s.* 9*d.*, now 3*s.* 6*d.* per bushel. Barley 4*s.* 10*d.* to 5*s.*, now 5*s.* per bushel. Peas 43*s.* to 44*s.*, now 44*s.* 6*d.* per quarter of 8 bushels. Upon the following articles an important advance has taken place, as the price abroad is readily adjusted to the price here. Pork, prime mess, then 72*s.* 6*d.* to 75*s.* per barrel, now 92*s.* 6*d.* Lard 60*s.* 6*d.* to 61*s.*, now 70*s.* per cwt. Cheese 57*s.* to 60*s.* then, now 70*s.* per cwt. Bacon, cut Cumberland, 47*s.* to 48*s.*, now 60*s.* per cwt. Tallow, which is supplied largely from Russia, then 43*s.* to 44*s.*, now 47*s.* 6*d.* per cwt.

It will readily be seen by those who have paid attention to these articles, that we owe the ability to maintain this advance to the immediate and powerful effect of the drought upon the twenty-five millions of acres in the kingdom devoted to meadows and pasturage. The grain question stands upon a different footing; but the time will soon arrive when the views we have given will be heretofore with respect to it will generally prevail.

In grain, and particularly wheat, we have to meet with universal competition; and while the importation has been studiously guarded over the world that the last was a "good season" in England, their ships have left no market unexplored which promised that belief. An average of 400 to 500 vessels laden with grain were announced at one time as on their way to the English market. Our own press, with one or two exceptions, has also supported the opinion that our farmers should not sacrifice their crops while this foreign competition was most active, and in advance of the consumption in England of the crop harvested in July.

Some compensations to the consumers of food attend the severest droughts. More beef and mutton have been slaughtered than ever it became apparent that they could not be wintered than ever before. Potatoes have been consumed more freely than usual, because the first growth is precarious, and the second only to such partial maturity as to create the fear that they would not keep. These have hid their immediate relief, with the certainty that their ultimate effect will prolong the difficulty. The drought there in 1800 doubled the price of wheat for two consecutive years, but the arrangements for importing from foreign countries had not then been made; and this effect would be avoided if foreign countries were now certain of purchasing a full supply from overloaded granaries. Mr. CAIRD, in March, 1868, admitted that the old crop in England was then exhausted, and that the crop of 1867 was so far below an average as to call for the excess of importation of wheat over that of a good season to the value of £27,400,000. As the drought of 1868 commenced early in July, and was not broken till the 12th of August, to be subsequently renewed, it is certain that a much larger deficiency in 1868, upon the whole food production, occurred than in 1867.

It is stated by Mr. CAIRD as one of the misfortunes of a drought that it ordinarily lays over vegetable produce, and turns the whole attention of those who in ordinary years are relied upon for supplies. The returns made by France for the first six months of 1868 show an excess in French importations of wheat of nearly fifty millions of dollars over that of the previous year. These returns explain the order which appeared before they were promulgated opening French ports to importations of wheat free of tonnage duty. Spain issued a similar order. The fields of important parts of Russia, last summer, were run over with extensive fires which swept through forests at the time of the prevalence of the drought in England. A Lyons paper stated that the grape in some districts of France, grown on light soils, had been "roasted," and as the vine is deeply rooted it may be inferred that pastures were much injured.

Mr. CAIRD's opinion is thus summed, and hence France and Spain appear in the markets of the world as competitors with the English for food. Both will draw their supplies first from the countries which border on the Mediterranean and the waters which fall into that sea.

The harvest in England gathered in July, and her incessant importations from those who understood us, continue to stave off the fall demand which we alone can ultimately supply. If we allow ourselves to be drained of our excess of food at low prices, consumers here will be obliged to pay for it at advanced rates, and we may not enter upon the harvest of 1869 with the advantage that we shall derive from having the old crop to call upon, while the war is being sufficiently hardened for safe transportation and economical use.

The high prices of last year brought out nearly the whole of our surplus stock, and it has been consumed. Two powerful motives now call on us to hoard enough of our present crop to place us in a position of safety and strength. We should have it on hand for our own wants as a provision to meet the contingencies of the next harvest, and to supply at remunerative prices those manufacturing nations which gorge us with their fineries at high values, and fail in no efforts to obtain our production at less than their cost. The financial farming interest is alone capable of securing this advantage for our country.

CRETE.

IF, as the telegraph announces, Crete has yielded, she has not relinquished her purpose. The unhappiest sign is that the meeting here to express sympathy for the struggling Cretans has excited a certain kind of enmity. Here is an island, five thousand miles away, peopled by Greeks and ruled by Turks. It has never ceased, and its people have never ruled over did cease, to protest against the tyranny that oppresses it. The country is not only despotically governed by aliens in race, but aliens in religious faith. How the differences of faith are fierce and final. The Greeks may be of a very poor kind of Christian, in our judgment—they may be superstitious, indolent, blindly semi-barbarous—but it is in just such a people, where religion degenerates into superstition, that fierce differences become fiercer and religious quarrels more bitter. The Turkish government, following a conquest of "infidels," is, we all know. How much security, how much peaceful industry, how much justice, how much enjoyment of common rights is possible under it, needs not to be argued. The Turkish rule of a conquered people is merely a heel and a sword-point, and it is the boast of Turkey to omit a single moment beyond that when hope and despair together rouse their arm to strike back for freedom.

The Cretan struggle is a fight for liberty; it is a claim for justice, and those only will sneer at it who are fit to be slaves. That it is not a hopeless fight we have reason to think. Turkey has striven in vain for three years to regain the island, and that Europe is now meeting to decide what shall be done. And then somebody in the background will say, "This is a matter in every where every man's business. If he is passing through the street and sees one man assaulting another, he has no business to stand idly—he may pass quietly by upon the other side. If assassins attack Mr. ROGERS at his own door, let ROGERS and the ruffians fight it out, quoth the sneerer. "Am I my brother's keeper? asked the astute Cain. The same question that is asked of Crete used to be asked of Europe by the cause of human slavery in this country. "Injustice, inhumanity, unspeakable wrong and crime," exclaimed the same critics. "Good Heavens! what have we to do with it? Let us mind our affairs. Mississippi mind their own affairs." It was in vain to show that the consequences of injustice did not stop at State lines; that slavery would not stay upon the bank of a river, and that malaria and small-pox would not respect county limits. "My neighbor's plague is not my plague," was the response. Three times opposed itself to be practical good sense, until its neighbor's plague laid hold of it, and then it discovered that men are brethren in a very positive sense.

It is the business of every man, and of every nation, to sympathize with those who are struggling for liberty and justice, not because it is generous, but because it is now demonstrated that there will be no end of such struggles until liberty is secured. Crete has protested. She has made representations against the savage cruelties which force she has resisted with arms. This time she has made a peaceful appeal, and Turkey answered with the sword. Crete has established the conditions of an armed rising, and she has earned the right to appeal to all lovers of justice and liberty in the world for individual sympathy and aid. To turn a deaf ear or a sneering lip at Crete is to sharpen the sword of Turkey and to become an accomplice in the murder of a people. Crete asks only for our sympathy and help in procuring arms and food. She hopes, of course, that, when she has shown her purpose and her power, other states will recognize her independence, and will admit her into the list of the thirteen colonies, and as England did that of the South American republics.

Let the great deeds of a Canea plead with us for Crete as that of Thermopylæ still glorifies old Greece. Six hundred Cretans were besieged in the old convent at Canea by ten thousand Turks. When the enemy burst through the outer wall the battle was fought hand to hand for six hours in the court-yard. Then, when it could be continued no longer, the Cretans who remained applied the match to the magazine, and three thousand of the foe died with them. The spirit that smiled at Andersonville for another, but a similar reason, will sneer at Crete.

BRIGHT AND GLADSTONE.

MR. BRIGHT, upon his re-election at Birmingham after accepting office, made a speech to his constituents, which is a model of such discourses, and which is every characteristic for its simplicity and frankness. He states that Mr. GLADSTONE consulted him at once, and offered him as high a position as any Minister was to have, but that he finally accepted the Presidency of the Board of Trade, as an office in which he might do a little good and prevent some harm. He says that he believes that the time has come in which a man may be an honest Minister of the Crown and an honest servant of the people; but that as a Minister he must ask a lenient judgment for his old friends, and advance the general purposes of the Government there must be harmony in the cabinet. To secure harmony there must be concession. He says, Mr. BRIGHT, "that you sometimes see me voting a little differently from formerly, don't think that I have changed my views, but that my vote has relation to time and opportunity as well as to principle; and understand that my views remain unchanged until I tell you that I have changed my views."

He remains also known that Parliament do not move rapidly unless they are supported by public opinion; that the pressure upon every government for every kind of extravagance is constant and powerful, and that it must have, therefore, the sympathy and confidence of the people. For himself he declares that to take office is a great sacrifice, but that he has been compelled into it by the wishes of a very large part of the Liberal party. He tells simply the beautiful story of the Shunamite woman, and that, when she was asked to take office, his heart answered with hers, "I dwell among mine own people." If, however, he should find it impossible to maintain the two positions of faithful Minister and faithful representative, he hopes that he shall be able to discover which he ought to relinquish.

Mr. GLADSTONE also made a speech under similar circumstances at Greenwich, in which he agreed with his colleague that questions must be considered in their order, and that the first question is that which was most prominent in the canvass, the Irish disestablishment. Mr. GLADSTONE's government has one signal advantage over Mr. DISRAELI's, to begin with, and that is sincerity of faith in its two leaders. The Tory Ministry, as Mr. BRIGHT truly says, was a fraud. It lived through the session of 1867 by doing what in the preceding session it had declared to be destructive of the Constitution and the Monarchy. Nobody believed that Mr. DISRAELI was a real convert to electoral reform. But he was not an honest enemy, as Mr. LOWE was. In this country we used to call our most wretched kind of politician a Northern man with Southern principles. Mr. DISRAELI was a Tory with a Liberal policy. But he proposed it for two reasons: One was that he was sure the country wanted it, and the other was that he thought he could control it. This, however, did not help his false position. In bringing forward his enlarged suffrage he was insincere in precisely the same way that the Democratic Senators were who tried to include women in the bill giving suffrage to the colored citizens of the District of Columbia. They did not wish women to vote, but they hoped the proposition would prevent the new citizens from voting. Mr. DISRAELI did not wish to extend the suffrage; but since he could see no help that he would try to prevent its good results.

While this consciousness of political honesty upon the part of the leaders is a great moral advantage to the new Ministry, its large patrician Whig element has undoubtedly disappointed many Liberals. The political convictions of Radicalism are rapidly advanced. Its political thinkers are heroic, and their tongues and pens are free. Moreover, the social and industrial condition of the country is such that very rapid changes are necessary to avoid a catastrophe. The Whigs, as such, are no longer the leaders of liberal sentiment. They are often its most determined and trenchant adversaries. Now the sentiment, beneath the Irish Church reform, which has elected Mr. GLADSTONE is not only progress, but safety. The people will not be quiet but to be frightened at any thing; above all, to accept every truly legitimate Liberal movement, however startling, as the logical result of the situation, and to deal with it as MACAULAY says the Roman Church deals with fanaticism, by embracing it and guiding it, not by resisting it. If he can succeed in doing this he will rank with the great English Ministers; and if any body could help him to do it it is his President of the Board of Trade.

MY LOVERS TWAIN.

My lovers twain—my lovers twain,
I pray you let me be!
To wed you both I would be fain,
Only that may not be.

One lover is like music sweet,
That steals my heart away;
And one is like the trumpet-blast,
Which calls me to the fray.

One is of gentle, courteous mind,
To low and high degree;
And one a stern and lordly head,
And melteth but to me.

One is so strangely lovable,
That but to touch his hand
To women kneel—before the one
Do men uncovered stand.

And if I this one do not wed,
He never wife will seek:
And if that one I do not wed,
He sorrow's a wreck.

My lovers twain—my lovers twain,
Ye should have let me be:
I love the one with all my heart—
The other loveth me.

DOMESTIC INTELLIGENCE.

CONGRESS.

January 5:

In the Senate, a resolution was adopted asking the President to show by what authority he issued his late amnesty Proclamation.

January 6:

In the Senate, the bill providing for an air-line railroad from Washington to New York was taken up, and Mr. SHERMAN made a lengthy speech in favor.

In the House, the Committee on Appropriations reported the bill making appropriations for the Navy for the year ending June 30, 1870. It appropriates $16,723,675, or $3,071,678 less than the amount required for the current year. The House went into Committee of the Whole, and took up the Pension Appropriation bill, which appropriates $15,000,000. Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois, Chairman of the Appropriation Committee, made a lengthy speech in favor of the Radical condition of the country and indicating some places where appropriations could be made. The bill was reported to the House and passed. The Secretary of the Treasury was directed to furnish a statement of the sales of gold by the Treasury since January 1, 1869.

January 7:

In the Senate, Mr. Edmunds's bill to prevent military officers from holding civil positions was taken up and debated at some length.

January 8:

In the House, $271,568 was appropriated for the maintenance of the West Point Military Academy.

General Lovell H. Rousseau, of the United States army, died in New Orleans on the night of January 7.

John Minor Botts, of Virginia, died on the 8th of January.

The terms of twenty-two United States Senators expire with March 4 next. Of the vacancies, Senators have already been chosen to eight. ALEXANDER Eugene Casserly, Democrat, has been elected in place of JOHN CONNESS, Republican. In Connecticut W. A. Buckingham has been elected to fill DIXON's place. In Iowa GRIMES's successor will be chosen from among W. T. Hamilton, vice W. P. Whyte. In Florida Abijah Gilbert has been chosen in place of THOMAS Welch. A Democrat—Allen G. Thurman—will succeed Benjamin Wade, of Ohio. William Sprague, of Rhode Island, has been elected. Tennessee chooses W. G. Brownlow in place of D. T. Patterson. George F. Edmunds has been elected by Vermont.

A most appalling accident occurred at Rochester, New York, on the night of January 6, at the schoolhouse of Prof. Reid and St. Paul's Church, on Maple Street. An Epiphany festival and concert was being held for the benefit of the latter, and a portion of the second-floor, about twenty-feet in length by forty in width, fell, with a crash to the floor beneath, precipitating its load of human freight into one mass with the broken joists and timbers. It was estimated that there were 1500 people in the assemblage. Eight persons were killed outright.

From May 26 to October 31, 1868, 291 fires occurred in New York, of which the buildings damaged or destroyed 364 were brick and 82 frame. In 269 fires the loss amounted to less than $500 each, and in three instances only the loss was upward of $100,000. The fires during any one month were in July—$178,886, and the largest in October—$360,628. The total loss amounted to $1,474,700, and the total insurance to $1,076,976.

The New York Legislature assembled January 6. Thomas G. Younglove was elected Speaker of the Assembly.

The Republicans of New Hampshire have nominated the Hon. Onslow Stearns for Governor.

FOREIGN NEWS.

THE Turko-Greek conference met at Paris on January 5. A conciliatory disposition was manifested by the Turkish and Greek delegates, and hopes of a peaceful settlement were confidently expected.

The process of London Bridge widening, and the treaty of commerce with England, recently concluded by Lord Clarendon and Mr. Reid, progress.

In Bavaria the beginning of 1868, more than 686 men and boys have been killed by colliery explosions.

The British and Irish Magnetic Telegraphing Company, do expected to have been lost to the City of Dublin on December. She foundered in a heavy gale, and all her crew was lost. The crew are reported to have left New Orleans for Liverpool with a cargo of cotton.

Telegraphic reports have been received from Aleppo, Syria, of earthquakes at that place in the neighborhood. The entire city of about 60,000 people ran out of fabrics in a single night. The shocks described on January 5. Though the disaster or loss of life is as far known to have been caused by the phenomena is not known to have been caused by the phenomena.

A terrible earthquake was experienced at Colima, Mexico, on the morning of December 26, 1868. Colima is situated about 50 miles from the city, had been in a state of eruption for several days, sending a column of dark smoke high up in the earth for many miles around. On the 26th, at Colima, the earth commenced trembling, and the shocks each increased in violence gradually, throwing down numerous buildings and doing much damage to property generally. Several persons were killed by falling walls. In the country the shocks were still more severe. The earth opened, waters were changed, hills were leveled, and there courses were changed. The Cathedral of Mazanillo was a general ruin foundations, and bells and clock-towers were totally demolished. Fifteen or twenty persons were killed in Mazanillo by the falling of the walls, a fire, and a storehouse.

In Cuba the recent earthquakes have decreed the abolition of slavery within their lines. It is considered by the Spaniards as an indication of the displeasure of the Almighty at the war and a confession of the weakness of their cause.

GOVERNOR CLAFLIN OF MASSACHUSETTS.

HON. WILLIAM CLAFLIN is the first Governor of Massachusetts elected from the manufacturing classes. He is one of the largest manufacturers of boots, shoes, and leather in New England, and is also extensively engaged in the trade, having houses in St. Louis as well as Boston; and every department of his business feels the force of his organizing and controlling mind, and is conducted with energy, sagacity, and success. But his business, vast as it is, does not engross all, or the chief portion, of his time. He has been active in politics for a score of years. His sagacity soon made him a prominent member of his party, the management of which, in the chairmanship of the State Central Committee, has long been intrusted to him. He has also been a member of the National Committee for many years, and last year was elected to its chairmanship. He has served long in the councils of the State, as Representative, as President of the Senate, and as Lieutenant-Governor. He is one of the most advanced school of Republicans, believing in his heart the doctrine of true democracy—the equality and fraternity of all men. He is strictly temperate, never touching or supplying the social glass, and also believes in the right and duty of prohibition, without agreeing with the extremists upon this vexed question. He is a member of the Methodist Church, having united with it in St. Louis in 1843. His charities, both public and private, have been unostentatious, but numerous and large. Other denominations also receive of his bounty; and all general charities find in him a clear, generous supporter. He is fifty years of age, having been born in Milford, Massachusetts, March 6, 1818, but is in the prime and vigor of his days, and promises to achieve a brilliant future. Mr. CLAFLIN is a gentleman of quiet, agreeable manners, unassuming and undemonstrative. He will bear worthily every honor and discharge faithfully every duty of his office.

The people of Massachusetts, for only the fourth time in the history of the State, have elevated the Lieutenant-Governor to the Governorship. This departure from a rule which had become traditional is due to Governor CLAFLIN'S rare qualities of integrity, unselfish devotion to Massachusetts ideas, to his remarkable business capacities, clear judgment, and sound common-sense.

HON. WILLIAM CLAFLIN, GOVERNOR OF MASSACHUSETTS.—[PHOT. BY WHIPPLE.]

FUR-TRAPPING.

"YES," said MAX; "there's the very log what Mr. LYNX was sharpening his claws on when I dropped my duffel, such as traps and pelts, and unhitched for him, and got his pelt to help make my pack heavy. Some folks call him 'Loservoss' (LINCE). He served me some mean tricks before we made close acquaintance; that is, I used to catch minks and 'saples' [MAX persists in designating the pine-marten as 'saple'], an' the like. Fact! The cuss cost me the biggest sort of a board-bill. As I was saying, I caught minks and the rest, and he went over my trap-line and eat up nigh onto fifty dollars worth of fur for me before I came to look at him over the rifle sights."

MAX TREADO is one of the best trappers in the Northern New York Wilderness. Two months' winter trapping in that region has before now brought him in over two hundred and fifty dollars' worth of bear, otter, sable, mink, fisher, and other skins. His trap-lines are mostly located on the very head-waters of the Hudson River—the brooks which hurry noisily down the sides of Tis-haw-us, San-an-no-ni, Coldan, M'Intire, Logan, and others of the highest peaks of the Adirondack range. Many of these are constructed of saplings, as is that shown in the sketch, with the sable dangling therefrom. Others are built of logs and large chips chopped from convenient trees. "Twitch-ups," made by means of a plant sapling and simple trigger, are set at intervals along the line to catch the rabbits and partridges to be used as bait.

"The sable-spring," or trigger, is the simplest trap known. It is arranged as shown in the sketch. Then one of the saplings is raised, and the little upright stick is put in to keep it up. The lower end of the upright is sharpened to a point, and rests on a spindle about six inches long. On the end of the spindle you put the bait, and the sable, in using the spindle to crawl out on after his lunch, quickly finds weighty affairs on his shoulders; for down comes the top sapling, which, MAX says, "keeps him in position for either himself, some lynx, or a fisher to take up—depending on which one comes along first."

THE FUR-TRAPPER.—[SKETCHED BY THEO. R. DAVIS.]

HON. JOHN W. MENARD, COLORED CONGRESSMAN FROM LOUISIANA.
[PHOTOGRAPHED BY BRADY, WASHINGTON.]

The spring of the "twitch-up" is also quite simple, consisting of a small fork of wood driven firmly into the earth, a trigger-stick to hold the bait, and the little bit of wood which holds the string, one end of which is fastened to the sapling, and the other formed into a noose that is kept in proper shape and position by means of a number of small pegs driven into the ground to form a circle of about the size of the noose desired.

THE HON. JOHN W. MENARD.

THE HON. JOHN W. MENARD, whose portrait we publish on this page, was recently elected to Congress from Louisiana. He was elected to fill the place of Mr. MANN, deceased, whose seat was contested. No decision in regard to the qualifications of Mr. MENARD has yet been given by the Committee on Elections. For this reason Mr. MENARD's name is at present not included in the list of Congressmen in the Congressional Globe. He is the first colored man ever elected to Congress: his success is due to his fidelity to the principles of the party which elected him.

Mr. MENARD is a native of Randolph County, Illinois, in which State he spent much of his life on a farm. He received his education at Iberia College, in Ohio, which he entered in 1859. He has devoted himself with great zeal to the interests of his race, and at one time was a clerk in the department of Emigration. At the close of the war he went to Louisiana, where by his speeches and his writings he has contributed largely to the organization and success of his party among the colored voters.

LOAF THE BOOTBLACK.

"SHINE 'on up? On'y five cents!"

This was Loaf the bootblack.

He was nicknamed "Loaf" by his friends because he was the hardest working, toughest little bootblack known to the fraternity. The "On'y five cents!" was a call for trade, and not by any means intended to be taken in a literal sense; and most of Loaf's customers saw it in that light, especially when aided by the miraculous polish which the boy invariably brought to the surface of the most disheartening clodhoppers; and few ever refused the "tenner," or asked change.

Loaf's legitimate appellation was Clem (short for Clement) Brown.

His mother was an American woman, whose husband had gone the way of many other good Americans in his national pride of country, as exemplified by his fondness for the national beverage, Bourbon!

The senior Brown, who had been a handsome, meritorious, and successful barkeeper, had discovered Annie Carter, the daughter of a wealthy man in a retired country village, Malden by name, and in the guise of a "young man about town"—"town" being supposed to represent the metropolitan city of New York—had wooed and won that rustic maiden, with the hope of setting up a bar, billiard-room, and bowling-alley, himself, as near to Broadway as might be, on the elder Carter's money.

But, unhappily for these dreams of future bliss, the elder Carter, having discovered the character of the youthful Brown's calling, and thereupon refused his consent to the match, had on discovering that the matrimonial plan had been completed, presented his daughter with twenty-five dollars, and a repetition of an ancient proverb referring to the chamber-maid's art, and beginning, "as you make your bed"—had thereupon announced his intention of having nothing further to do with the happy pair; and, contrary to the usual custom in light literature, had steadily held to his promise.

The disappointed dram-distributor, taking these unexpected alterations in his programme to heart, had devoted himself too earnestly to his profession, and had eventually died, leaving behind him a widow, too proud to return to the father who had cut her off, the son above-mentioned, and two more youthful Browns, who have no special position in this story.

As Mrs. Brown was, unfortunately, not in the enjoyment of robust health, she was able to do but little toward the support of her family, and that little she did with her needle—a laborious but not remarkably lucrative employment. Consequently it fell to happen (as the French say) that the chief income of this branch of the Brown family was derived from the daily labor of the aforesaid Loaf or Clem Brown, a youth of about twelve years of age.

Now Loaf, besides the education which he had obtained from the university of the streets, had also derived some benefit from his attendance for a few years at the public schools: and being a sharp boy and quick to learn, was not by any means as ignorant as might be supposed. Evening-school had in winter received some of his attention, and he could "read, write, and cipher," knew a little about geography and history, and a good deal about other things that boys of his age might perhaps be better off without knowing. He was, however, not a bad boy, either naturally or by association; possessed a very American independent spirit; and was, after all, a type of a species that exists in our large cities to a more general extent than is usually imagined.

His independent spirit had kept him out of the "Bootblacks' Union," with all its attendant benefits; yet, though he insisted on "going it alone," he was quite a favorite with that guild of young professionals, since he never interfered with their "beats," was generous and good-natured, and a capital hand at the "national game," when business was slack—never otherwise.

His portrait, if painted by Eastman Johnson, would probably look something like this: A corner of a street (say Broadway and Eighth Street); time about seven o'clock of a snowy evening in December; leaning against a railing, a stout, stunted boy in woolen jacket and pants (patched); thick shoes with the toes kicked out: a greasy cap on one side of a curly head, with a broken visor hanging over a round, blue-eyed, freckled face. Hands in pockets: one leg drawn up, from cold, and by his side the little box and foot-rest, insignia of his trade. The snow showering down in feathery lightness all over him; carriages and omnibuses driving briskly up and down; lights shining brilliantly in the shop-windows, and wayfarers tramping hurriedly up and down—this latter part would be the part of the picture not shown, but experienced on the evening concerning which I have to relate. This picture, cabinet-size, by Eastman Johnson, as aforesaid, would attract attention at the Academy of Design; the original attracted none from the passers-by.

Until, half an hour later in the evening, a handsome coupé drove rapidly up to the curbstone, and, just as the melancholy sound of "Shine 'em up? on'y five cents!" died away in the snow-mist for perhaps the hundred and fiftieth time that evening, the door of the carriage was opened, and a light-colored kid glove beckoned to the boy. His owner of the light-colored kid glove placed his foot on the foot-rest, just inside the coupé, and Loaf proceeded to "shine 'em up," according to promise.

The boot was a small and very elegant specimen of the article, and the wearer was a young man, fashionably dressed, embellished with a heavy black mustache, and wearing a black soft hat. As the boy proceeded with his task, in his most masterly manner, the young man kept his eyes fixed upon him, and seemed to be turning some idea over in his brain. As he changed the polished boot for the other, in answer to the tap on the sole customary with the fraternity, the boy looked up, and observed that he was being looked at, and also that the eyes performing that mission were very black and very brilliant; then he commenced operations with the second boot. As he concluded his work, put up his brushes in a methodical manner, and arose, the young man said to him, "Boy, would you like to earn half a dollar?"

The boy signified that he had no objection to earning any number of half dollars.

"Can you read writing?"

The boy could read writing.

"Take this note to where it is directed, and wait for an answer! Come back here and meet me in half an hour. Go!"

The boy took the note, slung his box over his shoulder, gave a glance at the superscription by the light of the gas-light, and started on a run. The carriage-door was closed and the carriage rapidly driven up Broadway.

Mrs. Brown lived on the third-floor of a tenement-house in a little court leading out of University Place; and as the superscription of the note led Loaf in that direction, he took the opportunity to leave his box with his mother, as he knew the half hour would give him ample time to do the errand and return. Now the room next to Mrs. Brown's was occupied, for the time being, and for special reasons, by one of the shrewdest and most successful members of the New York city detective force. It may be remarked here that one of the special reasons that influenced this minion of the law, for he was well-to-do, and owned a house, was nothing more nor less than a hankering after the widow Brown herself, for she was a young woman, comely withal, and the detective was a good-looking bachelor of forty, with, if report spoke truly, no objection to exercising his vocation in discovering a suitable helpmate. So it happened that when Loaf entered his mother's room he found, as he had frequently found before, Mr. Garth, the detective, comfortably seated by the widow's cooking-stove, enjoying at once the pleasing warmth of that useful culinary utensil and the not less pleasing, though perhaps less warm, conversation of Mrs. Brown.

Loaf dashed in in a hurry, threw his box in a corner, shouted "I've got a job, mother!" and was rushing out again without further words, when the note, which he had placed in his jacket-pocket, accidentally fell upon the floor and was picked up by Mr. Garth, who, following his natural and professional impulse, read the superscription. "Hullo, Loaf!" said he, starting up energetically; "where did you get this?"

His manner exhibited so much surprise, and his tone was so decided, that, time being short, Loaf answered him at once, in place of running him a little, as he otherwise would have done. "A gentleman gave it to me to take for him, and I am to meet him in half an hour."

"Where?"

"Corner of Eighth Street and Broadway."

"Mrs. Brown, let me have a little warm water in a tea-cup. Quick, if you please."

Mrs. Brown at once filled a cup from the tea-kettle, and placed it on the table; while Loaf was the surprise of widow and son to see Mr. Garth quietly moisten the adhering side of the envelope with the warm water, and then as quietly open the same, extract the note contained therein, and read it carefully through. Having done this, he replaced the note in the envelope, closed the latter, and holding it before the stove for a moment to dry, laid it upon the table, to all appearance the same as before his curious epistolary burglary had taken place. Then he rose, put on his over-coat, and saying to the astonished Loaf, "Come along with me," the two went out, leaving Mrs. Brown in a highly bewildered and deranged frame of mind.

As this lady had, however, the most sequestering confidence in Mr. Garth; and, moreover, had from very feminine reasons for not wishing to distrust him in any particular, she presently sat down again and tranquilly resumed her sewing.

Mr. Garth hurried down the stairs and out into the court, with Loaf following closely behind him. Loaf's ideas of meum and tuum were more rigid than those of the average bootblack; but looking upon Mr. Garth as the authorized personification of the majesty of law, he tried to reconcile his conflicting ideas, and said nothing.

Mr. Garth walked briskly down University

"MRS. BROWN, LET ME HAVE A LITTLE WARM WATER IN A TEA-CUP. QUICK, IF YOU PLEASE."

Place to Tenth Street, and down Tenth Street to the police-station there located, and, desiring Loaf to wait at the door, entered. Presently he came out followed by two men in plain clothes, and the four started rapidly in the direction of Broadway. Arrived at the corner of Eighth Street, Mr. Garth and his two friends ensconced themselves in a doorway out of sight, while Loaf, under the direction of his superior officer, placed himself by a shop-window, having a piece of paper, with which he had been provided by the detective, in his hand. Presently the expert coup-cutter left the station-house, and Loaf sprang forward as the carriage-door opened, apparently to hand the note to the young man whose head was leaning out of the carriage; by some accident, however, Loaf dropped the note, and as he was engaged in searching for it in the snow, the attention of the young man in the carriage being closely directed to his movements, the two companions of Mr. Garth coolly walked round, and suddenly pounced upon the gentleman in the carriage, dragged him therefrom ignominiously, and as he struggled and remonstrated in a very violent manner, Mr. Garth himself laid a heavy hand on his shoulder, whispered something in his ear, and in less time than it takes to write the circumstance that cross-fallen young gentleman was again seated in his carriage, with one of the individuals in plain clothes by his side: the other individual in plain clothes had mounted the box by the side of the driver; the horses were turned down Eighth Street; the small crowd which had collected dispersed as wise as they came; and Mr. Garth, with Loaf, now thoroughly dumfounded, trotting along by his side, walked briskly westward.

As they went on Mr. Garth kindly consented to satisfy Loaf's evident, if unspoken, curiosity, and proceeded to communicate with him in the following language:

"Loaf, you've done a big thing to-night. Do you know who your friend in the coupé is?"

Loaf expressed his entire ignorance of every thing concerning the individual, except that he had lost half a dollar by having his errand interfered with. He said this in a very lugubrious tone, but with a twinkle in his eye expressive, for Loaf was cunning enough to see that he would not lose by any of events.

Mr. Garth laughed a dry sort of laugh, and continued: "That chap is the latest and smartest impersonator in London. He is the cutest and most successful burglar I ever knew or ever have been looking after him for a month, with nothing but a bit of his writing to identify him. He writes a mighty queer stick when he's in a hurry, or writing to his pals; but he's an accomplished forger can do any thing with a pen that that useful bit rather dangerous instrument is capable of. My memory is good, and I knew his hand the moment I laid my eyes on a bit of a back of that note; and the note itself settled his case. It was risky, certain; but the game was worth the risk, so I took it. And after all it wasn't much, for I know your mother and you are all right; but still, I wouldn't have liked to open the wrong letter."

"What has he been doing? What have you got him for?" said Loaf.

"Half a dozen things on suspicion and one sure thing, which he was fool enough to write about in that note. Three weeks ago he went up to a little nest in the northern part of the State—Malden, I believe it's called—and broke into the house of the richest man in the place; robbed him of over a hundred thousand dollars in bonds, bank-notes, and plate. Carter was the old chap's name—'Carter!' suddenly ejaculated Loaf. "What, that very grandfather's name—mother's father—and Malden is where he lives; I've heard her say so." By this time they had got to the corner of Sixth Avenue; and as Loaf said these words Mr. Garth stopped, caught the boy by the arm, and turned his face so that the light from the bakery whose full name he looked at him for about half a minute, and then gave a sharp and very loud whistle, which caused a policeman passing to turn round, who, seeing Mr. Garth, nodded familiarly and went his way. Then Mr. Garth broke into a fellowing prophetic remark in a very sententious manner: "Loaf! if you are not mistaken, and I guess you're not, you're a made man. What I'm which saying they crossed over to West Tenth Street and together entered the police court-room.

Loaf was not mistaken; and when, two days after, Mr. Carter, who was telegraphed for, arrived in New York and was informed of all the circumstances attending the capture of the burglar whom, moreover, he learned that the restoration of his property, which following, was owing accidentally to his own grandson; when, also, he discovered that in utter ignorance of the fact that his objectionable son-in-law was the more of his world—for Mrs. Brown had been too proud to communicate the melancholy tidings to her long-ago repentant father—and finally, he met that pale but industrious and hopeful widow, his paternal heart warmed so freely toward her, her two junior offspring, and specially toward the happy cause of this happy meeting, that the paternal pocket could not do enough to show his affection, gratitude, and generous confidence. Toward Mr. Garth he was particularly friendly; and when he learned that the wily detective was becoming weary of his arduous profession and pined for rest and a country-life, and was made aware that that Mr. Garth was moderately provided with this world's goods, he hesitated not to invite him to accompany himself, daughter, and grandchildren on a visit to the paternal homestead at Malden; and my friend accepted the invitation, and was known no more of the metropolis, and as Mrs. Brown not many months later put off her mourning apparel and began to spell her name with a "G," it follows that this is the end of the story of Loaf the bootblack.

IF.

Oh! silver moon a-shining,
If I were you in the sky,
I know in whose dainty chamber
At night my beams should lie.

If I were the ocean rolling,
I'd change my dismal roar,
And murmur ever so softly
When she walked on the shore.

Oh! pretty flower a-growing,
If I were only you,
I'd long to die on the bosom
Of her I love so true.

If I were the summer breezes,
All through the livelong day
I'd kiss her lips and her forehead,
And the world not be my pay.

But as long as I am not either
Moon, ocean, flower, or breeze,
I shall have to use in the usual way,
Upon my bended knees!

THAT BOY of NORCOTT'S.

CHAPTER XVII.

FUNK.

"I SAW a young fellow, so like that boy of Norcott's, in a third-class carriage," I overheard a traveler say to his companion, as we stopped to sup at Crewe.

"He'll have scarcely come to that, I fancy," said the other, "though Norcott must have run through nearly every thing by this time."

It was about the last time I was to hear myself called in this fashion. They who were to know me henceforward were to know me by another name, and in a rank that had no tricksings; and I own I accepted this humble fortune with a more contented spirit and with less chagrin than it cost me to hear myself spoken of in this half-contemptuous fashion.

I was now plainly and poorly dressed. I made no display of studs or watch-chain; I even gave up the ring I used to wear, and took care that my gloves—which, indeed, I was almost puppish—should be the commonest and the cheapest.

If there was something that at moments fell very heavily on my heart in the utter destitution of my lot, there was, on the other hand, what served my heart and stimulated me in the thought that there was some heroism in what I was doing. I was, as we say, about to seek my fortune; and what to a young man can be more full of interest and anticipation than such a thought? To the entered apprentice who is thrown into situations of difficulty, which nothing but one's own resources to rely on, to be obliged to rely on nothing but one's wits, and one's heart for courage, to see one's self, in a word, alone against the world, is intensely exciting.

In the days when I was in the midst of personal perils to confront, and appalling dangers to be surmounted; but now it was a game of life, to be played, not merely with a stout heart and a ready hand, but with a cool head and a steady eye. Young as I was I had seen a great deal. In that strange comedy of which my fellow's guests were the performers there was great insight into character to be gained, and a marvelous knowledge of men. Those who play with fire live by their wits cultivate these same wits to live.

If I was not totally corrupted by the habits and ways of that life I owe it wholly to those teachings of my dear mother, which through all the turmoil and confusion of that extraordinary existence still held a place in my heart, and led me again and again to ask myself how she would think of this, or what judgment she would pass on that: and even in this remnant of a conscience there was some safety. I tried to persuade myself that it was well for me that all this was now over, and that an honest existence was again open to me; but my past existence in which my good mother's lessons would not have their stimulate me to the right and save me from the wrong, and the daily and hourly cares of daily labor a halo that never had shone on my life of splendor.

I was late at night when I reached Tixets, and I left it at daybreak. The small steamer in which I had taken my passage followed the coast line, calling at the many insignificant little towns and villages, and winding its track through that myriad of islands which lie scattered along the Dalmatian coast. I sat on the deck, and as one of these quaint towns, the simple articles they dealt in, the strange dress, and the stranger sounds of the language they spoke, came to me into what a new life I had just set foot, and how completely was to leave all my former habits and associations behind me.

The sun had just gone below the sea as we rounded the great promontory of the north and entered the bay of Fiume. The sunset and the passed in than the channel seemed to close behind us, and the mountains moving along over what looked like a magnificent park bounded on every side by lofty mountains—for the islands of the coast were hidden—until they opened the openings to the Adriatic. If the hues of the great mountains was steeped in a blue deep and mellow as the sea itself, their summits glowed in the carbuncle tints of the setting sun, and over these again long lines of cloud, golden and azure streaks, marked the sky, almost on fire, as it were, with the last parting salute of the glorious orb that was setting. It was not merely that I had never seen, but I could not have imagined such beauty of landscape; and as we swept quietly along near the shore, and I could mark the villas shrouded in the deep woods of chestnut and oak, and saw the olive and the cactus, with the orange and the oleander, bending their leafy branches over the blue water, I thought to myself, would not a life there be nearer to Paradise than any thing wealth and fortune could buy elsewhere?

"There, yonder," said the captain, pointing to the ornamented chimneys of a house surrounded by a deep oak wood, and the terrace of which overhung the sea, "that's the villa of old Ignaz Oppovich. They say he is a prosperous trader, with half a million of florins to sell it, but miser as he was and is the old fellow refused it."

"Is that Oppovich of the firm of Hodzig and Oppovich?" asked I.

"Yes; the house is all Oppovich's now, and half Fiume too, I believe."

"There are worse fellows than old Ignaz," said another voice. "I wonder what would become of the hospital, or the foundling, or the asylum for the orphans here, but for him."

"He's a Jew," said another, spitting out with contempt.

"A Jew that could teach many a Christian the virtues of charity and piety," said the other. "A Jew that never refused an alms to the poor, no matter of what belief, and that never spoke ill of his neighbor."

"I never heard as much good of him before, and I have been a member of the town council with him these two years."

The other touched his hat respectfully in recognition of the speaker's rank, and said no more.

The steamer, however, invariably halts upon him who, alone and friendless, makes first acquaintance with the scene wherein he is to live. I love him who, for the first time, sees the objects he sees can ever become of interest to him; how impossible it seems that he will live to look on this as familiar; that he will walk that narrow street as a familiar spot; giving back the kindly greetings that he gets, and feeling that strange, mysterious sense of brotherhood that grows out of daily intercourse with the same people!

I was curious to see where the Herr Oppovich lived, and found the place after some search. The public garden of the town, a prettily planted spot, lies between the two mountain streams, flanked by tall mountains, and is rather affected by the inhabitants from its suspicion of damp. Although the month was May I saw not one being as I went—I passed on to a dark space at the extreme end, find beyond which a small wooden bridge gave access to a garden wildly overgrown with evergreens and shrubs, and so neglected that it was not easy at first to select the right path among the many that led through the tangled brush-wood. Following one of these, I came out on a little lawn in front of a long low house of two stories, the roof was high-pitched and the windows narrow, and defended by strong iron shutters, which lay open on the outside wall, displaying rude but solid bar, indicative of strength and resistance. No smoke issued from a chimney, not a sound broke the silence. There was there a look of long living things around—desolation like it I had never seen. At last a mean, half-starved dog crept coweringly across the lawn, and on to the high the door, and there whined plaintively. After a brief pause the door opened, the animal stole in, the door then closed with a bang, and all was as before. I turned back toward the town with a heavy heart: a misery dread of those I was to be associated with on the morrow came over me, and I turned to the inn and locked myself into my room, and sat down my bed with a sense of desolation that found vent at last in a flood of tears.

As I look back on the night that followed it seems to me one of the saddest passages of my life. If I fell asleep it was to dream of the past, with all its exciting pleasures and delights; and again awaking to the reality, I found myself in this wretched, poverty-stricken, foreign, where every object spoke of misery, and recalled me to the thought of a country where all was ignoble and as lowly.

I remember well how I longed for day to dawn, that I might get up and wander along the shore, and breathe the pure air, and hear the plash of the sea, and seek in that greater, wider, and more beautiful world of nature a peace that my own miserable individuality could not suffer me to enjoy. And at the first gleam of light I did steal down and issue forth, to walk for hours along the beach in a strange excitement from the beauty of the scene, that filled me at last with a sense of almost happiness. I thought of Pauline, too, and remembered how she partake of the first light this lovely spot imparted to me? would she see these leafy woods, that bold mountain, that crystal sea, the golden-shining sands many a day on deep, as I saw them? And if so, what a stimulus to labor and grow rich was in the thought!

In pleasant reveries, that dashed the future with much that had delighted me in the past, the hours rolled on, and it was time to present myself at Herr Oppovich's. Armed with my letter of introduction, I soon found myself at the door of a large warehouse, over which the name stood in big letters. A narrow wooden stair ascended steeply from the entrance to a long low room, in which fully twenty clerks were busily engaged at their desks. At the end of this, in a smaller room, I was told Herr Ignaz—for he was always so called—held his private office.

Before I was well conscious of it I was standing in this room before a short thick-set old man, with heavy eyebrows and hooked nose, whose long coat of coarse cloth reached to his feet.

He sat and examined me as he read the note, pausing at times in the reading as if to compare me with the indications before him.

"Digby Owen—is that the name?" asked he.

"Yes, Sir."

"Native of Ireland, and never before employed in commercial pursuits?"

I nodded to this interrogatory.

"I am not in love with Ireland, nor do I feel a great liking for ignorance, Herr Owen," said he, slowly rising from his chair—deep impressions in his tone, though the words came with the thick accentuation of the Jew. "My old friend and correspondent should have remembered these prejudices of mine. Herr Jacob Heinfetter should not have sent you here."

I knew not what reply to make to this, and was silent.

"He should not have sent you here;" and he repeated the words with increased solemnity. "What do you want me to do with you?" said he, sharply, after a brief pause.

"Any thing that will serve to let me earn my bread," said I, calmly.

"Ha! ha!" said the senior judge," said the old man. "Look here now," said he to me, as he turned over the beautifully clean and neatly kept volume. "This is the work of a boy who earns six hundred florins a year. You began with four, Harasch?"

"Three hundred, Herr Ignaz," said the young bookkeeper.

"Can you live and wear such clothes as these," said the old man, touching my coat-sleeve, "on three hundred florins a year—paper florins, mind, which in your money would make about twenty-five pounds?"

"If I will do my best with it," said I, determined he should not deter me by mere words.

"Take him with you, Harasch; let him copy into the waste-book. We shall see in a few days what he's fit for."

At a sign from the youth I followed him out, and soon found myself in the outer room, where a considerable number of the younger clerks were waiting my acknowledgment.

Nothing could well be less like the manners and habits I was used to than the coarse familiarity and easy assurance of the young men who surrounded me. They questioned me about my birth, my education, my means, what circumstance had driven me to my present step, and to whom of my friends had done any thing to save me from it. Not content with a number of very searching inquiries, they began to moralize on the fact that Ignaz would not put up with my incapacity for a week. "You'll be sent to your friend Jacob," cried one; and the sentence was chimed at once.

"Ja! ja! he'll be sent into the yard." And though I was dying to know what that might mean, my pride restrained my curiosity, and I would not condescend to ask.

"What is to be in the yard!" I heard one whisper to another, and they both began laughing at the conceit; and I now sat down on a bench and looked myself in thought.

"Come; we are going to dinner, Englander," said Harasch to me at last; and I arose and followed him.

CHAPTER XVII.

HANSEL OF THE YARD.

I WAS soon to learn what being "sent into the yard" meant. Within a week that destiny was mine. Being so sent was held to be one being charged to count the staves as they arrived in Austro-Hungary, Hungary, oaken staves being the chief "industry" of Fiume, and the principal source of Herr Oppovich's fortune.

My companion, and, indeed, my instructor in this intellectual employment, was a fellow-lodging, dwarfish creature, who, whatever the season, was always to be seen in a yellow leather, the jerkin being fastened round the waist by a broad belt with a heavy brass buckle. He had been in the yard for many years, and though his assistants had been uniformly promoted to the office, he had met with no advancement in life, and was still on the same walk and the same grade in which he had started.

Hans Spöner was, however, a philosopher, and went about his occupation with a cheerful mind that the open air and the freedom were better than the closeness and confinement within doors, and, if he had not risen, had not fallen, and therefore reached him able to relish plainer food; and this mode of reconciling things—striking the balance between good and ill—went through life, as he said or did, and his favorite phrase, "Es ist fast einerley," or "It comes to about the same," comprised his whole system of resigned submission.

If as first I felt the occupation assigned to me as in no way degrading, and Hansel's companionship soon reconciled me to submit to it with patience. It was not merely that he displayed an invariable good-humor and pleasantry, but there was a forbearance about him, and a delicacy in his dealing with me, actually gentlemanlike. Thus he never questioned me as to my former condition, nor asked by what accident I had fallen to my present lot; and, while showing in many ways that he saw I was unused to hardship, he rather treated my inexperience as a mere fortuitous circumstance than as a thing to comment or dwell on. Hansel, besides this, taught me how to live on my humble pay of a florin and ten kreutzers—about two shillings—daily. With a small room that I had a cot and he yard, and could consequently devote my modest salary to my maintenance. The straitened economy of Hans himself had enabled him to lay by about eight hundred florins, and he strongly advised me to arrange my mode of life on a plan that would admit of such a prudent saving.

Less for this purpose than to give my friend a strong proof of the full confidence I reposed in his judgment and his honor, I confided to his care all my earnings, and only begged he would provide for me as for himself; and likewise that I became inseparable. We took our coffee together at daybreak, our little soup and boiled beef at noon, and our potato-salad, with perhaps a sardine or such like, at night for supper; the "Viertelstein"—the fourth of a bottle—being equitably divided between us to cheer our hearts and cement good-fellowship on certainly as acrid a liquor as ever was pressed into such excellent ends.

None of the clerks would condescend to know us. Herr Frippet, the cashier, would not to us in the street, but the younger men never recognized us at all, save in some exquisite moment of freedom by a wink or a jerk of the head. We were in a most subordinate condition, and they made us feel it.

From Hans I learned that Herr Oppovich was a widower with two children, a son and a daughter. The former was an irreclaimable scamp and vagabond, whose debts had been paid over and over again, and who had been sent at last to the army with disgrace, and was now wandering about Europe, living on his father's friends, and trading for small loans on his future name. This was Adolph Oppovich. The girl—Sara she was called—was, in Hansel's judgment, not much more to be liked than her brother, only in a more proud and insolent to a degree that would have been remarkable in a princess of a reigning house. From the clerks she exacted a homage which was positively absurd. It was not alone that they should attend to stand uncovered as she passed, but that if any had occasion to address her, the invariable prelude what he had to say by kissing her hand an act of vassalage that in Austria is limited to persons of the lowliest kind.

"She regards me as a wild beast, and I am therefore spared this piece of servitude," said Hans, and he laughed his noiseless, uncouth laugh as he thought of his immunity.

"Is she handsome?" asked I.

"How can she be handsome when she is so overbearing?" said he. "Is not beauty gentleness, mildness, softness? How can I agree with eyes that flash disdain, and a mouth that seems to curl with insolence? The old proverb says, 'Schönheit ist Tugend;' and that's why Our Lady is always so lovely."

Hansel was a devout Catholic; and not impossibly the argument made his judgment of the young Jewess all the more severe. Of Herr Oppovich himself he would say little. Perhaps he deemed it more loyal to discuss with me whose bread he ate; perhaps he had not sufficient experience of me to trust me with his opinion: at all events he was no further than an admission that he was wise and keen in business; one who made few mistakes himself, nor forgave them easily in another.

"Never do more than he tells you to do, younker," said Hans to me one day; "and he'll trust you, if you do that well." All this was not the least valuable hint he gave me.

Hans had a great deal of small worldly wisdom, the fruit rather of a long experience than of any remarkable gift of observation. As he said himself, it took him four years to learn the business of the office; and as I acquired the knowledge in about a week, he regarded me as a perfect genius.

We soon became fast and firm friends. The way in which I had surrendered myself to this guidance—giving him up the management of my money, and almost submitting to his authority as though I were his son—had won upon the old man immensely. I, on my side—friendless and companionless, save with Himself—grew close to the only one who seemed to take an interest in me. Year—I must even say it—as we wended our way, at noon, toward the little eating-house where we dined, and I saw the friends with whom I had exchanged greetings, and felt the class and condition he belonged to and fell in the coarse looks and coarser ways of his associates, I was ashamed to think to what I had fallen. I had, indeed, no respect, nor any liking for the young fellows of the counting-house. They were coarse, offensively vulgar, and though had the outward semblance, the dress, and the gait of their betters, and they were privileged by appearance to stroll into a cafe and dine at one from which I and my companion would speedily have been ejected. I confess I envied them that mere right of admission into the vast pleasure world, and sorrowed over my own exclusion as though it had been inflicted on me as a punishment.

This jealous feeling met no encouragement from Hans. The old man had no rancor of any kind in his nature. He had no sense of discontent with his condition, nor any desire to change it. Counting stoves seemed to him a very fitting way to occupy existence; and he knew of many occupations that were less pleasant and less wholesome, for instance, for the paper-mill, or hides, in both of which Herr Jaeger dealt. Hans would have seriously disliked; but staves were cleanly and sweet-smelt and sweetly of the oak-wood they came from; and there was something noble in their destiny—to form casks and hogsheads for the rich wines of France and Spain —which he was fond of recalling: and so would he say, "Without you and me, boy, or those like us, they'd have no vats nor barrels for the real grape-juice."

While he thus talked to me, trying to invest my humble position with what might appear to me eyes, I struggled often with myself whether I should not tell him the story of my life—in what rank I had lived, to what hopes of fortune I had been reared. Would this knowledge have raised me in the old man's esteem, or would it have estranged him from me? That was the question. How should I come through the ordeal of his judgment? higher or lower? A mere chance decided for me what all my pondering could not resolve. Hans came home one night with a little book in his hand, a present for me. It was a French grammar, and, as he told me, the key to all knowledge.

"The French are the great people of the world," said he, "and all you know their tongue, you can have no difficulty anywhere in life." There was a "younker" once under him in the yard, who, just because he could read and write French, was now a clerk with six hundred florins salary. "When you have worked hard for three months we'll look out for a master, younker."

"But I know it already, Hansel," said I, smiling. "I speak it even better than I speak German, and English, too, for that matter, but it's true. I had masters for these, and for Greek and history, and I was taught to draw, and to sing, and to play the piano, and I learned how to ride and to dance."

"Just like a born gentleman," laughed Hans.

"I was, and I am, a born gentleman; don't shake your head, or wring your hands, Hansel. Birth and breeding, like gifts, are not rovings! I'll soon convince you what I say is true."

I hurried to my room, and opening my trunk, took out my papers, some trinkets, some studs of value, and a costly chain my father had given me. "These are all mine! I used to wear them once, as children wear toys. I've worn both these buttons. There were more servants in my father's house than there are clerks in Herr Oppovich's counting-house. I'll tell you who I was, and how I came to be what I am."

I told him my whole story, the old man listening with an attention and interest that I had never deeply interested than when I told of the splendors and magnificence of my father's house. He never could hear enough of the entertainments and great banquets, where troops of servants waited, and every wish of the guest was on once animated.

"And all this," cried he, at last, "all this, day after day, night after night, and not once in a year only, as it is with us, on the Kaiser Sara's birthday!" And now the poor old man, in the impetuousness himself for listening so long, broke out into a description of the festivities by which Herr Oppovich celebrated his daughter's birthday; a description on which he invited all in his employment to pass the day in his villa, on the side of the bay, and when, by Hansel's account, a most princely hospitality held sway. "There are no portions, no measurements, but each is free to eat and drink as he likes," cried Hans, in high praise, described a banquet of millennial magnificence. "It is a day will see for yourself," added he, "for even the 'Lynd' is invited."

I cautioned him strictly not to divulge what I had told him of myself; nor was it necessary after all, for he well knew that Herr Frippet resented the thought of any one in his service having other pretensions than such as grew out of his own fawning humility.

"You'd be sent away to-morrow, younker," said he, "if he but knew what you were. There's an old proverb shows how they think of people of quality:

"Die Juden nicht bluden
Und Kerrschaften nicht schaden.'

The Jews can not abide the great folk, with their indebtedness; and to deem these inseparable is a creed.

"On the 31st of August falls the Fräulein's birthday, lad, and you shall tell me the next morning if your father gave a grander fête than that."

A WONDERFUL FISH—AGAIN.

In No. 617 of the Weekly for October 24, 1868, we gave a figure and description of a fish caught near Eastport, Maine, and now on exhibition in Boston. The following communication to Professor Baird as one of the naturalists who were unable to classify this lusus naturæ. We have since received a letter from Professor Agassiz, from Professor Gill, of the Smithsonian Institution, a well-known authority on the subject of sharks, which we also subjoin, for the benefit of our readers:

SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION, October 28, 1868.

Editor Harper's Weekly:

SIR: I have been also called to the description and figure of a "Wonderful Fish" in a recent Number of the Weekly. I may have to add that the figure is not an animal of the same kind, showing the real character of the animal. It is a Basking shark, or a large shark, the so-called "face" being simply club-shaped appendages of the head. Should you desire such a small book, the like of which are found in all seas and in all the world, I can furnish one.

The shark in question is well known to fishermen and naturalists, both in this country and in Europe, and the Basking or Bone Shark (scientifically Selache Carcharias) reaches, as I said, a length of over forty feet. At Storer's work on the fishes of Massachusetts, as well as in Dekay's work on New York, it has frequently been found on our coast, and has even been hunted systematically for its oil, of which six or seven barrels have sometimes been obtained from a single specimen. The only curious thing about the fish is, that since in its habits from those of other sharks, feeding, as it is believed, on minute animals, and even on very minute marine animals, and never showing any disposition to attack man, it should be furnished with a small to do any mischief, being not larger than those of an ordinary codfish. The principal characteristics are the anterior position of the small eyes; the very large gill openings; the minute teeth, and the peculiarly complicated structure of the intestinal canal.

Though such a monster in size, it is even in this respect rivaled, if not exceeded, by smaller species of the same group, the Carcharodon shark, of which an example, lately taken in Gloucester harbor, measured nearly forty feet in length, and of which a species has been found in the Mediterranean, which is also of a size. This, unlike the other, is a real "man-eater," the great width of its teeth and its fiercely rendering it most formidable.

Professor Baird, when he saw the animal at Calais, at once recognized it as a Basking shark, but not being certain whether it was considered to be distinct from the European species, or identical with it, wrote to Mr. Gould for the requisite information, which he did, and which he duly communicated to the proprietor in accordance with his promise. The reference to the fabled monster of Lake Utopia, and the stories of its antics in large type on the bills, have also been set there by the failing tide, are entirely unworthy of consideration.

SILENCE.

WHEN a sick man falls asleep,
All the watchers silence keep;
Silence, till the sleeper wake,
Roused from happy dreams to pain.

Hushed their breath, their voices die,
Muffled feet move noiselessly,
And the softer influence not,
All his waking ills forget.

Sweet one, I beseech of thee
As the sick consider me.
While my heart has ceased to weep,
Hush! in thine own breast asleep.

Almost heal'd, it slumbereth,
Wake it not with touch or breath;
Grant sweet pity mild and meek
Do the weary and the weak.

Wake it not, although it be
Even from dreams of misery.
Do not stir the dregs of ill;
Let it slumber: hush! be still.

HOME AND FOREIGN GOSSIP.

A FEARFUL epidemic is raging—no epidemic of cerebro-spinal fever in the metropolis, but widespread throughout our country, in large cities and West, as well as in quiet villages, the pestilential breath is abroad, and it is fast sending to the tomb of multitudes. Every daily newspaper contains a horrible record of murders—murders prompted by every evil passion and vile motive to which mankind could become a slave, and committed almost apparently without any motive, strange and inexplicable. The most remedial agencies more powerful than now exist, or more wisely and universally administered, are necessary to evident. The recent assassination of Mr. Charles Lennox Richardson, a young English author for law prevails, and how little care is taken even to enforce the few laws we have. Here, in a quiet, respectable street in this city, within sight of the Battery, a young citizen should be deliberately attacked in front of his own residence, mortally stabbed, and robbed. Yet such was the case; and the murderer escaped. The law in ill-gotten gains minutely tested. This is but a single instance: but the thoughtful mind can not but be appalled at the fearful daily records of similar atrocities, and pray that existing laws may be more severe protection.

The Metropolitan Board of Health declares the law in full force by which the slaughtering of any animal for food, except fish, fowl, and fish, is prohibited on ground within the limits of the City of New York. The health of New York is the city of Brooklyn, without a single exception, from the Board of Health. This is an excellent thing for people who live below the Battery, and who protects the health and comfort of residents above Fortieth Street?

Congress has adopted a resolution, recently offered, directing the Secretary of Agriculture to inquire into the expediency of reorganizing the Department of Agriculture, so as to provide for the selection of one person from each State, familiar with the agricultural wants and interests of each State, to occupy a semi-official position in the department.

The Frankfort election which recently occurred in Rochester, which the Democratic persons were killed and thirty wounded, should be a fresh lesson to build. A floor in the Democratic house in Harris and St. Paul's Roman Catholic church gave way while it was crowded with people assembled for the holiday festival. The floor was supported by brick piers arches inclose square. The cause of its giving way was the crushing of one of these piers, a portion of the brick of which it was composed being soft and calculated to yield to the pressure of the superstructure, augmented by the weight of people on the floor. The piers were capped with a stone coping, and there is not every other particular the structure is as strong as could be desired. That the piers were insufficient for the weight they were called upon to sustain by the crowd. It is probable that had the accident not occurred the ingenuity of Rochesters would have found out why they were strong enough. The building has been erected about ten years.

According to the London Times, although the "bathing season" is over, there are still every morning on an average from 200 to 300 persons who bathe from the Serpentine, no matter how inclement or severe the weather may be. The Royal Humane Society is commanded by their medical advisers to take a cold bath every morning throughout the summer months, and have derived so much benefit that they have continued day by day throughout the winter for many years—for over fifty years, in fact. Even when the water has been covered with ice several inches thick it has been so broken and removed that a bath could be made to the receiving-house of the Royal Humane Society for the use of the bathers. It is said to be true that these persistent bathers may have their dip, emerging from the water with icicles hanging from their beards.

No less than 17,000 laborers are at present employed on the Isthmus of Suez. Independent of the work accomplished by numerous smaller instruments the constructors are sixty dredging machines, which never stop day or night, and which, of course, are always progressing. In about ten months the twenty millions of cubic metres of earth which now remain to be carried away for the purpose of forming the canal will be removed.

The water with which the city of Erie is supplied is drawn from the lake, nearly a quarter of a mile from shore, and is raised by steam power two hundred and thirty feet. The new water-works are just completed.

Not long ago a peasant in Prussia presented an odd mass at a bank of a provincial town, and requested the cashier to "change it for him." On close examination one little scrap was found containing the number of a note for a thousand thalers, and the rest was nothing could be made of it. The poor peasant then explained that he had found eight-eighths of a bank-note from the market, and had lost the little bundle in the stable. There an eager goat found it, and proceeded calmly to eat it up. The peasant having become aware of his loss, rushed back into the stable, and just entered it in time to perceive the remorsel of a ten-thaler note disappearing. He killed the goat, and took the result. The question arose whether chemical agencies might restore some portions of the mass, or a microscope reveal traces invisible to the naked eye. The peasant received the use of one note, and a promise that every thing possible should be done for him.

It is stated that Samuel M. Andrews, alone his confinement in the State Prison at Charlestown, has inhibited the same calmness which characterized his conduct during his trial. He has been put to work in a machine shop—having some knowledge of machinery—and appears to work with diligence and good-humor.

Count de Beneski, a Russian nobleman, and an artist of considerable repute, recently died in Rochester, New York. He inherited a valuable estate near Moscow, together with two hundred and fifty serfs, all of whom he emancipated. When Bokhara entered the throne, the Count, in consequence of his liberal views, was obliged to leave his native country and all his possessions. Accustomed as he was to wealth and luxury, he found himself unsatisfied to earn a support for a subsistence. He was used to dictate, and possessed a haughty bearing. He resolved to paint miniatures; and in Hamburg, Paris, and London practiced much notice as an artist. His paintings, which were exhibited at the Crystal Palace, at the World's Fair, in London, 1851, won the first premium. He was subsequently appointed painter to the royal family of Great Britain. In 1859 he came to this country, whose free institutions he greatly admired; and during several years resided in Rochester, being much esteemed by those who knew him.

Thirty-six patients in the Lunatic Hospital at Northampton, Massachusetts, have recovered during the year. At present there are two hundred and sixty in the institution considers insanity essentially a disease of debility. Tonics, including raw stimulants, are the principal medicines, assisted by aperients, diuretics, alteratives, or cathartics.

Ladyslea, Bohemia, contains, abounds in paper-mills, which produce about twenty-six tons of paper a day. The manufacture is by the most primitive means.

In 1250—so the story goes—the fences and cabins of Wielieska, ten miles from Cracow, in Austria, was discovered by a salt-miner, Daniel Kraus, who, upon the possession of the Austrian Government in 1772, and with a last remnant of upward of 60 cubic feet. It is now stated that this mine is threatened with total destruction by a stream of water which lately made its appearance while the workmen were engaged in one of the lower shafts in search of potash. All the means employed to prevent the water from flowing in and flooding the mine have been unsuccessful; it flows at the rate of 1,000 cubic feet a minute, and has already almost filled the lower passages, rapidly dissolving the salt with which it comes in contact. A dike is being built for confining the water and leading it out of the mine, but it is feared that the salt columns which support the upper excavations will be undermined before the work can be completed.

A Boston boy, about nine years old, called a physician. The M.D. was willing to give medical attention, but desired pay in advance, or a formal agreement to be made to pay when his services were fully rendered.

"Can't it kill or cure for twenty dollars?" said Pat.

"Yes."

The boy assented, and entered into the contract. The woman died, and in due time the doctor presented his bill. Pat looked at it a moment, and then asked:

"An' did yez cure her?"

"No," answered the physician.

"An' did yez kill her?"

"I was power. The bill, at last accounts, had not been settled.

Last week a sixty-pound bomb-shell exploded in the house of an iron foundry in Concord, N.H. Several workmen were severely injured, but the fine house was shattered entirely to pieces it is wonder that no greater damage was not done, and that no lives lost. The shell came from Portsmouth Navy-yard with a quantity of others, and was warranted free from powder.

A man in Toledo has been pretending to make sudden bursting cures by animal magnetism. He is now discovered that he keeps about his person six electric batteries with which he charges himself with power.

We see mention made in an exchange of a country pastor who, on Christmas morning, could not find his sermon. He looked and search was made, but was never discovered—but in them were the horns of a new milch cow, which (the cow, not the horned beast) was the gift of a considerate people.

Russia's wife at Paris is for sale. It is built on a scale of which we of the West have no conception. Of Paris from the Bois de Boulogne. The little dwelling is surrounded by an iron railing, and covered with ivy. In the middle of the garden stands the arbor where Russia used to study Spanish on fourth semester days. The park is filled with sycamores and maids bordered with box, and with a profusion of flowers, which fill the air all round with perfumed incense; and the songs of the birds, which he loved so much, make a concert of the most delightful retreat.

The Chicago Republican gives an interesting incident, which illustrates the free-and-easy style of life that far-famed Western metropolis: "A gentleman last evening, in an Indiana Avenue car, sat composedly with his arms around the waist of a female on his body, and a fond gracefully reposing upon each manly knee. The lady was the wife of one of the gentleman's wife and the other his sister, or one his sister and the other his wife, or whether both were his wives or both his sisters, or both somebody else's sisters or somebody else's wives does not appear, by the quiet conversation of the interested parties, not exciting.

What can be done to give employment to those in our city who want to make an honest living? It is estimated that there are from 20,000 to 30,000 people in the cities of New York and Brooklyn who have no regular employment by which they may feed and clothe themselves and their families. Some good comprehensive measures only can bring relief to such destitution.

During the last year one hundred and forty-one children were placed in the Michigan Public Asylum, seventy-nine of which were necessitated by their friends.

A short time ago a Mrs. White, living in New Jersey, confessed on her death-bed that she had poisoned her husband, brother-in-law, and child. As she had borne an unblemished character before, every body was horror-stricken at such a disclosure. A later version of the story places the affair in a different light: and it is the opinion of the physician who attended her that her words were the ramblings of a weak mind, produced by the effects of laudanum and brandy, which had been freely administered to her during days previous to her death, in order to get rest.

TROTTERS ON THE SNOW.—SKETCHED BY THOMAS WORTH.—[SEE PAGE 58.]

THE SLEIGH-RIDE.—[SEE PAGE 60.]

THE SLEIGHING CARNIVAL.

THE first few days of January promised an exciting sleighing-season; but the hopes aroused were soon dissipated by an old-fashioned "January thaw," though not before the brief season of enjoyment had been eagerly cultivated and enjoyed by our citizens. Sleighs-ride was the delight of New Yorkers; and no city in the country affords better riders out or drives our metropolis, with its splendid suburban avenues. There was, accordingly, a general turn-out in sleighs of every style—the aristocratic carriage, in vehicles that looked as much like worn-out boxes on runners as any thing else, in single sleighs and in double sleighs, in two and four horse-all description, from the best-blooded steed down to the sorriest hack. Our avenues were filled with these jolly pleasure-seeking parties of respectable ladies and gentlemen, parties of "roughs," parties of children whose young faces looked like flowers amidst deserts of snow, and parties of sledding sports with their favorite trotters, such as Mr. WOMER shows us in his admirable illustration on page 56. The drives in Central Park, Harlem Lane, and the other avenues leading out from the city were crowded with the swiftly moving cavalcade.

CHARLOTTE MOREL.

IT is the way of the world to speak of the Middle Ages as if they were dead and buried. But far from the trenches of the mighty, trenches now and then find out spots where medieval life is not dead but sleeping. The men wear coats, and the women chignons: but beneath these outward signs of the nineteenth century lie modes of thought and habits of life which certainly belong to another age than this. These places are mostly found abroad; little mousey provincial towns are they, not sufficiently interesting to attract antiquarians, and not large enough to stimulate enterprise; places in which life is as dull and as torpid as it was three hundred years ago and more.

To this quiet tribe belongs VERRIÈRES, in one of the central provinces of France. Money is of great account in places like this, and Mammon has reached its fell value in VERRIÈRES. That little hundred-year-old town, with its long, gray walls and its green gardens spreading behind its old houses so quaint and gray, thinks a great deal of Mammon.

Thanks to Mammon, therefore, Monsieur MOREL, the richest man in VERRIÈRES, held a high position in his native place. Monsieur MOREL was a grocer and general dealer. He literally fed and clothed VERRIÈRES. Monsieur MOREL sold flour, cheese, eggs, sugar, chocolate, candy, spirits, and wine even, crockery, hardware, boots and shoes, cloths, silks, calico, linen, and every species of "soft goods" stuff, not to speak of changes of fashion. Monsieur MOREL soon became a rich man, and grew richer with every year. He lived in a very old house, with long, low windows to it; windows high and narrow which, as well as the steep roof and massive chimneys, stacks, spoke of a by-gone age. In the broad and lofty rooms of that house—and it had many —he stored away his multifarious goods, and retired in their solemn and dusky retreat save by Monsieur MOREL and his clerk, LENOIR, a little, wiry old man, who went through life with a pen behind his ear. These two, Monsieur MOREL and LENOIR, assisted by two stout servant-women, attended to the shop. This was not in the old house, as might have been expected, but in the yard at the back of that house. A low, dingy-looking shop it was, in which perpetual twilight reigned, and where the sun never entered; but a shop in which the clinking of money was heard all the day long, and all the year round. Light and cash it had had in its early days, when the yard merged into a pleasant garden, bounded by a little river which flowed between willows and aspen-trees. But when Monsieur MOREL's business so increased that he knew not where to turn to for spare room the garden was sacrificed.

Madame MOREL died when her first child was born. Her widowed husband never married again. Apart from his wife's death, Monsieur MOREL had troubles incidental to his position. The chief of these was, that the little Madame MOREL had not given him a son, but a daughter.

"Ah, LENOIR!" he would say to his clerk, "the mother-abbess gives me for her account of the little thing's temper and abilities; my own eyes tell me that she is both pretty and healthy. But it is a great trial that I have not got a Charles, but a Charlotte. The business, you know."

"It is a great pity that Mademoiselle Charlotte is not Monsieur Charles," Lenoir would tactfully answer. "It certainly was a great mistake."

When Madame MOREL's mistake was about seven years old she came home to her father's on a week's holiday. A very pretty, quiet, demure child, with black eyes and a rosy face, was Charlotte MOREL. And very pretty she looked when she acted as bridemaid to her father's sister, who married Monsieur Roussel, the notary, about this time. Monsieur Roussel was a widower, and his son, Henri, a lad of twelve, took a great fancy to Mademoiselle Charlotte. He sat by her at the wedding-dinner; he danced with her in the evening; and when she complained of being fatigued, he chivalrously put her on his back, and carried her home. Monsieur MOREL, who was already looking out for a son-in-law, and who liked the aspect of this handsome and spirited lad, slapped him on the back, and said, cheeringly:

"That's right, Henri; carry your little wife."

Upon which, Henri, turning his frank face and blue eyes to Charlotte, said, gayly:

"Will you marry me, Charlotte? Eh, will you marry me?"

The proposal, coming as it did when Charlotte was on her suitor's back, with her arms around his neck, was an awkward one. She looked shy and doubtful; before she could answer, Henri's uncle and godfather, Monsieur BARON, the farmer, interfered, and said, sarcastically:

"Is not my son, Charlotte, or you will repent it, for you see Henri has a wife now."

Henri became crimson, and bit his lip.

"Henri will improve," hesitatingly said the father.

"Please to put me down?" asked Charlotte.

"I will not, mademoiselle," said Henri. "I will carry you, whether you like it or not, mamzelle."

Charlotte submitted; but when they reached home, and Henri put her down, she would neither look at him nor bid him good-night.

"You are a saucy little thing," he said, angrily.

A remark which Charlotte did not deign to answer.

Charlotte was about eighteen when Monsieur Morel said one morning to Lenoir:

"I must see about a son-in-law."

But where was the young man to be found who could be both Charlotte Morel's husband and Monsieur Morel's successor? Where was the lover and the man of business? All VERRIÈRES could not yield him.

"I must try Henri Roussel," said Monsieur Morel, with a sigh. Monsieur Lenoir heard, and groaned, and turned up his eyes. Matters must be bad indeed for Monsieur Morel to take such a resolve as this.

Henri Roussel was now a very fine, manly-looking young fellow, with, perhaps, a little too much of a reckless, ungovernable temper, which had already led him into various scrapes, and which kept his father, a weak, good-natured man, and his step-mother, a timid, yielding woman, in a constant state of fever and uneasiness. Monsieur Roussel was the uncle of Monsieur BARON, who lived in the house next to that of his brother-in-law. To him Monsieur Morel broached his proposal.

"Please yourself; but remember you are one else will do any good with Henri," despondently answered Monsieur Roussel. "In this very room I told him so only yesterday."

"Perhaps he will like business better than the law," said Monsieur Morel.

His brother-in-law shook his head.

"Henri can live on the little fortune his mother left him," he said, "and Henri will like nothing. Mind," he added, shaking his hands, "you take him on your own responsibility."

This conference, Monsieur Morel went down stairs. His sister was knitting in a dull parlor, with her two daughters by her. When they had seen each other, and had explained his plans, the good lady dropped ten stitches of her knitting.

"Poor Charlotte!" she said. "Why, he will break the child's heart with his temper."

Monsieur Morel said something about some one who was not to be, as he was, overheard, upon which he was told that he did not know Henri Roussel.

"Well, then," he retorted, losing patience, "I can not help myself; beggars can not be choosers."

And he went forthwith to find the sinner whom he had always liked, to say the truth—at the end of the garden. A pleasant, sunlit garden was this garden, full of flowering shrubs sloping down to the river-side. Monsieur Morel walked down trim paths, with beds of stocks and wallflowers blooming very sweetly in the light shade of apple-trees, till he came to the river. There he found Monsieur Roussel in his shirt-sleeves, mending and hammering a boat in a tight good-will. He was twenty-three then, a tall and very handsome young fellow, with a huge curl in his yellow locks, but with a frank look in his blue eyes, and an open smile, which Monsieur Morel had always liked. As usual, he was in high spirits; he expounded his errand and made his proposal. Henri heard him, sitting on the side of the boat, with the hammer in his hand and his chin resting on the palm of the other.

"Thank you, uncle," he said, gravely; "but you know I never took to the law."

"The law is one thing, and business is another," replied Monsieur Morel.

"Yes—I want the practical, variety. Business gives these—the law does not. And you want me to marry Charlotte," continued the young man, gravely. "You know I am by no means so rich as she is."

"That is not business."

"But how will she like it, uncle?"

"That is your business," answered Monsieur Morel, smiling.

The color deepened on the young man's cheek; he was silent a while, then he made one last objection.

"My father, my step-mother, my two sisters all declare that I have a bad and violent temper. Are you willing, nevertheless, to trust me with your daughter's happiness?"

"I am, 'stoutly replied Monsieur Morel: "for if you have a warm temper, for which the color of your hair may be answerable, I believe you have also a generous heart, and that you are incapable of making my little Charlotte unhappy."

Henri Roussel said nothing, but his blue eyes were dim and his lips quivered as he rose and held out his hand, which Monsieur Morel grasped cordially. It was a bargain, and the young man swore that same evening, not to live in the house, which it was not needed, but to have a long business conversation with his uncle. He proved an apt pupil. There was life and activity in the business, so Monsieur Morel had truly said. Henri Roussel had to travel and go about to fairs and markets, and he showed such business talents and gave such satisfaction that Monsieur Morel sent for his daughter in order to conclude the matter as soon as possible.

Mademoiselle Charlotte Morel had rarely left her convent, and her few glimpses of the world seemed to have had no effect upon her. She was as quiet and demure as any little nun. Rather little she was, though not ungracefully so—little, but well grown, with a rosy, round face, charming dimples, lovely black eyes, and glossy black hair. This attractive young person also had an unbending will and temper, and more practical sense than ladies of her years are supposed to possess. Her father laid his plans open to her with the result that his fortune was invested in his business, and his son-in-law must also, if possible, be successor. He was quite satisfied with Henri Roussel, and though he wished to lay no compulsion upon her, he hoped that his daughter would like the young man. Charlotte heard him out, with her eyes downcast, and her hands folded on her lap, and then said, gravely:

"Has he not a bad temper?"

"Rather hasty, perhaps, reluctantly said Monsieur Morel. "But Monsieur Roussel would never be to a young and agreeable wife what he may have been to his family, you know."

Charlotte was very conscious in mingled surprise and doubt on hearing this.

"I hope to get old," she said, quaintly.

Monsieur Morel, not knowing what to say, began praising the young man's talent, assiduity, and good-looks.

"Henri always begins very well," composedly replied Charlotte, "and I know he is clever."

"And very handsome," persisted Monsieur Morel, simply.

His daughter answered with the untranslatable "comme ça," to which "so-so" is no equivalent, and then relapsed into silence on the subject.

To all appearance matters went on very well between the young people. Charlotte sat and worked in a corner of the shop on the ground floor, and there Henri would go and join her now and then. Monsieur Morel remained open, and from the shop Monsieur Morel watched them with a pleased eye. He saw his pretty daughter raising near her chair the wood which the creepers hung. How quiet and demure she looked, with her downcast eyes, while Henri Roussel, leaning against the wall, gazed down at her in evident admiration!

"I fancy it will do," thought Monsieur Morel; but to be sure he mentioned his design further. Charlotte was silent a while: then she said:

"I mistrust him. He had a temper once, and he seems to be quiet now."

"Because he is fond of you."

"Ah, but suppose he should cease being fond of me?"

Now, as ill-luck would have it, Monsieur Morel repeated this conversation to Henri Roussel. He was a young man of action, and said nothing, but bit his lip and turned very red. He sometimes rowed Charlotte and his sisters down the river of an evening, and he did so late on the afternoon of this day. The sun was setting behind the old church of VERRIÈRES. Blue and gold lay in the sky, and mingled in the placid surface of the little stream with the green shadows of the aspens and the willows. The boat floated past quiet gardens as he rowed, Henri Roussel, at Charlotte with mingled love and anger. The young girl sat still, for Louise, Henri's youngest sister, had fallen asleep by her side.

"Why do you not trust me, Charlotte?" asked Henri, abruptly.

Charlotte raised her eyes in some wonder: then guessing the truth, she colored a little, but replied, composedly:

"What difference does it make to you whether I trust you or not?"

Her quiet manner, her unmoved look exasperated him. In a moment Henri recovered the temper which the fair Charlotte supposed him to have lost. His eyes flashed, his lips trembled with resentment.

"You must be heartless to put such a question," he said, indignantly.

Charlotte looked at him very earnestly:

"Thank you," she said, bowing her head with ironical courtesy. "Pray be so kind as to row me back."

He complied without saying a word. That same evening Charlotte composedly informed her father that she should never marry Henri Roussel.

"The man who can not rule himself shall never rule me," she said.

Monsieur Morel was much annoyed, and much troubled. He did his best to convince Charlotte that she had made a great blunder under the idea that the proposal was evidently so distasteful to her, and she shrank from it with such pain, that he did not insist.

"Very well," he said, desperately; "I must send off poor Henri, and you must go back to the convent till I have found some one else."

To this sentence Charlotte submitted without a word. She went away the very next morning. Henri said, bitterly:

"I do not know why I regret her: she did not care a straw for me."

And he, too, went, not merely from his uncle's house, but from VERRIÈRES, which he left for PARIS, and entered a huge commercial house.

Nothing came of Monsieur Morel's search for some one else. He lived in hope, and left his daughter safe behind convent walls till she was twenty-one, when grim Death settled his perplexity by calling him very suddenly away one sunny summer morning.

VERRIÈRES was much startled by the news, and VERRIÈRES first thought on the subject was a pithy homily on the vanity of human sorrow. VERRIÈRES grieved very little for the dead man, but wondered very much who was going to step into his shoes. Several individuals, for whose business talents Monsieur Morel had entertained a strong contempt, had visions of purchasing the business, and lording it in the great old house; they sounded Lenoir, the old clerk, and as he heard them out and returned diplomatic replies, they one and all felt pretty sure of success. Monsieur Roussel was a very much respected, he consulted with Mademoiselle Morel's nearest relatives, and they all came to the conclusion that Monsieur Roussel, Henri's father, would prove to be the successful applicant; he was not, indeed, the successor such a man as Monsieur Morel should have had, but he was at least objectionable of all the claimants for the dead man's honors. Monsieur Morel had been dead a fortnight, when Lenoir was delighted to receive a subject to his late master's daughter. To his amazement, Charlotte interrupted him at once.

"Thank you," she said, "but please tell that Monsieur Roussel that I shall carry on the business myself."

Monsieur Lenoir stared and was dumb. Remonstrance was useless, and he knew it. Of course this poor, deluded young thing would never get on—never, not even with the assistance—but she had a will of her own, she was of age too, and as Monsieur Roussel had discovered, her consent with the determination of keeping her own way henceforward.

Monsieur Roussel was equally and sadly skeptical, but VERRIÈRES was bitterly ironical. It foretold Mademoiselle Morel's downfall, and watched her going down. The process was a rapid one. Charlotte got on very well. Monsieur Lenoir did the traveling and the going about, and she stood at home and managed the business.

At first, Mademoiselle Morel knew nothing of the commercial world, and everything had excited. But, by-and-by, good-natured people, who felt bound to tell her, let her into the secrets. She found out, as the world does, also, but sure, was predicated, 'and that not even in her own family was a voice raised to prophesy her success. A slight change in the character of some seven years old, whom Charlotte was very fond of, gave her more information on that head than Charlotte cared to hear. She came in to her own evening, flushed and breathless with excitement.

"Oh! cousin," she cried, running up to Mademoiselle Morel, who was in the yard watering the creepers, "such news! My big brother, Henri, has just arrived."

"Indeed!"

"Yes; for a week only, you know. They all say I am so like him. Am I like him?" And she raised herself on tip-toe, and shook her auburn hair, for Charlotte the better to see the likeness.

Mademoiselle Morel looked down into the child's bright face.

"Yes, you are like him," she said, abstractedly; and she remained thus with the watering-pot in her hand, like one in a dream.

"And they told him about you, you know," pursued Louise, "and papa groaned, and said you would never do; and Uncle Joseph shook his head, and said you would never do; and Henri, you know, said, why not? Women do very well in business when they have brains and no beaux."

Charlotte was silent; if it were not that she changed color a little, she looked as if she had not heard this last.

"And Henri is going to Uncle Joseph's to-night," continued the little thing; "and as he will be back till Friday mamma asks me if you to come and spend to-morrow's holiday with us. You asked Henri if he would mind seeing you —he said, no; but it would be awkward for a whole day."

Still Charlotte was silent.

She took the child to her own house. She found Monsieur Roussel in the garden. He asked her to sit down, and, seeing any fear of seeing Henri, she complied while he sent for and summed his dogging.

"And how do you getting on?" he said, after a while, resting on his spade to address her.

"I am getting on well, uncle, I thank you."

Monsieur Roussel groaned and shook his head.

"Get married," he said; "get married, Charlotte."

"I am in no hurry, uncle."

"Well, you did wonderfully well not to take Henri, at least," he said, ruefully. "What do you look for, some one?"

Charlotte did not answer.

"Why, to ask me for seven thousand five hundred francs. I was astounded. I said, 'What for?' And I said, 'But that he could not tell,' he replied. 'Seven thousand five hundred francs!' exclaimed Monsieur Roussel, in double horror. "That boy will not end well, Charlotte."

Perhaps Charlotte had found to her own cost that a friend's friendship is full of sad prophecies, for she did not look so horrified as Monsieur Roussel evidently expected.

"You do not mean to say you think that natural?" he exclaimed, looking inquiring.

"I think nothing about it, uncle. Where is aunt?"

Madame Roussel now joined them. She, too, was full of the seven thousand five hundred francs.

"You know what Henri came for?" she said, plaintively.

"Yes; uncle told me. What a fine evening!"

"Will you come and spend to-morrow with us? Henri will not be at home," continued Madame Roussel.

"I am not afraid of Henri," rather proudly replied Charlotte; "but I shall be glad to spend to-morrow with you," she added, with a little sigh, "holidays seem so lonely."

The Verrières fashion of spending holiday is a dull one.

A good dinner, a walk in the garden, and a round game of cards in the evening was all the entertainment that Madame Roussel thought needful for her family. A thunder-storm interfered with one part of the programme—the garden was inaccessible. The dinner and the round game remained. Very long and wearisome seemed the dinner to Charlotte, who did not care for good cheer; and the evening was not much better. She soon lost all her counters, and was henceforth out of the game. While the others played on she leaned back in her chair, listening to the wind, which was raging, and to the rain that now beat wildly against the window-panes. Monsieur Roussel was peering at the cards through his gold spectacles; Marie showed her hand to her mother, who nodded and smiled; and little Jerome, leaning her head heavily against Charlotte, was falling asleep. Mademoiselle Morel looked at them a little wistfully. There is pleasure and also pain in beholding a family circle when we are ourselves alone.

"If they had not asked me to join them," thought Charlotte, "I must have sat alone in my room this evening; and, because they asked me, he left the house—and as he left Verrières on my account four years ago. They do not seem to miss him much: and yet they surely care more about him than they care about me."

A violent knocking at the front-door roused her from her reverie. She looked up with a start, and found the notary, his wife, and daughter exchanging alarmed glances.

"Why, what can have happened?" began Madame Roussel.

Here the knocking was repeated more violently than before, and was soon the shuffling step of the servant, coming from the back of the house, said that she was hastening to give the impatient visitor admittance. Every head heard the front door opening, and some one rushed in; then the door of the room in which they were sitting burst open, and Madame Joseph Roussel burst in upon them, with wild looks, wet garments, and a dripping umbrella.

"My money!" he gasped. "My money!" he shouted, recovering breath, and striking the floor with his umbrella. "Where is my money?"

They looked at him aghast. Monsieur Roussel remained with the uplifted card he was going to play in his hand, and stared at his brother with open mouth and eyes.

"I tell you I want my money," doggedly resumed Joseph. "I want my seven thousand five hundred francs."

"Seven thousand five hundred francs!" repeated the notary, turning livid, and a dreadful light seeming to break upon him as he heard the amount of the sum.

"Yes, seven thousand five hundred francs," sternly said Joseph, "my uncle and godfather—the thousand five hundred francs, which were taken out of my desk this afternoon when Henri was in the house—the money I—and he ended his tale about and winked at them all with terrible significance.

Monsieur Roussel tried to speak, but words would not come to him. He sank forward on the table, and with his head lying there, uttered a heart-broken groan. Madame Roussel raised her hands to heaven, and uttered a despairing cry.

"We are ruined—ruined, disgraced!" gasped she said, wildly; and falling back into her chair she went into hysterics; upon which Marie began sobbing violently too, and little Lorette, who had starting round her in dismay, uttered a succession of piercing shrieks. Charlotte alone preserving some presence of mind, ran to her aunt's assistance, and endeavored to calm her. Joseph Roussel looked around him in grim and gloomy triumph, walking rapidly.

"Spare the rod and spoil the child," he said; "I knew how it would be—I always said so."

"For Heaven's sake, no more mercy on us!" cried Monsieur Roussel, looking up, wildly. "Perhaps—perhaps Henri did not do it."

Then who did?" angrily retorted his brother.

"Do you want to cheat me out of my money, eh? You told me yourself he came to borrow seven thousand five hundred francs—that you not? Well, I tell you that I left Henri alone in the room with my desk, and when I came back at the end of a quarter of an hour Henri had vanished, the key, which I had forgotten on the table, was in the desk, and seven thousand five hundred francs in notes were gone. But if you think that I am going to bear with that loss just because Henri is my nephew and godson, you are very much mistaken, all of you," added Monsieur Joseph Roussel, glaring at the dismayed family, and striking the floor again with his umbrella.

"Henri shall return that money—he only meant to borrow it, of course," agitatedly said the notary. "He shall return it, Joseph."

"And do you suppose I am going to wait till he returns my money?" exclaimed Joseph Roussel, losing all indignation and amazed at the suggestion. "What brought me here, pray?"

"And how do I know that my son took your money?" asked Monsieur Roussel, with a feeble effort at skepticism.

"Did I not tell you so?" cried his brother, enraged.

"Well, but did you see him doing it?" desperately asked Monsieur Roussel—"did you see him?"

Joseph Roussel stared till his little eyes seemed ready to start out of their sockets.

"See him!" he at length gasped forth—"see him open my desk, and take out my hard-earned money, seven thousand five hundred francs!—you ask me if I saw him doing that? No, Sir," he indignantly exclaimed, answering his own question, "I did not see him, because he took care not to do it till my back was turned, but I can tell you what—Jean, my servant, heard and saw. He saw your son Henri at the post-office, handing over to the post-mistress a letter with five blue seals—the last-named letter declaring it to be worth seven thousand five hundred francs! What do you think of that?"

The notary groaned. "For Heaven's sake, have mercy on me!" he said, piteously.

"I want my money, Sir; my money!"

"You shall have it, though it will half ruin me," distractedly said Monsieur Roussel; "but keep it quiet—do keep it quiet."

"And what did I come here for but to keep it quiet?" screamed Joseph, at the pitch of his voice; "what else do you suppose I do?"

"It will ruin me," said Henri's father, despairingly; "it will ruin me."

On hearing this Madame Roussel burst into tears, and with many piteous sobs she asked why her children were to be plundered for Henri's misdeeds. Her husband smiled in a dull, vacant stare of misery. There is a tragic hour in most lives, however tame and commonplace may seem their course, and that hour had now arrived to him. Grief and despair gave a terrible meaning to his little peevish face, and Charlotte's heart sunk within her as she heard him mutter, in a low, dull voice, "I will not be disgraced. On the day when this is known in Verrières I shall just go down the garden and make a hole in the water: I will not be disgraced."

Even as he uttered the words the door opened, and Henri, who had come back in his boat and walked up the garden, entered the room.

"Cards," he said, carelessly, "cards—who wins?"

No one answered. He gave a sharp look round the room, and at once his careless look vanished. What he did see was that his father stood wringing one word, evidently waiting. His father rose.

"Henri," he said, sternly, "you sent off seven thousand five hundred francs in Paris to-day."

Henri looked thunder-struck.

"I did," he replied, at length.

"To whom?"

"I can not tell."

"From whom did you get that money?"

"I can not tell."

The young man spoke very sullenly, and looked black as one who had recognized accusation.

"You must get that money back," said his father, trying to speak composedly, though he was deadly pale, "to-morrow." he added, perceiving to the dark part of the room where Joseph Roussel stood leaning on his umbrella. "Your uncle had his desk opened to-day, and seven thousand five hundred francs taken from it."

Henri gave a sudden start, and turned dreadfully pale.

"You did not think I should miss it so soon, did you?" asked his uncle Joseph, nodding grimly at him; "but you had better get your back on the house when I wanted some money, and found out that my seven thousand five hundred francs were gone. Now, Sir," he added, "I am your godfather as well as your uncle," he added, in a menacing voice. "Thank your stars, Isay!"

Henri sank on a chair, and covered his face with his hands. Then he looked at him, then from him to his father. At first it seemed as if words would not pass his white lips. Then he stood up straight, and addressed the notary and say:

"Father, what do you say to this?"

Monsieur Roussel raised his trembling hand toward him.

"God forgive you, Henri," he said, in a broken voice.

Henri leaped up from the chair on which he was sitting as if a bullet had struck him, his pale face grew still paler with wrath, as iron in at its hottest when it is whitest, and in a voice of thunder he cried:

"Father! father! what do you mean?"

"Do!—threaten your father after dishonoring him," cried Madame Roussel, starting up in mingled fear and hate.

Henri gave his step-mother a look of indignation and scorn that would have made his lips to reply Charlotte went up to the notary, and laying her hand on his arm she said, in a low, indignant voice, while her other hand pointed to Henri Roussel, "Uncle, uncle, do you not see that your son is innocent?"

"Innocent!" gasped the notary, staring round the room; "how so?"

How so! look at him and see it. Henri Roussel is innocent! he said he is innocent," she added, her eyes flashing with generous indignation, "and that you ought all to die with shame at having doubted him."

"Yes, I am innocent," sternly said the young man; "and, what is more, I can prove it. That money which you say is missing was lent to me by a thing taken from his desk I already had when I saw him. I borrowed it on my vineyard above Verrières. Ask Farmer Grimps, and see if he will deny it."

"Then who took my money?" cried Monsieur Joseph Roussel, looking very wild.

"That is your business, not mine," bitterly replied the young man, then looking round him he added: "I have learned this evening what trust in my honor I may expect in this house. Let none of you wonder that I shall henceforth make my home among strangers. I leave Verrières this very night—now, this moment, and it will be strange indeed if I ever set foot in it again."

He looked round the room once more; then going straight up to the spot where Charlotte stood alone—

"God bless you!" he said, with much emotion.

"God bless you!"

She did not answer. She stood there before him, passive, and like one in a dream. He said no more, but turned away, and was gone. As the door closed upon him, as they heard his step rapidly going up the staircase, the notary, recovering from his amazement, turned angrily on his brother:

"How dare you come here and attack and insultories to me?" he cried, with fury. "How dare you accuse my son of robbery?"

Monsieur Joseph Roussel slapped his forehead. Then a sudden light seemed to break upon him.

"I know who did it," he cried; "I know;" and he rushed out of the house like one distracted.

The notary threw himself down on a chair, and addressing his wife, said, very feebly:

"Louise, you should have told me not to believe it—you should have told me."

Madame Roussel pulled her pocket-handkerchief to her eyes, and speaking from behind it, said, in a maliciously voice:

"It all happened while I was not in the room, Charlotte signed to Marie to follow her out of the room. When they both stood outside the door she whispered:

"Go and beg of your brother not to leave the house to-night.

"I dare not," replied Marie, whose eyes were red with weeping, and that voice was hoarse.

"Try, Marie—try," urged Charlotte.

The girl went reluctantly, and very anxiously Charlotte waited for her at the foot of the staircase. Marie soon came down again; Henri's door was locked, and he had refused to admit her. Madame Roussel, who now joined them, heard this, and looked piteously at her niece.

"Do try, Charlotte," she said; "do try."

"I?" with surprise, with a start.

"Yes, do. My poor husband is broken-hearted, but will not say a word to keep him, and I feint would be better for you: but he will at least hear you. If he would only stay to-night! Do try, Charlotte! You can go and sit up stairs, and speak to him when he is coming down."

She put a light in her niece's hand, and Charlotte took it like one in a dream. She went up to the room which had been her and Marie's, and, leaving the door open. Every thing looked very gaunt and dreary in the pale light of the wax-candle, brought from the kitchen. The little lodger-like books, the dull iron safe, the stiff black chairs, had a very grim and forbidding of aspect; but Charlotte, if she saw, did not heed them. She was listening to sounds in the room above, sounds of hasty footsteps and moving furniture, which ended at length in the unlocking of a door and a step coming down the staircase. Without knowing why, she felt her own looking round. Charlotte said, in a low voice:

"Henri!"

She spoke so low that he might not have heard her; but he did. He came in at once. He threw the carpet-bag he was carrying on the floor; he threw a chair from the table and sitting down upon it he took the hand that hung loosely in the folds of her black dress, and he raised it to his lips.

"God bless you for that faith in me!" he said, in a low voice; "I shall never forget it—never."

"I trust you are not going," she said, without looking round at him.

"I must," he replied. "You father, your mother, are deeply grieved."

"Do not believe it," he interrupted, bitterly; "they never will believe that they could not have thought me guilty so readily. What have I ever done to deserve such an insult as this?"

"Ah! I could tell you," Charlotte could not help saying; "but they repent it: forgive them."

"Willingly; but I will not live with them. This evening I have learned self-mistrust for the first. It has shown me two things it is not in my power to forget—their doubt, and your faith in my honor."

He rose as he spoke, and she said:

"Pray, do stay," she urged.

"I may!" he said, quickly. He asked, meekly: "They will suspect me next for that money; they will want to know what I can doing with it; but if I do not tell them I will not tell them—they will shake their heads and say, 'Henri is going to ruin. We always said so.'"

Charlotte was silent.

"But you must think no harm of me for that," he resumed, eagerly; "that money is to save a friend from disgrace. I am no risk: I have security to double the amount I lend; but to have it known that he borrows would ruin him, and ruin him as a friend, and that I should not have told you so much, only I would not have you should think, as they will be sure to say, that I am a spendthrift gaged the notary, staring round the room; "how so?"

"How so! look at him and see it. Henri Roussel is innocent! he said he is innocent," she added, her eyes flashing with generous indignation, "and that you ought all to die with shame at having doubted him."

"Yes, I am innocent," sternly said the young man; "and, what is more, I can prove it. That money which you say is missing was lent to me by a thing taken from his desk I already had when I saw him. I borrowed it on my vineyard above Verrières. Ask Farmer Grimps, and see if he will deny it."

"Then who took my money?" cried Monsieur Joseph Roussel, looking very wild.

"That is your business, not mine," bitterly replied the young man; then looking round him he added: "I have learned this evening what trust in my honor I may expect in this house. Let none of you wonder that I shall henceforth make my home among strangers. I leave Verrières this very night—now, this moment, and it will be strange indeed if I ever set foot in it again."

He looked round the room once more; then going straight up to the spot where Charlotte stood alone—

"God bless you!" he said, with much emotion.

"God bless you!"

She did not answer. She stood there before him, passive, and like one in a dream. He said no more, but turned away, and was gone. As the door closed upon him, as they heard his step rapidly going up the staircase, the notary, recovering from his amazement, turned angrily on his brother:

"How dare you come here and attack and insult

HUMORS OF THE DAY.

A STRETCH OF IMAGINATION.—Drawing the long bow!

MOTTO FOR MISERS.—'Tis take my Davy.

AFTER THE DANCE.

CHARLES.

Tell me, Louis, why that sadness?
Tell me why that look of ca-re?
Why has fled that look of gladness
That thy face was wont to wear?

LAURA.

Charles, 'tis useless to dissemble,
Well my face may wear a frown,
For I've lost my largest bow-jon,
And my chignon's coming down!

A CRY OF DISTRESS.—Hundreds of afflicted fathers of families, who have heard of an announcement of "The Musical Infant," are clamorously in favor of such a welcome addition to domestic happiness can be found. Expense no object, if the luxury is only procurable.

A Milesian hearing sundry reports rather against the character for veracity, exclaimed, in an honest burst of indignation, "Think forten, half the lies that are told about me ain't true!"

"What a traveler you have become!" exclaimed an Englishman on meeting an acquaintance at Constantinople.

"To tell you the truth," was the frank reply, "I am obliged to be economical the wealth of the world of my character; the moment it overtakes me I am relieved; but I don't care who knows me so long as I travel incognito."

As a leopard can not help being spotted, it is needless for him to conceal himself!

Bishop Heidling, speaking of the muddy traveling in the West, mentioned a case of "bogging." The Bishop was moving along in a gig at a slow walk, when an Irishman of the district hailed him.

"Good-morning," said the Bishop.

"Good-morning to your honor," replied the Irishman. "You seem to have the advantage of me in your mode of traveling, my friend," continued the Bishop.

"An' I'll swap with yer, if you please," was the quick reply.

Two gentlemen, noted for their fondness of exaggeration, were stating how they fared at their different hotels. The former said that at his hotel he had tea so strong it was necessary to confine it in an iron vessel. "Ah," said the other, "it is made so weak it has not strength to run out of the tea-pot."

A wife in San Francisco lately put a petition for divorce in the court on the ground that her husband was a "confounded fool." The court wouldn't admit the plea, because every married man would be liable to the same imputation.

A parson, not "a sea-faring man," etc., thus explained to his flock the main idea of the text that hope is like an anchor to the soul: "My friends, I suppose you all know what an anchor is. It is a kind of a thing to get a ship under a good heavy way with."

A wealthy bachelor, having had one or two lawsuits for breach of promise, never replies to a young lady who wishes a "few minutes' private conversation: "No you don't, Miss; you can't get me in that way. I am compelled to doubt the honorableness of your intentions, but that sort of thing is played out. My time is imperative, and if you have any business with me it must be transacted in the presence of two witnesses."

A lady gave a fancy-ball not long since, and placed a servant at the door to announce the names of those who entered. A couple of Indies appeared in full buffalo robes and hair. "What costume is it intended to represent?" asked the servant. "We are not in costume," they replied; "we are the wild buffalo ourselves," shouted the servant, to the horror of every body.

SIGNS.

It is a good sign to see a woman do an act of charity—a bad sign to hear him boast of it.

It is a good sign to see a man wipe the perspiration from his brow—bad to see him wipe his lips as he comes out of a dram-shop.

It's a good sign to see a man advertise in the papers—bad to see him refuse to advertise for fear of losing.

It's a good sign to see a woman dressed with taste and neatness—bad to see her dressed only for fancy.

This is the way a colored gentleman in New York State announced his intended marriage, combining business with pleasure:

"NOTICE—Senzar Carter will be married at Mill-dale, Dutchess County, on the 10th of November next. Admittance to the hall, fifty cents. A good time expected. Come one, come all.

"SENZAR CARTER."

THE MAN WHO "LOOKS DOWN IN THE MOUTH"—A Dentist.

At an examination in one of our young ladies' seminaries, the other day, the question was put to a class of little ones: "Who makes the laws of our Governments?" "Congress," was the ready reply. "How is success gained?" was the next question. But the little girl to whom it was put failed to answer it. Another little girl in the class raised up her hand, indicating that she could answer it. "Well," said the examiner, "how is success gained? How do you say it?" Instantly, with an air of confidence as well as triumph, the answer came: "Civilized, half-civilized, and savage."

There was one tragedy in Salem, Massachusetts, which Mr. Longfellow neglected to notice in his recent poems. A head-stone in a church-yard in that city tells the whole story in few lines, after the fact:

"Elizabeth Lowering rests this marble slab
To mark the place where she and a child of hers
Are buried."

Mynheer Drinkhoff makes a distinction thus: "Too much whisky is too much, but too much lager beer is not enough."

A SENTIMENTAL YOUNG LADY ON BONNETS.

Oh! the bonnets of my girlhood—the kind I wore to school! I really thought them pretty—I must have been a fool. Why, I used to think myself on hats a jaunty miss: perhaps I was, for I had a bobbin waist and frizzled hair like this! Oh! the lovely little pancake hats! the cunning little caps! It makes my head so heavy, and so very, very sad, to think a sister's love is charming, and so very, very few know what a head-dress counts a love as very body knows! And a head-dress counts a love as much (that is to say, it does suppose) and the love of a true lover is a love that can not fade—but the love of a new bonnet is a love that does not love of all.

A coxcomb, talking of the transmigration of souls, said, "In the time of Moses, I have no doubt I was the golden calf."

"Very likely," replied a lady, "time has robbed you of nothing but the gilding."

"Why don't you get married?" said a young lady the other day to a rather elderly bachelor friend.

"I have been trying for the last ten years to find some one who would be silly enough to have me," was the reply.

"I guess you haven't been up our way," was the ingenuating rejoinder.

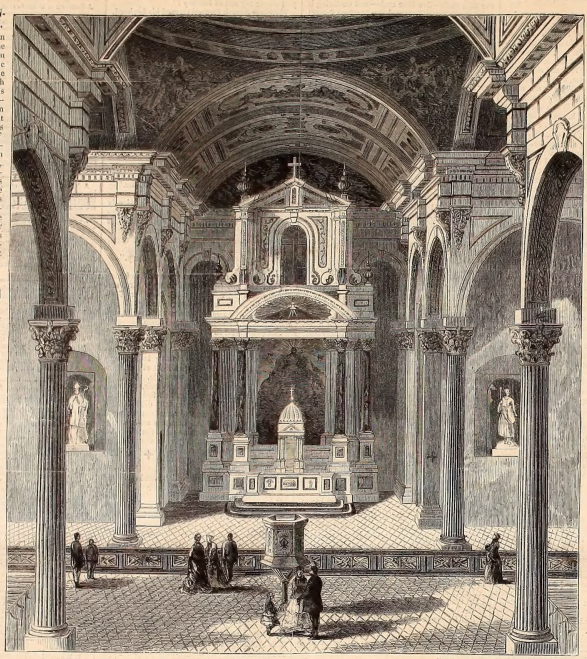
ALTAR OF LEAVENWORTH CATHEDRAL.

THE prominence given to the doctrine of the Immaculate Conception by the Roman Catholic Church is shown by the number of edifices which have received from this doctrine their name.—Thus the new Roman Catholic Cathedral at Leavenworth, Kansas, is called the Cathedral of the Immaculate Conception. We give on this page an illustration, drawn from a photograph of the altar of this cathedral. Perhaps we could give our readers no more interesting evidence of the enterprise of the emigrants to our Western frontier than is afforded by a representation of this magnificent specimen of architecture.

CATHOLIC PROCESSION IN PERU.

As our readers already know, the only religion tolerated in Peru is the Roman Catholic. There are three dioceses or bishopries, corresponding to the departmental division of the country. Each bishop resides in the capital city of his department; in each province there is a vicar; and in each district a cura, or parish priest. In the small city of Arequipa there are 3 monasteries, 4 convents, 1 beaterio, or house for the reception of pious women, 1 cathedral, 17 temples, a hospital for the clergy, and an orphan asylum. In the smaller city of Cuzco there are 20 churches, 4 convents, and 5 large monasteries. Out of a population of 2,500,000 only 300,000 are of Spanish descent; thus almost two-thirds of the people are Indians and negroes. The Peruvians are very ignorant and superstitious. While the Church is immensely rich, there are no schools for the lower classes. To such a people religion becomes simply a dramatic spectacle; the masses are pleased with splendid shows and processions. In the presence of a great calamity—such as that of the recent earthquakes—they are panic-stricken, and the images of the Virgin and of the saints are endowed by their imaginations with those miraculous powers which the Ashantees ascribe to their fetiches.

Our illustration on this page represents the Roman Catholic procession in celebration of the feast of the Immaculate Conception, at Sarayacu, Peru. The dogma of the Immaculate Conception was first defined by the present Pope, December 8, 1854. The words of the decree then solemnly promulgated in the Basilica of St. Peter's, in the presence of 300 archbishops, bishops, and prelates, were as follows: "We define the doctrine which holds the most blessed Virgin Mary in the first instant of her conception to have been preserved free from all stain of original sin, by the singular grace and privilege of Almighty God, and therefore to be firmly and constantly held by all the faithful."—Those acquainted with ecclesiastical history do not need to be told that this doctrine was long a subject of controversy in the Roman Catholic Church; that its introduction into the Western Churches does not date back earlier than the 8th or 9th centuries; or that the attempt to enforce its celebration met with opposition, especially from the Dominicans. The inauguration by PIO NONO of the monument erected in honor of the Immaculate Conception took place in Rome, September, 1857. It is somewhat wonderful that woman, in the most sacred of her earthly relations—that of marriage—should be entirely ignored by the priests of a Church so especially devoted to the worship of the "Mother of God."



ALTAR OF THE CATHEDRAL OF THE IMMACULATE CONCEPTION, LEAVENWORTH, KANSAS.—[PHOT. BY E. E. HENRY.]

PROCESSION OF THE IMMACULATE CONCEPTION, AT SARAYACU, PERU.

OUT IN THE SNOW.

FOUNDERING OF THE "HIBERNIA."—FROM A SKETCH BY ONE OF THE SURVIVORS.—[SEE PAGE 62.]

FOUNDERING OF THE "HIBERNIA."

The last two months have been remarkable for terrific gales at sea. We heard, about the end of November, of the wreck of the Hibernia, of which we give an illustration on page 61, from a sketch by one of the survivors—a cabin passenger in the doomed vessel. The Hibernia plied between New York and Glasgow; when she went down she was 700 miles to the west of Ireland.

Captain Munro, in his narrative, states that the Hibernia left New York on Saturday afternoon, November 14, with 133 souls on board, including a crew of fifty-nine, all told. When leaving New York a pretty stiff breeze was blowing, but it was by no means severe till the day before the accident, which caused the loss of the fine steamer, occurred. On Monday, the 23d, there was a heavy gale of wind from the southward, which caused the vessel to labor; and on Tuesday morning, at two o'clock, the screw-shaft broke in the stern-pipe, and the screw, consequently getting loose, damaged the stern-post of the steamer, to which the rudder is attached. The "pipe" itself was also damaged by the unconnected screw; and the result of both these most untoward circumstances was the ingress of large volumes of water into the after-part of the vessel. A heavy gale was still blowing. During the whole of Tuesday the crew and others were engaged in throwing cargo overboard to lighten the ship, and the engine and other pumps were kept going, but the effect produced was not material. On Tuesday night the course was changed to northwest; and on Wednesday morning, the 25th, the steamer became so crippled that all the boats were lowered. Long before this the afterhold was flooded with water, and the Hibernia seemed to be rapidly sinking—indeed, forward, when the boats were lowered, ten feet of water in the after-hold. At six o'clock on Wednesday morning the order to embark the passengers in the boats. A certain number of ladies was appointed to occupy each boat along with a proportion of the crew.

At seven o'clock all the crew and passengers were in their appointed places. The water in the Hibernia was at this time increasing rapidly, but still all was done quietly. The ladies were lowered into the boats by a rope attached to their waists, and with a tenderness from the gentlemen to the small boats was effected in the utmost silence. No. 1 life-boat was under command of Captain Munro; No. 2 life-boat, third officer; No. 3 life-boat, second mate; starboard-quarter boat, third officer; port-quarter boat, the boatswain. The captain was the last to leave. After getting about a quarter of a mile from the sinking ship the boats went down a-breast. This occurred at twenty minutes past seven o'clock. So far as possible, each of the boats was equally provisioned. At about half past seven o'clock the chief-mate's boat, containing thirty-three persons, capsized. At this time the captain's life-boat was about a quarter of a mile from that of the chief mate; but, owing to the gale then blowing and the crowded state of his boat, Captain Munro was unable to render any assistance.

In the evening Captain Munro and his companions in No. 1 life-boat were picked up by the ship Star of Hope, Captain Talbot, from Quebec to Aberdeen. Having being considerately cared for, Captain Munro suggested to Captain Talbot that a look-out should be kept for the other boats. Captain Talbot agreed; and, lights being hung out, a look-out was kept, when the boatswain's boat was descried between eleven and twelve at night, and the occupants were rescued. A heavy gale still prevailed, but the weather shortly afterward moderated considerably. The remaining two other boats were captured by the Star of Hope; but, after cruising about for thirty hours, Captain Talbot gave up the fruitless task and bore up his course. The boats rescued contained altogether fifty-two persons.

The boat that was upset has since reached the coast of Ireland with the mate and seven hands. Being a life-boat, it righted itself, and the survivors succeeded in getting on board after the boat had been swamped for four hours, the mate and two others clinging to her the whole of that time. The second mate states that two of the passengers perished overboard the first day the boat was at sea, preferring certain death at once, apparently, to the probable horrors of long exposure. Provisions and thirst in an open boat are the chief and paramount passenger, wearied of the torture, also leaped overboard. Five other passengers died from exposure, and sixteen passengers are said to have been lost by the capsizing of the boat. The nine survivors, having made ineffectual attempts to call the attention of passing ships by signals, succeeded in running into Milford Haven in the Donegal coaster, the Hannibal, which arrived in London January 8, reports through the cable that she passed the Ocean Queen bound to New York, with 1,000 passing passengers and crew of the Hibernia.

The ship John Dunscomb, which sailed from St. John's, New Brunswick, for Liverpool, November 2, encountered a hurricane gale on the 10th, and, after suffering from tremendous seas, was the next day driven upon her port-beam ends, while as many of her crew as survived took to a life-raft—rigging and afterward to the top-gallant mast. In the morning the ship fell over on her broadside, with masts and yards in the water. Then she righted; but her provisions had all been swept away except a pig, which was killed. Thirteen lives had been lost in the storm, including the captain and his wife. The seven survivors were rescued on the 23d by the American ship Diriyo, and were landed in Liverpool toward the close of December.

The Cunard steamer China, from Liverpool December 26, and the Inman steamer Etna from the same port, December 29, arrived at New York on the 10th of January, after a long and perilous voyage. The preservation of the Etna seems almost miraculous. She had a heavy cargo and 140 passengers. She encountered a succession of furious gales; on the 28th her fifth officer, Mr. Molyneux, and eight seamen were swept overboard by a heavy sea. The seamen were saved, but the officer perished. The gale culminated in a hurricane on New-Year's Eve, but the stanch vessel outrode the storm. She was detained for several days within 1000 miles of New York.

SUPTUR SING.

Amort a hundred miles eastward of the Island of Bombay a hundred miles eastward of the Island of Bombay a range of hills divides the Northern Konkan from Khandes, and on one of the loftiest of the range the English have established a sanitarium for sick soldiers, to which they can escape from the burning plains of Khandes during the intense heats of summer.

Suptur Sing, as its name implies, is dedicated, in Hindoo belief, to the monkey god, Hhanáh, probably because there is a large troop of the race of the earth where, at the shortest notice, so many monkeys can assemble together; and from such an unchanging and ludicrous audience occurred which, however, might have ended in direful tragedy.

In the summer of 184- the light bamboo huts on the plateau were occupied by only three English families; but as one sheltered the august person of Miss Burra Mem, the Collector E——, a guard of native soldiers kept watch and ward over the small colony. The Collector was a widower, his daughter, the two other officers were in their own quarters, when they were disturbed by the most fearful noises their ears had ever encountered. The Collector's shouts of "Quye hye!" were quickly responded to by the Jemadar (sergeant) of the guard, who, in reply to the query, "Kabobbery hye," (What noise is that?) respectfully replied that Mem G—— Sahib had that morning dedicated a pretty little monkey from its mother, and that all the family and friends had come to reclaim it, and were making their sincere wishes to the gods known aloud. Mr. E—— at first only laughed, and went on with his work; but the soldier shortly returned, and explained that things were getting serious, and to look serious; and indeed they were—the whole plateau was black with monkeys of all sizes and ages, grinning, chattering, and gesticulating. The Collector could not believe his eyes, and on the appearance of the white man the bobbe of monkey tribe became silent, and the old one hastily hear the Havildar's entreaty that Mem Sahib should restore her prize. Mr. E——, the model of discretion as he was, was loth to interfere; but a few moments' survey of the ranging mass below him convinced him that, if a most serious fight was to be avoided, Mrs. G—— must surrender the bubba. An intimation to this effect was made to Mem G——, with an explanation of the Collector's suppositions: but the lady was not to be frightened into giving up her pet. "Would he shoot all of mine?" with eyes do against a dozen armed soldiers? Rather should she have asked, as did Mr. E——, "Will a dozen soldiers protect me against some thousands of monkeys?" The Collector ended the matter by sending a written order to the bungalow for Mem G—— to give up the child, or take it and themselves off the hill in ten minutes. There is some good even in despotism—the Collector's word was law for many a mile round Suptur Sing—the lady sulkily produced the bubba, the mother snatched it to her bosom with every expression of delight, and in a few minutes not a monkey was in sight. Mr. E—— had been in India more than thirty years, and he said that, in all his experience with the monkey tribe, he had never felt himself in such peril as from the bereaved mother and her friends.

BURNETT'S FLORIMEL, also BURNETT'S COCOLINE-WATER (three sizes).—There is a freshness in these delightful perfumes found in no others. 858 Park Row, Nos. 1 and 2 Astor Library (Metropolitan Hotel Building). For sale by druggists and fancy-goods dealers in the principal cities of the United States.

DUPPESSA TABLETS cure Indigestion, Heartburn, and Sick Headache. Fifty Cents a Box. Depot, 49 Park Row. Sold by druggists. S. G. WELLING, 571 Broadway.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

GRAND DUCHESS. BELLE HELENE, and 12 others other popular operas, complete for Piano-forte Solo, with Overture and whole of music. Fifty Cents each. Also, Complete Edition of the Operations of Vocal and Piano-forte Music, in Books, Fifty Cents each. The cheapest and most extensive catalogue of modern music in the world. Also, just ready, Drive to your Destination, 50 cents. Send for one of the newest publications in full sheet or music-size form.
BOOSEY & CO., 541 Broadway, N. Y.

NO ULCER.

Cancer, or Fever Sore but can be radically cured by the use of Wolcott's Pain Paint. Dr. Wolcott's Anodyne Liniment is unlike it in every particular but digesting disease, Catarrh. Pint bottles, $1. Secret, pamphlet, 25 cents wherever.

VELOCIPEDE WHEELS.
MANUFACTURED BY
S. N. BROWN & CO., Dayton, Ohio.
They also make a prime article of Spokes and Hubs for light Carriage and Buggy Wheels. Send for Price-List.

U.S. BLUE BOOK, a Register of all Officers, Civil, Military, &c., under the U. S. Government, and the SALARIES attached to each. 25 cts. Paper, 60. Agents wanted in every City and Town. Sent by mail, postage or receipt of price.
DIMMICK & CO., Publishers, 111 Fulton St., N. Y.

FRANK LESLIE'S NEW PAPER
READY
At all News Depots.

THE HANDSOMEST AND BEST FAMILY JOURNAL PUBLISHED.
DEVOTED TO
ROMANCES, NOVEL and DISCOVERY.
PRICE, SIX CENTS PER COPY.

AS A JOURNAL FOR THE AMUSEMENT, INSTRUCTION, elevation, and refinement of the family, and as an ever-welcome companion for the leisure hour will be found the most comprehensive of all the Literary Publications.
THE NEW WORLD

A Supplement is given away with No. 1, containing the Prospectus and terms, especially interesting to Children.

WHAT THE NEW YORK PRESS SAY.

"THE NEW WORLD is intended to present an attractive and informing miscellany in the various branches of knowledge from the pens of accomplished writers, and especially in the department of romance, travel, geographical discovery, and the application of science to the practical affairs of life. * * * A large supply of fiction, both in prose and verse, is contained in the initial number."—[N. Y. Daily Tribune.

"The paper of this handsomely illustrated Weekly are supplied with literary matter of the most diversified and pleasing character from the pens of the most eminent American and foreign writers."—[N. Y. Daily Times.

"THE NEW WORLD is a very handsome journal filled with a variety of literary matter from pens of well-known authors, and the appearance of the paper is original and attractive."—[N. Y. Evening Post.

"The paper has many strong points of excellence in it."—[N. Y. Herald.

"It is one of the handsomest and most artistic of the illustrated papers."—[N. Y. Sun.

"It is a weekly publication, filled with choice original contributions."—[N. Y. Evening Mail.

"We judge it to be an excellent family paper of healthy moral tone and literary quality."—[N. Y. Telegram.

"THE NEW WORLD is designed to be instructing as well as interesting and amusing, and makes an appropriate visitor to the domestic circle."—[Brooklyn Union.

"We doubt if the New World are vain of such and attractive. Stories, tales of travel, poetry, humorous articles, and useful miscellanies are among the pages, and kitchen, constitute prominent features of this paper."—[N. Y. Express.

"We should at once conclude that it would speedily take rank in popular favor with Frank Leslie's world-renowned Weekly."—[N. Y. Commercial.

The subscription price per annum is $3, four copies for $10, and eight copies for $20, which is at the rate of $2 50 per copy. Any person who forwards $20 for eight copies will be entitled to a ninth free of cost.

No. 1, with Supplement, will be sent postpaid to any person enclosing a three cent stamp.

Address FRANK LESLIE, NEW YORK.

HITCHCOCK'S
HALF-DIME MUSIC.

Believing that whatever tends to amuse and instruct, to cultivate and develop the mind, or to elevate the character and diversify the matine of Home Enjoyment, is ever welcome to the American People—this Series is respectfully presented. Our object is to enable all classes—rich and poor—who have a desire for Music, to become possessed of all the popular productions of the day, without incurring an undue pecuniary expense. The price of each Number will be Five Cents. The following are now

NOW READY:

No. 1. Captain Jinks ..... MACKAGAN.
" 2. Wont you tell me why, Robin? ..... LEE.
" 3. Will Better Bide a Wee ..... WINNER.
" 4. Alice, Where Art Thou? ..... MOLLOY.
" 5. Not for Joseph ..... LLOYD.
" 6. Good-Bye, Sweetheart, Good-Bye ..... HAWLEY.
" 7. I really don't Think I shall Marry ..... CLARIBEL.
" 8. Sweet Spirit Hear Me ..... BALFE.
" 9. Blooming, Winde Perfuming". P. SCHUBERT.
" 10. Cheerily, Boys ..... LEE.
" 11. Skatting Rink Polka ..... WINNER.
" 12. Mazurka Elegante ..... BRUNE.
" 13. Come hither, my Baby, my Darling. ..... "
" 14. The Sparkling Polka ..... GRAFF.
" 14. Little Maggie May ..... BLAMPHIN.
" 15. Gipsy Life ..... GLOVER.
" 16. His Love Shines over All. Sacred Song. FORBES.
" 17. The Old Church Clock ..... MACKAGAN.
" 18. Silver Chimes ..... CLARIBEL.
" 19. The Blue Alsatian ..... GLOVER.
" 20. Arm-in-Arm. Polka Mazurka ..... STRAUS.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

The above are the latest published Music, Book, and Periodical Stores, or by enclosing the price. Five Cents each, by the Publisher. Other choice selections will rapidly follow. RENJ. W. HITCHCOCK, Publisher, 96 Spruce St., New York. Post-Office Box 4,642.

AGENTS WANTED.

$25 KNITTING MACHINE.

WANTED!—Buyers and Sellers for the HICKS, WHEELER & FAHNESTOCK Machine, the most reliable invention for the household ever made. It knits 30,000 stitches a minute, runs back and forward, and sets up its own work. Parties are making from $3 to $5 per day at their homes. Our new Book of Instructions is plain and explicit. BICKFORD KNITTING MACHINE CO., 82 Brandriff St., Boston, Mass.

WANTED.—Agents, if you want to make from $10 to $30 a day, sell Blake's $1 Patent Chair Spring. Retails at sight on an ordinary cane rocking chair out of any common chair by attaching them to the front legs. Sample, postage paid, $1. A. H. BLAKE, Care of Libby House, 54 Warren St., New York.

HARPER'S PERIODICALS.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE, 1869. HARPER'S WEEKLY, 1869. HARPER'S BAZAR.

Harper's Magazine, Weekly, and Bazar. These three periodicals fully merit the high encomiums which they have received from the press, and the support which it has been given by the reading public. Each, taken on one considers their beautiful and instructive illustrations, which leave nothing to the subject of domestic or foreign importance—their literary merit, which has given them the highest place in the current literature—or their judicious editorial management—they must be regarded as unsurpassed by the three best family periodicals in the world.—The Advance: Chicago.

Now is the Time to Subscribe.

"Unquestionably the best sustained work of the kind in the world."

Harper's Magazine.

The most popular Monthly in the world.—New York Observer.

It is one of the wonders of journalism—the editorial management of Harper's.—Boston.

It meets precisely the popular taste, furnishing a literature and illustrations of the highest kind.—Zion's Herald, Boston.

Harper's furnishes by far more reading matter for the money than any American magazine; and we know no way to get that in better shape than a family magazine in the world.—Packard's Monthly, Jan., 1869.

In this specialty of illustrated articles Harper's stands between and unapproached, nor has its superiority been abused, since the artistic excellence of its cuts has been an educational power not as carefully studied as if it were pushed by competition.—New York Times.

"A complete Pictorial History of the Times."

Harper's Weekly.

AN ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER.

The model newspaper of our country—complete in all the characteristics of a first-class family paper.—HARPER'S WEEKLY has earned for itself a right to its name.—Boston Journal.

HARPER'S WEEKLY has entered upon a new volume in a remarkably prosperous condition.—Evening Post.

This paper furnishes the best illustrations. Our future anticipations of it are highly encouraging.—Boston Transcript.

The articles upon public questions which appear in HARPER'S WEEKLY from week to week form a remarkable series of brief political essays. They are distinguished by a high degree of intelligence, by good common-sense, by independence and breadth of view, and by the most honorable quality—courage, high principle, and strong feeling, and take their place as the ablest newspaper writing of the time.—World American Review.

An Illustrated Weekly Journal of Fashion, Pleasure, and Instruction.

Harper's Bazar.

A Supplement containing numerous full-sized Patterns of useful articles pronounced by the fair sex every fortnight, and occasionally an elegant Colored Fashion Plate.

HARPER'S BAZAR contains 16 folio pages of the size of HARPER'S WEEKLY, printed on superfine calendered paper, and is published weekly.

HARPER'S BAZAR contains, besides pictures, patterns, etc., a variety of matter of especial use and interest to the family; articles on health, dress, and housekeeping in all that relates to which HARPER'S BAZAR is specially adapted to the circle it is intended to interest and instruct; and it has, besides, a large amount of literary matter of merit.—New York Evening Post.

It has the merit of being entirely free from objectionable matter, of giving excellent patterns in every department of needlework, and of being stocked with good literary matter.—Watchman and Reflector.

The best thing to say of HARPER'S BAZAR will be the nim and ambition of the women of America.—Boston Transcript.

TERMS FOR 1869:

HARPER'S MAGAZINE, One Year..... $4 00
HARPER'S WEEKLY, One Year..... 4 00
HARPER'S BAZAR, One Year..... 4 00

HARPER'S MAGAZINE, HARPER'S WEEKLY, and HARPER'S BAZAR, One Year, together, for one year, $10; or two for $7 50.

Any Two Copies of either the MAGAZINE, WEEKLY, or BAZAR will be supplied gratis for every Club of FIVE SUBSCRIBERS, at $4 00 each, or one remittance of $20 for $20 00, without extra copy.

The Postage which the United States is for the MAGAZINE 24 cents a year, for the WEEKLY or BAZAR 20 cents a year, payable quarterly or yearly, or, at the office where received. Subscriptions from the Dominion of Canada must be accompanied with 24 cents additional for the MAGAZINE, or 20 cents for the WEEKLY or BAZAR, to prepay the United States postage.

Subscribers to the MAGAZINE, WEEKLY, or BAZAR will find on each wrapper the Number with which their subscription expires. Early renewals are desired when the term of subscription closes. It is not necessary to give notice of discontinuance.

The Volumes of the MAGAZINE commence with the Numbers for June and December of each year. When no time is specified, it will be understood that the subscriber wishes to commence with the first Number of the current Volume. Back Numbers will be sent accordingly.

The Volumes of the WEEKLY commence with the year. When no time is specified, it will be understood that the subscriber wishes to commence with the Number next after the receipt of his order.

In ordering, a Postal Money Order or Draft payable to the order of HARPER & BROTHERS is preferred to Bank Notes, which should always be sent in a letter, or the letter should be registered.

In ordering the MAGAZINE, the WEEKLY, or the BAZAR, the name, post-office, county, and State should be written. When the direction is to be changed, both the old and the new one must be given.

TERMS FOR ADVERTISING IN HARPER'S PERIODICALS.

Harper's Magazine.—Whole Page, $750; Half Page, $375; Quarter Page, $70—each Insertion; or, for a less space, $1 50 per Line, each insertion.

Harper's Weekly.—Outside Page, $1 50 per Line: Outside Page, $2 00 per Line—each Insertion.

Harper's Bazar.—Ordinary Business Line; Cuts and Display, $1 25 per Line—each Insertion.

Address HARPER & BROTHERS, New York.

ESTABLISHED 1861.

THE

GREAT AMERICAN

TEA COMPANY

RECEIVE THEIR TEAS BY THE CARGO FROM

THE BEST TEA DISTRICTS OF

CHINA AND JAPAN,

and sell them in quantities to suit customers

AT CARGO PRICES.

The Company have selected the following kinds from their Stock, which they recommend to meet the wants of clubs. They are sold at cargo prices, the same as the Company sell them in New York, on the list of prices will show.

PRICE LIST OF TEAS.

OOLONG (black), 75c., 80c., 90c.; best, $1 per lb.
MIXED (green and black), 70c., 80c., 90c.; best, $1 per lb.
ENGLISH BREAKFAST (black), 80c., 90c., $1, $1 10; best, $1 20 per lb.
IMPERIAL (green), 80c., 90c., $1, $1 10; best, $1 25 per lb.
YOUNG HYSON (green), 80c., 90c., $1, $1 10; best, $1 20 per lb.
UNCOLORED JAPAN, 90c., $1, $1 10; best, $1 25 per lb.
GUNPOWDER (green), $1 25; best, $1 50 per lb.

COFFEES ROASTED AND GROUND DAILY.

Ground Coffee, 20 cents, 25 cents, 30 cents, 35 cents; best, 40 cents per pound.

Hotels, saloons, boarding-house keepers, and Families who use large quantities of Coffee, can economize in that article by using our

ROASTED BERRIES AND DOUBLE DOWNER COFFEE,

which we sell at the low price of 30 cents per pound, and warrant to give perfect satisfaction.

ROASTED COFFEES, 30c., 35c.; best, 40c. per lb.
GREEN (unroasted), 25c., 30c., 33c.; best, 35c. per lb.

CLUB ORDER.

PORTSMOUTH, MICH., August 26, 1868.

To the GREAT AMERICAN TEA COMPANY:

Gents: 50 Years Street, New York.

GENTS: The people here will not let me alone. They say I have found the right place, and that I must send another order for them. So here you have it, in the shape of my next order since the 4th of May last, making five hundred and forty-four dollars and sixty-four cents I have sent you since that date.

Hoping this will be as good as former packages, I remain, Yours, &c., JOHN W. HAWKINS.

10 lbs. Uncol'd Japan, Mrs. Kempton...at $1 60...$16 00
5 " Imperial.....do.....A. L. Cummings...at 1 25... 6 25
5 " Young Hyson...A. L. Cummings...at 1 25... 6 25
5 " Imperial.....Elias Stephens...at 1 25... 6 25
5 " Coffee.....Elias Stephens...at 30... 1 50
5 " Gunpowder.....O. A. Wattrous...at 1 50... 7 50
5 " Imperial.....O. A. Wattrous...at 1 25... 6 25
5 " Young Hyson...J. Hopkins.....at 1 25... 6 25
5 " Coffee.....do.....at 30... 1 50
5 " Gunpowder.....John Stephens...at 1 50... 7 50
5 " Young Hyson...John H. Denny...at 1 25... 6 25
5 " do. do. ...H. Malone.....at 1 25... 6 25
5 " do. do. ...Mrs. Bliss.....at 1 25... 6 25
5 " do. do. ...Noah Campbell...at 1 25... 6 25
5 " Gunpowder...Judge Miller.....at 1 50... 7 50
5 " do. do. ...A. Gale.....at 1 50... 6 00
5 " Imperial.....Mrs. Bliss.....at 1 25... 6 25
$174 25

Parties sending Club or other orders for less than Thirty Dollars last neither send a Post-office Draft or Money with their orders, to save the expense of collecting by express; but larger orders we will forward by express, to "collect on delivery."

Hereafter we will send a complimentary package to the person getting up the Club. Our profits are small, but we will be as liberal as we can afford. We send no complimentary packages for Clubs of less than Thirty Dollars.

Parties ordering their Teas from us may confidently rely upon getting them pure and fresh, as they come direct from the Custom-House to us, in bond to ourselves.

We warrant all the goods we sell to give entire satisfaction. If we are not satisfactory they can be returned at our expense within 30 days, and have the money refunded.

N.B.—Inhabitants of villages and towns where a large number reside, by obtaining together, can have a club-order of their Teas and Coffees sent to one third (besides the Express charges) by application to us.

"THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA COMPANY."

CAUTION.—As some concerns, in this city and other places, imitate the name and style of advertising and doing business, it is important that our friends should be very careful to write our address in full, and also to put on the number of our Post-Office Box, as experts in that line have been known to intercept our orders from getting into the hands of bona fide notices.

POST-OFFICE Orders and Drafts make payable to the Order of

"THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA COMPANY."

Direct Letters and Orders as below (no more, unless):

GREAT AMERICAN TEA COMPANY,
Nos. 31 and 33 Vesey Street,
Post-Office Box 5643, New York City.

DUNHAM & SONS,
MANUFACTURERS OF
PIANO-FORTES.
WAREROOMS,
No. 831 Broadway, New York.
SEND FOR CIRCULAR.

ARCHITECTURAL DEPARTMENT OF THE
Novelty Iron Works,
Nos. 77 and 83 Liberty Street,
(Near Broadway, New York.

Plain and Ornamental Iron Work of all kinds for Buildings.

25 CENTS.—Now is the time to subscribe to "MAPLE LEAVES," the best, the most popular, and the cheapest monthly published. Each number contains matter of interest and importance to every body. 25 cents will pay for it from now to the end of 1869. Sample copies sent on receipt of stamp to pay postage. Address O. A. ROORBACH, 102 Nassau St., N. Y.

MAGIC, MYSTERY, & MIRTH. Sent free on receipt of a stamp, by W. HEPBURN, 102 Nassau St., New York.

The Celebrated Imitation Gold
$15. HUNTING WATCHES. $20.
THE COLLINS ORODE WATCH FACTORY.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

Our superior Orode Watches having recently been initiated, and worthless Watches sold in New York, Boston, Chicago, and other cities, represented as our Watches, we hereby caution the public against them, and give notice that we are in no way responsible for these bogus concerns, and only those purchasing directly from us can secure a genuine Watch of our manufacture. We have recently greatly improved our Orode in appearance and durability; and, to protect ourselves from imposition hereafter, we have named it the

"COLLINS METAL."

and we give notice that any one making use of this name will be prosecuted to the extent of the law.

This metal has all the brilliancy and durability of Gold; can not be distinguished from it by the best judges; retains its color till worn out, and is equal to gold excepting in intrinsic value. All our Gentlemen's Watches are Full-Jeweled Patent Levers; those for Ladies an improved Escapement, better than a Lever for a small Watch; all in Hunting Cases, and fully guaranteed by special contract. The $15 Watches are equal in neatness, style of finish, general appearance, and for time, to a Gold Watch costing $100. They are sold at the small profit of only $15 each. Watches of every style, from $2 to $6.

JEWELRY.—We are manufacturing all kinds of Jewelry of the Collins Metal—Pins, Earrings, Sleeve-Buttons, Lockets, Small Charms, Medallions, Chains, Gold Fellow and Masonic Pins, &c., all of the same beautiful Metal, and sold at the same low prices.

TO CLUBS.—Where Six Watches are ordered at one time, we will send one extra Watch free of charge. We positively employ no agents (who invariably charge enormous profits), but supply Watches for less than our published prices. Our regular customers, therefore, have the benefit of our lowest prices. Parties in New York can examine any article they purchase at our agencies and salesrooms. The genuine Collins Watches can only be had at our office in New York City. Customers are requested not to send money in letters, as we will not be responsible for the same. All orders must be sent by Express, and will be sent by express office. Customers must pay all express charges. In ordering, write plainly the name, town, county, and state. Customers can address us as follows, according to our only Office at present:

Nos. 37 and 39 Nassau Street, Opposite the Post-Office (Up Stairs), New York.
C. E. COLLINS & CO.

DEAFNESS, CATARRH, SCROFULA.—A Lady who had suffered for years from DEAFNESS, CATARRH, and SCROFULA, was cured by a simple remedy. Her sympathy and gratitude prompts her to send the receipt free to any who may be similarly afflicted. Address MR. M. C. L., Hoboken, N. J.

WORDS OF WISDOM for YOUNG MEN, on the Effects of Folly in Youth and Dissipation in Manhood, with Self-help for the erring and unfortunate. Sent in sealed letter envelopes, free of charge. Address PHILANTHROS, Box P, Philadelphia.

1868.—ADDRESS FOR CIRCULAR.—1869.
STEVENS' PATENT, PROVIDENCE, R. I. or Brooklyn, New York. It copies letters instantly and perfectly. All parts of the Improved Press sends use it. Agents supplied. Three have sold 100. Wholesale Agent wanted at Chicago.

PATENT OFFICE
Inventors who wish to take out Letters Patent are advised to counsel with MUNN & Co.
37 PARK ROW, N.Y.
PROPRIETORS OF THE SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN
who have prosecuted claims before the Patent Office for over Twenty Years.
Their ample MECHANICAL AND EUROPEAN PATENT AGENCY is the most extensive in the world. Charges are moderate. Examinations are made. Pamphlet containing full instructions to inventors, is sent gratis.
☞ A handsome Bound Volume, containing 150 Mechanical Engravings, and the Patent Laws, issues by Counties, with Hints and Receipts for Mechanics, mailed on receipt of 25 cents. The Scientific American is the best and cheapest Weekly Illustrated Newspaper devoted to Science, Art, and Mechanics, published in the world. Three dollars a year. Specimens sent gratis.
MUNN & Co., 37 Park Row, New York.

$1000 REWARD is guaranteed for any Watch Movement we sell that will not keep correct time for one year. We want a reliable agent in every county to sell our Watch. Patent Key for sale by S. R. WELLS, 389 Broadway, New York.

$100 to $250 PER MONTH guaranteed. Address P. O. Box 5643, New York. Salaries paid weekly to Agents every where selling our Patent Everlasting White Wire Clothes Lines. Circular or sample for particulars to the GIRARD WIRE MILLS, 261 North Third St., Philadelphia Pa.

MAGIC PICTURES. Wonderful and Amusing. 25 cents a Package. Clubs, $1 50 Dozen Packages. Address WELLS & ARTER, Box 75, Amherst, Mass.

$20 A DAY, net profit. AGENTS wanted for four new articles just patented. They sell at sight. A fortune to be made. Send at once for Circular to C. W. SANFORD, Box 1001, Chicago, Ill.

$10 A DAY FOR ALL. Stencil Tool samples free. Address A. J. FULLAM, Springfield, Vt.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS AND OINTMENT.—Fulness.—This painful endemic complaint is rapidly subjugated after the use of the above balsams: in no one instance have they failed to complete their cure.

$325 A MONTH, AND EXPENSES—28 new articles. H. B. SHAW, Alfred, Me.

GENUINE ORODE GOLD WATCH CO., Geneva, Switzerland.

Manufacture, on strictly scientific principles, style, finish, durability, and cost (in case of gold) the equals of the most rare and costly descriptions of Gold Watches. They are unsurpassed for Early Hunting Cases. Levers and Gentlemen's fine Swiss Movements, $10 and $15; Ladies' Compensation Balance Levers, $15; Ladies' Levers, Enameled, $20; Gentlemen's Fac-Simile Watches, Patent Levers, Hunting Cases, Compensation Balance, $25. Elegantly engraved. Railroad Conductors, Engineers, Expressmen—the most selecting of our customers—have thoroughly demonstrated the strength, durability, accuracy, and utility of our celebrated watches, and pronounce them invaluable as reliable time-keepers. Each Watch warranted by special certificate from the Orode Gold Watch Co. to be perfect time-keepers, and to retain their color equal to gold. Magnificent Orode Gold Chains, $3, $5, $7, and $10. Express Co's will exhibit the Watch, &c., when requested, on receipt of express charges both ways. Expressed every where, to be paid for on delivery. Don't send orders to parties who make OUR name for Watches before you see them. ORODE GOLD SIX WATCHES WILL RECEIVE AN EXTRA WATCH FREE. The universal demand for our specialties have induced unprincipled persons to counterfeit our inimitable Watch with worthless metal that tarnish on a week; claiming for them the reputation of Orode Gold Watches. Beware!

JOHN FOGGAN, President Orode Gold Watch Co.
Only Office in the United States No. 78 Nassau Street New York.
N. B.—Depot of the IMPROVED AMERICAN STEEL SHIRT COLLARS. Sent by Mail, $1.

Alaska Diamonds.

The new ALASKA DIAMOND, or corundum stone, equal in brilliancy to the real diamond, mounted in solitaire factory, in solitaire diamond setting, guaranteed five gold, and sold by us at one-sixth of the cost of real diamonds, to which they are equals in every respect except intrinsic value.

Look at our Price-List.

Ladies' Solitaire Finger-Rings, $8 and $10; Solitaire Ear-Drops, $5, $6, $10. Pastor Finger-Rings, $4, $10, $15; Cluster Ear-Drops, $6, $10, $14.
Cluster Sets, $8 and $25; Cross Sets, $20 and $25. Gents' Solitaire Pins, $3, $5, $8, $10, $15, $20; Rings, $5 and $10. Gents' Cluster Rings, $8, $10, and $12. Cluster Pins, $10 and $12; with Ink, $19; Cross Pins, $6, $10 and $12; Studs, per set, $3, $5, $7.
We do our business direct from our factory, located in a city which has a world-wide reputation for its fine jewelry.
Orders less than $5 should be accompanied with P. O. Order or Registered Letter, and the goods sent free. Exceeding $5 will be sent by express, C.O.D., customers paying all express charges. A Large Discount to the Trade. Address
STANLEY, WHIPPLE & CO. Providence, R. I.

SOZODONT.

An Eminent Chemist says:

459 BROADWAY, N.Y., July 5, 1866.

I have made a chemical analysis of the preparation for the teeth known as "SOZODONT," for Messrs. LYON & HALL, and find it to be of the highest purity. In ascertain whether it contains substances detrimental to the teeth or gums.

An impartial sample of the "SOZODONT" was purchased by me, and analyzed at the leading Drug House of this city, and carefully analyzed for acids and other corrosive or alkaline substances, and found entirely free. I recommend action on the teeth or gums, but nothing of an objectionable character. Respectfully yours, &c.,
JULIUS G. POHLE, M.D., Analytical Chemist,
Late Chemist to U. S. Bureau of Customs.

"RENEW!" "RENEW!"—HASPER'S WEEKLY, $4 00, and the PICTORIAL PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL, $4 00, one year, for $6 00 cash by S. R. WELLS, 389 Broadway, New York.

DR. CHALLUS'S WILD LIFE UNDER THE EQUATOR. Wild Life under the Equator. Narrated for Young People. By PAUL B. CHALLUS, Author of "Discoveries in Equatorial Africa," "Adventure Land," "Romance of the Gorilla Country," &c. With numerous Engravings. 12mo, Cloth, $1 75.

CROSS INDICATIONS APACHE COUNTRY. Adventures in the Apache Country: a Tour through Arizona and Sonora, with Notes on the Silver Regions of Nevada. By J. ROSS BROWNE, Illustrated by the Author. Crown 8vo, Cloth, $3 50. An American Family in Germany. "The Land of Cant." By MRS. E. D. E. N. SOUTHWORTH. 12mo, Cloth, Beveled, $2 00.

BEECHER'S SERMONS. Comprising in Two Volumes. Sermons by HENRY WARD BEECHER, Plymouth Church, Brooklyn. Selected from Published and Unpublished Discourses, and Revised by their Author. In Two Volumes, 8vo. With Steel Portrait by Halpin. Cloth, $5 00.

DALTON'S PHYSIOLOGY. A Treatise on Physiology and Hygiene. For Schools, Families, and Colleges. By J. C. DALTON, M.D., Professor of Physiology in the College of Physicians and Surgeons, New York. With Illustrations. 12mo, Cloth or Half Leather, $1 50.

DR. SMITH'S THEATRICAL MANAGEMENT. Theatrical Management in the West and South for Thirty Years, interspersed with Anecdotes Sketches, Autobiographicals given by SOL. SMITH, Retired Actor. With Fifteen Illustrations and a Portrait of the Author. 8vo, Cloth, $2 00; Paper, $1 00.

NATURE'S NOBLEMAN. By the Author of "Rebecca's Revenge," &c. 8vo, Paper, 50 cents.

THE WOMAN'S KINGDOM. A Love Story. By the Author of "John Halifax." Illustrations. 8vo, Paper, 25 cents; cloth, $1 00.

THE GORDIAN KNOT. By SHIRLEY BROOKS. 8vo, Paper, 50 cents.

THE MOONSTONE. By WILKIE COLLINS. Illustrations. 8vo, Cloth, $2 00; Paper, $1 50.

THE HEARTBURNS OF BISHOP'S FOLLY. By CHARLES LEVER. 8vo, Paper, 50 cents.

☞ HARPER & BROTHERS will send any of the above works by mail, postage paid, to any part of the United States, on receipt of the price.

Frank Leslie's Chimney Corner.

A purely literary pictorial. Excluding events of the day, its aim, as its title indicates, is to furnish amusement for the whole household. Its contents consist principally of original stories by able writers—including a serial, accounts of remarkable adventures, biographical sketches of self-made men—with portraits, descriptions of manners and customs in remote countries, short poems, fables, enigmas, conundrums, and charades, &c. Illustrated with large and spirited engravings, of which there are from fifteen to twenty in each weekly number.

Subscription price, $4 per year.

Frank Leslie's Lady's Magazine.

The leading fashion periodical in America. Each monthly number contains a superb plate of the latest fashions, from designs sent from Paris ex soon as received, which are then published simultaneously in New York and Paris; also a handsomely colored fashion-plate, exhibiting the newest bonnet styles. These are accompanied with full descriptions and explanations, and numerous wood engravings. Every number contains an original letter from Paris describing the new modes, by a lady whose long residence there gives her access to fashionable society. The literary portion of this Magazine comprises a continued story, numerous interesting tales, poetry, anecdotes, &c. The whole produces a beautiful and useful little magazine. Subscription price, $3 00 per year.

Subscriptions should be sent to

FRANK LESLIE,
637 Pearl Street, New York City.

WANTED — AGENTS — $75 to $200 per month, to introduce the GENUINE IMPROVED COMMON SENSE FAMILY SEWING MACHINE. Price only $25. It will stitch, hem, fell, tuck, quilt, cord, bind, braid and embroider in a most superior manner. Price only $25. Fully warranted for five years. We will pay $500 for any machine that will sew a stronger, more beautiful, more elastic seam, or that is more durable than the Common Sense. Every second stitch can be cut, and still the thick cannot be pulled out. Every machine warranted. Send for circular. $75 to $200 per month and expenses, or a commission from which that amount can be made. Address JOHNSON, CLARK & CO., 343 BROADWAY, N.Y.; 265 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON, MASS.; 197 ST. LOUIS, MO.

CAUTION.—Do not be imposed upon by other parties palming off worthless cast-iron machines, under the same name or others similar. The genuine machine has the Common Sense trade mark—a head.

WANTED — AGENTS — To Sell the AMERICAN KNITTING MACHINE. Price $5. Capable of knitting the greatest variety of work ever accomplished. 10,000 AGENTS WANTED. Liberal inducements to Agents. Address, AMERICAN KNITTING MACHINE CO., 319 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

IMPROVED ALUMINIUM BRONZE HUNTING-CASED WATCHES.

$500.

I will cheerfully give the above amount to any one who can equal them in point of Gold Watches. Description of watches sent free on demand.

Prices, from $16 to $20.

They are sent C. O. D., with privilege to examine. JULES B. HUGUENIN VUILLEMIN, 320 Broadway, N. Y.

Call and examine for yourselves.

100 PHOTOGRAPHS or BEAUTIFUL WOMEN sent, postpaid, for 25 cts. Send for Circulars. Address W. BAUER, Holland, New York.

The New Books of the Season

PUBLISHED BY

HARPER & BROTHERS, NEW YORK.

Sent by mail, postage paid, on receipt of price.

DILKE'S GREATER BRITAIN. Greater Britain: a Record of Travel in English-speaking Countries during the Years 1866 and 1867. By CHARLES WENTWORTH DILKE. With Maps and Illustrations. 12mo, Cloth, $2 50.

BELLOWS'S TRAVELS, Complete. The Old World in its Way: Impressions of Europe in 1867-68. By HENRY W. BELLOWS, D.D. 12mo, Cloth, $2 00. In just ready.

ABBOTT'S LIFE OF CHRIST. Jesus of Nazareth: his Life and Teachings: Founded on the Four Gospels, and Illustrated by Recent Travels in the Manners, Customs, Religious Beliefs, and Political Institutions of the Country. By LYMAN ABBOTT. With Designs by DORE, DE LAROCHE, FREAS, and others. Crown 8vo, Cloth, Beveled Edges, $3 50.

DU CHAILLU'S WILD LIFE UNDER THE EQUATOR. Wild Life under the Equator. Narrated for Young People. By PAUL B. CHALLUS, Author of "Discoveries in Equatorial Africa," "Adventure Land," "Romance of the Gorilla Country," &c. With numerous Engravings. 12mo, Cloth, $1 75.

CROSS INDICATIONS APACHE COUNTRY. Adventures in the Apache Country: a Tour through Arizona and Sonora, with Notes on the Silver Regions of Nevada. By J. ROSS BROWNE, Illustrated by the Author. Crown 8vo, Cloth, $3 50. An American Family in Germany. "The Land of Cant." By MRS. E. D. E. N. SOUTHWORTH. 12mo, Cloth, Beveled, $2 00.

BEECHER'S SERMONS. Comprising in Two Volumes. Sermons by HENRY WARD BEECHER, Plymouth Church, Brooklyn. Selected from Published and Unpublished Discourses, and Revised by their Author. In Two Volumes, 8vo. With Steel Portrait by Halpin. Cloth, $5 00.

DALTON'S PHYSIOLOGY. A Treatise on Physiology and Hygiene. For Schools, Families, and Colleges. By J. C. DALTON, M.D., Professor of Physiology in the College of Physicians and Surgeons, New York. With Illustrations. 12mo, Cloth or Half Leather, $1 50.

DR. SMITH'S THEATRICAL MANAGEMENT. Theatrical Management in the West and South for Thirty Years, interspersed with Anecdotes Sketches, Autobiographicals given by SOL. SMITH, Retired Actor. With Fifteen Illustrations and a Portrait of the Author. 8vo, Cloth, $2 00; Paper, $1 00.

NATURE'S NOBLEMAN. By the Author of "Rebecca's Revenge," &c. 8vo, Paper, 50 cents.

THE WOMAN'S KINGDOM. A Love Story. By the Author of "John Halifax." Illustrations. 8vo, Paper, 25 cents; cloth, $1 00.

THE GORDIAN KNOT. By SHIRLEY BROOKS. 8vo, Paper, 50 cents.

THE MOONSTONE. By WILKIE COLLINS. Illustrations. 8vo, Cloth, $2 00; Paper, $1 50.

THE HEARTBURNS OF BISHOP'S FOLLY. By CHARLES LEVER. 8vo, Paper, 50 cents.

☞ HARPER & BROTHERS will send any of the above works by mail, postage paid, to any part of the United States, on receipt of the price.

THE DILEMMA.—[Scene, Sleeping Car.]

STOUT LADY (to her husband, who has retired for the night). "Well, upon my word, Mr. SMITH! Pray, did you imagine when you made choice of the Lower Berth that I was to perch myself up there?"

GORHAM MFG. CO.

Sterling Silver Ware,

AND

Fine Electro-Plated Ware,

of the following trade-marks:

Trade-Mark for Silver. GORHAM MFG. CO. Trade-Mark for Electro-Plate.

MANUFACTURED BY THE

GORHAM MANUFACTURING CO.,

PROVIDENCE, R. I.

Orders received from the Trade only, but these goods may be obtained from responsible dealers every where.

THE GORHAM WARE may be obtained of ADAMS, CHANDLER, & CO., No. 20 JOHN STREET, NEW YORK.

PATENTED OCTOBER 2, 1866.

LIPPINCOTT & BARKDULL,

Lone Jack, 2d.—For the benefit of all whose dealers or mechanics make their business to show them no axe, I would say, Try the Red Jacket. It cuts deeper than the common bit. Being round on the cut, it does not stick in the wood. Every chopper with the common axe knows how much there is as much labor and strength wasted in getting the axe out of the cut as in making the blow. The Red Jacket bit is all ground, and from one third to one half the labor is saved in cutting the same quantity. By putting in the same labor and is necessary with a common axe, you can easily make at least thirty-three per cent. more wood in the same time. You are safe in betting any honest man try your Red Jacket on these tools, and if it fails refund him his money.

Respectfully yours, HARRY BALDWIN.

For sale by all responsible hardware dealers and the manufacturers, LIPPINCOTT & BARKDULL, PITTSBURGH, PA., Sole Owners of Colburn's and Red Jacket Patents.

KAELEYAMEYA & SON, Manufacturers of Meerschaum Pipes and Holders, with Mouthpieces, Portraits, &c. Wholesale and Retail. Repairing in all its branches. Send for Drawings and Price-List. Box 6724. Stores: 23 Wall St., 6 John St., 71 Nassau St., corner John St.

MUSIC OMNIBUS.

1000 of the best Songs, Polkas, Schottisches, Waltzes, Quadrilles, Dances, Cotillions, with calls and figures for dancing; written out in full, arranged for the VIOLIN, FLUTE, FIFE, CLARIONET, &c.

Price, $1.25. Mailed.

FREDERICK BALLIET, 1125 Broadway, 2d door above 26th St. Branch, 208 Bowery.

CALENBERG & VAUPEL'S

AGRAFFE PIANOS

RECEIVED THE FIRST PREMIUM IN 1865.

Warerooms and Factory, 232 & 234 West 36th St., N.Y.

COLD WEATHER DOES NOT CHAP or roughen the skin after using WRIGHT'S ALCONATED GLYCERINE TABLET OF SOLIDIFIED GLYCERINE. Its daily use makes the skin delicately soft and beautiful. Sold by all Druggists.

E. & G. A. WRIGHT, Philadelphia.

GET THE BEST ORGANS,

AT PRICES OF INFERIOR WORK.

New Inventions; New Styles; Greatly Reduced Prices; A First-Class Organ for $50; Lowest Prices Printed and alike to all; New Illustrated Catalogue now ready, and free to every applicant.

The MASON & HAMLIN ORGAN CO., 154 TREMONT ST., BOSTON, or 596 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

VICK'S

FLORAL GUIDE FOR 1869.

The first edition of ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND OF VICK'S ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE OF SEEDS AND GUIDE IN THE FLORAL CULTURE is now published. It makes a work of 100 pages, beautifully illustrated, with about 150 FINE WOOD ENGRAVINGS OF FLOWERS and VEGETABLES, and an

ELEGANT COLORED PLATE,

A BOUQUET OF FLOWERS.

It is the most beautiful, as well as the most instructive Floral Guide published, giving plain and thorough directions for the Culture of Flowers and Vegetables.

The Floral Guide is published for the benefit of my customers, to whom it is sent free without application, but will be forwarded to all who apply by mail, for TEN CENTS, which is not half the cost. Address

JAMES VICK, ROCHESTER, N.Y.

PRINCE & CO'S ORGANS AND MELODEONS. 43,000, now in use. BUFFALO, N.Y. CHICAGO, ILL.

WOODWARD'S COUNTRY HOMES. { 150 Designs, $1.50, postpaid. Geo. E. Woodward, Architect, 191 Broadway, New York. Send stamp for catalogue of all new books on Architecture.

Agents Wanted.

FOUNTAIN PENS—2 styles. 14 gross, 28 cts.; one gross, $2; GOLD PENS, 16 carats, $2.60. One dip writes 8 pages. Sells quick. Extra quality gold pen-holder and pen-holder combined, 38 cts.; 12 for $1 and upwards. Our agents make 300 per cent. Address Home Industrial Pen Co., 418 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, Pa.

THE SNOW ON A GRECIAN BENDER.

WHERE to EMIGRATE, and WHY.

By FREDERICK B. GODDARD.

With numerous Maps and beautiful Engravings.

A useful and entertaining book for the Emigrant, Invalid, Farmer, Manufacturer, Merchant—and, in short, for every Citizen of the United States.

IT IS FULL OF INTEREST.

It describes every Southern and Western State and Territory; its Climate, Soil, Productions, Minerals, Educational Advantages, Quality and Price of Farm Lands in every County, and inducements for settlers. It tells how to Obtain Title to Public Lands, and where they are. Cost of Living and Wages every where. Routes and Fares to every State. All about the Pacific Railroad, &c., &c., &c. 600 Pages, Octavo. Price $3. Agents wanted every where.

Exclusive Territory and large commissions given.

FREDERICK B. GODDARD, Publisher,

No. 423 Broome St., New York.

CONSULAR SEAL CHAMPAGNE,

AS IMPORTED FOR NEW YORK UNION CLUB.

TOMES, MELVAIN, & CO., Sole Importers, No. 6 MAIDEN LANE, NEW YORK.

DR DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD LIVER OIL

Is convincingly proved by the highest medical testimony, and by the practical test of successful experience for twenty years in all parts of the world, to be, beyond all question, the purest, the most efficacious, the most palatable, and, from its rapid curative effects, the most economical of all kinds.

CONSUMPTION & DISEASES OF THE CHEST.

DR. DE JONGH'S OIL is administered with extraordinary success in cases of consumption and diseases of the chest. No remedy so rapidly restores the exhausted strength, improves the nutritive functions, stops consumption, checks the perspiration, quiets the cough and expectoration, or produces a more marked and favorable influence on the local malady.

DEBILITY OF ADULTS AND CHILDREN.

DR. DE JONGH'S OIL possesses unequaled and peculiar nutritive and restorative properties; hence its extraordinary efficacy in debility of adults and children. It revives the natural appetite; improves, reanimates, and regulates the functions of digestion and assimilation; and entirely restores health and strength to the most feeble and deplorately emaciated constitutions.

TRADE MARK. DR. DE JONGH'S GENUINE OIL is shipped to the UNITED STATES in Imperial Half-Pint Bottles ONLY, sealed with a Private Trade Mark Capsule, color blue opaque, white top, stamped with a blue label on a red shield, and the label, under the wrapper, on each bottle, bears THREE SIGNATURES, viz.: those of Dr. De Jongh, of Ansar, Harford & Co.; and of Edw'd Geery & Co.

SOLE CONSIGNEES,

ANSAR, HARFORD & CO., 77, Strand, London.

SOLE ACCREDITED AGENTS IN AMERICA,

EDW'D GEERY & CO., 38, Vesey St., New York.

Sold by all Druggists, at $1.50 per Bottle.

☞ A Descriptive Pamphlet post free on application.

THE WILSON SHUTTLE SEWING MACHINES. Cheaper than all others. AGENTS WANTED. Manufactured by THE WILSON SEWING MACHINE CO., Cleveland, O.

GENUINE WALTHAM WATCHES,

IN SOLID GOLD AND SILVER CASES ONLY,

AT EXTREMELY LOW PRICES.

Silver Hunting Watches..... $18
Gold Hunting Watches, 18 carat Cases... $80
Gold Hunting Watches, Ladies' Size... $70

Every Watch warranted by special certificate from the American Watch Company. We will send these Watches by Express to any place, with bill to collect on delivery, and give the purchaser the privilege to open the package and examine the Watch before paying, and any Watch that does not give satisfaction may be exchanged, or the money will be refunded. Every one is requested to write for our Descriptive Price-List, which explains the different kinds with prices of each.

Please state that you saw this in Harper's Weekly.

Address in full,

HOWARD & CO., No. 619 Broadway, N.Y.

C.O.D. ELGIN C.O.D.

WATCHES.

We will send by express, to be paid for on delivery, the National Watch Company's WATCHES, at the following prices, viz.:

"J. F. Byerly," full plate, 18 size, steel balance, 7 jewels, 2 oz. Silver case.....$25 50

"Mat. Laflin," full plate, 18 size, expansion balance, 7 oz. Silver case..... 28 50

Either of the above in 3 oz. case, $2 additional. Either of the above in 4 oz. case, $4 50 additional. With the privilege of examining in the hands of the Express Agent before paying for the watch.

FULLER & CO.,

Successors to M. E. Chapman & Co.,

No. 47 Liberty St., New York.

Wm. Knabe & Co.

MANUFACTORY

MAGNIFICENT

Grand, Square, and Upright

PIANOS.

Unapproachable for their IMMENSE POWER OF TONE, GREAT SINGING QUALITY,

Evenness throughout the entire Scale, Easy Action, Workmanship, and Durability, and pronounced Unequaled by all the Famed Artists of this Country and Europe. Every Instrument Warranted for Ten Years.

WAREROOMS,

650 BROADWAY, New York.

J. BAUER & CO.,

General Agents and Manufacturers and Importers of Musical Instruments, Strings, and Musical Merchandize.

$20 A DAY AGENTS—or ladies or gentlemen, MALE or FEMALE to introduce the NEW AND IMPROVED LETTER SELF-INKING CHIPPING Stitch alike on both sides, and is the only Licensed and Reliable Stitch in the market sold for less than $40. All others are infringements, and the seller and user are liable to prosecution and imprisonment. Full particulars, address

W. A. HENDERSON & CO., Cleveland, Ohio.

THIS IS IT! If you are selling Sewing Machines, send your name and P. O. address to us for particular information. Only those that are in the business, or have been, need apply. ADDRESS A. E. CLARK & CO., Toledo, Ohio.

GROWN, GRAHAM & CO. (Successors to Welch & Phelps), Gen'l Brokers and Purchasing Ag'ts, 218 Broadway, will purchase any thing you want from N. Y. at regular price. No commission charged purchasers.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

A JOURNAL OF CIVILIZATION.

VOL. XIII.—No. 631.] NEW YORK, SATURDAY, JANUARY 30, 1869. [SINGLE COPIES, TEN CENTS. $4 00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the Year 1869, by Harper & Brothers, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court of the United States, for the Southern District of New York.

Geo Eastman H 628

GREAT FIRE IN PHILADELPHIA—DESTRUCTION OF CALDWELL'S JEWELRY ESTABLISHMENT ON CHESTNUT STREET.

SKETCHED BY EARL SHINN.—[SEE PAGE 66.]

THE PHILADELPHIA FIRE.

We give on our first page an illustration of the great fire in Philadelphia on the morning of Jan. 14, by which CALDWELL'S magnificent jewelry establishment at 902 Chestnut Street was completely destroyed. The building was thoroughly gutted by the flames, and all the stock was lost. It is supposed that the fire originated in an attempt by burglars to blow up the safes, as loud explosions were heard a short time before the alarm was given.

The building is valued at about $100,000. The loss must be immense. The Messrs. CALDWELL were among the foremost in their line of business in the country, and their stock at this time was very heavy. The diamonds and other precious articles are secured at night in the safes of the establishment; but the watches, silverware, and the bulk of the jewelry remained exposed, and consequently a prey to the flames. Not only were these precious goods in the store, but there were also statuary, bronzes, rare paintings, and articles of virtu and bijouterie of endless variety and value.

After the lapse of three hours the floors fell in with a tremendous crash. The flames extended to the adjoining building and endangered the Continental Hotel. The entire loss is estimated at nearly $1,000,000.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 30, 1869.

MONEY IN POLITICS.

WE hope that the House of Representatives will perceive that the summary repeal of the Tenure-of-Office law makes the passage of the Civil Service bill all the more necessary. But, whether passed or rejected, it is to be hoped that it will be thought worthy of some consideration. There were those, indeed, who thought that so grave a principle as that involved in the tenure bill deserved some reflection. But we believe it was General BUTLER who relieved the House of all trouble by cheerily announcing that every body's mind was made up, and that time would be saved by an immediate vote. Is every body's mind made up, also, upon the needlessness of the Civil Service bill? In other words, is it to be conceded without further struggle that the civil service of the country is to be a system of mingled incompetency and corruption?

The kind of opposition to MR. JENCKES's bill which has thus far been developed is scarcely worthy serious attention. The assertion that it establishes an aristocracy is so ludicrous as to be almost unintelligible. To bring it at once to its logical result, we should like to know if the clerk-women who sweep and wash the public department buildings are an aristocracy if they are not removed with every administration? Presumptively, they are hired because they are capable of doing the work, and are retained until their incapacity or dishonesty appears. Now MR. JENCKES's bill invites every body in the country who thinks he can discharge the various duties of a clerkship to submit himself to a proper examination, and those who are found most competent, and who are unquestionably honest, are to be selected. Do they form an aristocracy? They are not tortured at the end of two or four years? Their tenure is good character and behavior. Is that aristocratic? If it be, it is nevertheless unconditional, for it is precisely the tenure of the Judges of the United States Courts. An aristocratic system in this country is a system which is not amenable to the people. But no such system is proposed. What the people want in the public service is fitness and integrity, and when those fail the bill ceases. It provides that the incumbents shall be removed. It is, in fact, a bill which the people ought to adopt for the very purpose of securing the qualities that are indispensable in the public service.

The present system, as we said, is one of mingled incompetency and corruption. Is that less to be feared as its influence upon free institutions than one which secures capacity and honesty? The appalling and immediate peril of the country is the fact that money is coming to be the only political power. Legislatures are notoriously supposed to be for sale. The most insulting offers are made to members. Why not, then, secure, and why is it an impossible universal, except because of a general knowledge of corruption? The experience of every man familiar with politics informs him that every candidate for almost every office must pay his way. Every where and in every manner the fact appears. Even judges are openly charged with corruption. The information of what is called law in parts of the country is notoriously a system of corrupt intrigue. Nominations to the highest offices are allotted by managers to men of known wealth, as the only proper and honest candidate he also rich it is charged by his opponents, as of course, that he is nominated because of his money. A Legislature is to elect a Senator, and it is announced on all sides, and nobody seems to feel sure enough to deny it, that the election will be decided by money only. It is not necessary that the candidates themselves are supposed personally to buy votes, but it generally appears that somebody for some purpose controls sufficient money; and the idea that a candidate is elected purely because of his general fitness is rapidly disappearing from the public mind.

With office which is thus bought in secret, if not in open market, goes the patronage, or the civil service. It is distributed by the successful aspirant, as the reward of zeal, to his henchmen. A man once gravely urged as his credentials to a considerable office that he had done more dirty work for the party than any man in the district. Upon the present system he was entitled to his reward. It is an inverse scale. The deeper a man has plunged during the canvass the higher should he his office after the election. This is the secret of the doctrine of "elections settle principles." Here is a man who fetched and carried by night and day for a mouth before the election. The patriotic spectator saw with pride this proof of lingering public virtue; but the day after the election the diligent workman writes that he has decided to apply for the office of assessor of the revenue, which appointment he trusts his claims are sufficiently evident.

When the famous phrase of a Democratic politician, "To the victors belong the spoils," became the recognized and unrebuked method of supplying the public service, it revealed a fatal demoralization of our politics. The public indifference has now accepted it as the method, and it will not be without a struggle that its chains will be broken. But unless the power of money in our politics can be checked and lessened the end is sure. To check that power the Civil Service bill opens the way. By its passage Congress has the power to diminish the vast corruption which is engulfing the Government. Let the people resolve to take their service into their own hands, and not leave it under the name of patronage, which is the system of corruption, in the hands of utterly venal men.

THE ELECTION FRAUDS.

No committee could be engaged in a more important investigation than that which is looking into the frauds at the election in New York. Governor HOFFMAN, at the time of the election at which he was one of the chief candidates, denounced the charges of fraud as gross and unfounded. Yet, at that very time, the fact of the issue of false naturalization papers was perfectly ascertained. But the Governor, belonging to a party and intimately associating with party chiefs to whom these gross irregularities at elections were unknown, could not bring himself to believe that any men could be base enough to cheat at the polls. Afterward, apparently without difficulty, he concluded that some men were base enough to charge such an intention.

It is the misfortune of Governor HOFFMAN, as a practical politician, that his party training in that renowned school of political morality, Tammany Hall, has given him no eye or ear of human nature. He believes every body to be as honest as the politicians who surround him—if they are inclined to vote the Democratic ticket. Besides, with the single exception of New York political life as the Governor has had, might have entertained the opinion that, under the circumstances, fraud was possible. But cheating at an election in which Judge MCCUNN naturalized forty thousand persons in twenty-one days, and turned out citizens at the rate of two per minute, and in which MR. WILLIAM M. TWEED and MR. PETER B. SWEENY were the chief managers, was not to be thought of. And if any body had suggested to Mayor HOFFMAN that two hundred men could sleep the night before the election in Jackson Hall, a resort owned by Sheriff O'BRIEN, and descend thence to the polls to vote early in the day, the virtuous magistrate would doubtless have repelled the charge as a wicked device of the adversary; and if the two hundred did descend and vote to change the fate of the Governor, the organ of his party would have sneered at any investigation, and have immediately printed in large type an account of the explosion in coffee, and the number of deaths in Massachusetts alms-houses; adulteration of the franchise and the guilt of the elective system, it would seem, being of no importance in the judgment of a party newspaper.

Of course Governor HOFFMAN will denounce it as a gross and unfounded charge if his adversaries the statement that his trusty confidant, Mr. Sheriff O'BRIEN, the host of Jackson Hall, packed the hall of the United States Court-House, where the Committee was sitting, with shoulder-hitters and disciples of the Governor's political friend, the HONORABLE JOHN MORRISSEY, to prevent access through the hall—a crowd of gentlemen who were excluded by the police at the request of the United States Marshal. He will also treat with lofty contempt the assertion that tens of thousands of votes were cast by repeaters. His Excellency with his most virtuous air will demand if ever such a thing as repeating was heard of in the city of New York; and, if it has been, whether it has not always been upon the part of those rascally Republicans, who, unacquainted with vague surmises about a BARNARD, have even voted for MR. CUNN. In it not enough to annihilate all suspicion of fraud upon the part of the Democratic party in the city that after voting under the auspices of MCCUNN, O'BRIEN, TWEED, and SWEENY for SEYMOUR and HOFFMAN, it presently nominated and elected MR. OAKEY HALL for Mayor? If purity in politics does not enter the City Hall with Mayor HALL, what does enter it?

We are glad that Congress did not yield to the overwhelming assumption in favor of the earliest business of the session in the city of New York which arises from the fact that Mayor HOFFMAN denounced the charges of corruption as unfounded. For somebody undoubtedly cheats the people of the State of New York at the polls in the city; and since Governor HOFFMAN repels with scorn the imputation that his party friends could do any thing about it, he will rejoice with us that the offenders are in the way of exposure; and his Excellency ought to be congratulated that the same document which proves the offense will also show the truth of his denial.

SPAIN AND CUBA.

THE revolutionary movement in Cuba has as yet obtained no decided success. The arrival of the new Spanish General-in-Chief has been anticipated with hope, and the delay has, doubtless, somewhat retarded military operations. But this appears to be all. although full of those promises which usually prove to be as frail as fair, will hardly seriously affect the situation. Cuba has long been subject to the caspice of Spain, and the present revolt has been in a long time in preparation. The date of its projected outbreak was simultaneous with that of the revolution in Spain, and consequently it failed of unanimity. The wavering spirit of the island waited to watch the course of events, and to see if the work for the colony would not be done in the mother country, and the remoter, rural parts began the insurrection.

There is one argument which the Cubans who desire independence may very logically urge. If Spain can begin may change her own government why not the people of Cuba? The principle of the Spanish revolution is, really, that the people of Spain shall have such a government as they choose. Now Cuba is not Spain, nor a part of Spain. It is a distant colony; and the people of Spain can hardly assume to govern the people of Cuba, without consultation, what their government shall be. If the Spaniards claim that the colony necessarily goes with the mother country, it can only be upon the principle which has already been denied in Cuba, and which is nullified by the principle of the Spanish revolution itself. If Spain decides for a republic of course Cuba will be invited to form a part of it and to send representatives; or, in case of the desire of Cuba to be independent, Spain, if her counsels are enlightened by experience, will not object. If, however, a monarchy be established, it will probably attempt to retain the island even at the cost of war.

The latest advices from Spain are not unpromising for the republic, although there is no doubt of the existence of a very strong republican party. The difficulties which are felt by the Moderates, and expressed by a correspondent of the Tribune, are, first, the want of education, and, second, the hostility of the European Powers. The first difficulty is very like that of reluctance to jump into the water before knowing how to swim. It is pretty well proved, however decidedly an instructed constituency may be, that it is a monarchy, it is the most garchy used for its purpose the mingled ignorance and commercial timidity of the North. This result has been largely achieved. In the second place the steady hold of the party upon the country, and the immense opportunities which circumstances have offered to dishonesty and speculation, have made it responsible for a great deal of corruption. Now a party out of power, whatever its real character, has the chance of limitless promises and professions. If the character of the Democratic party were not so hopelessly established—if the country did not so instantly and contemptuously reject the assumption of principle by a party which for a generation was the pimp of slavery, and if its promises of economy were not so hideously contradicted by its management of the city of New York, where the intrinsic character of what is called Democracy can be constantly studied, it might have given the Republican party a much more serious resistance than it has yet offered.

But the shrewder leaders of that party have now an advantage over the duller leaders which they will not fail to use. They tried hard to persuade the party to change its mask at the last election. They insisted that the victory of the Republicans upon the old issues should be recognized. But the Democratic party is not a party of intelligence or principle, and it had therefore neither perception nor courage. It took the same old iron-cross, and was again defeated. But defeat again and again repeated is something which even dullness at last comprehends, and those who prophesied it last summer will not regard more patiently a party that will advise a renunciation of old issues; an avoidance of candidates tainted by defeat; a vigorous opposition of all the difficulties of the situation, of the weight and extent of taxation, of the frauds of the rings, of the increasing corruption; a skilful casting of the whole responsibility upon the party in power, and the most unctuous promises of a better time under Democratic economy.

A campaign cautiously conducted upon such a plan will require something more upon the part of the party in power than reference to its old victories, or reliance upon the past crimes of the Democracy. It can withstand the onset in one way only, and that is by giving the country practical proof that it is bent upon honesty and economy. The appeal to the notorious precedents of the Democratic party will be met by assertions from the best Republicans of the practices which have grown up in their own party; of the jobs which are openly carried out by their own party friends; of the characters of those who are often selected as the party representatives; of the reckless methods which are often adopted to secure party ends. And this kind of objection would be made with dangerous force, for the Republicans who would make it are the truest and best men of the party.

The evident policy of the Republican party for the spring campaign in New Hampshire, and Connecticut, and Rhode Island, not for local success merely, but for the benefit of the whole party every where, is, therefore, the simplest and strongest declaration in favor of public honesty, political and financial; and the plainest proof of the sincerity of such declaration is the nomination of candidates untouched by the least suspicion of direct or indirect corruption. In one word, the Republican for friends must bear in mind is a growing fear among honest men that the Republican party is getting to be as bad as the Democratic. We must show them that they are mistaken, and there is but one way in which we can do it. The indifference of such men is our danger. They naturally belong to us by reason of the greater intelligence and high purpose of the party. Let us prove that the party deserves success, and we need have no fear that it will not achieve it.

INFLUENCES WHICH AFFECT THE TRADE OF 1869.

THE year which has just closed has not been remarkable in any direction of the world for any of those great events which disturb the regular course of industry and intercourse; nor are there any clear indications that during the present year war will ensue between any of the leading Powers.

Russia is borrowing money to build her railroads, and thereby to increase her ultimate extension toward the Mediterranean. Prussia, having accomplished the great work of German unity, needs only time to shape it into durability. The French Emperor, to whom this work is due, stands as a firm check upon the selfish objects of NAPOLEON. Austria, having yielded to the wishes of Hungary, has turned her attention toward internal development. The Czar, yet encamped on the Bosphorus, but no sure as the sea,

"Whose icy current and compulsive course Ne'er feels retiring ebb," is the movement of Russia toward her object.

SOLOMON future Czar will have his winter residence at Constantinople, but at present there is no sufficient motive for allowing the slight disturbance in the south of Europe to disturb the general peace. Spain will probably be obliged to adjust her internal difficulties alone, if done without civil war; and England and the United States have given heavy bonds to keep the peace. It is difficult to say what may be the effect elsewhere of the revolutionary movement in Spain. France, with strong democratical tendencies, arising mainly from the early destruction of the system of primogeniture and the adoption of the principle of the equal division of lands among heirs, furnishes no support for a regular dynasty, and disturbance may happen there whenever opportunity exists or a wave of prosperity prevails. Departing from the example of wise rulers NAPOLEON has permitted the issue of paper-money by the Bank of France for a double denomination of fifty francs, and secured a temporary advantage at the expense of lasting injury to the empire and to his fame. The expense of maintaining vast bodies of troops, nearly equal to his old armies, and to be used in case of war, is a heavy burden on Europe, and although it shows a want of confidence it is not probable that war will soon ensue.

The events of the year 1868 which exercise the largest influence upon general affairs are the war in South America, the election of cities by earthquakes, and the drought in Europe. The latter, which was most severe in Great Britain, has had a most disastrous effect upon the reactionary period which followed the close of our war, and will have very injurious effects. The drought which commenced in April and continued with little relief until August—for nearly six months followed a year of bad harvests. Owing to them, as we have heretofore shown, there was a great demand in the first six months of 1868 to import wheat in excess of the previous year to the extent of fifty millions of dollars in value, and Mr. CANNADINE states that the increase in England's importation of wheat over that of 1863 was £27,400,000 sterling. It will be remembered that our grocers were also obliged to pay high prices, and that we entered upon the harvest of 1868 without any considerable store on hand. Such was also the condition of Great Britain and France. The harvests of 1868 will depend upon therefore as one of the greatest blessings ever showered upon our country.

The reactionary period in England, to which we have referred, is matter of profound interest. By reason of our war great activity was communicated to the industry and commerce of nearly other nation. England, as the great manufacturing power, profited largely by our misfortunes. She became also the chief carrier upon the ocean, a policy to which she gave immense aid by the destruction of the power of the Confederacy as a distinct belligerent people, and by allowing the Alabama to escape from the waters. Her interest in the war with China was as intimate as our blockade would allow. Our financial policy, to which we were compelled to resort, drove away the precious metals from us, and the English returned them in the same necessity expelled it from the South.

There was an unusual accumulation of specie in the country of Europe. As soon as the new mines of exceeding richness had been opened and distributed, not as were those of California and Australia over the whole world, but over the limits of Europe, the commercial activity which had immediate intercourse with this country. Much of it was sent by them to the nonbanking continental nations of Europe. As Great Britain was the closest in intimacy with us, she derived most advantage from this expulsion of the precious metals from this country. Scenes of speculation which rivaled the South Sea bubble were then enacted. Companies, "limited," were formed for every purpose which the fancy of the most credulous suggest, the wrecks of which were stranded over England by the financial storm of 1866.

The cultivation and manufacture of cotton constituted one of the principal objects for which English capital was used. Cotton was to be produced so extensively in all warm countries that the fabric was no longer to be king. One of the important conditions upon which the culture was, however, overlooked. The region which produces it successfully must not only have the fields of the long-staple cotton but which bring the plant to perfection, but also of the frost, which, in destroying its roots, destroys also the weeds and grass, which would otherwise soon be overgrown and choked by labor at the season when the processes of picking, cleaning, selecting, baling, and marketing are going forward. Hence Southern and Northern Europe, regenerates in those climates which are not blessed with sufficient heat and cold to accomplish both maturity and destruction.

The price which cotton reached on the partial withdrawal of American cotton from the markets of the world for a time covered these facts, and in the excitement caused by the accumulated crops on Southern plantations upon a vent, the implicity of such efforts became apparent, and the cultivation of cotton in new fields was partially discontinued. The experiment had prevented the raising of grain in many localities sufficient for support. More is now produced there than ante-bellum times.

England, which was to enjoy pre-eminence in the command of cotton, established numerous factories throughout her limits, and enlarged the capacity of establishments already existing to such a degree as to produce a larger quantity of cotton goods than after the cessation of the war was required. Many of these establishments have already been closed, and the agreement has been quite extensively proposed among manufacturers in Lancashire to work only thirty hours a week up to the end of February.

The English Board of Trade returns for the first eleven months of 1868 show, as compared with those of 1867, a decrease in the value of imports of nearly all descriptions of raw material, amounting, in cotton, hides, and wool, to £6,266,670, and a corresponding decrease in the value of the manufactures as the exports. On the contrary, there is an increase in the value of food imported for her consumption. The whole increase in exports in 1868, as compared with 1867, amounts to £3,106,724. The whole increase of imports in 1868 is £5,663,634—making a worse account for 1868 than for 1867 of £2,556,963.

As compared with 1867 the reserve in the Bank of England at the end of 1868 was diminished £2,463,465, its coin and bullion were diminished £3,615,870, and its private deposits or capital "over" were diminished £2,166,010.

These returns show that the year 1868 was unfortunate, both in part viz "short time" has been resorted to by manufacturers. The drought of 1868 will doubtless extend the present disturbance to a longer period, as it condemns the population of England to economy in the use of manufactures produced for home consumption, and to the necessity of importing food largely until a fair crop be secured by the harvest of 1869. France and other European countries will have many features of a corresponding character.

The inactivity of trade in England since the spring of 1866, and in portions of the Continent, has had its effect upon this country. Money which has been invested in fixed securities and loaned here in what are called "options" than would have been otherwise possible. These options, which are loans of sterling or other bills on the security of pledges of United States bonds, amount to between fifty and a hundred million of dollars, and would be withdrawn in part on an active demand for money in London. Gold has been depressed in our markets as a consequence of the case in European money markets, to the immediate advantage of Mr. MCCULLOCH, who may be able to live through his term without experiencing any countermovement.

We have entered with some minuteness into these facts, as they have a direct and powerful influence upon this country. A great power over our financial condition may be exerted by capitalists abroad whenever it may be for their interest to do so.

The situation here is complicated, but in some respects favorable. The crop of cotton is larger probably than it was in 1867, and, owing to a necessary change in resorting to the cultivation of grain instead of cotton by many of those foreign producers who have found that our supremacy in the culture of cotton was gone, we have some advantage now in adjusting the price. But the question whether a high price can be maintained, in view of the condition of England and other European countries. England, France, and Spain have no alternative but to obtain their consumption of food from this country to a larger extent than in 1868, and it will be scarcely possible for England and France to pay for their supplies of cotton and food when the demand for their manufactured articles is seriously lessened.

English agents are now here to buy grain, but they are less active than many, although it is well known that the stock of food in England is much lighter than it was at this period in 1867. The English are living from "hand to mouth" in the near that our markets will affect her give way; but as we were cleaned out of grain last year at good prices, our farmers are strong and have a disposition to hoard their grain to provide against the possibility of a short supply at the coming harvest; so at least is not to be expected to consume the new crop immediately after being harvested, as was the case in 1867.

Even if prices should give way now, so far as breadstuffs are concerned, the wants of England, France, and Spain must be so considerable up to the harvest of 1869, and our consumption of Western and Northern Europe are so much crippled, owing to the drought, that prices would again advance here to what will prove fully remunerative.

England has had the skill to bear down the price of wheat since early summer about 24s. per quarter of eight bushels, in the face of the worst harvest, taken as a whole, that she has experienced for years.

We have the elements of a sound trade in the United States, subject only to such contingencies as may result from handling our finances. It is clearly the policy of every individual to place his affairs on the soundest basis by the use of all possible economy, prudence, and care. Our great crops are favorable to this object, and if it be generally pursued an adverse decision on the Legal Tender act, or unwise action by Congress, would leave all such untouched through the crisis that might thus be occasioned. With wisdom and prudence 1869 will be known as a successful year in all departments of business.

MR. PAUL DU CHAILLU, author of those charming and popular books for young people—"The Gorilla Country," and "Life under the Equator," has been engaged to deliver a course of three lectures to the boys and girls of Boston on February 3d, 4th, and 5th. MR. DU CHAILLU is as fascinating when he speaks as when he writes. His lectures will relate to the animals, vegetation, villages, and people of the interior of Africa. What a treat for the young folks!

DOMESTIC INTELLIGENCE.

CONGRESS.

January 11:

In the House, at the expiration of the morning hour, MR. Washburne, of Indiana, introduced a bill for the repeal of the Tenure-of-Office act, and moved the previous question. The bill was passed without debate 121 to 47.—The Consular and Diplomatic Appropriation bill was passed.

January 12:

In the Senate, MR. Frelinghuysen presented a memorial from certain capitalists setting forth that the Pacific Railroad subsidies will amount to $730,000,000, and offering to construct the road for $10,000 per mile in addition to the land grants, thus saving $100,000,000 to the Treasury. The bill fixing the time for finding indictments in the late rebel State Wars was taken up and passed.

January 13:

In the House, MR. J. P. ELLIOTT, of Arkansas, was sworn in to the seat in place of MR. BRADLEY.—The consideration of the joint resolution extending jurisdiction to Kansas and St. Louis courts was resumed. MR. Butler offered a substitute including all the Sanitary, Christian Commission, Soldiers' Aid Society, and MR. Spalding to include the islands in the Pacific. The debate was long and tedious most of the day; but the proposition was finally rejected by a vote of 138 to 42.

January 14:

OUR WESTERN CITIES.

We publish in our paper this week two illustrations which invite the attention of our readers to the growing importance of our Western cities. The Chicago Water Tower is the only work of the kind on the continent, and the new hospital at Cincinnati is the finest building of the kind in the country.

The population of Chicago in 1860 numbered 109,000; in the five years following it was increased to 200,000. The city has already outrun Boston in the matter of population, and by the end of the present year 300 new structures were in process of building, valued at $2,000,000. During the great season of 1867 60,000 hogs were butchered by the pork-packers and sent to market, besides the immense trade in the beef trade. The aggregate supply of game to Chicago since the beginning of the present season has been—Quail, 30,000; prairie chickens, 35,000; wild ducks, 3000. The list of game birds is long, and includes one-fourth of the range of 114,196 tons.

The manufacture capital employed in the manufacturing and industrial interests of Milwaukee foots up $13,174,175. The following are the principal items: Beef and pork packing, $4,105,817; beer, $2,000,000; flour, $1,000,000; clothing, $1,000,000; boots, $1,000,000; lumber, $1,500,000; distilleries, $1,000,000; iron, $1,000,000; leather and shoes, $800,000; agricultural, $800,000; furniture, $800,000; cooperage, $800,000; tobacco, $800,000.

NEWS ITEMS.

EX-Governor Fenton, having been nominated by the Republican caucus at Albany on January 27th, will be the next Senator from New York in place of Edwin D. Morgan.

The New York Board of Health, in its third annual report, recommends to the Legislature, given the number of deaths during 1868 in New York city as 58,459, and the births during 1868, 37,000—one-fourth to one-third of the whole mortality is to be found among children under five years of age; in some portions of the city eighty per cent. of the mortality occurs in the infant population. This is a startling fact, and one which most eloquently appeals to philanthropists. The second week in July was that in which the mortality was greatest: the whole number of deaths being 1542, of which 1000 were children less than five years.

The steamer Gulf City, from Galveston to New York, was wrecked off the Lookout on night of January 11, and was dashed to pieces. Three of the crew were drowned. The remainder, with the passengers, are supposed to be lost.

MR. JOHN T. Hall has been re-elected Clerk of the Board of Education in New York city.

FOREIGN NEWS.

THE elections are proceeding quietly in Spain, and the government candidates seem to meet with success.

MINISTER JOHNSON has sent on a batch of treaties which have been approved by the Executive of Washington, and are to be submitted to the Senate. The most important being signed by MR. JOHNSON and EARL Clarendon, is similar to that recently established between the United States and Prussia. The treaty in relation to the San Juan boundary concedes all the claims of the United States. The question to board them agreed upon between our Minister and Earl Clarendon for the settlement of claims now pending between England and the United States since the rebellion, is as follows: The question occupied which has been modified in accordance with suggestions offered by the Executive of the United States.

The latest advices from Paraguay are important. The war between that State and Brazil has been renewed at Villeta by a determined attack of the allies on his strong position. Three thousand prisoners were captured, and Lopez is reported to have escaped with about two thousand followers.

The civil war which has been raging in Japan since the 3d of January of the year 1868 is at an end. The Aibon, the most powerful among the Northern Daimios, who had been engaged in the struggle, introduced the war against the Mikado on his own account, has made his submission to the Mikado on the 6th of November. The late Tycoon, Stoshoshi, being dead, and the Daimios of the other Daimios, has united to the Mikado and the capital of the Empire.

The Conference on the Eastern question seems to have closed under favorable auspices. The Turkish Minister has agreed to the main points of the proposed settlement. The Conference recommends Greece to accept the result of the Turkish stipulations in relation to the officers, and to refer the case of the officer at Syra to the Secretary of the Treasury, and promises that Turkey will withdraw the last point of her ultimatum touching the appointment of Bishops. Finally, the Conference maintains the policy of strict non-intervention.

THE HUDSON RIVER FRESHET—BREAKING UP OF THE ICE AT ALBANY.—[SKETCHED BY F. H. CLARK.]

THE HUDSON RIVER FRESHET.

OUR "January thaw" this year was almost unprecedented; it seemed as if spring was "forcing the season." On Sunday, the 10th, the ice gave way in the Mohawk and the Upper Hudson, dammed up at the Nail Factory below Troy, and then again breaking up, the mass was moved further south. This movement was soon followed by a similar phenomenon in front of Albany, above the Hudson River Bridge, the strong current of water passing through the upper cut, and forcing the ice out of the basin to a point near the foot of Maiden Lane. The merchants of Albany doing business on the pier in this vicinity (i.e., from the Columbia Street Bridge to the Maiden Lane cut) are exceedingly indignant at the recent enlargement of the upper cut, which gives free access to the current, and also at the Hudson River Bridge, which, by damming up the ice, increases the destructive effect of a sudden freshet. The row of buildings on this pier is from four to six stories in height, and is supposed to contain 200,000 bushels of grain. One of the largest of these buildings was undermined, and the rear walls fell in; the wall of the adjoining building was also broken down by the force of the current. The destruction of the entire pier was threatened.

All along the Hudson the ice showed indications of a general break up. At Rhinebeck the ferry-boat was running regularly, an unusual thing at this season of the year. From Rhinebeck to Poughkeepsie large cracks were visible in the ice, extending from shore to shore. The Ice Yacht Club at Poughkeepsie, fearing a movement of the ice, contemplated the removal of their boats to the shore. At Newburgh the ferry-boat resumed operation. Below that place to West Point the ice remained firm.

VIEW OF THE NEW HOSPITAL AT CINCINNATI, OHIO.

THE CINCINNATI HOSPITAL.

CINCINNATI now claims that it has the most extensive and elegant hospital known to any city in the United States. This edifice is now completed, and has recently been formally dedicated to the public use.

The building is 448 feet in length, and the structure presents a very imposing appearance. When fully furnished it will accommodate six hundred patients. It contains 18 wards, all alike in finish and furniture. These wards will each accommodate from thirty to forty patients, according to the demand made upon the institution. Besides the four rooms for private patients in the administrative building, there are twelve others, six each in the two centre pavilions. Each ward is provided with two fireplugs and hose sufficient for an emergency.

The entire building is heated by steam. An electric telegraph wire connects all the wards and offices—an invaluable arrangement in case of fire, or when immediate assistance may be necessary in a particular quarter. The telegraph is worked on the automatic principle, and is so simple that it may be used by persons of ordinary intelligence.

Of the rare plants and flowers hundreds of course died; indeed, none but those of hardy nature could survive this stinted aliment. Greenhouses and conservatories too fell into disrepair and neglect; but such was the marvelous wealth of vegetation that, but as walls would crumble and architraves give way, foliage and blossom would spread over the ruin, and the rare plants within, mingling with the stronger vegetation without, would form a tangled mass of leafy beauty of surpassing loveliness; and thus the rarest orchids were seen stretching their delicate tendrils over forest trees, and the cactus and the mimosa mingled with common field-flowers. If I linger among these things it is because they contrasted so strikingly to me with the trim propriety and fastidious neatness of the Malibran Villa, where no leaf littered a walk, nor a single tarnished blossom was suffered to remain on its stalk. Yet was the Abazia Villa a thousand times more beautiful. In the one, the uppermost thought was the endless care and skill of the gardeners, and the wealth that had provided them. The clink of gold seemed to rise from the crushed gravel as you walked; the fountains glittered with gold; the conservatories exhaled it. Here, however, it seemed as though Nature, rich in her own unbounded resources, was showing how little aid would suffice for all her appliances. It was the very exuberance of growth on every side; and all this backed by a bold mountain lofty as an Alp, and washed by a sea in front, and that sea the blue Adriatic.

I had often heard of the thrift and parsimony of Herr Oppovich's household. Even in the humble eating-house I frequented sneers at his economies were frequent. No trace of such a saving spirit displayed itself on this occasion. Not merely were guests largely and freely invited, but carriages were stationed at appointed spots to convey them to the villa, and a number of boats awaited at the mole for those who preferred to go by water. This latter mode of conveyance was adopted by the clerks and officials of the house, as savoring less of pretension; and so was it that just as the morning was ripening into warmth, I found myself one of a large company in a wide eight-oared boat, calmly skimming along toward Abazia. By some accident I got separated from Hanserl; and when I waved my hand to him to join me he delayed to return my salutation; for, as he said afterward, I was "gar schön"—quite fine—and he did not recognize me.

It was true I had dressed myself in the velvet jacket and vest I had worn on the night of our own fête, and wore my velvet cap, without, however, the heron feather, my more than I put on any of my trinkets, or even my watch.

This studied simplicity on my part was not rewarded as I hoped for; since scarcely were we under way than my dress and "get up" became the subject of an animated debate among my companions, who discussed me with a freedom and a candor that showed they regarded me simply as a sort of lay figure for the display of so much drapery.

"That's how they dress in the yard!" cried one; "and we, who have three times the pay, can scarcely afford broadcloth. Will any one explain that to me?"

"There must be rare perquisites down there," chimed in another; "for they say that the old dwarf Hanserl has laid by two thousand gulden."

"They tell me five thousand," said another.

"Two or twenty-two would make no difference. No fellow on his pay could honestly do more than keep life in his body; not to speak of wearing velvet like the younker there."

A short digression now intervened, one of the party having suggested that in England velvet was the cheapest wear known, that all the laborers on canals and railroads wore it from economy, and that, in fact, it was the badge of a very humble condition. The assertion encountered some disbelief, and it was ultimately suggested to refer the matter to me for decision, this being the first evidence they had given of their recognition of me as a sentient being.

"What would he know?" broke in an elderly clerk; "he must have come away from England a mere child, seeing how he speaks German now."

"Or if he did know, is it likely he'd tell?" observed another.

"At all events let us ask him what it costs. I say, Knabe, come here and let us see your fine clothes; we are all proud of having so grand a colleague."

"You might show your pride, then, more suitably than by insulting him," said I, with perfect calm.

I had I discharged a loaded pistol in the midst of them the dismay and astonishment could not have been greater. That any one "aus dem Hof" —"out of the yard"—should presume to think he had feelings that could be outraged seemed a degree of arrogance beyond belief, and my word "Insult" was repeated from mouth to mouth with amazement.

"Come here, Knabe," said the cashier, in a voice of blended gentleness and command—"come here, and let us talk to you."

I arose and made my way from the bow to the stern of the boat. Short as the distance was, it gave me time to bethink me that I must repress all anger or irritation if I desired to keep my secret; so that when I reached my place my mind was made up.

"Silk-velvet, as I live!" said one who passed his hand along my sleeve as I went.

"No one wishes to offend you, younguer," said the cashier to me, as he placed me beside him, "nor when we talk freely to each other, as is our wont, are any of us offended."

"But you forget, Sir," said I, "that I have no share in these freedoms, and that were I to attempt them you'd resent the liberty pretty soon."

"Mein Kinkel is right," He says what's true," "He speaks sensibly," was muttered all around.

"You have been well educated, I suspect?" said the cashier, in a gentle voice; and now the thought that by a word, a mere word, I might compromise myself beyond recall flashed across me, and I answered, "I have learned some things."

"One of which was caution," broke in another, and a roar of laughter welcomed his joke.

Many a severer sarcasm would not have cut so deeply into me. The imputation of a reserve based on cunning was too much for my temper, and in a moment I forgot all prudence, and boldly said, "If I am such an object of interest to you, gentlemen, that you must know even the details of my education, the only way I see to satisfy this curiosity of yours is to say that, if you will question me as to what I know and what I do not, I will do my best to answer you."

"That's a challenge," cried one; "he thinks we are too illiterate to examine him."

"We see that you speak German fluently," said the cashier; "do you know French?"

I nodded assent.

"And Italian and English?"

"Yes; English is my native language."

"What about Greek and Latin, boy?"

"Very little Greek; some half-dozen Latin authors."

"Any Hebrew?" chimed in one, with a smile of half mockery.

"Not a syllable."

"That's a pity, for you could have chatted with Herr Ignaz in it."

"Or the Fellahs," muttered another. "She knows no Hebrew," "She does; she reads it well," "Nothing of the kind, she speaks it," spoken from many quarters; and a very hot discussion ensued, in which the Fellah tongue, its accomplishments and acquirements took the place of mine in public interest.

While the debate went on with no small warmth on either side—for it involved a personal question that stimulated each of the combatants, namely, the amount of intimacy they enjoyed in the family and household of their master—a point on which they seemed to feel the most acute sensibility—while this, therefore, continued, the cashier patted me good-humoredly on the arm, and asked me how I liked Fiume; it I had made any pleasant acquaintances, and how I usually passed my evenings? And while

THAT BOY OF NORCOTT'S.

CHAPTER XVIII.

THE SAIL ACROSS THE BAY.

THE 31st of August dawned at last, and with the promise of a lovely autumnal day. It was the one holiday of the year at Herr Oppovich's; for Sunday was only externally observed in deference to the feelings of the Christian world, and clerks sat at their desks inside, and within the barred shutters the whole work of life went on as though a week-day. As for us in the yard, it was our day of most rigorous discipline; for Ignaz himself was wont to come down on a tour of inspection, and his quick glances were sure to detect at once the slightest irregularity or neglect. He seldom noticed me on these occasions. A word addressed to Hanserl as to how the "younker" was doing, would be all the recognition vouchsafed me, or, at most, a short nod of the head would convey that he had seen me. Hanserl's reports were, however, always favorable, and I had so far good reason to believe that my master was content with me.

From Hans, who had talked of nothing but this fête for three or four weeks, I had learned that a beautiful villa which Herr Ignaz owned on the west side of the bay was always opened. It was considered much too grand a place to live in, being of princely proportions and splendidly furnished; indeed, it had come into Herr Oppovich's possession on a mortgage, and the thought of using it as a residence never occurred to him. To have kept the grounds alone in order would have cost a moderate fortune; and as there was no natural supply of water on the spot, a steam pump was kept in constant use to direct streams in different directions. This, which its former owner freely paid for, was an outlay that Herr Oppovich regarded as most wasteful, and reduced at once to the very narrowest limits consistent with the life of the plants and shrubs around. The ornamental fountains were, of course, left unfed; jets-d'eaux ceased to play; and the various tanks in which water nymphs of white marble disported were dried up; ivy and the wild vine draping the statues, and holding the sculptured arms in leafy embrace.

THIS IS THE WORK OF ONE WHO EARNS SIX HUNDRED FLORINS A YEAR.—(SEE CHAPTER XVI.)

thus chatting pleasantly we glided into the little bay of the villa, and landed.

As boat after boat came alongside the jetty numbers rushed down to meet and welcome their friends. All seemed half wild with delight; and the adventures they had had on the road, the loveliness of the villa, and the courtesy they had been met with, resounded on every side. "And you friends, eager to talk or to listen—all but myself. I alone had no companionship; for in the crowd and confusion I could not find Clement, and to ask after him was but to risk the danger of an impertinence.

I sat down on a rustic bench at last, thinking that if I remained fixed in one spot I might have the best chance to discover him. And soon I could mark the strange company, which of every age, and almost of every condition, appeared to be present. If the marked features of the Hebrew abounded, there were types of the race that I had never seen before—hair-braided and olive-cheeked, with a certain softness of expression, united with great decision about the mouth and chin. The red Jew, too, was there—the fiery-eyed, dark-browed, hollow-cheeked fellow, of piercing acuteness in expression, and an almost reckless look of purpose about his manner. What, indeed, with determination, at times even violence, to be read in the faces; but never weakness, never imbecility: and so striking was this that the Oriental physiognomy seemed to actually vulgar when contrasted with those faces so full of vigorous meaning and concentration.

Nothing could be less like my brother's guests than these people. It was not in dress and demeanor and general carriage that they differed—in their general air they met, in their briefest greetings—but the whole character of their habits, as expressed by their faces, seemed so stable, that I could be almost certain as to their several ranks, and how this one was higher or greater than that, with a familiarity as if I had known the type were there—Hungarian, Syrian, Dalmatian, Albanian. Traders all. This one hand of traffic and gain, with perhaps into a sort of banker, and crends the most discordant, and types whose forefathers had been warring with each other for centuries. Proof of consciousness there was, in culture and roughness every where; but, strangely enough, little vulgarity and no weakness, no deficient mind, any where. They were the warriors of commerce; and they brought to the battle of trade resolution and boldness and persistence and daring not a whit inferior to what their ancestors had carried into personal conflict.

CHAPTER XIX.

AT THE FETE.

IR, seated on my rustic beach under a spreading ilex, I was not joining in the pleasures and amusements of those around me, I was tasting an amount of enjoyment to the full as great. I was my first holiday after many months of monotonous labor. It was the first moment in which I felt myself free to look about me without effort, to some thought of a teasing duty—that everlasting song of score and tally, which Hans and I sang duet fashion, and which at last seemed to enter my very veins and circulate with my blood.

The scene itself was of rare beauty. Seated as I was, the villa appeared a vast height for the outlet that led seaward was backed by an island, and thus the coast-line seemed unbroken throughout. Over this the sky expanse now blushed of the fading hours were moving in every direction, for the wind, now blowing fresh from the land, and permitted them to take and boat as they pleased. If thus in the crisply curling waves, the flitting boats, and the fading clouds above, there was motion and life, there was, in the high-peaked mountain that frowned above me, and in the dark rocks that fringed the shore, a stern, impressive grandeur that became all the more striking from contrast. The plashing water, the fishermen's cries, the lengthened flight of the revolvers as they strayed through brake and copse, seemed all but whispering sounds in that vast amphitheatre of mountain. So solemn was the influence of those towering crags that rose toward heaven.

"Have you been sitting there ever since?" asked the cashier, as he passed me with a string of friends.

"Ever since."

"Not had any breakfast?"

"None."

"Nor paid your compliments to Herr Ignaz and the Fräulein?"

I shook my head in dissent.

"Worst of all," said he, half rebukingly, and passed on. I now bethought me how rarely I had been. It is true it was through a sense of my own insignificance, a conviction that I was not sented myself to my host; but I ought to have remembered that this excuse could have no force outside the door of my own heart; and so I despaired of finding Hansel, whose advice might have aided me, I set out at once to make my respects.

A long, straight avenue, flanked by tall limetrees, led from the sea to the house; and as I passed up this, crowded now like that of the promenade of a city, I heard many comments as I went on my dress and appearance. "What have we here?" said one. "Is this a novice or a mountebank?" "What boy, with a much-braid-bedizened velvet coat, is this?" muttered an old German, as he pointed at me with his pipestick.

This pronounced me a foreign-master; the public reprobation found its limit at last by calling me a Frenchman. Shall I own that I heard all these with something much more akin to pride than to shame? The mere fact that they recognized me as unlike one of themselves—that they saw in me—what was not "Fiumano"—was in itself a flattery; and as to the deprecation, it was pure ignorance! I am afraid that I even showed how defiantly I took this criticism—showed it in my look, and showed it in my gait; for as I ascended the steps to the terrace of the villa I heard more than one comment on my pretentious demeanor. Perhaps some rumor of the approach of a distinguished guest had reached Herr Oppovich where he sat, at a table with some of the magnates of Fiume, for he hastily arose and came forward to meet me. Just as I gained the last terrace the old man stood bareheaded and bowing before me, a semicircle of wondering guests at either side of him.

"Whom have I the distinguished honor to receive?" said Herr Ignaz, with a profound show of deference.

"Don't you know me, Sir? Owen—Digby Owen."

"What!—how? Eh—in Heaven's name—are sure it can't be! Why, I protest it is!" cried he, laying his hand on my shoulder as if to test my reality. "This passes belief. Why, I've seen you like this! Come here, Knabe, come here." And skipping his hand within my arm he led me forward that he had just spoken. "And, as I cried he, "here is a guest you have not noticed: a high and well-born stranger, who claims all your attention. Let him have the place of honor at your side. This, ladies and gentlemen, is Herr Digby Owen, the brave-countenance of my timber-yard!" And he burst with this into a roar of laughter, that, long pent up by an effort, now seemed to explode in a storm. It was the old company slow in chorusing him: round after round shook the table, and it seemed as if the joke could never be exhausted.

All this time I stood with my eyes fixed on the Fräulein, whose glance was directed as steadily on me. It was a look of surprise, but not less on me, but it became her well, and I forgave all the scorn it conveyed in the pleasure her beauty gave me. My face, I felt, was as red as flame, became suddenly cold, and a fustish sickness was creeping over me, so that, to steady myself, I had to lay my hand on the back of a seat "you sit down?" said she, in a voice fully as much command as invitation. She pointed to a chair a little distance from her own as I did so, I espied

The company appeared now somewhat ashamed of its rude display of merriment, and sank down quietly and calmly I bore myself—unresentingly too—there seemed something like a reaction in my favor. Foreigners, I found, were not generally sorry when betrayed into any exhibition of ill-breeding, and lastly seek to make amends for it. Perhaps Herr Oppovich himself was the least ready in this movement, for he continued to look on me with a strange blending of displeasure and astonishment.

The business of breakfast was now resumed, and the servants passed round with the dishes, the neighbors among their own set, but I was saying I heard—what of course was not meant for my ears—an explanation given by one of the company of my singular appearance. It had lived in England, and said that the English of every condition had a passion for appearing to belong to some rank above their own, that to accomplish this there was no sacrifice they would not make, for these assumptions imposed upon those who made them as much as upon the public they were made for. "You'll see," added he, "that the youth there, so long as he figures in that fine dress, will be taken for as far as he knows how." He talked with a degree of assurance and fluency that gained authority; and as I saw that his hearers were along with him, and there soon began—very cautiously and very guardedly indeed—a kind of examination of me and my pretensions, for which, fortunately for me, I was so far proyered.

"And all English boys of your rank in life speak and read four languages?" asked Herr Ignaz, after listening some time to my answers.

"You are assuming to know my rank, papa," whispered Sara, who watched me closely during the whole interrogatory.

"I am assuming no question," rejoined "Nothing can be easier than to test that point. There are gentlemen here whose acquirements go far beyond mine."

"Your German is very good," said Sara. "Let me hear you speak French."

"It is too much honor for me," said I, bowing, "to address you at all."

"Is your Italian as neat in accent as that?" asked a lady near.

"I believe I am best in Italian—of course, except English—for I always talked it with my master—but I speak it well as to accent."

"Musicmaster!" cried Herr Ignaz; "what accomplishments have you?"

"I don't think we are quite fair to this boy," said a stern-featured, middle-aged man. "He has shown us nothing in opposition in his pretensions, and we have no right to question him further. If Herr Ignaz thinks you too highly gifted for his service, young man, come over to Carl Bettmeyer's counting-house to-morrow at noon."

"I thank you, Sir," said I, "and am very grateful; but if Herr Oppovich will bear with me, I will not leave him."

"Sara's wish must be mine as I spoke, and I can not tell what a flood of rapture her look sent into my heart.

"The boy will do well enough," muttered Herr Ignaz. "Let us have a ramble through the grounds, and see how the skittle-players go on."

And thus passed off the little incident of my appearance: an incident of no moment to any but myself, as I was soon to feel; for the company, descending, strayed away in broken twos or threes through the grounds as caprice or will inclined them.

If I were going to chronicle the fete itself, I might perhaps say there was a striking contrast between the picturesque beauty of the spot and the pastime of those who occupied it. The scene recalled nothing so much as a village fair. All the simple out-of-door amusements of popular taste were there. There were conjurors and their flambuoyant and fortune-telling, lottery-booths and nine-pin alleys and restaurants, only differing from their prototypes that there was nothing to pay. And the considerable number of the guests were evil pleased with the pleasures provided for them, there were others no less amused as spectators at these enjoyments, and the result was an amount of mirth and good-humor almost unbounded. There were representatives of almost every class and condition, from the prosperous merchant or rich banker down to the humble clerk or even porter of Herr Ignaz's warehouse; and yet a certain tone of equality pervaded all, and I observed that they mixed with each other in a spirit of friendliness and familiarity that never recalled any difference of condition; and this feature alone was an ample counterpoise that any vulgarity observable in their manners. If there was any snobbery it was of a species quite unlike what we have at home, and I could not detect it.

While I strolled about, amusing myself with the strange sights and scenes around me, I suddenly came upon the very funny-looking man, with the performers, seated on small hobby-horses, tilted with a lance at a ring as they span round, their incessant jerking and bobbing hailed with cries and with laughter from the spectators. To my intense astonishment, I might almost say shame, Hansel was one of the mounted on a bright bay, gray, with blood-shot eyes and a flowing tail, the old fellow seemed to have caught the spirit of his steed, for his face, with its red stumps, and his forward with an eagerness that showed how he enjoyed the sport. Why was it that the spectacle so shocked me? Why was it that I shrunk back into the crowd, fearful that he might recognize me? Why was it that I felt as if some one could throw off, even for a passing moment, the weary drudgery of his daily life, and play the fool just for distraction's sake? Was I could have believed and accepted a short time before, and yet now a strange revulsion of feeling had come over me, and I regarded myself pleased that Hansel had not seen nor claimed me. "These vulgar games don't amuse you," said a voice at my side, and I turned and saw the handsome Jew, who, at the breakfast-table, invited me to his counting-house.

"Not that," said I; "but they seem strange and odd at a private entertainment. I was scarce prepared to see them here."

"I suspect that is not exactly the reason," said he, laughing, "but there is something of your English tone of exclusiveness, and how each class of your people has its appropriate pleasures. You seem to be unacquainted with ours."

"You seem to forget my own condition, Sir."

"Come, come," said he with a knowing look. "I am not to be deceived on, as I told you a while back. I know England. Your ways and notions are all known to me. It is not in the place occupy here young lads are found who speak three or four languages, and have such thorough knowledge of labor as yours. Mind," said he, quickly, "I don't want to know your secret."

"If I had a secret it is scarcely likely I'd tell it to a stranger," said I, haughtily.

"Just so; you'd know your man before you trusted him. I like that generous, proud Yet going to trust you, whom I never saw till half an hour ago."

"Trust me?"

"Trust you," repeated he, slowly. "And first of all, what age would you give that young lady whose health we are celebrating?"

"Seventeen—eighteen—perhaps nineteen."

"I thought you'd say so; she looks nineteen. Well, I am told you're age to an hour. She is fifteen!"

"Fifteen!"

"Not a day older, and yet she is the most finished coquette in Europe. Having given Fiume to understand that there is not a man here whose pretensions she would listen to, her whole aim and object is to surround herself with admirers—I might say worshipers. Young fellows are made fools of by her, because they have a chance of winning her favor, while each see how con temptuously she treats the other. They do not perceive it is the number of suitors she cares for."

"But what is all this to me?"

"Simply that you would be enlisted in that corps to-morrow," said he, with a malicious laugh; "and I thought I'd do you a good turn to warn you as to what you were about to join."

"Me? I enlisted! Why, just bethink you, Sir, who and what I am: the very lowest creature in Herr Ignaz's establishment."

"What does that signify? There's a mystery about you. You are not—at least you were not when you spoke—the sort to have as good looks and better manners than the people usually about her. She can amuse herself with you, and so far harmlessly, that she can dismiss you when she's tired of you, and if she can only persuade you to believe yourself in love with her she can store up a reasonable share of misery for you in consequence, you'll make her nearer being happy than she has felt for many a day."

"I don't understand all this," said I, doubtingly.

"Well, you will one of these days; that is unless you have the good sense to take my warning in good part, and avoid her altogether."

"It will be quite enough for me to bear in mind who she is, and what I am!" said I, calmly.

"You think so? Well, I don't agree with you. At all events, I have done what I have said to you; even if you don't mean to profit by it." And with this he left me.

That strange education of mine, in which M. de Balzac figured as a chief instructor, made me reflect on what I had heard in a spirit little like that of an ordinary lad of sixteen years of age. Those wonderful stories, in which passion and emotion represent action, and where the great game of life is played out at a fireside or in a window recess, and where daring and sentiment war and fight and win or lose—these same tales supplied me with wherewithal to understand this man's warning, and at the same time to suspect his motives; and from that moment my life became invested with new interests and new anxieties, of which up to my own heart I felt myself a romance.

As I sauntered on, revolving very pleasant thoughts in myself, I came upon a party who were picnicking under a tree. Some of them insolently made room for me to join, and I sat down and ate my dinner with them. They were very humble people all of them, but courteous and full of the quality of politeness in a remarkable degree. Nor was I less struck by the delicate forbearance they showed toward the host; for, while the servants pressed them to drink Bordeaux and Champagne, they merely took the little wines of the country, perfectly content with simple fare and the courtesy that offered them better.

When one of them asked me if I had ever seen a fete in my own country, I answered in the negative, my mind went back to that costly entertainment of our villa, and Pauline came up before me, with her beauty, her jewels, her dress, and hideous eyes beaming with expression, and flashing with a light that dazzled while it charmed. Coquetry she had in perfection, and all the arts, all artifices, its studied graces, its thousand rogueries, to them seem all that is most natural and most simple. Was she indeed what she had seemed? Was there a little mock resentment of her beautiful mouth, every look and motion of her supple figure, in my mind, till I pictured her standing before me, and thought I saw her.

"Not in my country, I have had before you, Herr Englander," said a servant, who came up to me all flushed and heated. "I have been over the whole house in search of you."

"In search of me? Surely you mistake."

"No; it is no mistake. I see no one here in a velvet jacket but yourself, and Herr Ignaz told me to find you and tell you that there is a place kept for you at his table, and they are at dinner now in the large tent behind the house."

I took leave of my friends, who rose respectfully to make their adieus to the honored guest of the hour, and I followed the servant to the house. I was not without my misgivings that the scene of the morning, with its unpleasant cross-examination of which I could be reproved, might have caused myself how far I ought to submit to such liberties; but the event was not to put my dignity to the test, for I was received with the perfect equality with those about me; and, though the dinner had made some progress before I arrived, I was not at all much differing from the world being served with soup and all the earlier delicacies of the entertainment.

I will not dwell on the day that to recall seems more to me like a page out of a fairy tale than a little incident of daily life. I was, indeed, to all intents the principal prince of a story, for I went about with the lovely princess on his arm, for I danced the mazurka with the Fräulein Sara, and was her partner on several times during the evening, and finished the fête with her in the cotillion, she declaring that I was quite quiet voice that did not seek to be unheard around, that I alone could dance the waltz a deux temps, and that I said gently, and not spoil spring like a Dalmatian, or bound like a French Hungarian—a praise that brought on me some very menacing looks from certain counter-jumpers who felt that I was too confident in my "skill of face," as insolently returned.

I was are not to return to the Hof, Herr von Owen, to-morrow," said she, as we parted. "You are to wait on papa at his office at eleven o'clock." There was a smile in her eyes that the words that spoke command; but in styling me "von" there was a whole world of recognition; and I looked around as if would grow proud with all the deference of her slave, and all the devotion of one who already felt her power and delighted in it.

THE CHICAGO RIVER TUNNEL.

We publish on page 68 several illustrations relating to the Chicago River Tunnel just completed. It is the only tunnel of the kind on the continent, and with the exception of the Thames Tunnel the only one in the world.

The following is a brief account of the engineering description of the work:

The work was commenced July 27, 1867, by Messrs. Brewster, Lovell & Co., but was abandoned by them, and the contract threw a up. Their work gave way, and the original sub-contractors, Messrs. Hyde, Bell & Co., took it up, cleared away the fallen debris, built a new coffer-dam on the outside of the damaged one, with a corps of efficient laborers worked steadily and well. The quicksand was overcome, the tunnel was crowned with success, and Chicago was given the honor of being the first to use the ideal Roman public what science and perseverance can do. An interior engineering work of great work of very large dimensions. For 323 feet from the entrance the tunnel comprises a straight line, and for 10 feet it is level with the entrance, and about 100 feet from the river centre it inclines to the bottom. From the bottom of the shaft the height is 20 feet 6 inches. The invert itself is 16 inches thick, being composed of three rings of bricks, as in diameter. At the base the abutments are 8 feet broad, until they reach the height of 8 feet 2 inches, when they continue 6 feet thick for 7 feet more. The arch is 20 feet thick at the sides, and 24 at top; is 9 feet high above the springing lines, and has 3 centres. The squared bucks are formed of double masonry. The chamber at 190 feet distance from the river centre is 10 feet high, and the inverts 4 inches thick, the abutments 7 feet 2 inches at base for a height of 3 feet 6 inches, and 6 feet thick for another height of 3 feet thick at top. The upper arch at this point has 3 centres, is 20 inches thick at sides, and 24 at top; is 9 height above the springing arches is 24 feet here. This section extends 364 feet on the west side, and has a corresponding section on the east side, which extends 360 feet. At the front from the river entrance, on either side, separate double wagon-ways begin. Each are 14 feet wide and 15 high. A thick wall divides them, and supports and strengthens the work directly beneath the carriage-road. The two ends of the passage correspond. Parallel with the carriage-way the footpassage extends 14 feet high at the centre, and 8 at the sides of the arch. A flooring of white pine is laid on joists, making a level upper surface. This floor is 40 feet apart here and 50 in the carriage-way. Entrances are cut through the walls at the two ends, and the other footway. Next passenger houses, each 32 feet long by 20 wide, with windows on the side, side of the river over the passenger entrance. There are of these style. In the second story of the entrances is the usual toilet, with the names of the contractors, engineers, and boards of public work. The work is 816 feet between the entrances. Eighteen steps are to each flight. The foundation studies are made 18 feet from the entrance, and by these and other arrangements the old bridge will be kept in use all day. The contract price was $530,000, but the cost will probably be more. On January 4th of July 21, 1868, 'unforeseen chasms' and laborers' work have been expended on the work, and the cost is cents of day expended, 6000 cubic yards of concrete 16,000 of brick and 19,000 of stone masonry, 19,000 of timber stone and 1,000 iron, and 20,000 barrels of Falls City cement. Besides the masonry labor a large amount of horse and steam-engine labor was used. Of the original amount the first contractors received $250,000, and Messrs. Post & Co. $280,032 68, which leaves them a balance of about $20,000. E. S. Jaggar and Mr. Brevoort, assistant by his son, are the engineers. Being demonstration that the work will be a success, it is probable that it will be followed by other similar enterprises, so that the great stream of travel upon bridges will soon be the busy city. The tunnel was formally but quietly opened yesterday morning (January 11) by the officials. At 11 o'clock Mayor Hoss, a number of Aldermen, the Board of Public Works, the Board of Fire Commissioners, with the contractors and a few invited guests, left the Common and proceeded to the entrance, headed by a squad of police. The steam fire-engines, "Mayor Hall" and "Liberty" with their hose-carts, and the "Pioneer" hook and ladder truck, all gaily decked with flags, were ready at the park, and, just after the carriages had entered they followed. Then came the private carriages. Capt. Cahill closed the procession in front of the Court-House, and came back again. Upon their arriving at Franklin Street the carriages proceeded to the passenger entrance on Market Street, and the party alighted and walked through on the passenger-way. On returning they took their carriages and departed. The tunnel was thrown open to the public, who thronged through, making a survey of the glorious work.

NAVAL ACADEMY BALL AT ANNAPOLIS.

THIS ball, of which we give an illustration on page 72, was given on the evening of January 9, by the first-class cadets of the Annapolis Naval Academy. The preparations were elegant and elaborate, and the great expanse, and the result was a magnificent success. The number of cadets was about ninety; their class is for the most part made up of wealthy young men, the relatives of the boys, and a large number of beautiful girls, honored the occasion with their presence.

The interior of an old fort was transformed by these merry-makers into a fairy-like paradise. The roof was lined with white and studded with silver stars; the sides were ornamented in the best artistic style, cutlasses and muskets being profusely distributed amidst a vast display of bunting and evergreens, the whole presenting a very charming tout ensemble. Admiral PORTER was present with his son, Captain D. D. PORTER.

ARREST OF THE LITTLE STREET PEDDLERS.

EVERY one residing in our metropolis will easily see who are meant by "the little street peddlers," shown on page 72, the little boys and girls who are seen in our streets with matches, cigars, buttons, and other petty nick-nacks for sale. Complaints recently been addressed to the police force to arrest all of these vagrant children and deliver them into the hands of the Commissioners of Charity. This measure, though at first glance it may seem rigorous, is really dictated by humanity. Idle and heartless parents and cruel speculators send these little inoffensive mates out poorly clad in the most inclement season of the year. They will hereafter be taken in charge by the police, and when being reported at the station-house, will be delivered to the Commissioners of Charity, and sent to one of the benevolent institutions on Randall's Island. It is to those children a deliverance not only from wretchedness, but also from the vilest degradation.

RECEPTIONS BY THE PRESIDENT ELECT.

THE reception-room at General GRANT's headquarters in Washington is a small, square parlor, to the left of the door opening upon the street. As mid-day there is sure to be a throng in waiting. One visitor simply desires to see General GRANT and to shake hands with him, and goes away prepared to recount the circumstances of the interview for the benefit of all his acquaintances. But the great proportion of callers are those desiring offices. To attempt to offer their various solicitations, with which advice is not seldom combined. The most disagreeable of these bores to the General is the newspaper correspondent, who does a great deal of talking while GRANT does a great deal of tedious listening, after which Jenkins disappears, and soon after publishes to the world what he said to the General, which he by some hocus pocus transfers to the lips of his long-suffering listener. From the Herald, Tribune, and like troubles; but General GRANT has the happy faculty of holding his own tongue, if he can not restrain that of the parasitic crowd.

THE CRETAN INSURRECTION.

CASTEL-SELVO, a CRETAN sea-board village, is situated on the southern coast of the island, and has been for many months the base of supplies for the Cretan insurgents. Protected on one side by lofty mountains, and on the other by an islet several miles in length, the little bay of Castel-Selino is completely sheltered against the winds of the Archipelago. The strategic importance of this position, though hitherto ignored by the Turks, did not escape the Venetians who occupied the island at the time of the conquest of Constantinople, and who once on a time called Castel-Selino, some ruins of which still remain. The bay is now blockaded by the Turks.

For more than two years the Cretans have successfully maintained their struggle for autonomy and freedom. Sixty thousand of the inhabitants, chiefly women and children, are already are in exile at Athens, while their brothers, husbands, and fathers are resisting Turkish despotism. The Christian populations admiration and should elicit the sympathy of the entire Christian world. The noble cause in which this brave people are engaged certainly entitles it to the co-operation and sympathy of the American people.

A NORTH WIND.

THERE was over all the land
A dark and heavy day,
Till a wind came out of the North
And blew the clouds away.

And the old flag went down
On the broad Southern plain,
Till a wind came out of the North
And raised it up again.

A mighty rushing wind
Blew straight from Plymouth Rock,
And the waves of battle were in it—
Men of the Pilgrim stock.

There was the sound of words,
And the dash of the mighty sea;
And wherever the North wind went
Men heard the words, Be free!

Come, let us claim the land
Once more for liberty;
The Northern to the Southern plea
Sent greeting cheerily.

Strong is the wind of the North,
Strong as the arm of Right
(The breath of many noble lives
It was that swept it up!)

Keen is the wind of the North,
Keen as the sword of Truth
(O for the shin of all the land!
O for the flower of youth!).

Chouts are over the sky,
Clouds that follow the rain,
Song, O wind of the North,
And clear the skies again,

Till the smoke is rolled away,
And the battle echoes cease;
For it is only victory
Hath power to utter, Peace!

CARL SPENCER.

HOME AND FOREIGN GOSSIP.

THE new bridge which is proposed to be constructed between New York and Brooklyn will probably be the most stupendous structure of the kind in the world. The main cables will be suspended from towers 363 feet above high tide. It will cross the East River with a single span of 1,600 feet in the clear above high tide. The total length of the bridge is estimated at 3,580 feet, and the whole expense of its erection about eight million dollars.

A new journal in the French language is announced under the title of the Land Gazette, or Gazette Rurale. It will probably be published in Brussels. M. VICTOR HUGO will be the editor, assisted by his sons and other prominent writers.

Good land, suitable for market gardening, is cheaper within a mile of Sacramento than it is within the distance of San Francisco. Land is cheaper within ten miles of Sacramento than it is on the immediate line of the Pacific. Five hundred dollars per annum will hire a better tenement within five miles of Westminster Abbey than it will within a mile and a half of City Hall of San Francisco! Land is now held so high in California that a farmer will hardly think of land as a purchase. Every body is expecting a rush of population as soon as the railroad is completed, and there is consequently great speculation in real estate. The farmers of Northern California are selling out and moving southward in considerable numbers.

A pleasant story is told of the poet Longfellow by the Florence correspondent of the Boston Journal. The writer was returning from the funeral service in memory of ROSSINI, when his attention was attracted by a gentleman passing some distance off, with a tall, silvery locks and beard, accompanied by a lady, a youth, and two children. "That gentleman," said the writer, "is the world-famous Longfellow!" "To be sure it is," was the reply. "Oh, I am glad I have seen him! He was the inspirer of spontaneous exclamation; "that really is a treat: this is worth a great deal more than the Emperor." The young Anglo-Italian then retreated to rejoin her own party, but her remarks had been communicated both to the gentleman and to his wife, to whom he was holding by the hand, and with a charming frankness they all came forward and gave her a few words of natural and simple courtesy: which, doubtless, with, throughout the whole life of those to whom they were addressed, lend a sweeter perfume to the verse of Evangeline and Hiawatha.

A young girl died last week in this city from the effects of burns caused by the explosion of a kerosene oil-lamp. Accidents from this cause have become so alarmingly frequent that the coroner determined to investigate the last case. The jury found that oil to be below the legal standard. The jury rendered a verdict that the death was caused by the explosion of a mixture of kerosene oil and benzine. The manufacturer of this mixture and also the vendor were deemed guilty of a grave offense. Pure kerosene oil is highly inflammable, perfectly harmless, and all that is explosive is sold in defiance of a law that was passed by the Legislature in 1866, prohibiting the sale of kerosene below a certain standard.

A Parisian journal describes a case of poisoning by nitro-benzine recently occurred at Stuttgard. A vigorous young man of twenty-four, who was employed in emptying a can of benzine oil of which odmouls by means of a syphon, thereby unconsciously introduced some nitro-benzine into his system. He did not discover it, but continued to work for the two hours longer, when he was seized with headache, vertigo, and shortly after was assumed a bluish tint, and he fell down a in fit. Emetics were administered without success, and he died on the following day. Upon description the whole body emitted a strong smell of bitter almonds. The most remarkable circumstance in this case is that the poison continued so long inactive.

The Low Bridge, which has at length been removed from Broadway, has awakened some poetic genius. He communicates a poem entitled "Bridge of Size," after the following fashion:

"Let the unfortunate
Rejoice that with
Before the impetuous
Bridge of Size."

"Like a huge gamboliger
That's lately broke
Out of her
Bottles may bust."

It is said that during the last three months there have been 150,000 new rifles sent from Providence, Rhode Island, to Europe. Over 5000 have been sent to Cuba, and the remainder—hosiery transported in breach-loading, shipped to Mexico.

The Boston Post ridicules the opinion that women have no greater weakness for dress than men. The dress of women is more demonstrative and showy, but this does not necessarily involve a greater expenditure. A man sees the last of a $100 bill in getting a vest, and he may for a season spends and be accused of extravagance. Of ten men and ten women, taken at random as they come to hand, we found that the men spend two dollars to one of the women. Of course a majority of the men won't admit this to be true, but nevertheless. All have to Post gallantly makes the assertion.

A story of a Wall Street old Dutch grocer who has left $15,000 to Charles Dickens, on condition that he will read the "Trial by Jurywick" to the grocer's family once yearly until he dies.

The new wing of the Treasury Department is rapidly approaching completion. The upper story stairs are finished, and are nearly ready for occupancy by the Internal Revenue Department. The lower floors will not be finished for two or three months. The walls of the "cash-room" are to be paneled with rare specimens of Italian marble. The marble will cost about $40,000. When finished it will be the finest room in America, if not in the world.

Social life in Louisville, Kentucky, must be pleasant. A young man living in that city the other day put his hand in his pocket in order to find the key to his store, and give it to his partner, when the latter, supposing it was the key for a pistol, drew his own and shot him dead.

A Boston exchange is responsible for the following story. A short time since a man appeared at the Boston City Hall, requesting an interview with the Chief of the Police:

"What can I do for you?" inquired the official.

"Are you the Chief?"

"Yes."

"Can I speak to you privately?"

"Yes—speak out!"

"Will no one hear us?"

"No."

"Are you sure?"

"Yes."

"Well, then, listen: as I was crossing the Common last night, about twelve o'clock, I saw a woman approach the pond with a baby in her arms, looking carefully around all the while to see if she was followed, when she walked to the edge, stooped down, and—"

"Threw the child into the Frog Pond!" exclaimed the appalled official, with a face white with horror.

"No," replied his visitor; "washed its face!"

Two young ladies have made application to become members of the Cornell University. It is stated that Mr. Cornell has informed them that if they present themselves early they will be received.

A method of manufacturing rubber which does not contain mercury is any fore, designed for dental uses, has been discovered in Rock, Lane's woman applies against various unfortunate results which frequently follow the use of the ordinary preparations of rubber for dentists.

At the first annual meeting of the Women's Board of Missions, recently held in Boston, Mrs. HUNTINGTON reported that the society had sent out seven missionaries during the year, and had been able to employ eleven native women as Bible-readers. The receipts for the first year were $6,000.

A well-qualified candidate for police service in this city is said to have been recently rejected because he was not a native of Ireland. He was, however, so worthy of the requisite height that his physician advised him to go home, get up early in the morning, take a warm bath, and apply again, as a man is a little taller in the morning, and just after taking a warm bath. He followed the advice, the applicant followed the doctor's advice, and succeeded in getting appointed!

A spiritual seance was lately held in this city. The following is a sample of the interviews held with departed spirits: "Are the spirits of any of my deceased friends present?" (Silence.) "Are any present?" (Same response.)

"Male?" (No response.)

"Female?" (Three raps.)

"Mother?" (Three raps.)

"Wife?" (Three raps.)

"What do you wish to communicate?" pursued the gentleman.

"I am always with you," was rapped out.

"Any thing more to communicate?"

"Nothing," was immediately rapped out.

This was considered by all very satisfactory.

One gentleman found the spirit of a son waiting to talk with him, and the spirit of a deceased wife who had a son to his knowledge. Another gentleman, being told that the spirit of his wife was in waiting for him, all came forward, and found that he had even been married he was in blissful ignorance of the fact.

In North Stonington, Connecticut, there is an immense mine of silica, which will be worked next spring, and soon will prove a mine of wealth to that section of the country. An excavation to the depth of about two hundred feet has been made on the land, and standing on the surface and looking down, the cavity has the appearance of an immense basin of milk. The silica has been tested at several of the largest glass and crockery manufactories of the country, and pronounced equal to the best that can be obtained elsewhere.

HUMOROUS.

IS THAT SO?—It appears that Lent will be very early in 1869. Smith says that is always is with him, but that borrowing is always late. He is always in time for the former, but can never hit the precise time for the latter when applying to his friends.

TECHNICAL WISE SAWS.

A tailor of wise saws on his board, flies his cause, eats his own cabbage, and stays at home when he is always cutting out.

A shoemaker looks to the heels of his customers, and is always ready to stump, and is no better off when he is waxing warm, but he is pretty well to do when he has his awl in his hand.

A painter is a fine-weather man, for he has a brush with every body he comes in contact with; and though he is apt to get reddened when found drinking, he still takes the lead that is required for his employer's interest, and knows how to lay paint on to suit it.

A carpenter is a plane-dealer. His "saws" are many, he has to look for deals on the flag on the square; he can scale any height of building, he can anger and bore with equal ease, he can plank as well as cut it from under him. He is a regular chip of the old block.

A printer can do nothing without his stick; he is always bringing matters to matter or other. But this is the type of the whole compositeship, who claim the exclusive copy-right to stick and each other even in the galley.

A REDEEMING ACTION—Taking your watch out of pawn.

A STOCK-IN-TRADE—A hosiery business.

"SHEAR PROFITS"—Tailor's cabbage.

A PRINTER'S PROOF—Is he, indeed? Against what?

THE HEIGHT OF MODESTY.—The most bashful girl we ever knew was one who blushed when she was asked if she had not been courting sleep.

A BACHELOR'S DEFENSE.—Who is pitted to death by ladies and mothers-in-law? Bachelors. Who is shunned? Who is invited to tea and evening parties, and told to drop in when in the neighborhood? Bachelors. Who lives in clover all his days, and when he dies has the most flowers? Bachelors. Who is the most welcome fatup him? The bachelor.—Who goes to bed early and rises from the table with the first? The married man.—Who gets a scolding for picking out the softest side of the bed, and for walking in his sleep? The married man.—Who has wood to split and water to draw, to do, for every one to wash, and for his servants to look after? The married man.—Who is the most unhappy life? The married man.—Who gets divorced? The married man.

SOCIAL SUPERSTITIONS.

That it is unlucky to whistle while a purse is parcel in the street, especially if it be wrapped up in a piece of newspaper.

That if you are seen running, as though really in a hurry, you must certainly be in debt, and that effectually work knowing will take notice of you afterward.

That if you have a dreadful nose to keep it, you have your gloves at home, although the weather is so hot that you can not bear to wear them.

QUERIES.

What sort of a substance is "Musical Pitch?"

Why some gentlemen tell us what "double gauge bags" are?

What are "Matrimonial Dominoes?"

Is "Zoeoutter" a flower?

What is a "portable sofa-till?"

Is a "cotton gin" intoxicating?

What is "flower-pot lunch" grow?

Can you steer a vessel by the "compass of the voice?"

How much is "The Village Pound?"

Alexander the Great seeing Diogenes looking attentively a parcel of human bones asked him the philosopher what he was looking for.

"I am looking," he said, "for the bones of your father," was the reply; "the difference between your father's bones and those of his slaves."

On his death-bed a distinguished humorist requested that no one might be invited to his funeral, "because," added the dying wag, "if is a civility I can never return."

A schoolmaster asked a class of boys the meaning of the word "Ostracism." One of the boys replied that he boy said, "I know, Sir, when I'm late that I'm happy, and when I'm down I'm tight."

QUERIES FROM A LAND-LUBBER.

Is the mess at sea the usual ship slop up on the decks, and served out to the men over the combers?

Is the bowsprit used for the nose-ring or the cockpit?

Have the cat-heads any thing to do with the mouse-tails?

Is the cattle kept in the bulwarks?

Is the cook ever thought of here, and were on the mast-head?

Are there main pillow-cases as well as main-sheets?

Is the ship's water kept in proper trim by the stays?

Is the bowsprit ever removed to let the bunkers?

Is very hard labor performed in the galleys?

Are the bells of a number wrapped in the sheet before burial?

When a man "heaves the lead" is it part of his duty to take an emetic before he does so?

Is the main-brace ever let off in order, is it called a rudderer?

Is the fore-top ever open?

"Doctor," said a hard-looking, brandy-faced customer, a few days ago to a physician, "Doctor, I'm troubled with a pain in my right-hand measure about the breast. What do you suppose the matter is?"

"Why," replied the doctor, "I should say it was physician: 'you have water on the chest.'"

"Water!" exclaimed the old sot very well for a joke, but how could I get water on my chest, when I haven't touched a drop for a month?" If you had said brandy, you might have hit it!"

A witness was examined before a judge in a case of slander, and was asked to repeat the precise words he spoken. The witness, fixing his eyes earnestly upon the judge, replied, "Why, your honor, your honor, you said steal, and get your living by cheating." The face of the judge reddened, and he exclaimed, "Turn your head to the jury, Sir, when you speak."

Mr. Curran was once engaged in a legal argument; and having stood his ground a considerable while, a person was remarkably tall and slender, and who had been standing behind him, called out, "Mr. Curran, I observed that the case under discussion involved a case of constructive treason."

"Then," said Curran, "I can refer your lordship to a high authority behind me, who was once intended for the Church, though in my opinion he was fitter for the steeple."

"Tom, what kind of a waistcoat is that you have on?"

"Why, it's cloth, to be sure."

"I didn't it come from old Threadneedles, the tailor?"

"Yes."

"Well, then, it's a vegetable waistcoat."

"A what?"

"A vegetable waistcoat! it's made of cabbage."

THE NAVAL ACADEMY BALL AT ANNAPOLIS, MARYLAND, JANUARY 8, 1869.—SKETCHED BY THEO. R. DAVIS.—[SEE PAGE 71.]

LITTLE STREET PEDDLERS BEFORE THE COMMISSIONERS OF CHARITY, NEW YORK CITY.—SKETCHED BY PAUL FRANZENY.—[SEE PAGE 71.]

THE FRANKING ABUSE—FREE BAGS LEAVING THE WASHINGTON POST-OFFICE.—[SKETCHED BY THEO. R. DAVIS.]

THE FRANKING ABUSE.

THE design of the franking privilege, as legally established, evidently was to provide for the expense of official communications from certain officers of the national Government. The President is allowed this privilege during life; Cabinet officers are permitted to avail themselves of it, as also are all members of Congress during their term of office. As to private communications we do not see why they should be thus privileged because they proceed from one who is or has been President, or from the Heads of Departments, or from Senators and Representatives, any more than those originating from other sources.

But, even supposing that the law granting this privilege is a wise one, that law is daily violated and grossly abused by our law-makers. We refer our readers to our illustration on this page, and wish to submit a few facts to them in connection with this growing abuse.

Not less than a ton of free mail matter leaves the Washington office daily; it is unnecessary to say that of this only a small portion is franked in accordance with the law. There are two ways of evading the law. The officer to whom the privilege is granted may frank under his own hand the communications of his friends; and he may cause a stamp or any number of stamps to be made, so that his frank may be used by any number of persons or in any portion of the country. A Congressman may thus frank the mail matter of his entire constituency, and he may avail himself of this means to increase his popularity. Cases have occurred where publishing houses have issued an entire edition of a periodical under the stamp of a member of Congress. In fact, there is no limit to the possible abuse of the privilege. Instances have even been known where Congressmen of an economical turn of mind have made a business of selling under frank, and had it returned in the same manner.

RECEPTION ROOM AT GENERAL GRANT'S HEAD-QUARTERS, WASHINGTON, D.C.—SKETCHED BY THEO. R. DAVIS.—[SEE PAGE 71.]

The British Parliament claimed the franking privilege in 1660; but this privilege was restricted in 1837, and finally abolished in 1840. A movement is in progress for its abolition in this country, which we hope will succeed.

THE INSURRECTION IN CADIZ.

THE insurrection at Cadiz on the 5th of December last, now that the facts concerning it are known, can not fairly be said to have indicated a Republican conspiracy against the Provisional Government. Republican demonstrations were made in Madrid and other important cities, but only in Cadiz did the popular expression of feeling lead to unpleasant consequences. The insurrection here must be attributed to the folly of General Caballero, the Military Governor of Cadiz. He issued an order requiring the disarmament of the citizen militia, prohibiting public assemblies, suspending the journals, and declaring martial law. This order was promulgated at two o'clock P. M., and in half an hour afterward the whole city was in arms.

The NEW YORK Tribune correspondent gives the following graphic account of the important events which grew out of this order, and the consequent collision between the Government troops and the insurgents:

Had PRIM left known his trade as soldier he had ample force to quell the outbreak; but instead of taking active measures against the insurgents he put drive to the rbuckle, and sent to Madrid for aid. Cadiz is so situated that it is impossible for the troops who marched against it to cut off all communication between the city and the rest of Spain. They established a blockade so complete that for some days no intelligence whatever could reach the city. There were recent excerpts, none in Madrid or elsewhere knew what Cadiz was doing. The Government telegraphs all over Spain that the insurrection was not Republican but Liberal, and considered it of so little moment in Cadiz, but nobody doubted the statement. When the time between the insurrection and the Government troops had been agreed on, a rumor of the real state of affairs reached Seville, and subsequently, some members of the Republican Committee of Seville got into the town and Cadiz, were able to escape again to Seville, and spread them before their astonished friends the news. At the moment they knew also that the Governor of Andalusia, the military district including Seville and Cadiz, was about to declare the whole province in a state of siege; a measure to be used by the partisans of order always, but which looks very like the second step in that general system of which the order in Cadiz to disarm the first.

The Republican Committee went to the Governor and told him that the promulgation of such an order would be followed by the remonstrance of the Committee to the Republicans to rise in every town of the province. The Governor answered that it pained to engage his proclamation and await orders from Madrid. The Committee in the same moment sent a deputation to the Central Republican Committee, and that body learned for the first time that the rising and misrule had in Cadiz and Seville. The whole committee of thirty-two were summoned, met, and took their resolution—a resolution of almost unparalleled boldness. They next week the Provisional Government that they desired a conference, and they went in a body to deliver their message. Caveras, as President of the Committee, and the first orator of Spain, addressed the Council. Sagasta, Olozaga, and the other great officers of State were present. "We come to treat with you," began the orator, "on equal terms. You are not now the Government; we represent the people. We have heard that you have declared us out of law. We know that you have declared us and all Spain in a state of siege. We know that Seville, Andalusia, and Cadiz are in open revolt against your Government. We know that you have declared the Constituent Cortes dissolved and abandoned. Though we know that in the last moment we secretly and by force of arms, that the authority of the Government must be maintained, order preserved, and the point of military honor covered by a surrender of the arms in the hands of the people. We acknowledge that you shall lay them down on a pledge from you that the Sovereign will of the people be enforced or secured. But if that order is to be sustained, we give you notice that we are ready to march to Madrid. Andalusia and Seville, in Carthagena, wherever in Spain there is a Republican party, they are ready with every means in the Revolution as an ally, we will overthrow your Government."

CASTELLAR spoke for three-quarters of an hour; SPOKE, it is said, with unprecedented eloquence and fire. He attacked the whole policy of the Provisional Government, and its beginning down to the capture of Cadiz. This, and this, and this you have done; this and this you have not done—and ended with almost every sec. When he had finished, SAGASTA, President of the Council, said: "Nothing of this kind is so strange as that I should have sat and listened to such an attack on the Government. Nothing could reassure me as the audacity of the orator, except the eloquence with which he has delivered it. What can be said to true." True or not, the Government found itself confronted by a force it was compelled to respect, and it gave way. The Council agreed to the terms proposed by the Committee. An understanding was come to, verbal on both sides, the Government abandoning its policy of terrorism, and the greats giving up their arms, the Committee answering for the submission of their party to the constituted authority. Thus far, the compact has been kept on both sides.

Our illustration on page 77 shows the conflict between the Government troops and the insurgents at the Quai des Capuchins in Cadiz. The insurgents fought with desperation, and were joined by even the women and children; stones and every sort of missile were used, and when the chassseurs of Madrid, dispatched to occupy the Quai des Capuchins, came up they were unable to hold the place against this furious multitude, and were repulsed with severe losses. The battle in the streets continued all night and through the 6th. On the 8th an armistice of forty-eight hours was agreed upon. The insurrection was terminated on the 9th by the capitulation of the insurgents.

RAWDON'S RAID.

I.—IN THE LOOSE-BOX.

THE ancient hostler of "The Jocelyn Arms" led the way across the hard-frozen stable-yard to the loose-box in the corner; the two men from the Court followed.

"Eyle have gone out, Major," old Spain grunted to the elder of the pair; "but he said 'twere likely you'd be down to see the mare; and so he left the key with me."

"All right," the Major nodded between two little blue clouds of Cavendish. "Yes; I've brought down Mr. Jocelyn to look at her. Sir Eyle know I'm here when he comes back, will you?" he added when the old man had unlocked the creaking door.

Mr. Spain took the hint and his departure. The Major and his friend, Dick Jocelyn, passed into the well-warmed and littered loose-box.

"There she is, Dick!" the mare's owner remarked when the biting breath of that bitter winter's day had blown the last wreath from them; "how she is! Worth coming here to look at, ain't she?"

Dick Jocelyn, usually a man of few words, wagged his handsome head affirmatively. The mare was rubbing her, with a low whinnying of delight, against the Major's shoulder.

"Ah! Lucia, wia belle," Rawdon Darlington apostrophized his pet, patting her glossy neck; "you'll have them all after you, won't you?"

Lucia dropped her ears, and whinnied again for answer. The Hussar looked meaningly in his companion's face at the name. It was a Young Lochinvar." Dick Jocelyn seemed to understand, and responded with an eloquent grin.

Then, forgetting all but the love he felt to discussing the mare's points for the next five minutes, offering service as it were, to the genius loci. For both were thinking just now of a different matter all the time. At last they made an end of that; and were standing, the one leaning against the manger, the other against the wall, meeting each other's eyes, very much like a pair of Augurs.

"Well?" Dick Jocelyn said, breaking the silence with rather an injured air at its being left to his taciturn self to break it; "you'll have to tell me, I suppose."

"I think so," Darlington responded; "shortly, very shortly. You've guessed there's something another week of this bute's persecution. And I don't see how else I'm to put a stop to it, unless I have a pop at Eyle, which would be a bore, and might do no good after all."

"Make it all the worse!" Dick affirmed. "Jeff wouldn't fight, you know; and he'd simply take it out of her, the cad!"

Darlington's dark face grew darker, and his teeth closed savagely on the thick gray amber between them.

"I know that," he said; "I know that, Dick. That's what has kept me quiet with the fellow so long. But that was before I knew she hated him, and—you understand?"

Jocelyn nodded. The other went on.

"Now it's different. I've a right now to interfere, if he annoys her; and I mean to, once or all. Only I don't see how I can't fight; and I shall put it out of his power to revenge himself on her. There's only one way to do it, and that's this."

Dick signified assent in his taciturn fashion.

"Of course," Darlington continued, "I'm sorry to put you to more bore by Lady Hope, to have to upset her plans, and deprive her of her chosen lover; but, under the circumstances, I don't see what else we're to do, your cousin and I. Lady Hope, you know, does me the honor to hate me with a cordiality that makes me sure she should when Mr. Marsden is her standard of perfection. I should have, as far as she is concerned, no chance whatever, even if I were free to try; and I'm not free, as you know, and never was. Now, I happen to have set my heart on winning this time, Marsden or no Marsden; and I simply mean to adopt the old saying, 'Every one for himself,' and act accordingly."

Rawdon pointed his words by a few more bars of "Yankee Doodle," which he executed on a tobacco-nob from the brown mearschaum bowl.

"Fancy I see the 'poir' fellah bridgeroyal expression of countenance with which every one is bolted!" the grinning Dick felt constrained to say.

"It was a simply heavenly idea of mine, that!"

He chuckled loudly over the "heavenly idea," and then grew suddenly conjured up, for a minute or two. Then, relapsing into his wonted impassibility of demeanor, he inquired,

"What's the row?"

"That depends," the other answered, "on Eyle's repos. I've sent him over to the Ashbridge-breakfast to-day, and Jeff and Cecil and the Paris mull through to-night. The line's blocked heavily between Ashbridge and Dover; but as they're not at work, I suppose they're not. And there has been no wind to-day to make a fresh drift, there is just the chance they will manage to get through. If we all right, I shall be pour la partie revisée, that's all."

"You're a jolly cool hand, Don!" Dick muttered, admiringly. "Said any thing to her yet?"

"Not advisable till I've seen Eyle. No use in troubling her before her time, poor child! But I've had a little conversation with Mademoiselle Fanchon, who quite understands what she's got to do, and will be only too delighted to do it. The notion of a trip to Paris was her at once."

"Good girl that," observed Dick; "hates old Jeff like poison, too."

"Most women generally do manage to hate Mr. Marsden, somehow," Rawdon responded. "Like most men. Well, Fanchon is all right, and will see about the baggage. She'll join us at Ashbridge under Eyle's escort, if the business is to be done to-night."

"And the way we arranged holds good?"

"Barring accidents, or any thing unforeseen in Eyle's report presently—yes. There's some one riding into the yard now. He's come back, I dare say."

The Major pushed open the door and looked out.

"I thought so, Dick," he said. "Here he is."

A man in a groom's undress, with "soldier" stamped in every unmistakable way, was swinging himself off his horse and bawling for Mr. Spain.

"Here, Eyle!" Rawdon called as the ancient hostler came shivering and shambling out of the warm tap-room and took the Hussar's bridle. Mr. Eyle turned, made his appearance in Lucia's loose-box, touched cap, and subsequently, with his soldier-like report. The line would be clear enough of snow, the Ashbridge station-master had told him, by an early hour the next morning to admit of an attempt, at all events, being made to get the long-delayed Paris mail through to Dover, supposing, of course, no fresh fall took place, and no wind came on to occasion a fresh drift. The mail was expected, in such case, to reach Ashbridge about 4 A.M., and Mr. Eyle had taken upon himself to secure a compartment for his master, and to acknowledge the rails were expected free so that if the train got as far as that station there was no likelihood of its being blocked up anywhere further on.

On this Mr. Eyle had certain orders given him; and then Rawdon Darlington, Major of "Ours," and his friend, Dick Jocelyn the Guardsman, walked, talking rather earnestly together, through the straggling street of the little Kentish village to where the lights of the wintry afternoon sun were gleaming on frosted window-panes, and so through the lower lodge-gates and the long avenue of snow-draped elms back to Court Jocelyn.

Ex-private John Eyle watched them a brief while, stroking his mustache as he had seen his master stroke his.

"Ah!" he thought aloud, as he turned away; "that's the Major's little game, is it? And a very pretty little game it is, too!"

II.—SEULE À SEULE

"HILDA! You love him?"

"Oh, Helen!"

Miss Jocelyn's confession in two words, made with such a sudden sob, such a tell-tale hiding of a blush-rose face in her confessor's lap! The said confessor looked grave, but stroked the penitent's hair kindly and forgivingly enough, notwithstanding.

Then there was silence for a space in the little chamber where the mistress and the wintry gloaming over the log-fire. Cousin Helen's room, they called it at Dane Court. It looked over the lawn upon the park and the elms of the Ashbridge Avenue; up which Dick Jocelyn and his friend were walking just then, after their visit to Lucia's loose-box.

It was of one of these two out there in the snow that Miss Jocelyn and Hilda Jocelyn had been talking for the last half-hour. Till their talk had ended in that last question and answer we have overheard. It began naturally, of course, in a minute or two. Naturally it couldn't be let to die there.

"You love Rawdon?" Helen said, bending over the golden head nestling in the folds of her dress. "Since when?"

"Always, I think. Always, since that first night I saw him. Oh, Nell! I couldn't help it." As though the child anticipated rebuke, and were trying to deprecate it.

But the other hadn't, apparently, the heart to be hard with the criminal. Nay, she bent over the golden head, and her hands smoothed the child's cheek and chin, and lifted up the flushed, tear-stained little face, and kissed it. That kiss was absolution. Hilda felt it to be such, and her eyes fell faster. Helen let them have their way a while before she said:

"There are no accounts ago, Mignonne. I remember, at that ball at Princes Gate. Dick brought him there. Just after you had let them say you'd adopt me, I have been. Oh, Hilda, why did you ever let them?

As if Mignonne had ever had a chance against mamma! As if she could resist her clever cousin and Jeffrey Marsden, the City banker, had been a pet project of Lady Hope's always; it was so nice to have one's own children's part to do in a rangement would have carried weight! My lady's word, as she proclaimed to all the world, was law; Hilda had never let her life dared dream of disobedience. As she told her confessor now.

"What could I do?" she pleaded. "Mamma said I was to be kind to him, and—and I was kind. Nell! his cold, hard voice made me shiver!—and I did as I was told. Then, when he came—Rawdon. And then I knew what I had done. We went away to Homburg, mamma and I; and I was to write to him about him. It was no use, Nell. He came to Homburg, too, with Dick. Mamma was terribly angry with me because he said I was to see him. But I was so happy. He never said a word to me any body mightn't have heard; but I thought—but I knew he cared for me better than any one. I don't know whether Mr. Marsden fancied any thing; but in his icy way I know he hated him. Mamma said I must forget him, and I tried to, Nell. I tried. I was so happy—happy in such a strange, painful way, dear!—to think he cared for me, my brave, strong Rawdon! Then we came home. Then Nell! I thought I should have died that night I said good-by to him—the last night I should ever see him, perhaps! We came home. I think if I hadn't got ill, and you hadn't come down here to nurse me, I should fight for me, mamma would have had me married to Mr. Marsden in two months. As it was, I got a respite till now. And now I can't do it! I won't do it!" poor Hilda sobbed out.

The elder girl's soft voice and loving hands soothed her tenderly.

"I begin to think you mustn't, Mignonne," Helen said. "And if you mustn't, you shn't! But let me hear the end of it. How came Major Darlington down here this Christmas?"

Mignonne smiled through her tears.

"Dick brought him again," she answered. "Cousin Dick! He's been so good to me, in his quiet, cool fashion, all through. I think he and Rawdon are bosom-friends, you know, Cousin Dick. They've no secrets from each other; and—"

"I see!" Helen nodded. "And, moreover, Dick detests the Crassus. Yes; I quite understand."

"And you know," Hilda went on, "mamma never consults with him, somehow; and Jane Court really belongs to him. So when she found Rawdon in the drawing-room one day, just before the dance, dressed for dinner, and Dick told her he'd brought him down for the shooting, why, she had to accept the situation. She was worse off to Mr. Marsden, I think, to come down too, a fortnight sooner than had been arranged. And before he came—"

Hilda's cheeks made pause here. The fair little face paled and flushed; the golden head began to droop again. It was clear enough to Helen how all had happened before Jeff Marsden came.

"He spoke to you? You let him, Mignonne?"

"I—I don't know. I can think I could stop him, Helen? I hadn't the power—nor the will, perhaps. Yes, he did speak to me; he did tell me he loved me! And I listened to him."

She lifted her head up with a sudden, proud little gesture, and looked her questioner fairly in the eyes.

"I listened to him," she went on; "listened to every word that made me thrill, and shiver, and grow joyful and very low, passionate words he spoke, as you would never think his voice could speak. He loved me, my own! His own lips told me so at last! I've even think I could stop him, if I was his, he said; no other man's. His own—was it not so? Ah! he had no need to ask. I was his! I am his, my dear, dear cousin!"

Passion transformed the child's face so that there was upon it something of my lady's "determined" look, while she spoke these last words.

"You can never be the other man's now, Mignonne, Helen said, presently, when the Major's coming had been unmistakably announced, and there were no more questions to be asked. "But you must tell Aunt Hope what has happened."

"Tell mamma? I dare'n't, Helen! I dare'n't set her heart on my marrying her Crassus. And, besides, she can't bear Rawdon."

"No? Is that why you don't tell her, Rawdot must; or I. I'm not afraid of her."

"But Rawdon says she mustn't be told yet. Not for a little while."

"Yet? Have you forgotten what this day fortnight was to have been? Mignonne gave a little shudder. "You would have been Mrs. Marsden by this time, poor child! He thinks you will be so still. He's a right to think so, Hilda, till you tell him you've changed your mind. And you must tell him."

Hilda shook her head.

"Don says no!" she replied, dutifully. "He says mamma is too strong against us as it is."

"What are you going to do, then?" Miss Cavaso asked, rather impatiently.

"Whatever Don tells me, dear," Mignonne said, "I shall do all in time."

"I must have a little talk with this autocratic Don," Helen said to herself.

There came a knock at the door.

"May I come in, Helen?" Dick Jocelyn's voice asked.

"Of course," Helen answered; and Dick entered.

He went straight up to the log-fire and stirred it into a blaze. Then he leaned tranquilly against the low mantle-piece and warmed himself.

"Cold, ain't it?" he said. "Come in to tell you we've arranged about the business for to-night. Don will drive one of you; and I the other. I've told my lady about it."

"What did she say?" questioned Helen, glancing at Hilda.

"Objected, of course. She always objects, you know. Didn't mention her objection to interfere her that she couldn't get more than four people into the carriage—herself, old Jeff, and the two young women. She could have had the sofa to send them in a sledge; besides, Don and I wouldn't have on at any price. We don't mind driving you ourselves. I told my lady so."

"On n'est pas flatteur, Monsieur!"

"No, is one's due! Well, my lady suggested the carriage should come back for you. I said she might think herself lucky if it got her to the Ashbridge at all. Which, between you and me, was a deuce of a job, that's all. Then she wouldn't go. Needn't, I told her; but we meant to go. You should have seen her look! I fancy I can't say that, Hilda, for the fun of the thing! And, besides, what would the Boodles think if she stopped away when they came to her with their sledges and a snow-plow? At last she dropped into my plan. You and Hilda are to be sleighed over, and Jeff, if he likes, may accompany you. We skid than in Don's; so I'm to take Mignonne, and you'll have to trust yourself to him."

"Oh!" remarked Helen, seeing an opportunity for her little take.

"Yes," Dick returned. "Crumple your bahdresses a bit the buffalo-robes will; but it's the only way of getting there to-night, I do believe. Suppose you want to go?"

"Yes, of course!" both girls cried, quickly.

"All right, then. Start at ten. Don's had a mare he had in London sent over from the Barracks expressly for the occasion; and it's a jolly old night."

Dick moved away from the mantle-piece as if he were going. Instead of that, however, he stopped into a chair, as though the unwonted eloquence he had indulged in had knocked him up.

He smoothed Hilda's golden hair rather more fondly than usual, too, as he said:

"Go and get me a rose-bud for my coat out of the conservatory, Mignonne, will you?"

She looked up at him inquiringly. He drew her head closer, and whispered in her ear. A stage whisper, though; Hielen heard what he said.

"Don's there, darling! My lady's dressing; so are the other women; and old Jeff's writing in the library for his life to save the post. Don wants to speak to you."

She gave a little cry, and ran out of the room.

"Dick!" Hielen said, reproachfully.

"Pooh!" returned that individual. "Hasn't she been telling you all about it? Thought so. And you don't suppose I'm going to let her mount that gray old icicle, Jeff Marsden, do you? I'd have stopped that little game of my lady's at first if I'd been on the spot. I'm going to stop it now. Awful fun, it ll be!"

"What do you mean?"

"Going to tell you. You're a sensible girl, Helen, and worth the trouble. Sit down and listen."

Miss Carew sat down, and did listen. Dick began to unfold a conspiracy. When the dressing-bell rang Mignonne hadn't come back, and Dick was talking away still.

III.—THE BOODLES' BALL.

"I think it a most objectionable proceeding, and I repeat that it is my wish that you do not go!"

He who spoke was a grim, gaunt, grizzled personage, with a voice that grated on your nerves like a hinge; with thin, bloodless lips, and fishing steel-blue eyes; clothed in severe evening dress; in a choking collar and a creaking cravat, and a decidedly bad temper. He was Jeffrey Marsden, banker, of Lombard Street and Roehampton; and, having managed to catch her alone for five minutes in the Indian Court drawing-room before the expedition started for the Boodles' ball, he was haranguing the fair-haired child whom he counted on having in another fortnight undisputed right to harangue for the rest of her natural life, in his most autocratic manner, though with hardly the same effect as usual.

Hilda stood where he had stopped her, rather pale, and with her little gloved hands clasped tight upon each other; but neither trembling nor submissive.

"Sir, pa, my request, that you give up this ball, under the circumstances!" enunciated the Cræsus, after an emphatic pause, and setting down his empty coffee-cup.

"Give up this ball?" Hilda repeated—and he was vaguely conscious that she spoke in a different way to him from her usual one toward herself—"Why?"

Marsden looked as her over the creaking cravat as one who finds a difficulty in understanding what he hears, or fancies he can scarcely hear aright.

"I beg your pardon." he said in his most irritating rasping tone; "you asked me—?"

"I asked you why I should give up this ball?" She set his hard eyes quite steadily. He looked at her in real surprise.

"Did you not hear me say it was my wish, my request? You can require no better reason."

"A plainer one, at all events."

"Hilda!"

He had never called her by her name half a dozen times in his life; he was only startled into doing so now. What had come to her that she dared speak in this way; dared meet his rebuking glance so—yes, so defiantly? He must put an end to this once for all.

His thin lips shut close together once or twice. Then he said, with his most offensively authoritative air:

"You oblige me to lay my commands upon you not to go."

He was preparing to stalk gravely to a chair or out of the room, when she spoke again, still in that same changed voice.

"You have a right to do that!" Hilda said.

"No right?" he repeated, mechanically.

"No. No right to 'command me not to go. No right to 'command me at all. No right to speak to me as you do speak. No right to tell me at the last moment that I am not to go tonight, for no better reason than the assertion of authority over me—an authority to which you have no right either."

He turned very white, but stood speechless. She went on.

"An authority you claim, I know, but which you have done nothing to gain. What have you ever been at the pains to win from me? And now you 'command me! It is too late!"

Flat rebellion this, beyond question. Fool that he was to try and crush it with the heavy hand as he thought he could do!

"Enough, if you please!" he said, with what he flattered himself was irresistible severity; "I can listen to no more of this. Once more, and for the last time, I distinctly and formally forbid your going to this ball to-night. Be good enough to take notice."

How little he knew what he was really doing at that moment! Couldn't he almost see, though, the face she turned toward him?

"It shall suffice!" she said. "Distinctly and formally I refuse to be forbidden. For the last time, as you say."

Before he could find his voice again there came a sound of other voices from beyond the portières. The other women had come down. The pleasant little tête-a-tête was going to be interrupted. And she had defied him! This pernicious child he thought he had broken so thoroughly to his hand had defied him, Jeffrey Marsden, the millionaire, who had actually condescended to ask her to be his wife! What did it mean? What could have come to her? And what was he to do? She had set his express commands at naught; she evidently was determined to have her own way and go.

His cold blood ran almost warm under the sense of his defeat. But he was so utterly taken by surprise that he could only mutter awkwardly enough something about "Lady Hope" and "to-morrow" before the others came in the room. To-morrow He remembered afterward the smile that crossed the girl's pale face when he talked of that.

"What's been the matter, Mignonne?" Helen whispered as she came up to Hilda by the fire, and Marsden stalked away stridently in his varnished boots. "Have you told him?"

Hilda shook her head.

"He has been telling me that I wasn't to go to-night, that's all," she answered. "Ordered me not to go. And, as he said, for the last time!"

"Now then!" Dick Jocelyn broke in, "come and be wrapped up, you two. Lady Jocelyn's carriage stops on the way. Perhaps you'll give my lady your arm, Marsden. Don and I will see after the girls."

"Rook, Richard," began that "faded beauty of the baths," Lady Hope, "I think they'd better let the carriage come back for them!"

"Wal-till it gets here, mother mine! You don't know what the roads are like to-night. Better let us come back for you. But don't keep the horses standing if you mean to go, I advise you. Now, Marsden, look alive, will you?" the irreverent youth went on. "Ah! here's Don, in his Canadian get-up."

Rawdon came in with a fur pelisse over his ball-dress, and another over his arm.

"I think this wet is going to be very much, Miss Jocelyn," he said, in his tranquil way, going straight up to Hilda; "it's very warm, and very light. Let me put it on you." He wrapped the glossy seal-skins about her tenderly, under Marsden's hostile eyes and my lady's.

The London dandy's manners cared as much, I verily believe, for the girl as he could care for any thing but himself; though to "form" her for his wife he had a pleasant self-assertive, tyrannized over her till she simply hated him; and, seeing another perform what should have been his duty—watching her face when she met Rawdon's look—a feeling of simple dislike he had always been conscious of for the Saxon grew slowly into a stronger, fiercer, more angry strange one—jealousy. Yes; Jeffrey Marsden hated the man jealously now. Was it he who had undermined all his authority over his future wife? Did he actually dare to—

He tries to stifle that half-formed thought his unswerving pride refuses to angrily.

"But there shall be no more of this!" he said to himself as he led Mary Hope to the next carriage. The Pierrepoint women and the other four followed.

Dick was right about the night; it was splendid. Clear, calm, moonlit, with the thermometer down a dozen degrees below zero. A sparkling snow mantle covered the roads and the hills beyond; feather flakes of snow draped every tree. Just the night for a sleigh-drive, as Dick remarked.

The two sleighs were waiting just behind my lady's family nk of a carriage. Lucia's silver sables being somewhat mussed, she must needs lean her head and snorted, hearing her master's voice.

"Keep close to us, Richard," my lady said, as she settled herself in her corner, "and take care of Hilda, mind!" The family ark moved on a little, and then waited till the others were ready.

Dick Jocelyn lifted his fair cousin in his strong arms, and carried her down the steps to her place in his own sleigh, and rolled the great buffalo robe round her. Rawdon followed, on the foot-cloth, under Don's escort.

"All right?" Dick inquired, taking his reins. "All right?" came back from the rear.

"Go on, Johnson!" And the expedition started.

The great ark lumbered along, with a tortoise-like deliberation; the two sleighs slid smoothly after. Down the Long Avenue, through the Lodge gates, out into the Kensington road, with a wall of snow a dozen feet high on either side, stretching and winding away yonder like a narrow white ribbon.

In the ark the Pierrepoint women did all the talking; my lady was sulky with cold, and Marsden sulky with worse.

"Well, Mignonne!" Dick said presently to his silent companion; "it's all settled, ain't it?"

"Oh, Dick," she whispered out of her furs, "how can I?"

"You will though," was the wise and unsentimental reply.

"Don, dear, may Miss Carew," was how Don finished a long-meditated uncertain objection—"may, half of them, it must be confessed, merely pro forma—which Helen had raised. "And so I really don't see why we are not to do. Do you now? Hilda's no chance with my lady if she stays here; nor have I. They'll marry her to this—this man, Marsden. Think what that would be for both of us! My plan saves us both. Every thing's arranged. If she says yes, you need say no."

I don't think Miss Carew did.

In due time the Dane Court expedition arrived at Boodle Park.

IV.—"NUMBER NINETEEN."

THREE A.M. The Boodles' ball began to manifest symptoms of dissolution. Pale families, with a ten or fifteen mile drive before him through snow-covered roads, began to look anxious up to his horses' withers in places, began to growl and look at his watch. Matre familias, surprised and sleepy, began to cluck impatiently to gather her broad round her out of the mêlée. The circle was getting freer, and the pace too. The land of the "Contry Crushers," rather wild and uncertain in its tempo, had just commenced attacking the last valse, number nineteen.

Rawdon and Dick Jocelyn were standing together near the doorway. Marsden had that moment stalked out between them. They could hear him asking about Lady Hope's carriage in the hall; my lady was going.

"Ain't much time to lose, Don," Dick said in the other's ear, "if you mean to do it correctly. Better go and get your valse, hadn't you? She's looking for you, you know."

Hilda was looking for him, as, pale with some unusual excitement, she stood beside my lady, with her trembling little hand clinging secretly to Helen's. Rawdon was at the upper end of the room, where Marsden had left them to order up the ark; and couldn't see Don in the doorway.

"Time enough," the latter replied, coolly, to Dick's suggestion; "I'm waiting for—ah! here is—Johnson from Lady Hope."

A servant gave him an envelope, sealed, and with his name scrawled upon it in pencil.

"Boy's just brought this for you from Ashbridge, Sir." George explained: "You were to have it immediate, he said."

"All right."

Don tore open the missive, glanced at the single line in Eyle's writing it contained, and passed it to Dick.

"Baggage and us is here," wrote Mr. Eyle; "Don't come on to Ashbridge. Meet at Dane."

"Admirable!" Dick ejaculated, grinning. "Us' means Fanchon and himself, I suppose. But you must look sharp, old man. It's three now."

"I know. But Lucia will do the five miles in less than two minutes, and I don't want to have to wait at Ashbridge, you understand. Now, look here—you have the sleigh all ready at the back door. At the end of twenty past, just show yourself here in this doorway. I shall be waiting with her, and looking out for you. When I see you I will—and get her out of the room in the general scrimmage without being noticed. Then on with those seal-skin swaddling-clothes; into the sleigh—and—Partez, cocher! We ought to be half-way to Calais before any one but you and Miss Carew's the wiser. Understand?"

"All right!" Dick nodded. "But, I say, Don, she won't hang back at the last moment, eh? I've seen that sort of thing, you know. You won't get a chance like this again. And women are queer cattle."

"I don't think she will," Rawdon said, looking up the room toward her. "She might under other circumstances, perhaps; but not now. Marsden has given matters too much for that. The pompous bully would drive a woman to any thing. He was hectoring her about coming here to-night because of the risk, just as if she didn't hate him already! The man's been playing my game all through; and we have will almost won him. It's time to play it. You ten minutes to see to the sleigh, and I to dance number nineteen. Au revoir, my boy!"

"Now tread me a measure, quoth young Lochinvar," hummed Dick, as he turned to go. "Wonder what the deuce ever heard of that song, old—? Ah! beg your pardon, Marsden," he ejaculated with unwonted civility, as he ran against the Croesus, returning for the last time to Lady Hope's carriage. "Hope I didn't hurt you? All right, Don!"

And the disguised man moved off to fulfil his part in the plot, chuckling at intervals over old Jeff's approaching discomfiture. Rawdon went straight toward the door. Marsden followed.

"Well, dear," Helen whispered in her cousin's ear rather anxiously, "will you?"

A pressure of the hand she clung to was all the other's answer. Then Helen felt her start nervously, and saw her turn pale, and then flush feverishly. Lady Hope's sight of Don making his way round the outside of the circle to where they three were still standing. Miss Carew's own pulse quickened also. The decisive moment was all but come.

"Where can Mr. Marsden be?" snapped Lady Hope, querulously. "What a time he is, seeing about the carriage! Ah! there he is, at last."

Then the tall, gaunt, bloodless figure, whom Lady Hope overlooked till she heard him speak to Hilda.

"Number nineteen," Don was saying; "our valse, you know, Miss Jocelyn."

Poor child! How much those quiet, commonplace words of Don's must have crush had arrived. If she took his arm now she gave consent to that plan for saving her he had proposed. If she refused—there was no plan left to her!

"You had better let me take you to the cloak-room, I think," rasped Marsden's saw of a voice, wonderfully like a saw's. "the carriage will be ready directly, I believe," it added, as the speaker turned to my lady.

"Then I had better go," Lady Hope assented. "Will you take Hilda?"

This was pointedly at Rawdon, who showed no signs of hearing. Marsden's face flushed a little. It was with his most insufferable air of proprietorship that he thought to say—

"Excuse me, Buckingham. Now, Hilda, come!" And he put his arm out stiffly for her to take.

As Don had said, the man couldn't help playing his opponent's game. That tête-a-tête in the drawing-room at Dane Court just now, even hadn't taught him better than to take this tone to the girl a second time that night. He fancied, rather, that with my lady to back him, she must submit to him this time and give him a pleasant triumph over the man he hated. So his tone and manner toward her were simply unbearable. If she ever had hesitated, hesitation was past now. If he ever could have kept her, he had lost her in that moment. She lifted her head; her eyes met Don's; and Don read her decision plainly in them.

A light came suddenly into his; but it was in his usual impassible fashion that he struck in, sure of winning now.

"Afraid I can't forego my engagement, and your number nineteen, if Miss Jocelyn decides for me," he said. "I don't think the carriage can get up for ten minutes or so, you know, Lady Hope," he added, blandly; "and so—"

"Excuse me," Marsden's cold, harsh, irresistible, icicat hauteur; "but Miss Jocelyn really can not—"

Hilda put her hand on Rawdon's arm at the "can not."

"I decide for number nineteen, at all events," she answered, just in the way she had answered him before the ball. The child's blue eyes looked at him again in that defiant way that had so angered him then. Marsden bit his thin lips, and looked at my lady. My lady looked fairly astonished for once.

"Really, Hilda—" she was beginning in her "punishment" tone.

Hilda shook her head.

"I have promised, mamma. It is too late."

Then a quick whisper in Helen's ear: "Good-by, darling Nell!" And before the others could speak again Rawdon had carried her off.

"My own Hilda now?" he said to her when his arm was round her in that valse. "You will trust yourself to me, darling?"

"Oh! Don, take me away!" she answered, passionately. "Let me away from him. Any where with you!"

He made no reply, in words; and she had no more to tell him after that.

Round and round they swept; past my lady's angry eyes, Marsden's scowling face, again and again. Each time they were near me door-way Rawdon looked for Dick Jocelyn's signal that all was ready for the raid. At last, Dick appeared.

"Now for it!" muttered Don. He clerked his partner, and brought her up close to where Jocelyn was waiting. It was a trying moment, fortunately it was but a moment. All passed so quickly that the trembling little Hilda had no time to break down.

Rawdon got her through the little crowd near the door without notice. He was in the hall, and Dick was wrapping the furs about her.

"Good-by, my pet!" he said to her, rather touched at the sight of her white, tearful face.

"Good-by, Mignonne! Take care of her, Don!"

Then she was going down the steps into the fly air, hidden by Don's arm, the door shut, carriages the sleigh and Lucia were waiting. Then Don, muffled in his pelisse, was lifting her into her seat; then Lucia leaped, her silver grelots this time) was whirling her swiftly down the frozen drive; and Darieghan of "Ours" had safely reached the sleigh. Then Dick Jocelyn, on the steps, turned to his own man, who, suspecting nothing, was watching Rawdon's exit, mechanically.

"You'd better get my sleigh up, Tom," he remarked to him, quite loud and staring directly. Well! it's done," he soliloquized, as the man went off on his errand; "I'm devilish glad of it. I shall be now happy with Don; and old Jeff will be—"

"Richard!" my lady's voice said sharply behind him, as he crossed the hall. "Where's Hilda?"

There stood my lady and Marsden; Helen, looking about her anxiously, a little in the rear.

"Miss Jocelyn passed through the hall this moment," Marsden said. "You must have seen her; and—and—Major Darieghan."

The last words seemed to choke him.

"Yes," Dick nodded. "I saw her all right."

"Where are they, then?" Lady Hope snapped. "I can't find Hilda in the cloak-room. They say she's not been there. Where can they be?"

Dick faced the two, stroking his mustache calmly, but with an odd twinkle in his eyes.

V.—YOUNG LOCHINVAR."

"GONE!"

The same word from all three, but in very different keys.

"Really—" began Marsden with a portentous severity that hugely amused Dick. The plutocrat didn't understand. My lady, with the éleve-squeeze of the mistress of the world, knew at certain half-formed suspicions of her own, understood every thing in a moment. She glanced round her for the first time to see who was within hearing; then she said in savage staccato to her nephew:

"I'll never forgive you for this, Sir, as long as I live."

"Dear me, chère tante! What have I done?" returned the gentle-eyed youth, not quite certain whether, as he expressed it, "my lady was fly to all the little game yet."

She wasted no time on him. Her hand grasped Marsden's arm with an energy that startled that emotionless man. Emotionless though no longer: for her words startled him even more.

"Don't you see?" my lady was whispering impatiently. "She's gone—with him. They've eloped! Now listen!—for he stared at her as though she had suddenly gone mad. He really thought she had. What! that innocent wife dare so far forget what was due to him as to elope!

"Listen!" Lady Hope repeated, actually shaking him in her impatience. "This must be prevented. They must be overtaken—stopped! At any risk: at once! You must do it."

"I?" Jeffrey Marsden gasped.

"You. Who else is there? Richard is in the plot. Rawdon is another how it may be too late. Quick, man! quick!"

He was beginning, electrified by this jaunty guid woman's fierce, unwonted energy, to understand now. He had been robbed; and by the man he hated most. For the second or third time that night the snow-water in his veins ran almost warm. She saw his face change.

"Will you go? To save her—to defeat him, remember! There may be time yet."

"Yes!" he muttered between his blanched, lean lips; "you're right. There may be time yet; and if I overtake him—I'll go! But how?—where?"

She had thought of every thing, this clever Lady Hyde, most cunning almost in her self-interest.

"The other sledge!" she answered; "it's ready down there, by this time. Don't you hear him order it? Follow the track. They have gone to Ashbridge, I am nearly sure. There is no train yet; you must prevent this! But don't waste time! You have your cost and hat!—Quick!"

"Never fear!" he returned; and the blanched lips were actually guilty of an oath; "I'll do it!"

He flung his coat about him and hurried through the inner glass doors out on to the steps.

Dick, explaining matters to Helen sotto voce, had kept an eye on him all the time.

"Let me see about the carriage, Aunt Hope!" he observed. "Poor dear old Jeff will catch his death of cold if you trot him about on a night like this."

He moved away in pursuit; though rather wondering that Jeff could possibly do, you know, after all.

Lady Hope caught him just as he was pushing open the doors that Marsden had just swung back. Through them he saw the latter rush down the steps, and leap (actually leap!) into his (Dorchy's) sleigh, in reminiscence, as my lady had foreseen, below; saw the horse plunge and spring forward under the whip; saw his man get knocked backward and loose his hold on the reins, and Jeffrey Marsden drive furiously off and disappear.

"Oh! by Jove! you know—" Dick began.

Lady Hope stopped him.

"Silence, Sir!" she said; "do you want all the world to know this? I sent him to stop them. And he will."

"Will he?" thought Dick; "he'll probably break his own neck in the first five minutes, that's all!" Then the thought of Jeffrey Marsden driving a sleigh about the country in the dead of night, and coming to frightful grief against a gate-post or in a side-drift, caused Ensign and Lieutenant Richard Jocelyn to laugh aloud.

"Take us to the carriage, Sir!" his relative said, majestically; "whatever happens, we had better not stay here."

They were all back again at Dane Court when they heard what had happened.

Swiftly and smoothly, flinging up a little shower of snow spray, and leaving a straight track behind it that did credit to Don's steering; faster and faster, as Lucia warmed to her work, between the high snow walls on either hand, the sleigh that carried Algernon and her Lochinvar whirled along the white solitary road that led straight to the Ashbridge Station, four or five miles off.

"THE SPEED AT WHICH THEY TORE ALONG ALMOST TOOK HILDA'S BREATH AWAY."

Muffled in her furs, and with the great buffalo-robe over all, Hilda lay back, only answering her lover's attempts to reassure her by a little sob now and then. The excitement of the last hour or two had been a little too much for the child.

"But it's all right now, darling!" Rawdon said presently, taking a pull at the mare as he topped the one long hill that lay between Boodle Park and Ashbridge—"it's all right, now. We shall be at the D'Arbleys by dinner-time, comfortably. I've telegraphed to her to meet us at the Nord terminus. She's about the only relation I've got left; and, as she's fond of me, she'll simply worship you, you know! We've managed beautifully, haven't we? Got away and no one that matters the wiser! Jove! though, I should like to see the City man's face to-morrow—or rather this morning, when he discovers—Eh? what's that?"

He checked Lucia a moment and turned his head to listen. The ringing of grelots behind, plain enough. Round a slight bend came something dark against the snowy roadway at a furious rate after them. Another sleigh.

"Dick, perhaps!" Don muttered; "but no, he wouldn't come after us. Besides, he wouldn't yaw about so frightfully. That fellow's never driven a sleigh before, I should say!"

"Oh, Don!" Hilda suggested, nervously; "suppose it should be—"

"Marsden? By Jove, it is! My lady's found us out and sent him, I suppose, to bring us back dead or alive! What a joke, isn't it?"

Algernon didn't seem to see it in that light at all. "For Heaven's sake, Don, don't let him overtake us! I couldn't bear to see him again," she said.

"No chance of his overtaking us, Algernon!" Don laughed.

"Is there, Lucia?"

The mare tossed her head, and sprang away like an arrow, as the reins dropped on her back again. A hoarse cry came from the pursuing sledge. It was so close behind them now that they could see its occupant gesticulating vehemently; could hear him calling to them to stop —Magdeu's voice, they both said.

"He'll break his neck directly!" Rawdon observed, with a grim sort of smile; "and we must leave him to it, I'm afraid!" He looked at his watch as he spoke. "Yes; we've no time to waste. Allons!"

The mare laid herself out fairly now. The speed at which they tore along almost took Hilda's breath away. They left the other sleigh as if it had been standing still.

They were on the high ground now. Straight before them, yonder, where the lights were twinkling, lay the Ashbridge Station; right and left the snow-mantled country could be seen for miles. Rawdon's eye ran along a thread-like dark track he knew where to look for—the line of rails down which the Paris mail was coming.

"She ought to be in sight, if they told Fyle the truth!" he muttered; "awkward if she's been blocked any where, now we've got this fellow behind us!"

Again his eye ran along the line of the embankment. It stood out well against the white background; nothing was visible on it.

All this time Lucia's speed never slackened: they were close on the station now. Where was the mail?

He caught sight of something at last. A red light: a gleam of other lights, dull through frosty window-panes. Then the shriek of a whistle reached them. It was the Dover mail coming into Ashbridge. Other eyes besides Don's had caught sight of it.—Again that cry to them to stop came from the other sleigh behind.—Don laughed.

"Rather a sell for him, you know! He'll come up just in time to see us start!" he remarked.

So it seemed, for they were passing through the gate of the station-yard almost as he spoke. It was a tall, heavy gate, usually held open by a catch, but on this occasion by a man muffled to the eyes—Mr. Fyle.

"All right, Sir! I had that individual reported, as Don pulled up a moment. "The French woman is here with the baggage and the tickets: mine's signaled. You're just in time, Sir."

Don leaned forward and laid a bank-note in the man's ear. Mr. Fyle grinned.

"I'll take care, Sir," he returned. The sleigh moved on up the little incline to the station entrance. Mr. Fyle hurried the next moment up after it. Mademoiselle Fanchon rushed out to The Dover mail ran alongside the platform.

THE CRETAN INSURRECTION—HARBOR OF CASTEL-SELINO BLOCKADED BY THE TURKS.—[See Page 71.]

Just at that moment the pursuing sleigh reached the gate of the yard. The pursuer shouted for some one to open it in vain. With an oath he leaped out and fumbled with frost-bitten fingers at the latch. In vain, too: the latch was immovable; Mr. Fyle perhaps best knew why. The pursuer saw the train run in, heard the doors slam as its passengers took their seats, heard the whistle sound for its departure. And this infernal gate wouldn't open! At last the undignified notion of climbing over struck him. He put it into immediate practice, slightly incommoded by the severely-strapped evening nether garments. It was a sight to see that tall gaunt figure a cheval upon a gate-bar!

Just as it got there the train began to move slowly off.

"I'll telegraph though!" the figure muttered aloud with a vicious expletive, and preparing to descend on the other side. Not carefully enough, unfortunately. His foot slipped and turned awkwardly on the middle bar, and Jeffrey Marsden, Esq., came heavily to the ground with a badly-sprained ankle. Where Mr. Fyle presently found him.

The Paris mail reached its destination without mishap, and Don and his Mignonne got to the Avenue de l'Impératrice in capital time for dinner, as he had prophesied.

Two days afterward my lady—she has managed to survive her disappointment—read her daughter's marriage in the Times. So did Marsden, in bed with incipient rheumatic fever and a sprained ankle. So did Dick Jocelyn and Helen, lingering over their tête-a-tête breakfast, in the Oak Parlor at Dane Court.

It was in that very room, by-the-by, that, in the snow-time last year, I heard from those same two people the story of RAWDON'S RAID!

THE HIGHLANDS OF BRAZIL—FORTNIGHTLY SLAVE MUSTER AT THE CASA GRANDE, MORRO VELHO.

THE HIGHLANDS OF BRAZIL.

THE interior of Brazil—the newest empire on earth and the crude beginning of a mighty and magnificent nation—still remains almost a terra incognita. But Captain BURTON, the most enterprising and experienced of English travelers, has by his recent explorations opened up the interesting region of Minas Geraes and the valley of the San Francisco. This region, lying northward from Rio de Janeiro, Captain BURTON believes will become the seat of empire through the vastness of its wealth and the immense variety of its productions, which appear to comprise every thing which human beings require, beginning with salt and leaving off with diamonds.

At the beginning of his explorations every thing was favorable to the advance of external knowledge of the Brazil. The Rio de San Francisco and the Sweetwater Mediterranean farther north had been thrown open to the merchant-ships of all nations; the Minister of Agriculture and Public Works had dispatched a steamer to be put together on the upper course of the stream; the President of Minas (a country as large as all England, and as fertile) had granted to a Brazilian engineer a concession to exploit by steamer the tributary valley of the Rio das Velhas. In addition, an English surveyor was laying out a line of rails to connect the capital of the empire with the city of Sabara, the future St. Louis, thus linking to the southern Atlantic the water-way which receives a thousand streams, but now only drains 8800 square leagues of one province, and supports but two millions of population instead of twenty.

BURTON'S journey involved 500 miles of land traveling, which he calls his own and his wife's "holiday trip" to the gold mines of Central Minas Geraes, via Petropolis, Barbacena, and the Highlands of Brazil, and also a voyage of 1150 miles on a raft down the San Francisco. After the steamboat trip to Manà, which is a constant recitation of beauty, there is railway for a while, and then by private conveyance the traveler reaches the maritime mountains, and gazes wonder-stricken at the colossal amphitheatre of the "Eastern Ghauts." The ascent is by a cunning winding way through seemingly impenetrable mazes, under the shade of the giants of a virgin forest, by the side of whole botanical gardens of misplents and parasites. Thus on and on to the glorious Alto da Serra, 2900 feet above sea-level. The traveler from Rio to Juis de Fora sees Nature in the garb which she presents in Equatorial Africa and in the lowlands of Hindostan.

Our travelers have at length reached the province of Minas Geraes, and with the start for Barbacena they begin to feel the approach to the Highlands; the land rises, the receding woods become less dense; the cabbage-palms and other growths of the maritime range disappear. The air and soil are too cold for tea and coffee, but rice and maize are good, vegetables and tobacco flourish, every hut has its floor for drying beans, and in the bottom-lands cotton might be grown with advantage. Still up and up, past the Parahybuna River, animal life becoming more conspicuous: the brilliant tropical birds and the wonderful ants abounding.

At Barbacena the mining business begins to be visible, and "gold troops" are encountered from the Anglo Minas mines. Here BURTON breaks off into a masterly description of the "Campos" or Brazilian prairies. "The mornings and the evenings," he says, "are the perfection of climate; the nights are cool, clear, and serene, as in the Arabian Desert, without its sand. Nor are the prairies deficient in the highest beauties of form and tint. There is grandeur in the vast continuous expanse fading into the far distance. The eye can rest upon the scene for hours, especially when viewing it from an eminence, while it is checkered by the afternoon cloud, whose eclipse seems to come and go, as it walks over the ridged surface of the light green or pale golden earth-waves, upheaved in the intensely blue atmosphere of morning, or in the lovely pink tints of the 'afterglow' from the shadowy hollows and the tree-clumps blooming below. If we analyze the charm, its essence seems to be the instability of the ocean where we know there is the solidity of earth.

SPAIN—CHARGE OF THE CHASSEURS OF MADRID UPON THE INSURGENTS OF CADIZ.—[SEE PAGE 74.]

From this luxurious travelers struck out westward just several beautiful villages to Barroso, thence to San José del Ret, and then through the wilder and more wonderful scenes to Alagua Dourada, or the Golden Lake. Here preparations were going on for laying the railway which is to end the present "hideous waste of power" between the valleys of the Paraïyba and the San Francisco.

After the ascent of the Serra de Santo Antonio a difficult and fatiguing march brought the travelers to the great gold mines of Morro Velho.

The mine interesting portion of Captain Burton's work is that relating to the gold mines in Minas Geraes. He believes that the exploitation of gold and diamonds has but just commenced in this region. His description of life at Morro Velho is very entertaining. Brazil and the Brazilian colonies are the only remaining footholds of slavery in Christian lands. In Brazil the treatment of the slaves, Burton thinks, is very humane.

Our illustration on page 77 represents the "Revista" or manner of the blacks which takes place every second Sunday. BURTON does not believe that the negro belongs to the human race; but the worst we can say of the blacks at Morro Velho is that they have a tendency to lie in the sun, and smoke on Sunday afternoons. They go to church, and of course to have an opportunity of taking for their masters. They are not scrupulously moral or particularly healthy.

On the whole, life at Morro Velho, whether for white men and women or for black "chattels," appears to be a decidedly agreeable institution, and the scene which the traveler beholds "down the mine" was wonderful and interesting —not a little awful and deeply impressive when, the descent completed and the sight of day disappeared, the details were taken in, thus:

"The huge palace of Darkness, slim in long perspective, wears a tremendous aspect; above us there seemed to be a sky without an atmosphere. The rock-masses either black as pitch, or reflected slender rays of light glancing from the polished watery surface, or were broken into monstrous projections, half covering and half concealing the enormous gloomy recesses. Despite the lamps, the night pressed upon us, as it were, with a veil, and the only means of seeing distance was a spark here and there, glimmering like a single star. Distinctly Dantesque was the grif between these mountain sides, apparently of threatening every moment to fall. Every thing, even the accents of a familiar voice, seemed changed; the sound was struck by the hammer-fall and thud of the hammer upon the boring iron, and this upon the stone; each blow in rapidity struck so as to keep time with the brilliant of the borer. The other definite sounds, curiously complicated by an echo, which seemed to be within reach, were the shuh of water in the subterranean path, the rattling of the gold stone thrown into the kibbles, and the crash of chain and bucket. Through this Inferno grooms and kobolds glided about in ghostly fashion—half-naked figures lighted by the mist. Here dark bodies, gleaming with beaded heat-drops, hung by chains in what seemed frightful positions: there the miners, like Ixion's ass, from place to place; there they swarmed up loose ropes, like the troglodytes; there they moved over scaffolds which, even in the void, would make a strong temperament dizzy. This one view amply repaid us. It was a place

"Where thoughts were many, and where words few;"

but the effect will remain upon the mental retina as long as memory do their duties.

"At the end of two hours we left this cathedral cavern of thick-ribbed gold, and we were safely out to gaze."

Public opinion in this region is against slavery and in favor of immigration and free labor.

Captain BURTON bases his description of Morro Velho, where he found work carried on by night and by day in the heart of the Tropics, and in the midst of the Brazil, with the following statement: "The Company has outlived the 37th year, and during the last six it has paid upward of 45,000 contos tax to the Brazilian Exchequer. The present outlay of the establishment is, for wages, £146,000 per annum, and the income £230,000. As a mine it has no parallel in the Brazil, the excavation has descended to seven levels reached by other works, and its breadth is without a parallel. It directly employs 2521 souls, indirectly double that number."

PRANG'S CHROMO.—We are in receipt of the third number of Prang's Chromo, a neat little journal issued by LOUIS PRANG, Boston. This number is embellished with several fine and most prominent pictures, with a description of each. A copy of either number of this journal mailed on receipt of stamp. L. PRANG & CO., Boston. —Lawrence American.

DYSPEPSIA TABLETS cure Indigestion, Heartburn, and Sour Stomach. Fifty Cents per Box. Mailed for 60. Sold by druggists. S. G. WELLING, 671 Broadway.

GRAND DUCHESS, BELLE HELENE, and all the divine other popular Operas, complete for Pianoforte Solo, with Overtures and words of songs, in Number 4 of Cooper's Complete Orpheonist, and large collections of Vocal and Piano-forte Music, in Book form. Price Cents each. The cheapest and most extensive catalogue of modern music in the world. Also, just ready, free to any address, BOOSEY & Co.'s Catalogue of their newest publications in full sheet or music-size form.

BOOSEY & CO., 644 Broadway, N. Y.

PAIN PAINT.

If your druggist don't have it, send 35 to Dr. WOOSTER, 170 Chatham Square, New York, and you will get a pint of PAIN PAINT, or six pints of ANODYNALINE, free of express charges.

THE BEAUTIES AND MYSTERIES OF NATURE.

The times are pregnant with startling events; old isms, theories, and fallacies are fast disappearing beneath the gigantic heels of progressive and busy development. Change is written, with the iron finger of fate, upon all matters, men and masses, material and spiritual. The mighty, omnipotent power has fashioned the stupendous orbs that revolve in the immensity of space, and governs all things in wisdom and purity. The majestic ocean, the deep blue sea, the manifold earth and all things therein contained, were planned and executed by infinite wisdom, and the law of harmony whose power holds sway over all. Intelligence is manifested in the minutest insect as great and small—the tiny insect, the beautiful butterfly, and God-like man, are each endowed, according to their kind, with that instinct or intelligence bestowed by Him who "doeth all things well."

Medicine, and how to apply it, are three great standard-bearers whose sumptuous hands mete out to each individually the measure of Divine, universal law, designed to bless mankind who healthful alike and noble man in his own image and all lesser created things. The sunshine and vegetable world never cease to the progressive human mind. Eternal progression is written with the unerring finger of Deity upon all. The scene of human life is below with the sweet income to all who, like angels of mercy and ministers, are ever busy, ready to devise means for the alleviation of human woe and the prolongation of life. The unceasing march of individual and national progress, as it moves on in its path, scatters blessings and actors upon the stage of mundane life. The stern struggles and conflicts of the political, the caustic minds of all countries can not awe or swerve them in the path of duty and power.

PROF. R. LEONIDAS HAMILTON, M.D.,

whose discoveries in reference to

LIVER, LUNG, AND BLOOD DISEASES

are now attracting the attention of the whole medical world, and whose success is carrying joy and restored health to thousands.

His well-attested cases of liver diseases, lung diseases, blood diseases, and diseases of the kidneys, bladder, spine, stomach, and nervous system, are now well known all over the United States and Canada, the West Indies, Australia, Europe, Southern Africa, and in many of the commercial and missionary settlements in every part of the world.

For the benefit of the sick who may wish to know positively when they have derangements of the Liver, we quote on this subject, and remark that the worst symptoms found in such cases will be found below:

SYMPTOMS OF LIVER COMPLAINT.

A sallow or yellow color of the skin, or yellowish brown spots on the face; a bad taste in the mouth; dullness and drowsiness, with frequent headache; pain under the right shoulder-blade, frequently extending to the breast; fullness or distension after meals, and hurried and difficult breathing; fluttering of the heart; a dry cough; nausea and sometimes vomiting; want of appetite; sour stomach, with a raising of the food. In many cases all of the above symptoms are present, with constipation of the bowels, alternating sometimes with looseness; at other times the patient will be troubled with piles and tenderness; aggravating pains in the back, sides, chest, limbs, and sometimes with colic pains and soreness through the bowels, with a full, distended feeling, as if filled with wind, and frequent attacks of dizziness; piles, flatulence, nervousness, sleeplessness, cold feet, and a rush of blood to the head, with symptoms of apoplexy; numbness of the limbs, sometimes with a slight cold chill, alternating with hot flushes, with dullness, low spirits, nausea, and a disinclination to exertion of body or mind, with loathing, weak nesses and irregularities.

DISEASES CAUSED BY LIVER COMPLAINT.

The Bowels, Stomach, and Skin are all of the kindred works of the Creator, in so constituted that, to the healthy, they must have a free flow of pure, worn-out, and poisonous materials as fast as it can be made to accumulate from our food and drink. The food is assimilated and made into nourishing and healthful blood principally by the influence of the stomach, liver, and lungs. The worn-out materials are then to be carried to the liver, lungs, and kidneys; but all medical men have heretofore failed to recognize the importance of the liver as the most powerful purifying and excreting organ. The most learned pathologists and physicians have been their servants upon actual experiments only, state that the amount of carbon excreted should be determined by the liver and poured into the intestines each day is two and a half pounds, and that the more interesting matter is the fat, and the experiments to prove it, may consult Frichsmann's work on Physiology, page 1, 1845. It may see a response of these facts in Prof. Dalton's Physiology.

Remember one thing more: The bile is something more than a cathartic, and has been so long and heretofore been taught by eminent medical men. The bile is natural to the blood, and is the cause of the blood—effete, worn-out, and injurious materials. If the liver fails to secrete the bile, and pour it into the intestines daily, it remains in the blood as a poison. Ignorance has been the cause of much fatal vitiating and poisonous matter in the blood, to every organ of the system.

The blood, poisoned with the daily-accumulated excess of bile, runs from the liver to the heart, and all the nerves of the heart are affected, and we have an inflammatory state of the heart, or pericardium. When this cause is long continued, we get chronic irritation, and then enlargement, and hence the beginning of the developing many forms of HEART DISEASE.

Next we find the lungs receiving poisoned blood goes from the upper and right cavity of the heart to the lower cavity and thence to the lungs. Here the circulating all through those most delicate organs. The lungs become inflamed, irritated, ulcerated. Here we vitiate the scrofulous humors of the blood because they are thus forced to throw them off. Hence follows the typical scrofula, so declared and proved by Louis and all the great authorities of Paris. The lungs are inflammable and purify the blood, and they do it in a great measure. We perform the office of the liver partially, and you smell the blood-poison matter in the man's breath. Hence, CATARRH, Bronchitis, Consumptive Cough, and Consumption itself are the results. If the liver had done its duty—and not poisoned the blood—the Lungs would not have been diseased.

Next we find the kidneys, the skin, and the bowels from the lungs back to the upper left cavity of the heart, and thence to the kidneys. Here we have the renal arteries and capillaries to every organ and tissue of the system. Among the most important of these organs are the kidneys, furnishing the urinary secretion a most important excretion. But the kidneys themselves are irritated and congested by the presence of the bile-poisoned blood, and they become diseased. Every person who has had a liver disease knows that the urine is scanty, high-colored, and loaded with red deposits, at times, or other diseased products. Hence, disease, or dropsy of the kidneys, is one of the bladder.

But this is not all—far from it. The poisonous blood goes to the BRAIN, and affects the great electrical centre of all vitality; and the brain, stimulated by unhealthy blood, can not perform its office healthfully. The person has violent headaches, incapacity to keep his mind on a subject, can not remember, has a crowded and dizzy feeling, is sleepy, becomes nervous, gloomy, easily irritated, and often has a bilious or a neuralgic headache.

And the BLOOD itself becomes diseased: as it forms the sweat upon the surface of the skin it is so irritating and poisonous that the person has discovered Eruptions, Pimples, Blotches, and other eruptions; sore boils, carbuncles, and scrofulous tumors.

Disease of the LIVER is by far the most common of all diseases. The sudden changes of the New England climate, from extreme cold to heat, are the best also of the South, as well as the dietetic habits of the people, are productive of liver complaint, and tend to develop the Liver Disease, in some of its various forms, in the United States. This is true both of man and beast, as every butcher knows that he finds the livers of cattle, sheep, and swine diseased too times where he finds any other organ diseased once. Liver complaint is the most common disease, and many are constantly bilious. It may be more congenital, from the heat, and torpidity of the liver, or this may result in some structural or organic difficulty. The liver, when thus deranged, will without affecting the stomach, bowels, and the other organs we have spoken of, not costiveness, piles, jaundice, dyspepsia, diarrhœa, and impoverished blood are among the necessary results.

CHRONIC DISEASES.

PROF. HAMILTON will also inform the afflicted that, having treated successfully thousands of patients, his office has become the greatest centre for the treatment of chronic diseases in the United States, if not in any place in the world. No hospital in Europe or America can show such a record of complete and permanent cures as are presented, either personally or by letter, at No. 546 Broadway. He is the author of the work, Prison of Classical Medicine. Among the thousands of cases given from different parts of the Liver, Lung, and Blood, which he treats, the following receive a prominent and distinguishing notice: Liver and Bilious Headache, Nervous and Neuralgic Headache, Chronic Diarrhœa and Dysentery, Contracted Cords, Stiff Joints, Eruptions and Brown Skin, Dropsy and Diseases of the Kidneys, Inflammation of the Bowels, Scrofula in all its forms, Spinal Irritation, Salt-Rheum and Syphilitic Eruptions, Mercurial Affections, Female Diseases of the Heart, Diseases of Females, and all Diseases caused by Bad Blood, Liver, Lung, Rheumatism, Catarrh and Throat Diseases, &c., &c.

SYNOPSIS.

For greater convenience of those wishing to write me about their diseases, I insert the following, which readers may copy, and send to me to know my success: Have you constipation of the bowels? Have you attacks of headache? Pain in the region of the back, sides, or shoulders? Have you a pain or tenderness directly over the liver? Have you a distressing cough? Have you sallow or yellow skin? Have you cases arising from disease of any part of the body? Have you a headache? Are you dull, heavy, or sleepy? Have you a bad taste in the mouth? Coated tongue? Poor an irritation or dryness in the throat? Have you cold chills alternating with hot flushes, sensation of the heart? Is your appetite unsteady? Is your stomach sour? Does food lie on your stomach like a stone? Is on any choking spells? Are you troubled with sickness at your stomach? Do you feel bloated about the stomach? Have you a tired or sore feeling on rising in the morning? Do you have colic pains? Have you wind in the stomach or bowels? Have you piles or fistula? Is your blood impure and all-gone feeling? Have you cold feet and hands? Have you a rush of blood to the head, with symptoms of apoplexy? Pain in the sides? Have you fainting or epileptic fits? Have you frequent bowings of spirits? Have you gloomy forebodings?

PLEASE READ THE FOLLOWING, AND SEE WHO ARE CURED.

SUPPORTED BY HONORABLE MEN!

READ!! READ!!!

R. LEONIDAS HAMILTON, M.D.—Dear Sir: Duty prompts me to a most grateful acknowledgment of my entire restoration to health by your treatment. I was, For nearly three years I had suffered from Catarrh, Dyspepsia, Constipation, Kidney Complaint, and Extreme Nervousness; inasmuch that life had become an intolerable burden. I had tried many doctors and many remedies. Physically and mentally broken down, I was induced by Rev. Mr. Lyon, a brother of a minister, who was preparing to retire from the ranks when provided with your treatment, to make application to you. Methodist. I had already travelled so far and expended so much that I felt it would be scarcely a cure, that I was with great reluctance and little hope. I am happy to say that I have been cured, and that hope—your remedies were received and taken, and the result was more than I could have hoped. I have my condition as it was gratifying to myself. In reason when I say that I am in the prime of health, and can attend to labor, and if my services are any value to the Church, they are at your command. I feel that I owe you much gratitude. You may refer to me at any time, and I shall be ever pleased to render testimony to your extraordinary skill. Yours truly, REV. JOSIAH CRANE, West Joseph, Mich.

CASES OF LIVER COMPLAINT.

It is with much satisfaction that I invite particular attention to the following voluntary statement of the medical discoveries of Professor R. L. HAMILTON. Constantine, recently located in the interior of Africa.

NO. 90 FULTON STREET, NEW YORK CITY.

DR. R. LEONIDAS HAMILTON, No. 546 Broadway:

My Dear Benefactor! A sense of duty impels me to say to you, and through you to the world, that for what no other physician has been able to do. I have been a sufferer for many years from a bilious derangement, terminating as a missionary in Africa. Last fall I was declining in health, and the symptoms of quick consumption fixed. I applied to you for help. You remember: I came to you, and through your kind attention, I lived several years younger than you have ever felt since you knew me. I have had little of ease, or of health, but often received similar assurances from eminent physicians, that I had but a few months to live. Within a few weeks all my symptoms were entirely changed, and I am now in the enjoyment of perfect good health. In a few weeks I found myself in the enjoyment of better health, and able to perform my ministerial duties with zeal, than at any previous time since I left Africa. My liver is in perfect order, my stomach, Bowels, and Kidneys are strong, and make you as kind in restoring them to health. A. A. CONSTANTINE.

NEWSPOINT, N. Y.

PROF. HAMILTON—Dear Sir: I have used many quarters of the package of medicine you sent me, and have found it a most efficient remedy for Liver Complaint, and the great good they have done me. I truly believe that my disease was of the liver and digestive organs, and had I not received timely aid from your treatment my difficulties would have terminated in liver consumption, and that I should have been incurable. I had been failing fast for the last few months previous to applying to you, although under medical treatment of three of the most skillful physicians in one of the cities of this State. Many persons are daily visiting me to see what your treatment has done for me, and say that "Professor Hamilton must be possessed of more than a doctor's power to cure you." Some look at me with great amazement, after noticing the great change that has taken place in my condition and appearance in so short a time. I ride on my every day round and walk a mile. Truly yours, MRS. D. C. HOWE.

RHEUMATISM CURED!

WILLIAM MCNELLIS, Eagle Rock, Venango County, Penn., writes:

"I return my sincere thanks for having permanently cured me of rheumatism, after having suffered severely for two years! When I had doctored with other doctors, and tried all the patent medicines that I could get, and was about discouraged, I felt that I could hardly get out of my house, and part of the time not able to get out of bed at all. I was afflicted so nearly every joint, I thought I would try you as a last resort. Your agent, by, in less than two months, I was able to go out and jump with the most active man in the place. I am now entirely free from pain, and can ride 12 pounds; and I never had better health in my life than I have enjoyed for the last few months. May God bless you and your miraculous remedies."

CASES OF ASTHMA.

Mr. Joseph Little, of Thompson, Penn., writes:

"Last January I received a package of medicine from you. With much pleasure and thankfulness that I now state that my health is fully re-established. I was troubled with asthma difficulties entirely removed, with the other numerous complaints before specified. I now feel as well as any one can expect to be at my age—sixty-seven years."

Mrs. Eliza Bryant, of Preston, Hamilton County, Ohio, writes:

"I have so far regained my health, under your treatment, as to be quite free from my terrible complaint—Asthma. I have now lay my head upon my own pillow and sleep calmly and sweetly all night. I have no pains now through my shoulders, chest, or any part of the body."

REPORT FROM A CASE OF ASTHMA.

Mrs. Jesse Smith, of Candia Village, Rockingham County, N. H., writes:

"I received your medicine, and have used the most of it. My cough is better, I breathe freely, and can sleep well nights. I have regained my appetite, my skill, and hope soon to be permanently restored."

CANCER CURED!

Extracts from a letter of Mr. Edwin Sanford, of Brookdale, Morris County, Ohio, to "Do you remember the young man who came to your office last summer, from Ohio, to consult you about a skin cancer on his nose? I returned to New York to see you, but there are many who go far, but few who go home to be treated and be cured. I took three prescriptions of you, and that dreadful cancer which was eating away my nose, I think she will be cured. Do you remember Mr. Guy, the gentleman who came to your office to see you? He cared him entirely, and he now says that there is no one that he would have to treat him but you. Yours sincerely, EDWIN SANFORD."

Wooster City, Iowa.

DR. HAMILTON—Dear Friend: I write you to thank you, as well as to all those who are afflicted with disease to go to you for relief. I was a living skeleton which I have received from the use of your medicine. When I left you I had a cough in my shoulders and side, soreness across the chest, difficulty in breathing, but now I am free from coughing and rousing in my ears. I was very nervous, and my hands were never still; could not write a letter, and I would seem almost incredible if I were to attempt to describe the objects which came to me when awake while awake. Sleep was no rest to me. I had dreadful dreams, and when on the road was so unable that I soon got relief my earthly career would soon be ended. I am now in comfortable health, and can work as well as any one all the time. My husband induced me to write to you, and I am glad he did so. I am a living trophy of your skill, and in a very short time I began to recover, and can now say that I am in very good health. I have your faithful attention, and I shall always recommend you to the afflicted. With much respect, MARY E. LYON.

THOSE AWFUL FITS CURED!

FROM P. C. HOWARD, of Hot Creek, Virginia:

"Your package was received, and the medicine taken as directed, and I am happy to be able to inform you that I have had the desired effect. My general health is much better than it has been for several years. It has not been a day since or fits since I commenced taking your medicine."

A VOICE FROM WAYNE COUNTY, PENN.

Mr. John Beney, of Honesdale, writes:

"It would be injustice to you as well as to myself not to acknowledge the great benefit I have received from your medicine. I can say I never was so much benefited by any medicine as I have by that which I have taken all the medicine I felt like a new man. All of my neighbors say that I look like a new man. Speaking, I have not felt so well for five years as I now do."

EPILEPTIC FITS CURED—OF TWO YEARS' STANDING.

PERSIFANY, N. J.

PROF. HAMILTON—Dear Sir: Again I am moved myself to inform you of the success your medicine has done me. I can say I am entirely cured. I had taken all the medicine I felt like a new man. All of my neighbors say that I look like a new man. Speaking, I have not felt so well for five years as I now do."

EPILEPTIC FITS CURED—OF TWO YEARS' STANDING.

PERSIFANY, N. J.

PROF. HAMILTON—My Dear Sir: Your medicines were all promptly received, and taken according to directions. Lottie is a well girl again. I never expected to see her so well as she is. She can do a good day's work, and she has had no return of Catarrh and vomiting. She sends me most sincere thanks, and says you have done a great thing for her. You have restored her sinking health in a very short time. We shall be grateful to you so long as we live."

EPILEPTIC FITS—BAD CASE IN MANISTEO, MICH.

OAK CREEK, August 31, 1863.

R. L. HAMILTON, M.D.—Dear Sir: I have a little boy, 3½ years old, that has fits. You were recommended to me by Mrs. O'Neil (at present Mrs. Shannon), of Manistee, Mich., who was cured by her daughter, who was very bad with them. I had been a resident of Manistee for the last five years, and moved to Wisconsin lately. I have seen the young lady quite a number of times, and know she has had not one in three years.

I would have got one of your circulars from the lady, but she had given them away. Write me what to do, and I may place my dear boy under your care. Yours respectfully,

THOMAS O. DERBY,
Oak Creek, Milwaukee Co., Wis.

A VOICE FROM WESTERN NEW YORK.

MR. John Fletcher, Sr., of Oswego, N.Y., writes:

"I am happy to inform you that the disagreeable symptoms I had when I wrote to you first have all left me, and I do not require any more medicine. I followed your advice strictly and carefully, and the result has been successful. So long as I live, so long as my memory retains its seat, so long will I retain and cherish feelings of the deepest gratitude to you; and, wherever I may be in this world, I will recommend every person I know in want of medical treatment to Professor Hamilton."

"NEARLY GONE WITH CONSUMPTION."

MRS. Rachel Griffin, of Eldora, Iowa, writes:

"When I commenced taking your medicine, I was like a person nearly gone with CONSUMPTION. Now I am enjoying good health. Many of my friends have told me they never expected to see me any better. Some said it seemed like a miracle to see me well, as that cough and ache to be about again. May God reward you for the good you do to the afflicted in the wish of your friend, MRS. RACHEL GRIFFIN."

LIVER DISEASE CURED!

Read this testimony from Miss Crouch, of Schoharie County, N.Y.:

WEST CONESVILLE.

DR. HAMILTON—Respected Sir: I embrace the present occasion to write a few lines to you to inform you of the effect of some medicine received from you in the spring. The medicines were prepared as soon as received, and I commenced their use. I took the first or three days I felt very little effect. I was in this condition seven or eight days, when I noticed a change for the better. I have since taken about one dollar, heavy headache was gone; my sleep was sound and refreshing. I seemed to sweat much instead of distressing me—indeed, the best way I can describe the change is that I have like taking on new health and being, repairing the waste places, and building up anew. We have done writing, to see whether the cure was permanent or not. I have reason to believe it is such thing. I believe your remedies to be very efficacious in eradicating disease from the system, and therefore in confidence commend them to the afflicted.

May you long be spared to bless the human family by the exercise of your great skill in the science which of your very grateful friend,

MARIA CROUCH.

LUNG and HEART DISEASE CURED!!!

FIVE YEARS' USELESS TREATMENT!!!

MRS. Marinda Brubmer, of Roscoe, Del., Wis., writes:

"I am much better—consider myself well. The headache was bad every week, but has left. My cough is cured. The pain and soreness in my chest and sides are gone. The night-sweats I had I do not now have. I feel very thankful for your medicine, for God only bless you. The means you use are no humbug, and there is no humbug in what you say. I doctored five years with good physicians, as we all thought; you have done me more good than all the doctors and their took. My heart does not stop as it did, and the buzzing in my head is cured. I hope God will bless you."

A CLERGYMAN RESPONDS.

MORRISTOWN, Morris County, N. J.

PROF. R. L. HAMILTON—Dear Sir: I have purposely delayed writing in order to give you the results of your remedies. The medicines came to hand in due time, and I commenced using them as instructed, and have persevered. For the first week I felt no relief or much change. The second week there seemed to be a giving way of the disease; and by the end of the third week I felt a decided change for the better was manifest. I was able to walk about with more ease and comfort. I send you my sincere and many thanks, and pray that God may bless and prosper your life for many years. I feel that, under the blessing of Divine Providence, you have done great good to many.

Yours truly, REV. T. HOUG.

A CLERGYMAN'S WIFE.

MRS. Rev. Geo. C. Haddock, of Ripon, Wis., writes:

The remedies you sent me last spring worked like a charm through my entire system. I do not believe I should have lived until the present time had I not had your medicine. It is my sincere prayer that God may bless and spare you many long years to minister to the suffering of diseased humanity. All that I can do to extend your field of labor shall be done earnestly and willingly."

A CLERGYMAN'S TESTIMONY.

The REV. Orville Gaskins (Troy Conference), of West Sand Lake, N. Y., writes:

"I am in better health this fall than I have been before in five years. My stomach is getting quite strong; my appetite is steady and powerful; my habits are regular as they used to be in the days of being all pinched up, I am getting to be quite corpulent. I have been very worked so hard or preached so much as this fall; I have labored two months in a protracted meeting; preached most every night; gone sixty souls converted to God be all the praise. I shall still continue to attend to the use of some of these days, and the great benefit derived from your prescriptions. I have also given them to others, and the remedies I ever took. In fact, they are the only medicines that have benefited me."

RECOMMENDS THE AFFLICTED TO APPLY.

David E. Erb, of Bridgeport, C.W., writes:

"It is with pleasure that I write to inform you that my wife received the medicine you sent her. She was not able to attend on her feet for over two months, and was not expected to live; but since she used your medicine she has been gaining strength daily. I think a little more of your wonderful medicine will cure her. I shall recommend all the afflicted to apply to you."

APPLIES FOR TREATMENT.

George Fraser, of Queensville, C.W., writes:

"You will doubtless remember a former my sister, Mrs. Steuben Noble. You performed such a wonderful cure in her case that I beg leave to give you a statement of my case."

A CLERGYMAN RESPONDS.

ROCKAWAY, N. J.

R. L. HAMILTON, M.D.—Dear Sir: It is with pleasure that I communicate the result of the use of your medicines. When I first visited your office in New York I could scarcely walk from the cars before your door into the office without exhaustion. With all your goodness as a medical physician, I had but little hope that you could cure me. There was nothing strange in this. I had been sick for four months and more away, but during that period I had suffered constantly with chronic diarrhœa and piles. I had tried the best physicians, and used every thing I heard of that I could procure, but all in vain. Why should I think that you could do me more good than others? But, in justice and gratitude compel me to say that after the use of your medicines for a few months the result was a complete cure. I crossed the use of your medicines almost the last of September, and had no return of diarrhœa until the 25th of January, 1864, and that attack I could trace to its cause—cold, sir, I can not expect to be freed from liabilities to attacks of disease any more than others; but, sir, I had the voice of thousands, and could assemble the sick in the world, I would direct them to you. Yes, sir, no one fully competent to heal, and whose generous and noble nature would allow of receiving fees.

Yours truly, REV. GEORGE H. JONES.

ANOTHER APPEAL TO THE INCREDULOUS.

So well knowing the general custom of the American people to denounce all advertising Physicians as "Humbugs," without knowing any thing at all in regard to their merits, in addition to the numerous and wonderful testimonials from some of the Professors who have been cured by me, I publish below the names and addresses of a few reliable persons who know me well as a thorough scholar and an able medical physician. Any one desiring can call and consult any of these persons in regard to letting the use of my name.

Benjamin Berry, Matteawan, N.Y., Alex'r Hughes, Poughkeepsie, N.Y., John Dwyer, Waterford, N.Y., Thomas B. Singerland, Rome, N.Y., Wm. Wood, Attorney-at-Law, No. 3, Liberty Street, New York City; Timothy Cronin, Attorney-at-Law, No. 19 Broadway, New York City; J. H. Robertson, No. 51 Nassau Street, New York City; Norval Hall, Belle, New York City Post-Office; Dr. Palmer, No. 78 Fourth Avenue, New York City; William Betts, Newark, N.J.; Thomas Hogan, Troy, N.Y.; Harvey Wilcox, Rider Mills, N.Y.; Hon. Wm. F. Dwyer, Attorney-at-Law, No. 2 Pine Street, New York City; Wm. Reed, Attorney-at-Law, No. 55 Liberty Street, New York City; Parker, Davis, & Co., 13 Park Row, New York City; Van Schaick & Sons, State Printers, Albany, N.Y.; Joseph Hoxie, Sand Lake, N.Y.; Abram Hart, Troy, N.Y.; Riley Merrill, Sandlot, N.Y.; Daniel Edwards, Otego, N.Y.; Rev. Thomas Bradbury, N.Y. Mission Board, South Branch, N.Y.; Thomas Colby, Morrisville, N.Y.; Rev. Wm. Hosier, Pastor M. E. Church, Sing Sing, N.Y.; Druggists, No. 141 William Street, New York City; Wm. Hamilton, No. 141 William Street, New York City; Reuben Buchanan, Chemist, No. 188 Fulton Street, New York City; Hon. Wm. Smith, Attorney-at-Law, Kingston, N.Y.; Oscar Hamblin, Stationer, No. 291 Canal Street, New York City; Adams, Druggists, No. 105 John Street, New York City; Wm. Cauldwell, No. 49 Liberty Street, New York City; J. Tillitson, Clerk in the New York Post-Office; E. Hamilton, Druggist.

SUFFERING READER.

If you are afflicted with any chronic disease, throw aside, for once, any preconceived, erroneous notions in regard to an advertising physician, who gives ample evidence of his skill and ability.

R. LEONIDAS HAMILTON, M.D.,

is a thoroughly-educated Physician, a regular graduate of one of our best medical schools, a man of over twenty years' experience in the treatment of all chronic diseases to which the people of this or any country are subject, and has for a number of years been under treatment in every State and Territory of the American Union, in the British Provinces, South and Central America, the West Indies, Sandwich and Canary Islands, Europe, China, and the East. This will doubtless sound somewhat to many, but the evidence can be produced at Dr. Hamilton's office every week day.

It is also asserted, on the most reliable authority, that Dr. Hamilton is the only physician in this world who is supposed that Dr. Hamilton's treatment consists in "Mercury," which is the most pernicious combination ed to cure all the ills that flesh is subject to. On the contrary, Dr. H.'s prescriptions and specific compounds are all made up from vegetable roots, principally, for each individual case, as they are presented to him, either by person or by letter, and a perfect and efficient if the combination of symptoms are properly presented, according to the directions given in this article.

Again, Dr. Mineral remedies are not used in any form by Dr. Hamilton; consequently patients are safe from the horrible mineral poisons so much used by some physicians.

REMEMBER ONE THING!!!

READER: Remember that you can not be cured because you have tried other remedies. Let it be distinctly understood that many of my remedies are known only to myself, for certain diseases and varieties of my own, and are compounded according to my own reasoning and extensive experience with the sick.

All sick persons must remember that they can not be put upon a course of treatment which will cure them if they make up their own medicines principally; or patients can mark the symptoms they have, as above published. I can, in every instance, prescribe for them just as well as though I saw them, for it is constantly thousands under my treatment, in various parts of the world, and have never failed in a case of sickness, and especially as those I see in person—in fact, some of the best cures ever made I have perfected in cases I never saw.

All I wish to know in my case is the most prominent symptoms, and they can just as well be written as told to a physician, and I can treat the case as easily as though the patient were present.

Please write at once, all ye afflicted, and I will answer you promptly and to the point, and state fully the facts as they appear, and whether you can or not be saved. And in so doing, every honorable family physician has done you no good, for I have saved thousands after all hope had fled and the grave was near. The wisdom and goodness of a just Providence will not withhold the noble means for the salvation or happiness of his suffering and erring children. Also, if you expect a full and specific reply to your letter, always enclose ten cents—postage must be paid in advance.

I am always in attendance, and attend to all cases in person, and have the assistance of my sons, every responsibility, and that they will be dealt with justly and honorably.

Have no hesitancy in writing to the Doctor, and state to him your case in full, and he will deal honestly and promptly with you. All letters to him must be addressed thus:

R. LEONIDAS HAMILTON, M.D.,

No. 546 BROADWAY,

CARE OF POST-OFFICE BOX No. 4957, NEW YORK.

The number of the Post-Office Box must be put on each letter to insure safety.

The Celebrated Imitation Gold

$15. HUNTING WATCHES. $20.

THE COLLINS OROIDE WATCH FACTORY.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

Our superior ROYAL WATCH, as keeping recently been published, and worthless duplicates sold in New York, Boston, Chicago, and other cities, represented as our Watches, we hereby caution the public against them, and give notice that we are in no way responsible for these bogus concerns, and only those purchasing directly from us can secure a genuine Watch of our own manufacture. We have recently greatly improved our style and finish, and are fully equal to a Gold Watch costing $100. Chains of every style, from $2 to $8. Jewelry, Rings, Pins, Earrings, Sleeve-Buttons, Lockets, Studs, Finger-Rings, Bracelets, Pencils, Charms, Gold Pellow and Mariner Pins, &c., all of the latest and most elegant styles, and fully equal to gold in appearance and durability.

TO CLUBS.—Where SIX Watches are ordered at one time, we will send one extra Watch free of charge.

We positively desire to inform those who would require a commission, as we can not possibly manufacture the watches for less than our published prices. Our regular customers, therefore, have the benefit of the lowest prices. Parties in New York, or elsewhere, representing themselves as agents for us, are hereby notified that we have no such agency, and we can only be had at our office in New York City. Customers are reminded that the guaranty in these advertisements is given by no other part of the United States to be paid for when taken from the express office. Customers must pay all express charges. In ordering, write plainly the name, post-office, county, and state. Also, in all cases, remember that our only office is

No. 37 and 39 Nassau Street, Opposite the Post-Office (Up Stairs), New York.

C. E. COLLINS & CO.

No excuse now for Papers and Magazines being about loose all the year.

CONANT'S IMPROVED PERIODICAL CUPBOARDS, for HARPER'S WEEKLY or BAZAR, sent by mail for $2 25. They hold the numbers for a whole year.

Address H. CONANT, 39 Nassau St., N. Y.

"A good thing."—New York Professor.

MAGAZINE SIZE, 50 CENTS. SEMI-MONTHLY SIZE, $1 00

DUNHAM & SONS,

MANUFACTURERS OF

PIANO-FORTES,

WAREROOMS,

No. 831 Broadway, New York.

SEND FOR CIRCULAR

Holloway's Ointment.—Asthma and Quinsy, frightful diseases! Let them not hesitate. We assure they were frightful thirty years ago; but Holloway's Ointment now cures them every day. Sold everywhere. Never fails.

VELOCIPEDE WHEELS,

MANUFACTURED BY

S. N. LADD & CO.,

Dayton, Ohio.

They also make a prime article of Spokes and Hubs for light Carriage and Buggy Wheels. Write for Prices.

$25 KNITTING MACHINE.

WANTED!—Buyers and Sellers for the HICKFORD FAMILY KNITTER, the most reliable invention for the household ever made. It knits 30,000 stitches a minute, runs back and forward, and sets up its own work. Parties are making from $5 to $8 per day. Machines sent to any address, with instructions in plain and explicit. RICKFORD KNITTER MACHINE CO., Nassau St., Boston, Mass.

PARLOR FIREWORKS.—A new and interesting evening amusement. Perfectly harmless. Price by mail, prepaid, 25 cents per package. Liberal terms to the trade. Address the manufacturer, W. HEPBURNE, 162 Nassau St., N. Y.

DON'T YOU DO IT!—Don't get up One-Dollar-Sales Trade until you send for the NEW ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE of the ONE DOLLAR STORE, 25½ TREMONT ROW, BOSTON, MASS. Sent free to any address. Mention this paper.

Unprecedented Inducements to Agents and Patrons.

7 YARDS a Club of 100. Other Goods in proportion.

$325 A MONTH, AND EXPENSES—28 new articles. H. B. SHAW, ALFRED, ME.

NORTON & CO.,

AMERICAN BANKERS—Paris, France,

Will remove on the 15th of October to their new Offices under the Grand Hotel du Louvre.

Travelling Americans will find every possible convenience in this new establishment. Letters of Credit cashed, and every attention guaranteed.

ARCHITECTURAL DEPARTMENT OF THE

Novelty Iron Works,

Nos. 77 and 83 Liberty Street,

Cor. Broadway, New York.

FOR

Plain and Ornamental Iron Work of all kinds for Buildings.

$10 A DAY FOR ALL. Stencil Tool samples free. Address A. J. FULLAM, Springfield, Vt.

25 CENTS.—Now is the time to subscribe to the Young Men's Magazine. Clubs, $2 50 per annum, and the cheapest monthly published. Each number contains matter of interest and importance to every body. 25 cents will pay for it from now to the end of 1869. Specimen copies sent free on receipt of postage. Address G. A. ROWLAND, 162 Nassau St., N.Y.

MAGIC, MYSTERY, & MIRTH.

The Great Book for Parlor Entertainment. By W. HEPBURNE, 162 Nassau St., New York.

MAGIC PICTURES. Wonderful and Amusing. Magic Lanterns. Clubs, $2 50 per annum. Packages. W. C. WEMYSS, 3 Astor Place, N. Y.

$20 A DAY, net profit. AGENTS wanted for four new articles just patented. Call or send for a circular. A fortune in each. Send at once for Circular to J. E. CHATFIELD, Rochester, N. Y.

100 PHOTOGRAPHS OF BEAUTIFUL WOMEN sent, postpaid, for 25 cts. Send for Circulars. Address C. SEYMOUR, BOLTON, NEW YORK.

PATENT OFFICE

Inventors who wish to take out Letters Patent are advised to consult with

MUNN & CO. 37 PARK ROW, N.Y.

PROPRIETORS OF THE

SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN

who have prosecuted claims before the Patent Office for fifteen years.

THEIR AMERICAN AND EUROPEAN PATENT AGENCY is the most extensive in the world. Charges less than any other reliable agency. A Pamphlet containing full instructions in invention, is sent gratis.

$3 per Annum Bound Volume, containing 150 Mechanical engravings, and the United States Census by Counties, with Tables of Receipts for Machines, mailed on receipt of 25 cents. The SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN is the best and cheapest Weekly Illustrated Newspaper, devoted to Science, Art, and Mechanics, published in the world. Three dollars a year. Specimens gratis. Address

MUNN & CO., 37 Park Row, New York.

$1000 PER YEAR guaranteed, and steady employment. We want a reliable agent in every county to sell our Home Sewing Machine. Price $18. Shuttle. Address AMERICAN WIRE CO., 75 Williams St., N. Y., or 16 Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill.

THE YOUTH'S COMPANION A WEEKLY PAPER FOR YOUNG PEOPLE AND THE FAMILY

Illustrated by Finely-Executed Cuts.

It is an eight-page paper, and, without exception, the largest and best publication for children in the United States.

One of the most Fascinating and Brilliant Writers contribute to its columns, among whom are

MRS. HARRIETT BEECHER STOWE,
E. STUART PHELPS,
MRS. LOUISE CHANDLER MOULTON,
PAUL DU CHAILLU, and others.

Its articles are entertaining and thoroughly practical in their character, widely-awake, and entirely free from objectionable matter.

Subscription price, $1 50 a year. For sale by all Newsdealers. A Specimen Copy sent free.

With a circulation of nearly 50,000 each week, the Company is one of the best mediums for advertising in New England. For Terms, address T. C. BROWN, Advertising Agent, 100 Washington Street, Boston.

PERRY MASON & CO., Publishers, Boston.

WANTED—AGENTS—$75 to $200 per month, everywhere, male and female, to introduce the GENUINE IMPROVED COMMON SENSE FAMILY SEWING MACHINE. This Machine will stitch, hem, fell, tuck, quilt, cord, bind, braid, and embroider in a superior manner. Price only $15. Fully warranted for five years. We will pay $1000 forever machine that will sew a stronger, more beautiful, or more elastic seam than ours. It will not rip, ravel, or pucker, and will do the whole range of family sewing. We pay freight. Circulars and sample sent without charge. Wages Agents from $75 to $200 per month. Address SECOND A. WILSON, Cor. Main and Union Streets, Alfred, Me.

CAUTION.—Do not be imposed upon by other parties palming off worthless machines under the same name or initials, etc. Ours is the only genuine and really practical cheap Family Machine.

WANTED AGENTS To Sell the AMERICAN KNITTING MACHINE. Price $20. The simplest, cheapest and best Knitting Machine in the world. Will knit a pair of Stockings with Heel and Toe complete in Ten Minutes. Address, AMERICAN KNITTING MACHINE CO., 323 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

DEAFNESS, CATARRH, SCHOOLCRAFT'S CONSTITUTIONAL REMEDY FOR DEAFNESS, CATARRH, and SCROFULA, was cured by a simple remedy. Pamphlets containing information sent to send the receipts free of charge to any one similarly afflicted. Address Mr. M. C. L., Hoboken, N. J.

AN ACCIDENT OF BIRTH.

FIRST WAYFARER. "Well, but if you're a Dublin Man, how came you to be Born in Cork?"
SECOND WAYFARER. "Sure, it was just this—I was Staying there at the Toime."

GORHAM MFG. CO.

Sterling Silver Ware,

AND

Fine Electro-Plated Ware,

of the following trade-marks:

Trade-Mark Silver. GORHAM MFG. CO. Trade-Mark Electro-Plate.

MANUFACTURED BY THE
GORHAM MANUFACTURING CO.,
PROVIDENCE, R. I.

Orders received from the Trade only, but these goods may be obtained from responsible dealers every where.

THE GORHAM WARE may be obtained of ADAMS, CHANDLER, & CO., No. 20 JOHN STREET, NEW YORK.

PRINCE & CO.
ORGANS
AND MELODEONS.
43,000, now in use.
BUFFALO, N.Y. CHICAGO, ILL.

NEW MUSIC.

VELOCIPEDE GALOP, illustrated..... 50c.
TELEGRAM WALTZ—STRAUSS..... 40c.
KITTY MCGEE, &c.—TIM HAYDEN TOOCOUET.. 40c.
YOU'LL SOMETIMES THINK OF ME..... 30c.
LOVE IN MY HEART AND PAY IN KISSES..... 30c.
Valse sur Thèmes Américains, 12s; each. Music mailed
FREDERICK BLUME, 1129 Broadway, 2d door above 26th St. Branch, 206 Bowery.

WOODWARD'S COUNTRY HOMES. 150 Designs, $1 50, postpaid. GEO. E. WOODWARD, Architect, 191 Broadway, New York. Send stamp for catalogue of all new books on Architecture.

IMPROVED ALUMINIUM BRONZE HUNTING-CASED WATCHES.

$500.

I will cheerfully give the above amount to any one who can surpass my imitation of Gold Watches. Description of metal and goods sent free on demand.
Prices, from $16 to $25.
They are cut 0, D, with plunger. Address JULES D. HUGUENY, 7 VILLADOM, No. 44 Nassau Street, N. Y.
Call and examine for yourselves.

CHEAP MUSIC: MUSIC GRATIS!

1 CENT PER PAGE. Beethoven's Sonatas, complete, 479 pages, for 84; Beethoven's Symphonies, complete, 193 pages, $4 00; Beethoven's Symphonies (4 hands), complete, 206 pages, $6 00.
Overtures from 10 Operas, about 15 pp. each, 1c.; Overtures (4 hands) 50 Operas, about 15 pp. each, 2c. Operas Piano Solo, complete, 15 pp., 2c. Chopin's Waltzes, 61 pp., 75c. "Musical Times," 81 pp. annual, 20c. New Gratis. For $1 we will send "Gleason's Gazette" and a complete Opera gratis. Send the, for sample. Overtures and Catalogue. S. T. GORDON, 106 Broadway.

FURNITURE
OF POPULAR PRICES.

WM. H. LEE.
WARE ROOMS
169 Fulton Street,
N. Y.

Orders by Mail carefully executed.

RED JACKET AXE.

FEUDENBURGH, O., November 2, 1868.
LIPPINCOTT & BRADWELL:
Dear Sirs,—For the benefit of all whose desires or necessities make it their business to chop with an axe, I would say: Try the Red Jacket. It cuts deeper than the common kind. Being round on the cut, it does not stick in the wood. Every chopper with the common axe must discover that there is so much kling and strength expended in taking the axe out of the cut as in making the blow. This with the Red Jacket is all avoided, and from one third to one half the labor is saved in cutting the same quantity. Its outline is the same labor that is necessary with a common axe, you can easily trace it. Twenty-thirty-three per cent. more wood in the same time. You are safe in letting any friend, man or boy, use Red Jacket on these terms, and if it fails refund him his money.
Respectfully yours, HARRY BALDWIN.
For sale by all responsible hardware dealers and the manufacturers, LIPPINCOTT & BAKEWELL, PITTSBURGH, PA., Sole Owners of Colburn's and Red Jacket Patents.

CONSULAR SEAL
CHAMPAGNE,
AS IMPORTED FOR NEW YORK UNION CLUB.
TOMES, MELVAIN, & CO., Sole Importers, No. 6 MAIDEN LANE, NEW YORK.

CALENBERG & VAUPEL'S
AGRAFFE PIANOS
RECEIVED THE FIRST PREMIUM IN 1868.
Warerooms and Factory, 232 & 238 West 59th St., N. Y.

ELASTIC SPONGE
Makes the Lightest, Cleanest, Cheapest, and most Luxurious Bed-Pillow and Cushion of any known material.
No Moth. No Dust. No Packing.
A large number of Churches using it in Cushions referred to. Hospitals use it for Beds, and physicians recommend it. Its use by Churches, Public Halls, Theatres, as an advertisement, at a specially low rate to each is added to its other advantages.
For descriptive pamphlet and further particulars, address
ELASTIC SPONGE CO.,
36 HOWARD ST., NEW YORK.

Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Gout.
"After suffering for years from Sciatic Rheumatism, being eventually compelled to use crutches, I tried DR. POST'S RHEUMATIC REMEDY, which gave me immediate relief, and effected a rapid and permanent cure. EDWARD F. UNDERHILL, Clerk of State Assembly, Albany, N. Y."
I will send by mail a trial bottle of my Remedy, free, to any sufferer, on receipt of their address.
DR. S. POST, Room 3, No. 2 Beekman St., N.Y. City.

HITCHCOCK'S
HALF-DIME MUSIC.
Believing that whatever tends to amuse and instruct, to cultivate and develop the mind, or to elevate the character and diversify the nature of Home Enjoyments is ever welcome to the American People—this Series is respectfully presented. Our object is to make all classes—rich and poor—who have a desire for Music, to become possessed of all the popular productions of the day, without incurring an almost prohibitory expense. The price of each Number will be FIVE CENTS. The following are

NOW READY:

No. 1. Captain Jinks.....MACLAGAN.
" 2. Won't you Tell me why, Robin?.....CRAMER.
" 3. Will better Times a Wee.....
" 4. Blue Eyes.....MOLLOY.
" 5. A Song for Nought.....LLOYD.
" 6. Good-Bye, Sweetheart, Good Bye...HAYDN.
" 7. I really don't Know, I shall Marry.....
" 8. Praise of Trees.....FLOWERS.
" 9. Blooming Wreath Performing"...F. SCHUBERT.
" 10. Champagne Charlie.....LEE.
" 11. Skating Rink Polka.....WIENER.
" 12. Genevieve Waltz.....
" 13. Come Father, my Baby, my Darling.....
" 14. The Danish Boy's Whistle.....GEAPE.
" 15. Little Mosses Polka.....BLAMPHIN.
" 16. Maggie's Secret.....CRAMER.
" 17. He Love Me more over All. Sacred Song. Fenger.
" 18. The Old Cottage Clock.....MOLLOY.
" 19. Silver Threads.....CLIFTON and CROWELL.
" 20. The Rose of Erin.....BENEDICT.
" 21. Arm-en-ciel. Polka Mazurka.....STRAUSS.

SPECIAL NOTICE.
The above can be obtained at the Music, Book, and Periodical Stores throughout the United States, including the price, FIVE CENTS each, to the Publisher. Other choice selections will rapidly follow. HENRY C. HITCHCOCK, Publisher, 98 Sterling St., New York (Under St. Nicholas Hotel).
AGENTS WANTED.

DR DE JONGH'S
LIGHT-BROWN COD LIVER OIL
Is convincingly proved by the highest medical testimony, and by the practical test of successful experience for FORTY YEARS, to be the purest, the most efficacious, and beyond all question, the surest, the most speedy, and the most palatable of all kinds.
It is the only Cod Liver Oil that is rapid curative effects, the most economical of all kinds.

CONSUMPTION & DISEASES OF THE CHEST.
DR. DE JONGH'S OIL is administered with extraordinary success in all forms of consumption and diseases of the chest. No remedy so rapidly restores the exhausted strength, improves the nutritive functions, stops emaciation, checks the perspiration, quiets the cough and expectoration, and produces a more marked and favorable influence on the local malady.

DEBILITY OF ADULTS AND CHILDREN.
DR. DE JONGH'S OIL possesses unequaled and peculiar nutritive and restorative properties; hence its marvelous efficacy in debility of adults and children. It revives the natural appetite; improves the digestion, and regulates the functions of digestion and assimilation; and entirely restores health and strength to the most feeble and attenuated constitutions.

TRADE MARK.

DR. DE JONGH'S GENUINE OIL is shipped to the UNITED STATES in Imperial Half-Pint Bottles ONLY, with a Patent Trade-Mark Capsule, Dark blue opaque, white top, stamped with a blue fish on a red ground, and the signature of the wrapper, on each bottle, bears the TRADE SIGNATURE in lieu of those of DR. DE JONGH; of HOWARD GEEBY & CO.; and of HOWARD GEEBY & CO.
Sold by Druggists.
AMSAR, HARFORD & CO., 77, Strand, London.
SOLE ACCREDITED AGENTS IN AMERICA,
EDW'D GEEBY & CO., 38, Vesey St., New York.
Sold by all Druggists, at $1.50 per Bottle.
Pamphlets containing Medical opinions sent free on application.

THE WILSON SHUTTLE SEWING MACHINE. Cheaper than all others. AGENTS WANTED. Manufactured by THE WILSON SEWING MACHINE CO., Cleveland, O.

GENUINE OROIDE GOLD WATCH CO., Geneva, Switzerland,

Manufacture, on strictly scientific principles, style, finish durability, and elegance, the finest watch at the lowest cost of the most rare and costly description of Gold Watches. They are now furnished with Hunting Cases, Lever, Duplex Escapements, Open and Hunting Cases, Lever Chronometers, $120; Ladies' Patent Levers, Enamelled, $120; Gentlemen's Patent Levers, Patent Levers, $100; Chronometer Balances, $75; Lever Balances, $25. Elaborately engraved. Instrument Guaranteed for Five Years.
Purchasers, the most critical of our customers—have thoroughly demonstrated the solidity, durability, accuracy, and utility of our celebrated watches, and pronounce the Oroide Gold Watch Co. to be perfect time-keepers, and to retain their color equal to gold. Magnificent Oroide Gold Chains, $5, $6, $7, and $10. Express Co's will exhibit the Watch, &c., when required, on receipt of express charges both ways. Expressed every where. In pair for one delivery. Descriptive pamphlet sent free. CLUBS FOR SIX WATCHES WILL RECEIVE AN EXTRA WATCH FREE. The universal demand for our specialties have induced unprincipled persons to counterfeit our inimitable Watch with worthless metal watches that tarnish in a week—beware of them.
JOHN FOGGAN, President Oroide Gold Watch Co.
Only Office in the United States No. 78 Nassau Street, New York.
N.B.—Depot of the IMPROVED AMERICAN STEEL SPRING COLLARS. Sent by Mail, $1.

GENUINE WALTHAM WATCHES,
IN SOLID GOLD AND SILVER CASES ONLY,
AT EXTREMELY LOW PRICES.

Silver Hunting Watches.....	$18
Gold Hunting Watches, 18 carat Cases.....	$60
Gold Hunting Watches, Ladies' Size.....	$70

Every Watch warranted by special certificate from the American Watch Company. We will send these Watches by Express to any place, with bill to collect on delivery, upon the purchaser the privilege to open the package and examine the Watch before paying, and any watch that does not give satisfaction may be exchanged or the money will be refunded. Every one is requested to write for our Descriptive Price-List, which explains the different kinds with prices of each.
Please state that you saw this in Harper's Weekly.
Address in full,
HOWARD & CO., No. 619 Broadway, N.Y.

C.O.D. ELGIN C.O.D.
WATCHES.

We will send by express, to be paid for on delivery, the National Watch Company's WATCHES, at the following prices, viz.:
"J. T. Speyers," full plate, 18 size, steel balance, 7 jewels, 1 yr. Silver case..... $25 50
"Mat. Lallin," full plate, 18 size, expansion balance, 2 yr. Silver case..... 28 50
Either of the above in 1 oz. case, $2 additional.
Either of the above in 4 oz. case, $4 50 additional.
With the privilege of examining in the hands of the Express Agent before paying for the watch.
FULLER & CO.,
Successors to M. E. Chapman & Co.,
No. 47 LIBERTY ST., NEW YORK.

SMITH'S COUCH CARAMELS

Excellent for the Throat & Lungs. Sold by Druggists. J. F. SMITH & CO., 21 Park Row, N. Y.

Wm. Knake & Co.
MAGNIFICENT
Grand, Square, and Upright
PIANOS.
Unsurpassable for the Purity of their IMMENSE POWER OF TONE, GREAT SINGING QUALITY,
Evenness throughout the entire Scale, Easy Action, Workmanship, and Durability, and pronounced Unequaled by all the FAMED AMERICAN AND EUROPEAN PIANOS.
Every Instrument Warranted for Ten Years.
WAREROOMS,
650 BROADWAY, N.Y.

J. BAUER & CO.,
General Agents and Manufacturers and Importers of Musical Instruments, Strings, and Musical Merchandize.

DRUNKARD, STOP! C. C. BEERS, M.D., 29 Decatur Street, Boston, Mass., has cured Thousands of Drunkards. Best References. Harmless. Sent stamp for Circular.

STATE RIGHTS for sale of a valuable Patent lately received—a fortune in any State. Address INVENTOR, Box 3485, New York. Sample $2.

MARVIN & CO.'S
CHROME IRON
SAFES
ARE THE BEST IN THE WORLD.
265 Broadway, N.Y.

THIS IS IT! If you are selling Sewing Machines, send your name and P. O. address to us for particular advertisement. Only those that are in the business, or have been, need apply. Address A. E. CRASE & CO., Toledo, Ohio.

NEW BOOKS,
PUBLISHED BY HARPER & BROTHERS, NEW YORK.

CAST UP BY THE SEA; or, The Adventures of Ned Grey. By CAPTAIN MAYNE REID, Author of "The Albert N'Yanza," "The Sources of the Nile," &c., &c. With Ten Illustrations by Hurd. 12mo, Cloth, $1 75.

DIKE'S GREATER BRITAIN. Greater Britain: a Record of Travel in English-speaking Countries during the Years 1866 and 1867. By CHARLES WENTWORTH DILKE. With Maps and Illustrations. 12mo, Cloth, $2 00.

BELLOWS'S TRAVELS. Complete. The Old World in its New Face: Impressions of Europe in 1867-68. By HENRY WHEELER BELLOWS. 2 vols., 12mo, Cloth, $3 50. Vol. II. just ready.

Sent by mail, postage free, on receipt of price.

HARPER'S PERIODICALS.

TERMS FOR 1869:

HARPER'S MAGAZINE, One Year.....	$4 00
HARPER'S WEEKLY, One Year.....	4 00
HARPER'S BAZAR, One Year.....	4 00

HARPER'S MAGAZINE, HARPER'S WEEKLY, and HARPER'S BAZAR, to one address, for one year, $10 00; or any two for $7 00.

An Extra Copy of either the MAGAZINE, WEEKLY, or BAZAR will be supplied gratis for every Club of Five SUBSCRIBERS at $4 00 each, in one remittance; or, Six Copies for $20 00, without extra copy.

The Postage within the United States is for the MAGAZINE 24 cents a year, for the WEEKLY or BAZAR 20 cents a year, payable yearly, semi-yearly, or quarterly, at the office where received. The Postage to the Dominion of Canada must be accompanied with 12 cents additional for the MAGAZINE, or 10 cents for the WEEKLY or BAZAR, to pre-pay the United States postage.

HARPER'S WEEKLY

A JOURNAL OF CIVILIZATION

VOL. XIII.—No. 632.] NEW YORK, SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 6, 1869. [SINGLE COPIES, TEN CENTS. $4 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE.

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the Year 1869, by Harper & Brothers, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court of the United States, for the Southern District of New York.

THE Y. M. C. A. BUILDING, SAN FRANCISCO.

THIS elegant and commodious building, of which we give an illustration on this page, has been recently erected for the use of the Young Men's Christian Association in San Francisco. It is located on Sutter Street, and has a frontage of 54 feet with 120 feet depth. It consists of a basement and two stories, with a Mansard roof overlooked by a tower, and contains a reading-room, lecture-hall, a library, and lodging and bath rooms. There is also a gymnasium connected with the building. The front is built of blue sandstone wrought after the Venetian style. The building and lot cost $75,000.

"THE LONG SLEEP."

ON first glancing at this touching picture—and only at the first glance—some uncertainty may be felt as to M. RIVIÈRE'S intention, so ambiguous is the title (though, of course, on reflection, it must appear most significant and appropriate), and such excellent taste has the artist evinced in avoiding any of the more painful indications of death. For that the awful and mysterious counterpart of sleep—that sleep from which the soul only awakes, "the long sleep" of death—is represented, admits not of a moment's doubt. Death, in the welcome guise of tranquil, customary sleep, has come at last, as Friend and Liberator, to that aged shepherd in his chair. Every thing intimates the peaceful, not untimely, close of a long life spent in a monotonous round of humble duty with little to cheer, and none left to solace, or even now to mourn its ending, save the mute creatures, sole sharers of his cares and hearth. Perhaps the poor shepherd passed the village church-yard last evening, faint, worn, and infirm, and thought of death in sure and certain hope as he gazed wistfully toward the grave of her who had followed the dear ones gone before, or had alone remained to him after their probably enforced departure to tend flocks on wide Australian plains or prairies of the Far West—she who had perhaps till lately welcomed him, constant as sundown, with blazing hearth and boiling kettle. Alas! since then he has had himself to prepare the eventide meal, however fatigued with watching or recovering the last sheep of his flock. At length came the preparations for a meal of which he was never to partake. The fire burned up briskly, the kettle sang cheerfully, as usual, and the tired shepherd composed himself for a short nap while yet he should have to wait. But now the fire is gray and dead and cold, like him who put to it the living spark; the kettle has boiled out, its contents have vanished like his expired breath; and it has fallen on its side. The night stole on, and the dogs slunk to their corner without their wonted feed and caress. The night wore away without sound or sign from the sleeper. The life-giving, awakening rays of a new-born sun pour in at the casement, but they do not vivify or rouse the late slumberer. Yet—so gentle was the stroke of Death, so quietly did the spirit pass away—they reveal no change in his attitude: save, perhaps, that the head has sunk a little lower; the chest propping the jaw, which would have fallen. With instinctive apprehension the dumb animals try, by licking face or hands, and by uneasy, mournful whine, to waken their master. But in vain—in vain! The Night has come and enveloped him with its shadow. He is sleeping "the long sleep." His watching and watching are forever ended. He will never more call those faithful companions of solitude to the pastures on hill or plain; more will they hear his voice—never more His sleep is dreamless. He is absent a shepherd; he himself is gathered to the fold of the Good Shepherd.

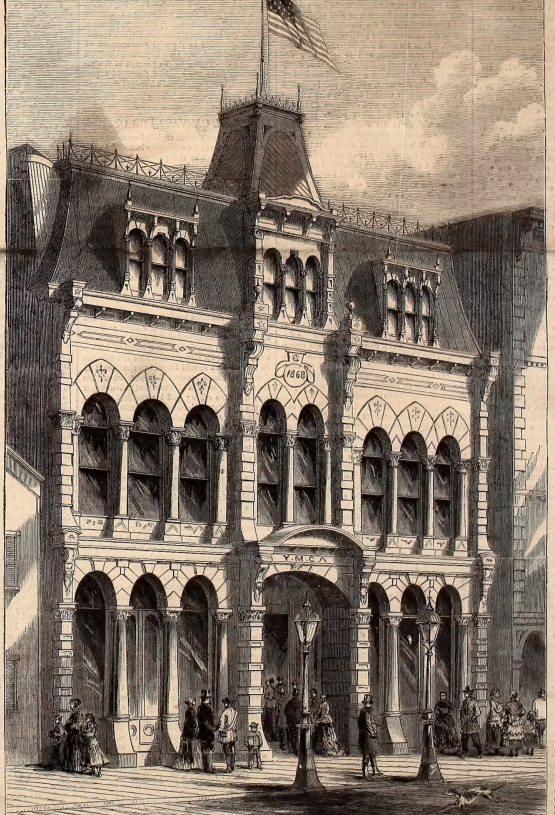
THE COLORED CONVENTION.

THE object of the National Convention of colored men, recently in session at Washington, was to secure therein the actual condition of the negro race in this country, and to consider the political and social problems which that race has to encounter as the result of emancipation. At the close of the Convention, on the morning of January 10, the Convention sent a committee of twelve to call upon General GRANT. Mr. LANGSTON, the Chairman, addressed the General as follows:

General GRANT:—In the name of 4,000,000 of American citizens; in the name of 700,000 electors of African descent—electors who fought, bravely, who defied intimidation, whose numbers have been reduced by assassination and murder in their efforts in the exercise of a franchise guaranteed by American law to every one clothed in the full livery of American citizenship, to secure to the late Presidential canvass the election of the nominees of the National Republican party to the high places to which they were named, we, the accredited delegates of the National Convention of Colored Men, the sessions of which in this city have just closed, come to present to you our congratulations upon your election to the Presidency of the United States. Permit us, General, to express, in this connection, our confidence in your ability and determination to execute the laws already enacted by our National Congress to preserve and protect the life, the liberty, and the rights, no less of the humblest subject of the government than those of the most exalted and influential. Called as you are to fill the Chair of State, your duties will be arduous and trying, and especially place in the reconstruction period of the Government, removing the rubbish, the accretions of the now dead slaveholding oligarchy) you will administer the government according to the principles of morals and law announced by the Saviour. In advance we bring to you, General, as a pledge of our devotion to our common country and Government, the liveliest sympathy of the colored people of the nation, and in their name we express the hope that all things connected with the administration of the Government, upon which you are so soon to enter as our Chief Magistrate, may be under Providence, so ordered for the maintenance of law and the conservation of freedom, that your name, inscribed high on the scroll of honor and fame, may go down to posterity, (and we pray and immortal), associated with the names of your illustrious predecessors in the Great Chair of State—WASHINGTON and LINCOLN. Again, General, we express our congratulations.

To this address General GRANT replied:

I thank the Convention, of which you are the representative, for the confidence they have expressed, and I sincerely believe that the colored people of the Nation may receive every protection which the laws give to them. They shall have my efforts to secure such protection. They should prove by their acts their advancement, prosperity, and obedience to the laws, worthy of all privileges the Government has bestowed upon them, and by their future conduct prove themselves deserving of all they now claim.



THE YOUNG MEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION BUILDING, SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 6, 1869.

THE SITUATION.

THE political character of the Senators just elected in various States shows, as is generally stated, that the radical sentiment of the dominant party still controls it. But the radical sentiment of a party generally controls it, and this is no fever of the Republican or of the Democratic party. In this State Mr. MORGAN was undoubtedly fatally injured as a candidate by his long political intimacy with Mr. WEED and Mr. SEWARD, and Mr. FENTON was elected, who was never friendly to Mr. WEED, and who has been always the favorite of the radical sentiment. But the Democrats showed the same tendency in casting a vote of honor for Mr. HENRY C. MURPHY as Senator: a man of high character and of acknowledged ability and accomplishment, but who holds the extreme Democratic view of the colored race. So, during the war and at its last National Convention, the Democratic party was under the control of its radical element.

Indeed, the radical element is the positive aggressive influence in a party. It is that which fights its battles and brings it into power. It is its heroic element—the spirit of the young David who challenges the towering giant of old tradition. The ADAMS and JAMES OTIS and the Sons of Liberty were the radicals of the Ante-Revolutionary Colonies. The conservative element in a party would never seriously complex an opposition nor carry the party to triumph. Indeed, the conservative spirit seldom appears until the party is established. But when it acquires responsibility, when something more than unsparing assault upon a policy or a principle is demanded, then it is remarked that all parties become conservative. The tendency is evident. Instead of broadly declaring a purpose, the party must now consult the means of attaining it. It must, therefore, be busy with possibilities, alternatives, delays. It is discovered, for instance, that to denounce extravagance and to practice economy are very different things. Out of power, CHARLES FOX loudly demands Catholic emancipation. In power, CHARLES FOX discovers what mountainous difficulties lie in the way.

But political radicalism is never a very precise term. We say that the election of the Senators shows the predominant radicalism of the party; not certainly the sum and the whole of phrase does not mean the extremest view in the party; it is merely the view that tends toward the extreme, rather than toward the middle ground. Thus it is probable that Mr. WEED would have preferred to remain a Whig, but he was too sagacious not to see that Whigs must choose either to become Republicans, or to go to the Democrats, or to sink into political cynicism with Democratic tendencies. Mr. WEED became a Republican, but, as an old Whig, the hostility to slavery which was the vital element of the party was unnatural to him. Many of the most earnest members and leaders of his new party would call Democrats, and many radical abolitionists. Both were repugnant to him. Therefore, when the inevitable war came, he was almost as bitter toward radicals as toward rebels; and when the crisis was reached, and safely passed in the Emancipation Proclamation, he was sure that it was an act of unspeakable folly that ruined the Union cause.

Mr. WEED illustrated the tendency toward the other party; Mr. SUMNER and Mr. CHASE, both of whom he cordially disliked, illustrate the tendency toward the extreme Republican view, seeking the same end as the abolitionists, but under constitutional forms. Of course, when politics reached a war, the latter spirit became supreme, and has controlled the country ever since. Its present force is shown by the selection of Senators. That spirit is in favor of the true American spirit of fair play and equal rights. It holds the Government firmly now, and, as we have seen, will continue to hold it upon one condition, and that is that it proves its faith by its works. If it loses power it will be a wanton act. No party in the country was ever more tolerant and more justly treated than the Republican. The old Democratic party, in its most powerful day, was never intrenched in the affections and conscience of the American people. It was a negative, not a positive, attachment. The Whigs were held to be the heirs of the old Federalists. They were called a silk-stocking party, a bank party, an expensive party, an aristocracy. They could be opposed only by the Democratic party, and the opposition implied to that standard, but there was no other. But the feeling of the Democratic party for ANDREW JACKSON, contrasted with that of the Republican party for ABRAHAM LINCOLN when he had fully proved himself, illustrates the difference. When JACKSON died, and VAN BUREN, MARCY, BENTON, CASS, and CALHOUN were the party magnates, it had prodigious power, but the interest of the American people neither respected nor loved it. It had no great, inspiring principle; but all its talent, all its force, were devoted to perpetuating a vast and most infamous injustice.

The people, as the elections constantly show, will not readily restore to power a party which has heretofore been so recreant to humanity; and seeing where its present strength lies, and the character of its course where it has unquestioned ascendency, they will not easily turn away from a party whose formative principle was equal rights, and whose traditions are emancipation and the salvation of the Union. But neither of those are the questions of today. It is with parties as with individuals. Not all the good deeds in the world will redeem for him to-day the confidence of those who once trusted and followed him. Not all the splendid services of the Republican party can retain for it the public trust if its own action repels it. If Congress should be wasteful and profuse, if it should show ignorance of its high duty, if legislation should be partial and extravagant, if the public service should be corrupt, and money notoriously carry the elections in which the party prevailed—if, in a word, the party action should show that it had forgotten its own great principles of honesty and justice, no loud assertion of extreme views, no spurious imitation of sentiment or of sympathy with the real radicalism of intelligence and honesty, could avert the fate of all who are weighed in the balance and found wanting.

THE REPORT OF Mr. WELLS.

No report from any Department has excited such attention and interest as that of the Special Commissioner of the Revenue, and it is one of the most valuable public documents ever issued. It is far from satisfactory to the most advanced free-traders, and it is bitterly denounced by the protectionists. For many years its author has been a profound student of the subject it discusses, and the great question of revenue by and with which he has made the latitude of knowledge and clearness and comprehensiveness of judgment which give the greatest weight to his conclusions. A truly scientific treatment of public revenue is so unusual that this Report is as novel as it is interesting; and it may serve to cheer the imagination with a glimpse of the financial millennium in which the country would find itself if great offices were held by men so thoroughly equal to their duties as PEIRCE to a mathematical computation, or SHERIDAN to a battle.

The portion of Mr. WELLS's Report which relates to internal taxation will doubtless command very general assent. He regards the system as one of the wisest and most successful measures of the war. While the war lasted the tax was not regarded by a majority of producers as oppressive, for the war called for extensive modifications became necessary, and have been wisely made. The reforms have occasioned the relinquishment of at least $170,000,000 of annual revenue, but they have so strengthened and stimulated the productive interests of the country as to make good the deficiency. Only a few such changes are necessary, in the Commissioner's opinion, and in the same direction—to make the system so complete as to yield the largest revenue with the minimum of disturbance to the wealth-producing interests of the country.

The part of the Report which is devoted to a discussion of customs duties from the most desirable for its strictly temperate and dispassionate tone. Indeed, Mr. WELLS comes to the discussion not as a protectionist or as a free-trader, but as a man of science, as a scientific statesman. What view do the facts justify when considered in their largest and subtlest relations? That is the question which he puts and answers. There must be a revenue, to begin with. Indirect taxation is more agreeable and more just. We have seen, moreover, that there must be an average of duties so high as to afford all that can be reasonably demanded for protection; and as more revenue is wanted than the tax upon imported luxuries alone will supply, the rest of the tax may properly be adjusted to favor those branches of industry most exposed to foreign competition. But the adjustment for the latter purpose must be decided upon the closest and most ample observation and reflection, and not upon the urgency of specific industries. Moreover, Mr. WELLS shows conclusively that the financial systems of the great European states are not founded upon theories of political economy at all, but upon views of enlightened self-interest; in other words, that they are really systems of protection. Thus in Great Britain any other policy than Free Trade would end the cost of manufacturing by increasing the price of food and raw material, and thus directly benefit the foreign competitor; so, as we understand the Free Trade argument, it does not deny the proposition so forcibly stated by Mr. WELLS. It merely alleges that perfect freedom of industry and exchange is necessarily the highest interest of every nation.

The Report proceeds to show by a curious variety of statistics that the present tariff fails in a great degree to check importations or to give desirable protection. This result the Commissioner attributes to ignorance and the consultation of specific interests instead of the general welfare. The consequence is, that while commerce is really exchange in kind for mutual benefit, our tariff system has so raised the cost of all domestic products that such exchange has become almost impossible, and we have to send out of the country gold and silver, which the foreigner least wishes, and which we can least afford to spare. Mr. WELLS, therefore, earnestly protests against any further general increase of the tariff, and recommends an enlargement of the free list; a reduction of some rates of duty, and, as an exception, the increase of a few others as a matter of revenue; a reduction of some rates with a view to their abolition, and the conversion as far as possible of the present ad valorem duties into specific, to insure certainty and equality in assessment and the prevention of undervaluation, and, finally, a prohibition of the individual privilege of travelers to import freely goods corresponding to their supposed social position.

The Commissioner enters at some length into the general question of the national credit and the return to a specie currency, and a most valuable letter is added to the Report upon the conversion of Great Britain, France, and the United States, by GEORGE WALKER, lately a Bank Commissioner of Massachusetts—a deeply-versed student and competent authority upon the subject. Indeed, the topics which the Report touches are discussed so concisely and pointedly that it is difficult to give in a brief space more than a very general and therefore unsatisfactory view of the Commissioner's elaborate and masterly treatise. It is impossible, however, to lay it down without the conviction that precisely such ability, industry, patience, knowledge, and insight as the Report reveals are indispensable to the wise management of the national finances. How important Congress considers it is shown by the passage of the resolution to print two hundred thousand copies for general distribution, and a hundred thousand for the Treasury.

PERSONAL CANVASS FOR OFFICE.

THERE is one custom rapidly becoming common which would be especially honored in the breach, and that is the personal canvass for high office. It must be assumed to be as disagreeable to the gentlemen concerned as to their fellow-citizens whose opinion they would most value; and nothing but very extraordinary considerations should induce a candidate for Senator, for instance, into the situation in which many candidates for Senator have been lately seen. When a Legislature is about to elect a Senator, the coming of gentlemen, with their friends and henchmen, occupying rooms at a hotel, to which every member who can be coaxed is carried to a personal interview, when all the circumstances of the case are considered, and the often notorious character of the friends, a strong suspicion of corruption.

For why should the candidate come? He can hold a constant levee but a few days at most, and if his character and ability have not already impressed the public with a sense of his fitness, how can his conversation for a few minutes do it? A man should be sent to the Senate of the United States because his general career has satisfied the people of the State that he is a proper person for the office; and his personal canvass of the Legislature inevitably assumes that this is not the case. It is surely enough to throw very grave doubts upon a candidate's character that he appears upon the eve of such an election to hold private interviews with the members of the Legislature.

Of course when a man is nominated to the House of Representatives he may very properly canvass his district. He is often selected for his ability in publicly discussing the questions of the hour, and he goes upon the stump not alone to secure his own election, but to prove the superiority of the principles and policy of his party. But it is not so with a Senatorial election. The party result is a foregone conclusion. The struggle is between members of the same party. There is therefore no discussion of principles—it is a question of candidates merely, and the candidate who is not willing to rest upon the general confidence in his character and fitness is the candidate who ought to be rejected.

It is not easy to imagine a legitimate occasion for such a personal canvass as we describe, and yet it is becoming a matter of course. Senators, obeying what they consider an unhappy necessity, leave their places in Congress when important business presses, hasten to the capitals of their States, and cover themselves with unbecoming humiliation because no truly creditable reason can be assigned for their conduct. Opposing candidates also appear. Is the Legislature to choose between them upon points of personal appearance or manner? Is the choice to be decided by intrigue or money? A Senator was lately elected in this State. Was the circumstance preceding that event, even although the candidates were not personally responsible for them, such as to command them to the sincere respect of honorable men? Besides the presence of the candidates, besides the notorious and shameless bribery which was practiced in their name, although we have certainly no right to say by their authority, the public business of the State was delayed for three weeks by the postponement of the appointment of the Legislative Committees until after the Senatorial election. The Speaker is a gentleman of character and intelligence: he must, therefore, all the more plainly perceive the painful suspicion to which his delay necessarily gave rise. It at least afforded opportunity to those who would improve it to make promises in regard to places which were only bribes and meant to be bribes.

Senator SUMNER and Senator WADE, of this State, used to repel with indignation in the Constitutional Convention the insinuation that there was great legislative corruption. Like the old poet, they looked into their own hearts and spoke. But we should like to know their theory of postponing the appointment of the committees. There seems to be coming to a point where public honor is a disgrace. Success in political life is becoming presumptive evidence of knavery. "Have you been to the Albany auction?" said one gentleman, alluding to the Senatorial contest. It may seem a hazardous assertion, but there is a public opinion in this country which requires self-respect in public life, and which feels that a man is truly honored in being chosen Senator only when, as in the case of CHARLES SUMNER, his election and his re-election are unsought and unbought.

THE BRITISH TREATY.

OUR friends of the daily papers are so very enterprising that it is sometimes difficult to determine when the news really is. Every important fact is announced with great emphasis, and just as every body has mastered it and the public judgment is forming, there follows some serious correction which instantly warns the public that even newspapers may err. What, for instance, is the exact scope of the new English treaty? We have had what was called the text of it, and we have had the modifications and the assertions that it was not the text. Now the State Department has absolute control of it, and it is very foolish to allow any but an authorized copy to be published, if it is to be published at all. There is, indeed, no occasion for secrecy. The whole such a paper has been concluded and signed by the agents of the two governments, the sooner its details are known the better.

But the copy that has been published and corrected probably contains the substance of the treaty, which is very simple. It is an agreement for the settlement of claims against the two governments which have arisen since the last treaty in 1853. Each government is to name two Commissioners, and these four an arbitrator. Then each can not agree, and each name one, and when his services are required it shall be determined by lot which of the two it shall be, and the arbitrator's decision is to be final. But if any two of the Commissioners prefer, in any particular case, that some friendly sovereign or head of a government should arbitrate, the Commissioners shall report to their governments, and they shall decide upon the umpire. The Commission is of course to hear all evidence, and if demanded, oral evidence upon each side. Every claim must be presented within six months of the first meeting, and all money awarded must be paid in coin, within one instead, within eighteen months from the decision. The ratifications of the treaty must be exchanged within twelve months from the date of signing, which was the 14th of January, 1869.

Of course in such a treaty the point upon which Mr. SEWARD was understood to insist so strenuously was left out. Of course, Great Britain does not openly concede that the concession of maritime belligerent rights to the Southern States was wrong. If she did concede it, the American claim, as the Nation very truly remarks, would be at once the total sum of our maritime losses during the war. But this concession is really unnecessary to settle the treaty, for the essential question can not be avoided. Claims will be made for losses by ships that were arrested in British ports. The reply will be that they were belligerents; the rejoinder, that they were not lawful belligerents; and here is the crucial question directly presented. For there is to decide, and then the governments are to regard his decision as final. This is, in fact, leaving to the umpire the settlement of the one great point international law, whether maritime rights of war shall be granted to a belligerent without a port, and who is compelled to destroy his prizes at sea. If they may be, foreign governments can concede such maritime rights to the Indians, upon whom we are now making war, and it will be for Great Britain to determine whether she wishes to abide by such a principle.

The duty of the umpire is plainly most important, but we are inclined to think that he may as well decide the question. The United States are certainly not very much imperiled by a judgment either way. If the arbitrator concludes that the action of the British Government was wrong our claims are paid, and that government is convicted of a most humiliating blunder. If he decides the other way, the commerce of England will be annihilated whenever another Abyssinian or Indian war begins. There can be little doubt which decision the British Government would prefer. So far, then, the proposed treaty is a skillful counterpoise of that government upon the essential point. It doubtless feels that its position is untenable, and would be disastrous to itself; therefore, under the dry form of leaving a specific claim for damages to be settled by an arbitrator, it forecasts his decision and yields in advance. There is another vital point in the treaty. The claims of British subjects upon this government is meant the toleration by the United States, as a subject of serious debate, of the demands of any class of holders of rebel obligations of any kind, the rejection of the treaty should be immediate and emphatic, and the Minister who has so shamed his position should be instantly recalled. This is the first point to determine; but if the treaty does not contain this gross insult, it does not seem to us that the United States will suffer by its ratification.

"A SECRET CHAPTER OF HISTORY."

IF NAPOLEON BONAPARTE had never been born or if CHARLEMAGNE had been an idiot—what then? This kind of profound and useful inquiry is suggested by the revelation of what is called "a secret chapter of history" during the war. A long story is told to the effect that, while General GRANT was before Vicksburg and General BANKS before Port Hudson, the latter was ordered to supersede the former and virtually declined, wherefore the success, the greatness, the Presidency of General GRANT are owing to the forbearance of General BANKS. The story is clumsily told because the real point is not made apparent. The emphasis is laid upon the forbearance of General BANKS, when it should be laid upon the reverse of it; namely, that while President LINCOLN and the great authorities of the Government had lost faith in the hero of Donelson and Shiloh, one person—who in view of a new Presidency is severely nameless—recognized the essential greatness and confessed his own inferiority.

It certainly does seem very surprising that General BANKS, after his unfortunate military experience, should have preferred not to add to it what was supposed to be the foregone conclusion of a repulse at Vicksburg, and if the authorities at Washington ever thought of asking him, as a soldier, to do what they thought General GRANT could not do, we can only be the more devoutly grateful for our final triumph. The story as told is wholly improbable, and the only real interest about it is the inquiry why it is told just at this time, and in a form which, contains BURLEIGH'S most solemn nod, is telegraphed from Washington, that General BANKS states that he never authorized the publication of the story. That is a most suspiciously pregnant negative.

The most ludicrous interpretation of the present publication of the story is, that it is an attempt to raise General BANKS to the Cabinet. But suppose it to be literally true—suppose that General BANKS was ordered to supersede General GRANT, and delayed or declined, what then? It by no means follows that he did it from any perception of GRANT'S ability, or from any desire to do him justice. The action was just as likely to be due to a wish to keep himself out of the scrape into which General GRANT was supposed to be falling. But let us assume the most favorable view to General BANKS; let us agree that he did recognize the military genius of GRANT, and for that reason remonstrated against superseding him. Was an act under the circumstances would very naturally be considered a friendly act by General GRANT, but what is to do with the Cabinet? In what way does it prove the kind of character and capacity that the President properly seeks? For suppose, again, that the order had been sent to General BANKS, and he had instantly obeyed it and had superseded General GRANT, is it probable that the result would have been what it was? Vicksburg would have fallen, and that the subsequent career of GRANT would have been BANKS'?

Probably nobody thinks so. But, for the reasons that have been given, General BANKS was conscious that he was not a great soldier, he should be made Secretary of War. Self-knowledge is certainly valuable in a Secretary of War, but if every soldier who felt that GRANT was his military superior should be called into the Cabinet, that body would be a very Vicksburg of its own. Whether the story as told be false or true, it has nothing whatever to do with General BANKS's fitness for a place in the Cabinet, and its publication can, in that view, have been of the least service to him.

WANTED A KING.

SPAIN is apparently about to undertake a remarkable experiment. The elections have returned an overwhelming majority of delegates in favor of a monarchy. But the old monarchy has been overthrown, and there must be a king and royal family found for the occasion. Various Barbikins have been named; but the most original suggestion is that of the Tribune's correspondent, that a senator of the United States might be agreeable to one of the Spanish parties now looking out for a monarch. The DUKE OF AOSTA, the heir-apparent of Italy, is said to be willing to renounce his Italian heritage and to take his chance in Spain; while the DUKE OF MONTPENSIER thinks that he is rather the best candidate who has yet offered.

If an ex-Senator of the United States would answer, the supply is so ample that our own peace might be disturbed by a Spanish war of the succession. But why not an ex-President? All that we have to do is to find the true-blue school. Mr. FILLMORE would make a most presentable monarch. Mr. PIERCE could bring his military experience to bear in the rule of countries should prevail, and in royal questions it generally seems to prevail, it might be urged that, as they were both very poor Presidents, they may prove very good kings. Indeed, the still fresher hand is Mr. JOHNSON, who will be at complete leisure after the 4th of March. There can be no objection to him upon the Bourbon score, at least. Imagine also how grateful it would be to him to address his faithful subjects and exclaim, "Bless you, my children, I am stepping around the entire circle of human honor. I began as Alderman of my native village. I have been Representative of my district, Governor of my State, Senator, Vice-President, and President of the United States, and King of Spain. I do not despair of being Emperor of Turkey, and why not Pope of Rome? I will now leave with you as a particular curiosity a few copies of the Constitution of my country which I have rescued from the clutches of a usurper, and upon the wise use of its government, and then proceed to call your attention to My Policy." Happy Spain! Happy King JOHNSON! But such visions are too good to last.

It is a little late to improvise a monarchy, and at a time when the political convictions of the world are rapidly turning to republican governments, to play at Kings and Queens. The device of crowning any nobleman or any military chieftain is absurd. The only way in which the experiment is to select some scion of the old royal house, however remote, and place him or her upon the throne, with a popular Constitution. The King or Queen was of royal family, and so was the wife of WILLIAM III. The times will not tolerate any pavenu or plebeian royalty, unless there is another NAPOLEON BONAPARTE to be found—and if there were, he would already have crowned himself. Tradition is essential to monarchy. The whole thing is a mockery if it has its genuine air. No King PRIM nor King ESPARTERO will answer. Nothing will serve but some European or American Bourbon.

LITERARY.

"CAST Up by the Sea," just published by HURST & Company, is a romance of the sea, by SAMUEL W. BAKER, the distinguished traveler and author of the "Albert Nyanza Great Basin of the Nile," and "Ismail's Court" Wandering in Ceylon," etc. This work is unabridged and unadulterated, and contains ten beautiful illustrations. It is the only complete and illustrated edition published in this country. The story is well written, and is the most intensely exciting narrative of adventure which has been published for many years. The following "Dedication" by the author shows the character and purpose of the work:

"Since the publication of 'Albert N'yanza' and the 'Nile Tributaries of Abyssinia,' I have received numerous letters from boys to whom I was entirely unknown, and who are at this moment unknown to me, except through their appreciation of my correspondence. Their letters were written in the youthful enthusiasm of the moment, and they spoke freely of the success and of our African journeys, they had closed the book, and, full of sympathy, they wrote to the author. They spoke as the sea speaks to a boyish admiration for a successful struggle with difficulties.

"As a proof of the value that I attach to these warm expressions of interest taken by the young in our past adventures, I now dedicate to all boys (from eight years of age to eighty) a story which, combined with certain facts, that will, I trust, relieve the dreariness of a long Christmas evening.

"At the same time that I have endeavored to avoid all improbabilities, I must apologize for the great latitude in geographical liberty in producing an eclipse of the sun which is not in the almanac."

DOMESTIC INTELLIGENCE.

CONGRESS.

January 13:

In the Senate, Mr. Sherman reported from the Finance Committee a bill to authorize contracts to be appropriates one hundred and forty millions annually out of the 5 per cent. loan, to be applied to the payment of the interest and reduction for the principal of the bonded debt of the United States and bonds therefore authorized. A provision is made for a change of bond-lender notes for gold, per cent. ten-forty gold bonds; gold notes to be issued to the amount of coin in the Treasury for the redemption of 5 per cent. securities in the city of New York; but the amount of such notes shall only equal the amount of legal notes surrendered for bonds. The last section authorizes banks to issue demand notes, payable in coin to the extent of sixty-five per cent. on bonds deposited by them, regardless of the present limitation of five hundred millions.

In the House, a resolution was adopted directing the Committee on Public Expenditures to investigate the terms of the contract made with Wells, Fargo, & Co. for the transportation of the overland mails, and the manner of its fulfillment. A resolution was adopted, 90 to 67, that in the present condition of national finances Congress ought not to vote for any more bounties or bonds or money to railroad corporations or local enterprises, but that the whole resources of the country should be so directed as to relieve the people from the burdens of taxation. Several amendments were adopted to the Naval Appropriation bill, which was then passed.—A resolution was adopted, directing the Controller of the Currency to report to the House what National Banks had been allowed to exchange gold-bearing interest bonds for the currency bonds issued to the Pacific Railroads, also what banks had refused further shares in the Pacific Railroads, and were doing business under State charters, and retaining their privileges as National Banks.—Mr. Boutwell reported from the Committee on Banks and Currency the Senate resolution providing that persons now holding office under the Provisional Governments of Virginia and Georgia, who can not take the test oath, shall be removed, and not vacancies filled from the list of rejected persons. An amendment recommended by the Committee provides that the resolution shall not affect those whose names have been relieved from their political disabilities, and that the act shall take effect thirty days after its passage. The amendment was agreed to and the resolution passed.

January 19:

In the Senate a resolution was adopted calling upon the President for information relative to the fisheries captured by the patriots of Alaska.—A bill regulating the tariff on copper was passed.

In the House, a resolution to print 100,000 copies of Commissioner Wells's Report was adopted.—A bill was passed to preserve the purity of elections in the territories, 61 to 84.—The Senate substitute for the House bill regulating judicial proceedings, in certain cases was passed. It provides for the transfer from State to Federal Courts of suits by or against foreign or common carriers for property destroyed in transitu in consequence of the late rebellion.

January 21:

In the Senate, a bill was passed providing for the representation in the Senate of the State of Nebraska, reported by the Naval Academy.—The contested Anderson-Swisher case was so decided that Mr. Anderson retains his seat.

NEWS ITEMS.

It appears that two clerks were burned to death in the Caldwell & Avery store-room, as reported by fire in Philadelphia.

The Indiana Legislature has elected Hon. D. D. Pratt as Senator in place of Hendricks. Seven other Democrats were elected on January 20, and seven New York elected ex-Governor Fenton; Massachusetts, for the fourth term, elected Charles Sumner; and the elected Hannibal Hamlin; Missouri elected Carl Schurz; Pennsylvania elected John Scott; Rhode Island, in place of the present Democratic Senator, Mr. Buckalew; Delaware re-elected Willard Saulsbury; Iowa, James Harvard (father and son), the former to fill the unexpired term of Senator Hubbell, deceased, and the latter to be the successor of his father after the 4th of March. Mr. Ramsey, of Minnesota, for the term elected Zachariah Chandler, who has served in the Senate since the thirty-third Congress. Mr. Ramsey was elected for the second term Alexander Ramsey.

During the month of the past year there were 11,581 deaths in tenement houses, out of a total of less than 30,000 in the city.

The President has withdrawn his nomination of Perry Fuller to be Collector of the Port of New York, and sent in the name of William H. Webster. Below are the nominations of Benjamin Bulkley and Willett to be Assistant Engravers in the Regular Army in place of Rawdon, Wright, Hoyt, and General Hitchcock, deceased.

Bierstedt's painting, "The Reception at the White House," which was pronounced by critics to be the finest picture in the country, was destroyed by fire in the Derby Athenæum on the 18th of January. It was insured for $5,000, and was painted upon the occasion of his inauguration.

The Legislature last year, 1868, school-houses have been erected in West Virginia. Three hundred and fifty-two school-houses have been erected in the State of Texas, and the Peabody fund is accomplishing important results.

Above one hundred men of Secretary Seward's escort and army and two thousand militia for the suppression of the Know-Nothings.

The New Hampshire Democratic Convention have nominated Asa Fowler for Governor.

Half of the business portion of Troy, Pennsylvania, was destroyed by fire January 19.

The British bark Cadet arrived at Philadelphia January 19, with a voyage of 100 days from Calcutta. The crew had suffered terribly from starvation, having been on only two days' provisions, and would have starved to death had they not been able to hail another vessel, from which they received supplies.

FOREIGN NEWS.

The death of Leopold Ferdinand, Prince Royal of Belgium and Duke of Brabant, has been announced.

Advices from the United States have been received that the dissatisfaction with the Juarez Government is becoming more general. Many of the Governors of the States of Guerrero, Alatemo, and others, are at the head of a formidable insurrection against the Juarez party.

Death of the brother of Juarez.

The Spanish Government has authorized Cuba to contribute to the Conservative Party in the Constituent Cortes, and the Island of Porto Rico elevens.

The young Monarch of Spain, who recently came of age and into the possession of $1,500,000 of annual income, has appointed Count Reus his Chief Equerry.

The French Corps Legislatif was opened by the Emperor in person.

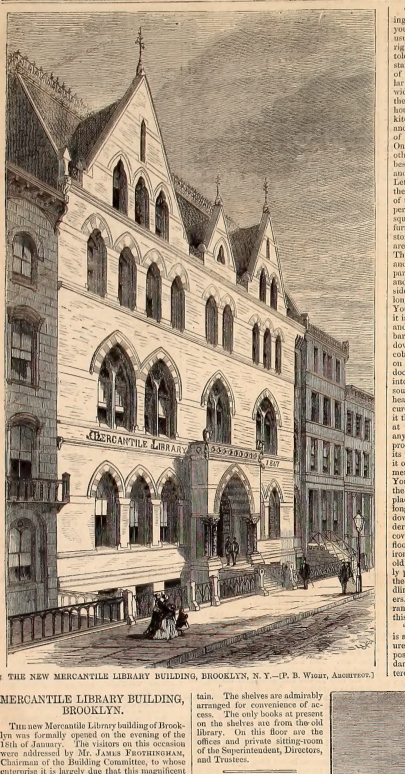
Dispatches from India report that sharp shocks of earthquake have been felt across Alcutta and Bombay.

It is reported, on the authority of a Parisian journal —the Gazette de France—that peace has been concluded on the terms of the late Conference.

It is said that the Chronique des Arts that there are altogether about twenty millions of volumes in the public libraries in Europe. In France alone there are about 2,333,000—or nearly one-third of the whole; in Italy, 1,700,000; in Prussia, 1,000,000.

The Nineteenth Œcumenical Council will be held in Rome this year, and preparations are being made to render the meeting a great success. It is stated that already the bishops of Europe and America are at the head of the most distant parts of the globe to be present at the ceremony. Among the most distinguished will be the archbishop at Jerusalem on the day of Pentecost, and consist of "Parthians, Medes, and Elamites, and inhabitants of Mesopotamia, Judea, and Cappadocia, Pontus and Asia, Phrygia and Pamphylia, Egypt, and the parts of Libya about Cyrene, and strangers of Rome, Jews also, and proselytes, Cretes, and Arabians."

The Council is to be called the Council of Rome, and Roumists believe that it will be second to no assembly that has ever met. Among those who received an invitation to be present at the forthcoming Council were the Patriarch of Constantinople; but the Patriarch declines.



THE NEW MERCANTILE LIBRARY BUILDING, BROOKLYN, N. Y.—(P. B. WIGHT, ARCHITECT.)

MERCANTILE LIBRARY BUILDING, BROOKLYN.

THE new Mercantile Library building of Brooklyn was formally opened on the evening of the 18th of January. The visitors on this occasion were addressed by Mr. JAMES FETHINGHAM, Chairman of the Building Committee, to whose enterprise it is largely due that this magnificent structure has been erected. He gave an interesting account of the progress of the enterprise since 1862. The first subscription was of $4,000 by Mr. CHITTENDEN; by December, 1864, there had been raised $30,000, and by the next February $80,000. Mr. CHITTENDEN then doubled his subscription, provided the necessary sum should be subscribed by June. In May, 1865, the subscription had reached $123,000. The Library building alone cost $125,000, and the office buildings on each side cost $25,000. The entire cost of ground and buildings was $227,000. This was all paid but $20,390. Twelve thousand five hundred dollars was subscribed on the spot. The main building fronts 75 feet on Montague Street, near the City Hall. The architecture is modern Gothic, and the building of red brick. The entrance is by a lofty porch, supported upon variegated marble pillars. A wide hall leads to the lecture and general reading room, occupying the rear part of the first-floor. This room is about 60 by 75 feet, and is furnished with tables and stands for newspaper and periodical files, and has a lecture stand at one side. On the left of the entrance-hall, and in front of the lecture-room, is the ladies' reading-room. This is a large and handsomely furnished apartment, where ladies may enjoy the benefits of the library, and at the same time the comforts and even luxuries of their parlors. Opposite this is the ladies' dressing-room. A broad stairway leads from the hall to the second story. On this floor is the library, with shelves enough to accommodate thousands of volumes more than they now contain. The shelves are admirably arranged for convenience of access. The only books at present on the shelves are from the old library. On this floor are the offices and private sitting-room of the Superintendent, Directors, and Trustees.

"Instead of entering the East Room, as you approach it by the usual way, turn to the right and go down a tolerably well-lighted stairway to the level of the basement or cellar of the building. A wide paved hall runs the entire length of the house. On one side a kitchen, store-rooms, and other apartments of similar character. On the opposite are other store-rooms, and besides vaults for coal and for other purposes. Let us enter one of these near the east end of the building. It is perhaps 30 or 40 feet square. In it are the furnaces. The floor is stone. The furnaces are bricked over. There are piles of coal and wood in various parts. It is not tidy, and there is on all sides the litter that belongs to such a place. You shut the door and it is gloomy and quiet, and through the iron bars across the windows you can see the cobwebs and the dust on the panes. The door which leads out into the area on the south is thick and heavy, and barred securely. As you face it there is another door at the right, a heavy one also. If curiosity, or any previous information of what is hidden there, prompts you, open it. It will grate a little on its unused hinges. There is just room to swing it open, as it turns inward, and the small apartment is nearly filled with a variety of trash. You enter part way and then are obliged to shut the door in order to move around. It is a small place, almost like a cell. It may be ten feet long and eight wide. There is one grated window, dim with dust, looking out into an area under a porch. There is an old work-bench, half covered with worn-out coal scuttles, and on the floor are some portions of broken grates and old iron pipes, and a heap of coal and kindling. An old wine-box, half full of musty feathers, evidently pulled out of a ragged cushion which lies on the window-sill beside it. On the coal and kindling is a lot of shavings half mixed with feathers. On that heap of rubbish, in this subterranean cell of the White House, lies a stone with this inscription [see illustration].

"The stone upon which this inscription is cut is a species of red sandstone very similar in texture to that so commonly in use for building purposes in our Eastern cities. Its surface has grown dark by age. A considerable piece has been battered off, and there the grain looks fresh. The block is rectangular, the upper surface being two feet three inches long, by eighteen inches wide, and the thickness about nine inches.

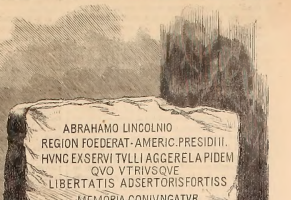
"The translation of the inscription, which will vary slightly with the word for which the letter D in the last line but one is an abbreviation, has been thus rendered:

"'The citizens of Rome dedicate this Stone, taken from the Tomb of SERVIUS TULLIUS, to ABRAHAM LINCOLN, President for the Second Term of the United States of America, by which the Memory of either brave defender of Liberty may be joined to that of the other. A.D. 1865.'

"The story of this block, as told by those about the White House, is as follows:

"It arrived in the autumn of 1865 or beginning of 1866. It was allowed to lie on the porch of the White House for a number of weeks. One side of the box which held it was at length broken off. The exposed side was then turned up against the building. Some, who knew its character, criticising the treatment it was receiving severely, it was taken inside, and for some time formed a sort of foot-stool under a window, where orderlies and attendants sat. Finally, after several moves, by none of which was its position bettered, it found its way into the cellar when the White House was being renovated last summer, and from the cellar it was allowed to rest at length in the cell where it lies to-day. Whether this account of the occupants themselves concerning its treatment be correct, certain it is that the block as described, with the inscription as given, is in this dark coal-hole in the cellar of the White House; and in any case it is a disgrace to the present occupant that it lies there—it is more than disgraceful, it is infamous.

"In this connection, though the story or the legend of SERVIUS TULLIUS is familiar to every reader, it will be interesting to note the parallel between the old Roman King and President LINCOLN. The King was of humble origin. He was a soldier in his early manhood. He was kind to the poor, heartily espoused the cause of the masses, strove constantly to elevate them, and especially to confer upon them the right to vote. Upon announcing his determination to introduce a free form of government he was assassinated by his son-in-law, who, uniting with the discontented Senators, was able to bid defiance to the resentment of his subjects. The memory of SERVIUS lived long among the common people; their veneration for him constantly increased; and the usurper with his followers lived in daily fear lest the people should rise in power and restore the



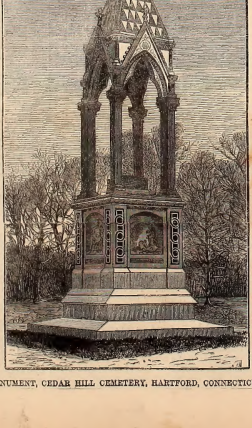
THE REJECTED STONE.

THE STONE WAS TAKEN FROM THE TOMB OF SERVIUS TULLIUS, AND BY THE CITIZENS OF ROME SENT TO WASHINGTON TO BE DEDICATED TO THE MEMORY OF ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

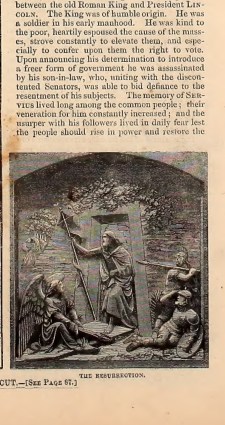
THE REJECTED STONE.

THE curious monumental fragment of which we give a sketch on this page is interesting to our readers on account of its origin, the history of its transmission to Washington, and its subsequent treatment by the present occupants of the White House. A correspondent of the Cincinnati Gazette, some time ago, contributed the following details in regard to this stone. Since this account was written the stone has been removed to the rotunda of the Capitol at Washington.

THE PASSION.



THE BEACH MONUMENT, CEDAR HILL CEMETERY, HARTFORD, CONNECTICUT.—(SEE PAGE 97.)



THE RESURRECTION.

laws of the martyr. From all this the full beauty of the inscription, and the character of the sentiment which prompted the gift, will appear; and stern voices will speak to all from out that past of 2400 years in condemnation of ANDREW JOHNSON'S treatment of Mr. LINCOLN'S memory."

DEVEREUX'S DREAM.

I GIVE you this story only at second-hand; but you have it in substance—and he wasted few words over it—as Paul Devereux told it me.

It was not the only queer story he could have told me about himself if he had chosen, by a good many, I should say. Paul's life had been an eminently unconventional one: the man's face certified to that—hard bronzed, war-worn, seamed and scarred with strange battle-marks—the face of a man who had dared and done most things.

It was not his custom to speak much of what he had done, however. Probably only because he and I were little likely to meet again that he told me this I am free to tell you now.

We had come across one another for the first time for years that afternoon on the Italian Boulevart. Paul had landed a couple of weeks previously at Marseilles, from a long yacht-cruise in southern waters, the monotony of which, we heard, had been agreeably diversified by a little pirate-hunting and slaver-chasing—the evil tongues called it piracy and slave-running; and certainly Devereux was quite equal to either métier; and he was about starting on a promising little filibustering expedition across the Atlantic, where the chances were he would be shot, and the certainty was that he would be starved. So perhaps he felt inclined to be a trifle more communicative than usual, as we sat late that night over a blazing pyre of logs and in a cloud of Cavendish. At all events he was, and after this fashion.

I forget now exactly how the subject was led up to. Expression of some philosophic incredulity on my part regarding certain matters, followed by a ten minutes' silence on his side pregnant with unwonted words to come—that was it, perhaps. At last he said, more to himself, it seemed, than to me:

"'Such stuff as dreams are made of.' Well, who knows? You're a Sadducee, Bertie; you call this sort of thing, politely, indigestion. Perhaps you're right. But yet I had a queer dream once."

"Not unlikely," I assented.

"You're wrong: I never dream, as a rule. But, as I say, I had a queer dream once; and queer because it came literally true three years afterward."

"Queer indeed, Paul."

"Happens to be true. What's queerer still, my dream was the means of my finding a man I owed a long score, and a heavy one, and of my paying him in full."

"Bad for the payee!" I thought.

Paul's face had grown terribly eloquent as he spoke those last words. On a sudden the expression of it changed—another memory was stirring in him. Wonderfully tender the fierce eyes grew; wonderfully tender the faint, sad smile, that was like sunshine on storm-scathed granite. That smile transfigured the man before me.

"Ah, poor child—poor Lucille!" I heard him mutter.

That was it, was it? So I let him be. Presently he lifted his head. If he had let himself get the least thing out of hand for a moment, he had got back his self-mastery the next.

"I'll tell you that queer story, Bertie, if you like," he said.

The proposition was flatteringly unusual, but the voice was quite his own.

"Somehow I'd sooner talk than think about—her," he went on, after a pause.

I nodded. He might talk about this, you see, but I couldn't. He began with a question—an odd one:

"Did you ever hear I'd been married?"

Paul Devereux and a wife had always seemed and been to me a most unheard of conjunction. So I laconically said,

"No."

"Well, I was once, years ago. She was my wife—that child—for a week. And then—"

I easily filled up the pause; but, as it happened, I filled it up wrongly; for he added:

"And then she was murdered."

I was not unused to our Paul's stony style of talk; but this last sentence was sufficiently startling.

"Eh?"

"Murdered—in her sleep. They never found the man who did it, either, though I had Dowden and all the Rue de Jérusalem at work. But I forgave them that, for I found the man myself, and killed him."

He was filling his pipe again as he told me this, and he perhaps rammed the Cavendish in a little tighter, but that was all. The thing was a matter of course; I knew my Paul well enough to know that. Of course he killed him.

"Mind you," he continued, kindling the black bride-cake the while—"mind you, I'd never seen this man before, never known of his existence, except in a way that—however, it was this way:

He let his grizzled head drop back on the cushions of his chair, and his eyes seemed to see the queer story he was telling enacted once more before him in the red hollows of the fire.

"As I said, it was years ago. I was waiting here in Paris for some fellows who were to join me in a campaign we'd arranged against the African big game. I never was more fit for any thing of that sort than I was then. I only tell you this to show you that the thing can't be accounted for by my nerves having been out of order at all.

"Well, I was dining alone that day, at the Café Anglais. It was late when I sat down to my dinner in the little salon as usual. Only two other men were still lingering over theirs. All the time they staid they bored me so persistently with some confounded story of a murder they were discussing that I was once or twice more than half inclined to tell them so. At last, though, they went away.

"But their talk kept buzzing abominably in my head. When the waiter brought me the evening paper the first thing that caught my eye was a circumstantial account of the probable way

"AND I KNELT ABOVE HIM, WITH THE KNIFE IN MY HAND THAT WAS STAINED WITH HER BLOOD."

THE NATIONAL COLORED CONVENTION IN SESSION AT WASHINGTON, D. C.—SKETCHED BY THEOD. R. DAVIS.—[SEE FIRST PAGE.]

the fellow did his murder. I say probable, for they never could bring it home, as you will see presently, they could only suppose how it occurred.

"It seemed that a well-known Paris banker, who was accustomed beyond doubt to have left one station alive and well, and with a couple of hundred thousand francs in a leathern sac under his seat, arrived at the next station the train stopped at with his throat cut and mains all his money, except a few bank-notes to no great amount, which the assassin had been wise enough to leave behind him. The train was a night express on one of the northern lines; the banker had taken a place in a first-class carriage; and the murder must have taken place between midnight and one, at, next morning. The train, I presume supposed—rightly enough, I think—that the murderer must have entered the carriage from without, and have left it the same. Indeed there were no signs of any struggle—opened the sac, taken what he wanted, and retreated, loot and all, by the way he came. I fully understood my particular writer's opinion that the murderer was an uncommonly cool and clever individual, especially as I knew he got clear off and was never afterward laid hands on.

"When I had done that I thought I had done with the affair altogether. Not at all. I was regularly ridden with this confounded murder. You see the banker was rather a swell; and the body knew him; and that, of course, made it so shocking. So every body kept talking about it, and they were talking about him at the Cafés, and over the buvcarat and bouillotte at La Tonnaise's later. To escape him I went to bed and smoked myself to sleep. And then a queer thing came to pass. I had a dream—I who never dream; and this is what I dreamed:

"I saw a small room in a country that I knew. A starless night hung over it like a pall. I saw a narrow track running through it, straight, both ways, for hours. Something kept still upon the track with a hurrying rush and roar. This something, that at first had looked like a red-eyed devil, I saw, as it drew full of dire, involved itself, as I watched it, presently, into a more convenient and familiar shape. I saw, in along, though, as no express train ever traveled on; for all that I was able to keep it quite easily in view. I saw it in the compartment as they whirled by. One—two—three—four—five—six; but I could only see distinctly into one. Into that one only could I see distinctness. Into that one I seemed forced to look.

"It was the fourth carriage. Two people were in it. I had in my opposite corners; both were sleeping. The one who sat facing forward was a woman—a girl, rather. I could see that, but I couldn't see her face. The blind was drawn across the lamp in the roof, and the light was very dim; moreover, this girl lay back in the shadow. I was forced to know her, as well I knew that her face was very fair. She wore a cloak that shrouded her form completely, yet her form was familiar to me.

"The figure opposite to her was a man's. Strangely familiar to me too this figure was. But, as he slept, his head sunk upon his breast, and the shadow cast upon his face by the low-drawn cap-peak on he wore hid it from me. Yet if I had seemed to know the girl's face, I was certain I knew the man's. But as I could see, as I could remember, neither. And there was an absolute torture in this which I can't explain to you—in this inability, and in my inability to wake to discover their sleep.

"From the first I had been conscious of a desire to do that. This desire grew stronger every second. I tried to call to them, and my voice wouldn't move. I tried to spring toward them, to thrust out my arms and touch them, and my limbs were powerless. And then I tried to open my eyes to what I knew must happen, and my eyes were held open and dragged to look on in spite of me. And I saw this:

"I saw the door of the carriage where these two sleepers, whose sleep was so horribly soon were sitting, and saw this door open, and out of the thick darkness another face took in.

"The light fell on it. It was a very dim, but I could see this face as plainly as I can see yours. A large yellow face it was, like a wax mask. The lips were full and fearful and cruel. The eyes were little eyes of an evil gray. Thin yellow streaks marked the absence of the eyebrows; this face was bald, and moved itself noiselessly for traveling-cap. The whole face seemed to grow slowly into absolute distinctness as I looked, by the light of the lamp, that is, as it were, radiated. I had chanced upon a good many damnable visages before then; but there was a cold fiendishness about this one such as I had seen on no man's face, alive or dead, till then.

"The next moment the man this face belonged to was standing in the carriage, that seemed to plunge and sway more furiously, as though to waken them that slept on. He was in the room for traveling-robe, grit about the waist with a fur girdle. Abnormally tall and broad as he was, he looked in this dress gigantic. Yet there was a marvelous cat-like lightness and agility about all his movements.

"He bent over the girl lying there helpless in her sleep. I don't make rash bargains as a rule, but I felt I could have given years of my life for five minutes of my lost freedom of limb just then. I tell you the torture was infernal.

"The assassin—for he was an assassin—bent a while, gloatingly, over the girl. His great yellow hands were both bare, and on the forefinger of the right hand I could see some great stone blazing like an evil eye. In that right hand three gleamed something else. I saw him draw it slowly from his sleeve, and, as he drew it, turn round and look at the other sleeper with an infernal triumphant malignity and hate the devil himself might have felt. But the man he looked at slept heavily on. And then—God! I feel the agony I felt in my dream to-night—there was a great yellow hand, with the great evil eye upon it, lifted murderously, and the bright steel it held shimmer as the assassin turned again and bent his yellow face down closer to that other face hidden from me in the shadow—the girl's face, that I knew was so fair.

"How can I tell this?.....The blade flashed and fell..... There was the sound of a heavy sigh stifled under a heavy hand.....

"Then the huge form of the assassin was erect over the sleeping pair; the hideous sound to laugh silently, while the hand that held the steel pointed at the sleeping man in diabolical menace.

"And so the huge form and the bloated yellow face seemed to fade away while I watched.

"The impression with which I entered through the blinding darkness without; the sleeping man slept on still; till suddenly a strong light fell upon him, and he awoke.

"And then I saw why I had been so certain that I knew him. For, he lifted his head, I saw his face in the strong light.

"And the face was my own face; the sleeper was myself."

Paul Devereux made a pause in his queer story here. Except when he had spoken of the girl he had called Lucille, he had used, hardly, the tu of familiarity. He had been smoking all the time was smoked out. He took time to fill another before he went on. I never swore a word, for I guessed who the sleeping girl was.

"Well," Paul remarked presently, "that was a devilish queer dream—eh? I say, I'll be discount for it by telling me I'd been so pestered with the story of the banker's murder that I naturally had nightmare; perhaps, that the whole question was out of order. Call it a nightmare, call it dyspepsia, if you like. I don't, because—but you'll see why I don't directly.

"At the same moment that my dream-self awoke in my dream, my actual self woke in reality, with the same horror upon me.

"I say the same horror, for neither then nor afterward could I separate the two self from my self. They seemed identical, as that the queer dream made a more lasting impression upon me than reality. Before I went to bed I had had that sort of thing couldn't last very long. Before I came back from Africa I had utterly forgotten all about it. Before I left Paris, however, and while it was quite fresh in my memory, I sketched the big murderer just as I had seen him in my dream. The great yellow face, the cruel broad frame in the fur traveling-robe, the great hand with the great evil eye upon it—every thing, literally and absolutely, to the finger-nails, trying to paint a portrait that I wanted to make lifelike. I think at the time I had some such intention. If I had, however, I failed. I did not make the sketch, as I say, carefully; and then I forgot all about it.

"Two years passed—three years nearly. I was wintering in the south of France that year. There it was that I met her—Lucille. Old D'Arcy's daughter, and I had met Lucille D'Arcy in Paris. He was dying now. He left the child on his death-bed to me. The end was I married her.

"Poor little thing! I think I might have made her happy with me, but she died of fever one often she was happy with me. Poor little thing!

"Well, we were to come straight to London. That was Lucille's notion. She wanted to go to my London first—nowhere else. Now I would have gone upon any other, but unwilling to let the child have her way. She seemed nervously eager about it, I remembered afterward—seemed to have a morbid dislike to any other place I proposed. But I saw or suspected nothing to make me question her very closely, or to account for her peculiarity on any other than Pandemonium? What could I suspect? Not the truth. If I only had! If I had only guessed what it was that made her so shy of Paris, and to be safe there already. Safe? What had she to fear with me? Ah, what indeed!

"Well, we came home over sea to England. It was a cold, dark night early in March. We reached Lyons somewhere about seven. I should say, mind, because I had no watch. But I think. She entreated me so earnestly and with such strange vehemence to go on by the night-mail to Paris, that at last, to satisfy her, I consented, though it struck me unpleasantly at the time that I had to do so. I was sorry after that, in which the child's fevers should have come to pass. She should feel quite safe there, she said.

"Safe! Where safer? yort might ask. Nowhere, I believed. Alone with me—surely nowhere safer. The French servants I had with me train that night; but I managed to secure a compartment for ourselves. I left Lucille in her corner there while I went across to the buffet to fill a flask. I was gone barely five minutes; but when I came back the change in the child's face fairly startled me. I had seen it last with the smile it always wore for me on it, looking so remarkably happy and bright for her. It was all gray-pale and distorted, and the great blue eyes told me directly with what.

"Fear—absolute fear—I thought. But fear? Fear of what? I asked her. She clung close to me half-sobbing a while before she could answer, and then she told me—nothing. There was nothing the matter; only she had felt a pain —a cruel pain—at her heart, and it had frightened her. Yes, that was it; it had frightened her, but it had passed; and she was well, quite well again now.

"All this time her eyes seemed to be telling me another story, but I said nothing; she was to excited already. I did my best to soothe her, and I succeeded. She told me she felt quite well once more before we started. No, she had rather, much rather go on to Paris, as I had promised her she should. She should sleep all the way, if no one came into the carriage to disturb her. No one could come in? Then nothing could be better.

"And so it was that she and I started that night by the express.

"I made her up a bed of rugs and wraps upon the cushions; but she had rather rest her head upon my shoulder, she said, and feel my arm about her; nothing could hurt her then. Ah, strange how she harped on that!

"I had left them, as she loved best—with her head resting on my shoulder, not sleeping much or soundly; uneasily, with sudden, waking starts, and a strange restlessness about her, till I would speak to her. And then she would look up into my face, smile, and fall into a short, dull, uneasy sleep again. And I would think she was overtired, that was all, and reproach myself with having let her come on. And then the hours seemed passed like this, and then we had got as far as Dijon.

"But the child was fairly worn out now, and she offered no opposition when I asked her to let me pillow her head on something softer than my shoulder. So I made a warmer thick shawl into a roll which I covered with my cloak, and she made that her pillow.

"We were rushing full swing through the wild, dark night when she lifted up her face and bade me kiss her and bid her sleep well. And I put the express train out of mind, and the child's lovely lips—for the last time while she lived. Then I flung myself on the seat opposite her, and watched her till I slept—perhaps, and peacefully, slept at last myself also. I had drawn the blind across the lamp in the roof, and the light in the carriage was very dim.

"How long I slept I don't know; it couldn't have been more than an hour and a half, because the express was timed to speed for its first halt beyond Dijon. I had slept heavily I knew; but I woke with a sudden, sharp sense of danger that made me bound across the carriage to where she was.

"How long I slept I don't know; it couldn't have been more than an hour and a half, because the express was timed to speed for its first halt beyond Dijon. I had slept heavily I knew; but I woke with a sudden, sharp sense of danger that made me bound across the carriage to where she was.

"I say the same horror, for neither then nor afterward could I separate the one self from my self. They seemed identical, as that the queer dream made a more lasting impression upon me than reality. Before I went to bed I had had that sort of thing couldn't last very long. Before I came back from Africa I had utterly forgotten all about it. Before I left Paris, however, and while it was quite fresh in my memory, I sketched the big murderer just as I had seen him in my dream. The great yellow face, the cruel broad frame in the fur traveling-robe, the great hand with the great evil eye upon it—every thing, literally and absolutely, to the finger-nails, trying to paint a portrait that I wanted to make lifelike. I think at the time I had some such intention. If I had, however, I failed. I did not make the sketch, as I say, carefully; and then I forgot all about it.

"Two years passed—three years nearly. I was wintering in the south of France that year. There it was that I met her—Lucille. Old D'Arcy's daughter, and I had met Lucille D'Arcy in Paris. He was dying now. He left the child on his death-bed to me. The end was I married her.

"Poor little thing! I think I might have made her happy with me, but she died of fever one often she was happy with me. Poor little thing!

"Well, we were to come straight to London. That was Lucille's notion. She wanted to go to my London first—nowhere else. Now I would have gone upon any other, but unwilling to let the child have her way. She seemed nervously eager about it, I remembered afterward—seemed to have a morbid dislike to any other place I proposed. But I saw or suspected nothing to make me question her very closely, or to account for her peculiarity on any other than Pandemonium? What could I suspect? Not the truth. If I only had! If I had only guessed what it was that made her so shy of Paris, and to be safe there already. Safe? What had she to fear with me? Ah, what indeed!

"Well, we came home over sea to England. It was a cold, dark night early in March. We reached Lyons somewhere about seven. I should say, mind, because I had no watch. But I think. She entreated me so earnestly and with such strange vehemence to go on by the night-mail to Paris, that at last, to satisfy her, I consented, though it struck me unpleasantly at the time that I had to do so. I was sorry after that, in which the child's fevers should have come to pass. She should feel quite safe there, she said.

"Safe! Where safer? yort might ask. Nowhere, I believed. Alone with me—surely nowhere safer. The French servants I had with me train that night; but I managed to secure a compartment for ourselves. I left Lucille in her corner there while I went across to the buffet to fill a flask. I was gone barely five minutes; but when I came back the change in the child's face fairly startled me. I had seen it last with the smile it always wore for me on it, looking so remarkably happy and bright for her. It was all gray-pale and distorted, and the great blue eyes told me directly with what.

"Fear—absolute fear—I thought. But fear? Fear of what? I asked her. She clung close to me half-sobbing a while before she could answer, and then she told me—nothing. There was nothing the matter; only she had felt a pain —a cruel pain—at her heart, and it had frightened her. Yes, that was it; it had frightened her, but it had passed; and she was well, quite well again now.

"All this time her eyes seemed to be telling me another story, but I said nothing; she was to excited already. I did my best to soothe her, and I succeeded. She told me she felt quite well once more before we started. No, she had rather, much rather go on to Paris, as I had promised her she should. She should sleep all the way, if no one came into the carriage to disturb her. No one could come in? Then nothing could be better.

"And so it was that she and I started that night by the express.

"I made her up a bed of rugs and wraps upon the cushions; but she had rather rest her head upon my shoulder, she said, and feel my arm about her; nothing could hurt her then. Ah, strange how she harped on that!

"I had left them, as she loved best—with her head resting on my shoulder, not sleeping much or soundly; uneasily, with sudden, waking starts, and a strange restlessness about her, till I would speak to her. And then she would look up into my face, smile, and fall into a short, dull, uneasy sleep again. And I would think she was overtired, that was all, and reproach myself with having let her come on. And then the hours seemed passed like this, and then we had got as far as Dijon.

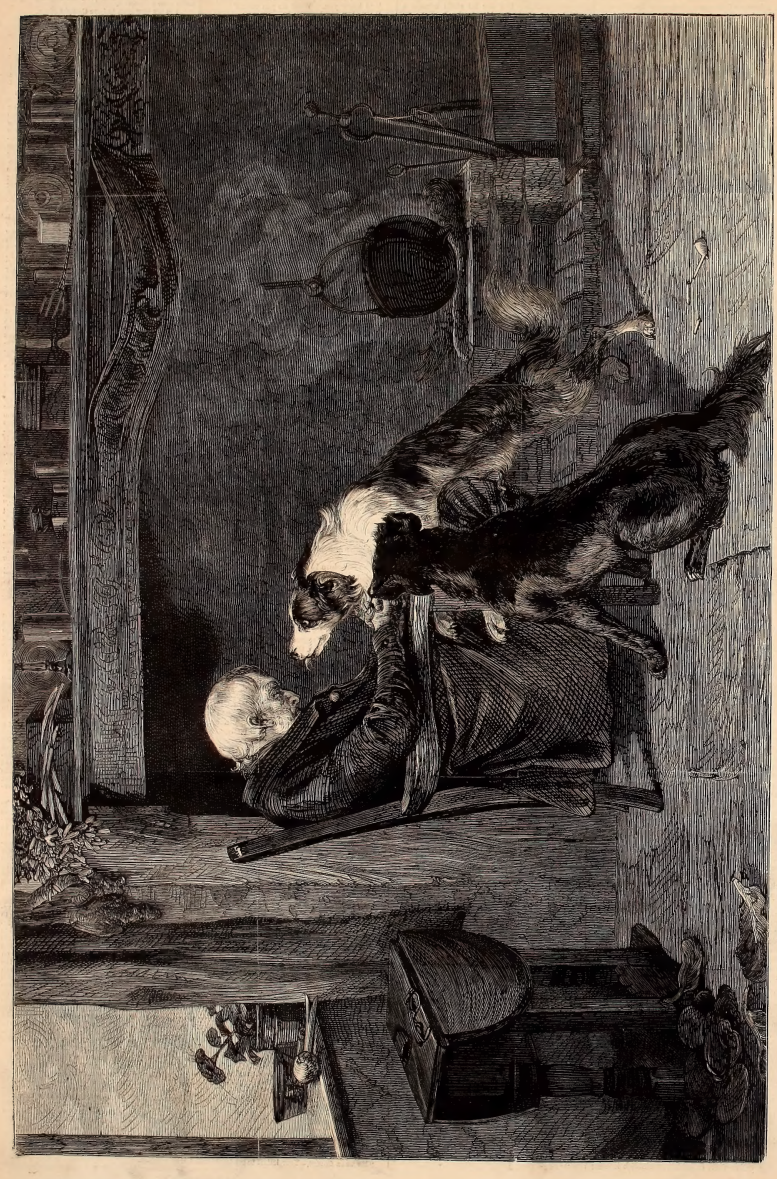
"But the child was fairly worn out now, and she offered no opposition when I asked her to let me pillow her head on something softer than my shoulder. So I made a warmer thick shawl into a roll which I covered with my cloak, and she made that her pillow.

"We were rushing full swing through the wild, dark night when she lifted up her face and bade me kiss her and bid her sleep well. And I put the express train out of mind, and the child's lovely lips—for the last time while she lived. Then I flung myself on the seat opposite her, and watched her till I slept—perhaps, and peacefully, slept at last myself also. I had drawn the blind across the lamp in the roof, and the light in the carriage was very dim

"From another source I discovered that in the lifetime of Madame Steinmetz Lucille was frequently at the house. She had ceased to come there about the date of the commencement of Madame's sudden illness. I got this information by degrees, while I lay perdu in an old haunt of mine in the Rays Latin yonder; for I had always had an idea that I should find the man I wanted in Paris. When I had got it I thought I should like to see Monsieur Steinmetz, the agreeable husband. One night I strolled after fix as his new residence in the street off the Champs Elysées. Monsieur Steinmetz lived on the first-floor. There was a brilliant light within, and Monsieur Steinmetz was entertaining friends, it seemed.

"It was a fine night; I established myself out of sight under the doorway of an unfinished house opposite and waited. I don't know why; perhaps I thought that when his friends departed the fineness of the night might induce Monsieur Steinmetz to take a stroll, and that then I should be able to gratify my curiosity. You see, I knew that if he were my man I should know him directly. I waited a good while: shadows crossed the lighted blinds; once a big, broad shadow appeared there, that made me fancy I mightn't have been waiting for nothing after all; soon how, however, Monsieur Steinmetz's guests departed, and in a little while after there appeared on the balcony of Monsieur Steinmetz's apartment the man I wanted. There was a moon that night, and the cold white light fell on the great yellow face with the full black lips and the full cruel chin, just as I had seen the light fall on it in my dream. It was the same face, the same black hair, the same man. I couldn't be mistaken. I had no doubt; I knew that the assassin of my wife, of that tender, innocent, helpless child, stood there, twenty yards from me, on that balcony.

"I had got myself pretty well in hand; and it was as well I never moved. The face I knew turned presently toward the spot where I stood hidden—the face I had seen in my memory beyond all doubting. The evil grey eyes glanced carelessly into the shadow, and up and down the quiet street; and then Monsieur Steinmetz, humming an air, put inside the window again, and closed it after him. Once more the great burly shadow, that had at first told me I should have to wait a while, came broadly in vain, crossed the blinds; and then it disappeared. I was my man no more that night; but I had recognized my man no more that night; but I had recognized my man so more that night; but I had recognized my man so more that night; but I had recognized my man so



"THE LONG SLEEP."—FROM A PAINTING BY M. RIVIÈRE.—[SEE FIRST PAGE.]

LATIMER, addressing CRANMER. "What manner of men are these who thus perform our MASTER'S work?"

PROTESTANT MUMMERIES.—[See PAGE 90.]

PROTESTANT MUMMERIES.

See Illustration on page 89.

WHAT would the saintly Fathers of the Church Say of these histrionic follies? They Made for Eternal Truth unwavering search, And to defend it gave their Lives away.

II.

Weakly and old seemed LATIMER, until The pile was lighted, in that terrible time, Then, by the power of the Almighty who The wondering crowd beheld him in his prime.

III.

"Cheer up," he said to RIDLEY, as there lay Dry fagots blazing on the fresh green sod; "The Candle lighted in this realm this day Shall burn forever, by the grace of God."

IV.

Ay, and it burns—extinguishable never, Save by disloyalty of its guardians here; A lamp of life whose shine shall last forever, Filling the minds of men with holy cheer.

V.

But ye who mock the Martyrs' fire—who fancy That foolish fripperies do not desecrate— Who turn religion into chicanery— Churchmen week-minded and degenerate!

VI.

How in your gorgeous costumes would ye tremble— How would your cheeks with shamefit terror burn— If, as your silly vole-ees assemble, The Martyr Bishops entered, calm and stern!

ROMANISM IN ENGLAND.

THE Ritualists in England deny that they seek a union with the Roman Catholic Church; but a glance at our illustration on page 89 will show that whatever obstacle there may be in the way of such a union it is not to be any difference as to the ceremonies of worship. It is probable that any schism in the English Church would result in simply a separation of the Ritualists from the main body. But if Ritualism is not Romanism it is certainly an abandonment of the principles of Protestantism established by the reformers of the sixteenth century. Romanism may not be perfect, say the Ritualists in common with Dr. Erwe, but nevertheless Protestantism is a failure.

But, apart from the quasi Romanism affected by the Ritualists, what progress has been lately made by the Papal Church in England? It is asserted that the number of adults received into the Roman Communion by conditional baptism and subsequent admission to the other sacraments during the last twelve months in England amounts to more than 2200 persons. Of these about half have been received in the provinces, and the other half in London. These converts belong almost entirely to the upper, middle, and professional classes, including a higher class of shop-keepers, and not a few of the educated mechanics in some of the large towns. The number of male converts slightly predominates. Dr. Newman—himself a convert of twenty years' standing—has received into his church at Edgbaston two peers, nineteen Anglican clergymen, seven or eight university graduates, and many other persons more or less well known in their respective spheres and callings.

The Weekly Register and Catholic Standard says:

At the end of 1864 there were in England and Wales 1850 priests; at the end of 1866 we find the number increased to 1881; at the end of 1866 they numbered 1410; at the end of 1867 they were still further increased to 1485; and at the end of 1868 they number 1493; showing, in five years, an increase in the number of our clergy of 181 priests in England and Wales. At the end of 1864 there were in England and Wales 341 churches, chapels, and stations; at the end of 1866 these were increased to 1871; at the end of 1866 they had further increased to 1014; at the end of 1867 to 1067; and at the end of 1868 they number 1102.

The convents have gone on steadily increasing. At the end of 1864 they numbered 197; at the end of 1866 they had increased to 196; at the end of 1866 they had further increased to 204; at the end of 1867 to 214; and at the end of 1868 to 214.

In Scotland the progress of Catholicism appears to have been very slight indeed during the last five years. At the end of 1864 there were 105 priests and 119 missions in the whole of North Britain. A year later, at the end of 1865, the number of priests had increased to 135, but the number of churches or chapels had decreased to 114. At the end of 1866 they had increased again to 138 priests and 193 chapels; and at the end of 1867 they numbered 142 priests and 201 churches or chapels, at which figures they remain to the present time.

So much for the progress of Romanism; but what is the belief of the converts? How far do they yield obedience to the papacy? Dr. Newman himself insists upon an English style of Romanism, and the same mandatory would scarcely be accepted in Italy. His writings have incurred the displeasure of the Pope. Another convert, Mr. Ward, has Fellow and Tutor of Jesus College, Oxford, has just published a letter to Archbishop Manning. It is drawn out in defiance of the assumed suspicion which, in the present temper of the Roman hierarchy, is of the cringing ultramontane rubble, such an expression of loyalty would occasion.

After giving the history of a memorable interpolation in the creed by a Spanish king at the end of the sixth century, the sequence of which was forced by Charlemagne two centuries later, in the north of an Œcumenical Council and of the reigning Pope, Mr. Ward observes "that, whether absolutely inerrant or not in matters of faith herself, Rome has abundantly proved during the last thousand years that she can be a most negligent, hesitating, fickle, self-seeking, hypocritical guide to others, even when the Faith is concerned."

This writer considers that "if ever there was a justifiable revolt from authority, it was the revolt we call the Reformation;" and adds that the union of Christendom can neither be expected nor desired "till material guarantees have been secured that Rome shall never again be what she has been and, to some extent, still is. So irresistible, to my mind, are the evidences that it is her [Rome's] conduct more than any theory, which has divided Christendom, her conduct since she became a Court as well as a Church—not her faith, but her policy for the last thousand years, dating from her endowment under Charlemagne." And he quotes the stern reminder, addressed by St. Bernard to Pope Eugenius III., of a truth which Eugenius and his successors from that day to this have always studiously forgotten—"Your power is by no means separable from God."

Mr. Froude tells us, after fourteen years' experience as Regius Professor, that he can find no remarkable contrast between his present and former co-religionists, and that he can not see that the change has converted "have progressed in any perceptible degree," while many of them "have notoriously descended to a lower level of Christianity since their conversion."

This is the style of English Romanism, and among intelligent converts no other is possible.

THE ENCHANTED APPLES.

IN the dawn of the Consulate, when Bonaparte was indeed Cæsar—that is to say, absolute master in a state retaining the name of the Republic—the First Consul and his wife frequently quitted Paris for a short sojourn at Malmaison. Josephine loved the ancient country house best of all their residences, and far from attempting to transplant thither the ceremony and form which wearied her at the Tuileries, she found in the simple habits of provincial life, and banished from her house every thing showy and ostentatious. Upholsterers, during their visits Malmaison became the leader of universal attraction, and Madame Bonaparte, in spite of all the efforts made behind hand her more flatterers than flowers. Almost before she was aware of it her salon was crowded with the most distinguished persons and the most ambitious men of the time—some agreeable surprise was daily planned for her—and (especially in her absence) ovations awaited her wherever she turned.

Especially in Bonaparte's absence. The courtiers found the secret of their power much from that penetrating glance which could at once detect the selfish motive of a gallant attention or the political aim of an assiduity. Now Bonaparte had a well-grounded dread of the heedlessness of his wife, who unreflectingly followed the impulse of her kindness, and found her heart led to retract her hasty promises or check her naturally impetuous speech by—an amiable weakness of which Josephine could never cure herself, and which afterward gave her the first place among those whom she has dried many tears, but never caused one to fall.

One evening Madame Bonaparte dined almost alone at Malmaison. The company was small even on the table, M. de Noailles, a junior member of the ministry, was admitted to pay his respects to the wife of the First Consul. There was a man about fifty years old, who carried a little table which he set down before Josephine, spreading on it a rather coarse napkin. On these primitive arrangements were made he drew from a bag three pewter cups and balls, and the latter seemed to be endowed by inchantment with the precised fingers; then they rebounded like hail—then, at a breath, they vanished.

"Madame has only to speak," said the unknown, confidently, to Josephine, "and her commands shall be obeyed. I regret that Madame has finished her dinner, otherwise I should have been able to present her with dishes which have just graced the table of the Tuileries—as, for instance, Mediterranean—Sardines from Royan—or, better still, the delicate little silver-fish caught in that quarter of the globe which has lent the costume of giving birth to Madame for the happiness of France. But Madame does not express a wish. Would she prefer a pheasant roasted on the or a warbler from the woods—an Oriental ruby, or one of those nightingales which enchant our forests?"

The man who thus placed universal nature at Josephine's service, appeared to wish that she should select the latter. Instead of this he set up a goblet and seemed listening to the harmonious cadences of the minstrel of spring.

But Josephine, who, without demanding immense sums on her toilet, retained sufficient simplicity of taste to prefer a wreath of flowers to a coronet of gems—replied to the conjurer that diamonds nor birds; she asked for a rose.

Hardly had she pronounced her lips when the juggler reversed his cup and, holding it for an astonished spectators a rose surrounded with buds, which trembled lightly on its stem and filled the room with fragrance.

"Bon Dieu!" cried Josephine, "you have gathered the ornament of my garden—the only rose which I had counted on giving Bonaparte to-morrow, because it yet wanted a night to become full blown."

"Pardon me, Madame," replied the conjurer, respectfully, "that rose is mine, and I have the honor of offering it to the wife of the First Consul. I could not have had the effrontery to lay hands on the flowers of Madame Bonaparte—moreover, I have never set foot in her conservatory."

Josephine sent one of her attendants to verify this statement, who announced on his return that the rose destined for Bonaparte still bloomed safely on the tree. Madame Bonaparte, simple and credulous as a Creole child, could not disguise her amusement. Nothing, it seemed, could baffle the prodigious skill of the unknown magician. Now he sent from his bag flights of birds who picked up the crumbs fallen from the dinner-table; now he filled a cup with water, and tossing it to the ceiling, an avalanche of flowers descended on the spectators.

When admiration was at its height, and curiosity was still unappeased, Josephine took up a bag which hung from the arm of her couch, and began seeking for her purse, but the conjurer drew himself at her feet. "Madame," said he, "you can repay me a hundredfold for the trifling amusement that I have given you—but not with gold. A boon, Madame, a boon!"

"What can I do for you?" inquired Josephine, who fully believed her petitioner possessed of far greater power than herself. The juggler merely begged her to taste some of the fruit which was on the table, and she extended her hand toward an apple whose golden rind had tempted the conjurer even before; and using her fruit-knife with the hesitation of one who expects a miracle to follow, she cut the perfumed flesh.

There are flowers, says the Latin poet, on whose petals are inscribed the names of kings. The apple held Bonaparte's name concealed in its core a petition to the First Consul.

"Madame," cried the stranger, still on his knees before her, "you see at your feet an unfortunate who mingled in the quarrels of kings and took arms against the Republic. I wore at La Vendée a cockade which was not that of my country; and when the party I served was defeated, I had to fly from France, and live a banished man. My Heaven ignorance—you ever knowing what the exile suffers! My fatherland has rejected me, my name is transferred from the list of citizens, and of the proscribed. A word from you, Madame, and this wretched fate will be reversed; I shall return openly to Paris; I shall live once more in the midst of my own!"

During this appeal Josephine closely scrutinized the fragments of apple which lay on her plate: she saw through her slender fingers the unbroken and shining pel, and marveled at the prodigy she had witnessed—an apple which held parchment instead of pips!

"Monsieur," she said to the conjurer, "your request is granted. The First Consul shall see your petition, and rest assured that I will do all in my power to promote it."

The magician bowed, replaced his cups in his bag, took his little table under his arm, bowed to the ground, and withdrew.

Addressed the servant man who had introduced the clever conjurer, Josephine said, "I am your debtor for an amusing evening, M. de Noailles. You can not imagine how accomplished man Bonaparte must befriend him—he has done greater favors to far less entertaining and useful persons. I must send for your unknown when I want something superhuman done for me."

Under the Directorate the proscribed emigrants had returned in crowds. The careless Barras readily believed that all enmity was extinct. Not so Bonaparte, who, though not suspicious, was wary, and knew that the germs of disaffection would endanger the tranquillity of the new government. Therefore he secretly severely under the Consulate than the Directorate; and while Bonaparte regarded the Republicans as his most dangerous adversaries, he more keenly kept watch over the movements of the emigrants—and those who had fought at La Vendée or sojourned in England he watched closely.

Fouché, on his part, exercised a general surveillance, and constantly forwarded to Bonaparte the most alarming reports with all his vigilance, however, he could not prevent the explosion of the Infernal Machine. It is well known that Bonaparte's policy was to accuse the Republicans of this conspiracy, while Fouché, who fancied he saw the plots of England in all the troubles of Europe, unhesitatingly denounced the Royalists.

At eleven o'clock on the evening of the conjuror's visit to Josephine the First Consul left the Opera, and proceeded to Malmaison. He arrived unannounced and alone, and hearing that Madame Bonaparte was sleeping, went at once to his apartment and threw himself on the iron camp bedstead which accompanied him on his numerous campaigns, and has become historical.

At six o'clock next morning, as Bonaparte took a hasty meal in the breakfast-room, the carriage which was to convey him to Paris already waiting in the court-yard, Josephine entered the apartment. She flew to him, seized his hands, and kissed his forehead.

"Can I guess what you have left without seeing me?" she playfully asked.

"What did you do yesterday, Josephine?" returned her husband. "Who came to see you? how did you spend your day?"

I was very much amused. If you stay and dine with me at dinner I will give you a agreeable surprise. By-the-way," she added, producing a paper, which she showed him, "erase this name from the list of proscrits, and you will do me a great favor. Besides, I have promised."

"A Chouan! exclaimed Bonaparte, angrily, as he glanced at the petition. "Georges Mauvec, one of the fanatic followers of Charette and De la Rochejaquelein, one of the men who, barely eighteen months since, followed the armies of the Republic, plundering and killing straggling soldiers, throwing those left wounded on the battle-field! Mauvec, Mauvec! A man who comes from England, who landed secretly on our coast, no doubt as an emissary from Pitt. For, my good friend Fox, has repeatedly warned me against the plots of these traitors. And what do you know of this man? Where have you met him? Why are you interested in him? Speak, Madame, speak!"

At this explosion of wrath the terrified Josephine burst into tears.

"Control yourself," said Bonaparte, coldly, "leave off weeping, and answer me. Of course you were ignorant of the man's crimes, and he has imposed on your compassion. They flatter themselves that I can reject nothing presented by your hand, and that they will thus be enabled to undermine Paris beneath our very feet. Oh, Fouché was right! These wretches are incapable of change."

While speaking Bonaparte had drawn his wife's arm through his own, and walked impetuously up and down the room with her, utterly oblivious of his irritated hands.

"I know nothing about him," returned Josephine. "Do not disturb yourself so, Bonaparte. Tear up that petition. Let us say no more about it. If you only knew how it came into my hands!"

"That is exactly what I want to know," Bonaparte answered; and then Josephine related how M. de Noailles had introduced the conjuror on the previous day, and the wonderful feats with which he had astonished her. Even the petition Josephine held in his hand had something ludicrous about it; it seemed to have grown in the apple, or at least to have been placed there by supernatural agency!

"And to this sort of thing you open the doors of my house!" said the First Consul, angrily. "O wandering mountebanks who, disparaging of hoodwinking the husband, practice on the credulity of the wife, and seek to make her the tool of their intrigues. What a child you are, Josephine! A trickster deceives you, and you fancy him a magician—you see sleight of hand, and call it a miracle!"

So speaking he stopped before a side-board and took some fruit from an epergne.

"Josephine," said his wife, gently. "I found the petition in an apple like that—you know I am fond of them, they are brought to table every day, and I took the first that came."

Bonaparte shrugged his shoulders, and opening the knife, inserted it into the fruit.

The marvel was repeated: a petition was hidden in the core.

"I have two, two," said Bonaparte; and taking up another apple, he peeled it also, and discovered a third petition. The plate was emptied, and a similar result in every case.

Then Bonaparte showed his wife the adroit artifice by which every apple had been hollowed out, so that a very roll of paper carefully folded could be inserted in place of the pips.

"The man could not afford to lose a chance," he said, "and the arrangements were made so that you could choose hap-hazard. He must have had an accomplice in the fruiterer, who shall serve as a clue to lead us to your conjuror, I will send to Fouché, and—"

"Oh, Bonaparte, I implore you," cried Josephine, "do not be harsh; keep sacred the shelter of our roof!"

"Our roof! Is he here, then?"

"Not now, but he will return. I had hoped to amuse you this evening by—"

"No matter, Josephine: be satisfied; Fouché will find him without disturbing the tranquillity of your house. He can not be permitted to mature his conspiracies unchecked."

Josephine, finding listening any longer to Josephine's remonstrances, he hurriedly embraced her, trampled under foot the fragments of apple and the torn petitions which strewed the floor, sprang into the carriage which awaited him in the court-yard, surrounded by the consular guard, and set off at a gallop for Paris.

It is impossible to describe the distress of Josephine, who already shared the kindness of heart which in after-days won for her the title of "the good Empress." She felt no personal interest in the man in question, but, fearful that she had caused his imprisonment, perhaps his death, was insupportable to her. She sought for George, and in all the environs of Malmaison; she inquired for him every where, she consulted every one; and if she could have found Marec she would have laid his pardon at the feet of the conjuror to conduct him safely beyond the frontier. But her search was fruitless. Even M. de Noailles, who introduced Marec, had quitted Malmaison on the following night, and had not returned.

At last the dinner hour arrived; Josephine, engrossed by one haunting thought, could touch nothing. When dessert was served a sharp knock at the house door startled her sister-in-law up, and George Marec himself stood before her, with his little table, his bag, and his ebony wand.

"Oh," cried Josephine, in terror, "fly, Monsieur, fly, or you are lost! You are a Chouan —you have sought out Fouché's stronghold—you deserve to die! My house can no longer protect you—fly!"

The conjuror looked at her with an unfeigned terror and tranquil smile; and begging her to afford him a moment of an hour's audience, he arranged his table and took out his cups and balls.

This time he did not offer bouquets of roses and rubies, he sent forth no flights of birds, he called down no deluge of flowers. They were puppet soldiers—Austrians and Russians, diminutive cavalry—which issued from his goblet.

"Here!" he cried, "are the Austrians, the Prussians, the Russians, who fear us no more. See their battalions, their squadrons, their divisions. See, on a white horse, Melas, their chief; on a black horse, Wurmser, their general-in-chief, who has promised St. Nicholas, his patron saint, all the French guns to ornament his shrine. One hill is in front of the French army. Behold Bonaparte—he narrowly watches his opponents —he extends his hand, and all the world is in arms. Do you hear the roar of the cannon, the challenge of the trumpet? Do you perceive the ricochet Bay advance toward the enemies' staff, whom it threatens, whom it attacks, whom it scatters? Long live the Republic! Long live General Bonaparte! Victory is ours!"

And by a master-piece of dexterity and of mechanism the tiny troops continued to emerge from the conjuror's cup, taking rank on the table, and executing the movements with the enumeration of which Marec deafened Madame

Bonaparte. When the contest was over, victors and vanquished re-entered the goblet, and the juggler declared that he would proceed to show the illustrious wife of the First Consul many yet more wonderful things—Mourad Bey, the Mamelukes, Junot, Kleber, Dessaix, the Battle of the Pyramids—a world, the campaign in Egypt: but she was too much alarmed for his safety to enjoy the singular spectacle.

"In Heaven's name," she cried, "take this purse and depart!"

"Grant me one last favor," said the conjuror, leaving the campagna in Egypt sitting in his cup; "condescend, Madame, once more to open an apple."

Josephine hurriedly complied with his request, and found the following letter:

"MADAME,—I have in my possession documents which will prove to the First Consul that the Master who has had the honor of appearing before you, and speaking your native tongue, is not the murderer of Hassia who meets the utmost rigor of the law, an hour or two, who took part, it is true, in the expedition of Quiberon, but who fought honorably, and was expatriated on the demand of the Royalists. He did not emigrate to England, but to Switzerland, whence he has brought the Marionettes which have amused you. The other Master is named Jacques, and he has never quitted Italy, where he lives very easy as a rentier.

"I am happy to inform you, Madame, that your protege's fame is not struck from the list of the marvellous.

"I have the honor to be, Madame, your very humble and obedient servant,

"X. COMUS."

"Excellent news!" cried Josephine, with a deep sigh of relief. "Monsieur, Monsieur, show me the conjuror in Egypt!"

Georges Marez had indeed passed two years in Switzerland, where he practiced conjuring for a livelihood. On returning to France he laid aside the cards and balls, except for the occasional amusement of the Empress, whose influence procured him an appointment in the commissariat.

PUBLIC INSTITUTIONS ON BLACKWELL'S ISLAND.

THE public institutions on Blackwell's Island, committed to the charge of the Commissioners of Public Charities and Correction, form the subject of our illustrations on page 92. We purpose to give a brief description of these institutions, with such facts and suggestions derived from the last published Report of the Commissioners—that for 1867.

The Small-pox Hospital, at the southern extremity of the Island, is sometimes entirely vacant. Advantage was taken of such a vacancy in 1867 to repair and paint the building throughout, and to introduce gas for lighting from the Charity Hospital. Of the 209 patients under treatment that year fifteen died.

The Charity Hospital, in 1867, subsisted 6855 patients, of whom 1201 died. This hospital, though open to patients suffering from every variety of disease, is largely devoted to the treatment of syphilis. More than 3000 cases of this description were admitted in 1867. It will soon be necessary to erect a separate hospital for patients of this class.

No applicants are admitted to the Alms-house except those who, from old age or chronic infirmity, are incapable of earning a livelihood, for it is found that the inmates, after a brief residence, lose all self-reliance and become a public charge during life. The able-bodied, who may be suffering from want, are either granted temporary relief by the Superintendent of the Outdoor Poor, or are committed to the Penitentiary house. Under the present regulations the Almshouse is, as it should be, a shelter for the old and infirm rather than, as formerly the asylum for the vagrant and slothful. Hospital rules have been established, thorough cleanliness is enforced, and a more generous diet has been provided.

The prisoners committed to the Penitentiary, numbering 9911 in 1867, are divided into three classes according to the gravity of their crimes, and, though subject to the same rules in respect to labor and discipline, they work in separate gangs and eat at separate tables, and each prisoner occupies a separate cell. Only those guilty of felony wear the distinctive dress of the Penitentiary. "There are," say the Commissioners, "about 30,000 children in this city growing up in ignorance and idleness. They have no occupation but to beg, and learn no art but to steal. Hordes of children are sent out every morning to beg or pilfer along the piers and boat-heads of the city, to snatch up, unobserved, a few grains of coffee, or handfuls of cotton, or scraps of iron; and their progress from the first act of pilfering to burglary is as regular as the progress of a school-boy from class to class. At the age of fifteen the girls are prostitutes and the boys professed thieves. The brevity of their lives, shortened by syphilitic disease, is the only check upon the increase of their numbers." The measures recently adopted to break up this career of crime among our youth by arresting children found begging or peddling nick-nacks in the streets promise to secure good results.

The Juvenile Asylum of this city, which is authorized to receive children on the warrant of a magistrate, has been the means of saving from destruction many children of the classes referred to, and its managers are entitled to the warm thanks of the community for their zeal and devotion to the great work of philanthropy in which they are engaged. The Children's Aid Society and the Reformatory, with other charities of a like character, have, without coercive powers, been instrumental in rescuing annually large numbers of children from ruin, by gathering them from the streets, clothing them, and securing for them comfortable and reputable homes.

To the Work-house are committed drunkards, vagabonds, and disorderly persons, the terms of imprisonment varying from ten days to six months. As a house of correction it well fulfils the purposes of its establishment. Of the inmates committed a considerable proportion are newly-arrived emigrants. In order to protect the counties of the State from the maintenance of foreign vagrants and criminals, the Legislature has imposed a tax upon each emigrant arriving at the port of New York. The Commissioners of Emigration collect the moneys thus raised, which they disburse under regulations which they have framed for their own government.

THE PRESENT ART SEASON IN NEW YORK.

THE art season of 1868-9 fairly opened rather feebly, so far as regards the exhibition at the National Academy of Design. The main interest in this exhibition was centred in the collections of the works of three Academicians, whose deaths within a few months preceding had thrown a gloom over the whole fraternity of American artists. We refer, of course, to ELLIOTT, LEUTZE, and WILLIAM S. MOUNT. The works of ELLIOTT and LEUTZE covered three sides of the large south gallery, excepting the space given to one of the characteristic and strong figure-pieces of CHURCH, and the same was almost invariably the trait of ELLIOTT by BAKER. Standing in this gallery on the Saturday preceding the opening, and getting a really "private view," the various memorial memorials of genius untimely lost to the world, our musings were pleasantly interrupted by the entrance of two members of the American art, one of whom has already rounded out a long life full of distinguished honors and world-wide usefulness, while the other has, in the course of many years the venerated chief of the Academy of Design—SAMUEL F. B. MORSE and DANIEL HUNTINGTON, the former one of the fathers of the Academy, and the latter for years its President, by several years still their senior. Gorgeous, as the two recent portraits sent by him to the exhibition, his clear eyesight, and elastic step at Mr. Cozzens' "Old Corner Book" left of the artists affectionately call the lamented ELLIOTT —but return long enough to paint a group including four of the men who, in connection with, together with ASHER B. DURAND, another of our best artists who still retains his powers in their ripeness, and WILLIAM CULLEN BRYANT—what a priceless gift such a picture would be to posterity!

The visitor to the Academy, judging our artists by the present exhibition, would arrive at a very inadequate conception of the amount and quality of the work which fills the studios. The landscape painters especially are weakly represented. Most of them spend the country during the summer and fall, and do not get fairly at work until about the first of December. A few pictures, however, are to be found in the fall exhibition. Some, also, of our best figure painters are unrepresented, preferring to keep their pictures in reserve for the Spring exhibition. Artists are doing, and what they have recently done, we must visit them in their studios, where their pictures are seen to the best advantage, and where our interest in the artist enhances our pleasure in his works. A few visits of this sort we propose to make, enabling us to give in the next issue the readers of the Weekly to see the artists and their pictures as we saw them ourselves.

It may be necessary to remark that it is utterly impossible to find space for even a brief mention of all of those who have obtained a recognized position as artists. The Council of Government of the Academy contains the names of one hundred and sixty-six Academicians and Associates. Of these, DE HASS, BRUCE, LANG, HUNTINGTON, M'ENTEE, LAURT THOMPSON, J. F. WIER, and others, are in Rome, where also, DURAND and FREEMAN are residing; BELLOWS is in England; HAZELTINE and SULLIVAN are somewhere abroad; HUNTINGTON, JOHN W. CASILEAR, where PEALE resides; WUST is in Antwerp; VEDDER is in Paris, and MAY lives there, and BIERSTADT is in Paris or Switzerland. Artistic emigration abroad of which Americans may well feel proud. Besides those who are enrolled on the Academy catalogue there are about one hundred artists in New York who have more or less claim to the title. Some have come here quite recently, like MR. A. T. BRUCHER, a landscape painter, from Boston, of decided ability. Some do not, for reasons of their own, desire to become Academicians, like MR. T. P. ROSSITER, a figure painter whose powers are generally acknowledged.

It will be seen that we can only select from among the two hundred and fifty or more artists in New York whom we propose to visit a few of those who are best known, and who represent most thoroughly the various specialties of our art. Some of those whom we should otherwise have included in our survey of the present season were not in their studios when we called, and must therefore be reserved for notice on some future occasion. There is an increasing tendency among our artists to congregate in buildings partly or wholly devoted to their use; but the present accommodations of such buildings are altogether inadequate, and our tour among the studios will take us from Bleecker Street to Thirtieth Street, a distance of a mile and a half north and south, and from Astor Place to the neighborhood of Sixth Avenue, about half a mile east and west.

Beginning at 650 Broadway, near Bleecker Street, we find the capacious double studios of GEORGE H. HALL in the upper story of a building whose exterior gives little indication of artistic occupancy.

GEORGE H. HALL.

MR. HALL whose flower and fruit pictures are better known and more generally admired than those of any other American artist, is personally one of the most agreeable of acquaintances. Extremely modest, and almost shy in his manners, his quiet earnestness, frankness, and real cordiality win on one insensibly. In Spain, where he has twice temporarily resided, he found subjects for figure pictures which enabled him to display his fine ability as a colorist. On his last return from there he brought back sixty-three sketches from life, from which he has already painted over twenty pictures. The remainder will occupy the best part of his time for two years more, when he expects again to visit his favorite sketching ground. The illustrations of Spanish life and character which, as sketches or finished pictures, adorn the walls of MR. HALL'S studio fairly glow with their warm colors, all have a striking air of reality. Peasants, laboring, fruit-dealers, gipsies, priests, and beggars are depicted just as they were sketched from the wealth of picturesque subjects available to the artist in such a city as Seville. Nowhere in Europe does the brunette type afford richer or more various specimens, from the delicately-colored faces of the latter class to the so-ugly and almost repulsive countenances of the gipsies. The costumes are equally interesting and effective in color, even when they are little else than rags. When, as is usually the case, MR. HALL introduces fruit and flowers in his Spanish figure pictures, his mastery of the finer specialties which he has chosen becomes especially manifest.

J. T. CROPSEY.

Across Broadway, and a little further up, in the upper story of the book-store of G. P. PUTNAM & SON, we find the cozy studio of MR. CROPSEY. Although popularly regarded as among our veteran artists, he has by no means and in no degree lost the skill as a colorist, and especially as a painter of the brilliant hues of our autumnal forests, which in former years gave him a name, when there were fewer rivals than now. He has a summer residence and studio back of Newburgh, in the romantic Wawasenin Valley, from which locality he has brought back several sketches and nearly-finished pictures. Whether there or here, he enjoys in his artistic labors the society and appreciative sympathy of his pleasant and cultivated family. His last picture has in it not the same characteristics as those of his earlier days. An autumnal scene just painted, which we saw in his studio, illustrated this. Simplicity in composition—a quiet stream, back of which the mountains rise all around—the hazy, dreamy atmosphere, seemingly holding in solution the rich colors of the foliage, would have enabled us to identify the authorship of the picture anywhere. MR. CROPSEY is now engaged on a large picture of the Hudson as seen near Fishkill.

HUMORS OF THE DAY.

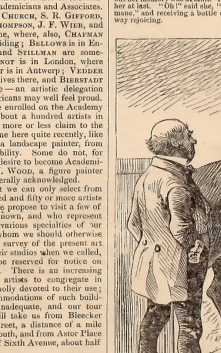
RESIDENCE FOR THE CLERK OF THE WEATHER.—"The Thawing-House."

LITERARY.—We have the highest authority for announcing that the forthcoming novel, "Drowned in Sherry," by the author of "Wrecked in Port," is in active preparation.

DISPUTING MEANINGS.—To tan a dog's hide with his own bark.

A LITTLE girl attending a party was asked by her mother how she enjoyed herself. "Oh," said she, "I am full of happiness. I couldn't be no happier unless I could grow."

A damsel of Celtic origin entered a grocery store and asked for a bottle of them things up there, pointing to a shelf filled with luxuries, etc. The clerk, anxious to supply her wants, asked which she meant, but her memory was at fault. A bright thought struck her at last. "Oh," said she, "it's a bottle of foine champane," and receiving a bottle of capers she went her way rejoicing.



"THERE'S THE RUB."

OWNER. "Now, Tim, put a Good Coat on him."
TIM. "Shure, and I'll make him Shine like the Top of your Anner's Head."
[His "Anner" considers it Personal, and objects to the Stories.

REFLECTIONS BY AN OLD BACHELOR.—Domestic happiness may be very sweet, but when I look at my brother's family it strikes me that it is also very dear.

The complexion of a girl of the period differs from a railway accident in that the one is, and the other is not, transferable.

I love to see little children eating unaccustomed delicacies, and my heart rejoices at a think of the happiness of the family doctor awaiting them.

Mistrust the woman who, when a glass of wine is split over her dress, smiles, and says it doesn't matter.

The taste for sweets grows in all of us long after childhood—nay, even in old age every one wishes to be worth a plum.

Curious how this life resembles billiards—kisses and misses are generally found near together.

We hear much of the balance of power, the balance of happiness, and the balance of receipts; but, to my thinking, the most effective balance of all is to be found at your bankers'.

A cramped waist generally betokens brains in a similar condition.

When I look upon a party of young people, I console myself with the thought that, after all, my style is as good-looking as any of theirs, and that's what it must resolve itself in at last!

A MAN entered a furniture store and said: "Have you any old furniture?" "No, Sir," was the reply, "we make new goods," was the answer. This reminds one of the Englishman in a restaurant who ordered fish to be "cooked as you handle 'em."

A cramped waist generally betokens brains in a similar condition.

When I look upon a party of young people, I console myself with the thought that, after all, my style is as good-looking as any of theirs, and that's what it must resolve itself in at last!

A MAN entered a furniture store and said: "Have you any old furniture?" "No, Sir," was the reply, "we make new goods," was the answer. This reminds one of the Englishman in a restaurant who ordered fish to be "cooked as you handle 'em."

Too TRUE!—The man who is awfully urbane to his creditors strangers is generally also "her base" behind their backs.

A "LADIES' SUFFERMENT"—Crinoline!

HOW TO "SERVE" A DINNER—Eat it.

A VERY ONE-HORSE AFFAIR—The taking of Troy.

A man up in Berkshire had company to dine one day, and when all were seated at the table his little son deliberately folded his hands and with a solemn face asked a blessing. When he had finished the little father looked around the table and innocently said, "Father does this when nobody is here."

PARIS GREEN—The fellow who ran away with Helen.

USEFUL DOMESTIC COOKERY—Making both ends "meet."

A MISNOMER.—"Idle reports," contrary to what the name would imply, are always extremely busy!

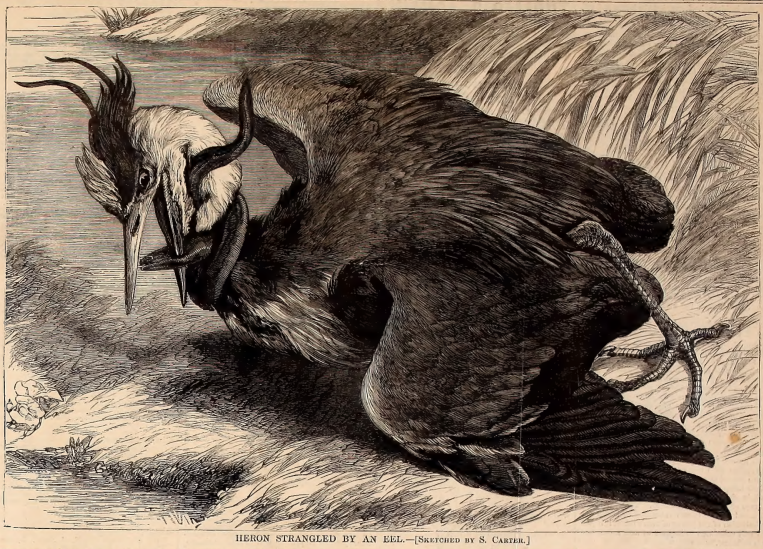
DELIGHTFUL DEVOTION TO SCIENCE.—There is a story, perhaps forgotten by all but men who were students at a certain college many thirty years ago, of an enthusiastic professor of entomology not calculated for his exercise of philosophy, who was so delighted at the arrival of an eminent journeyman of insects that he invited him to board and bed in chambers. Next morning Dr. Mostly greeted his guest, "and how did ye sleep this night, Mister Beetlesnuff?" "Well, very well, strange bed, perhaps! But—" "Ah," quoth the doctor, eagerly, "ye were just bitten by something, eh?" "Well, to tell you the truth, doctor, I was." "Just think of that! Bitten, my ye! Now, can you say it was any thing at all noteworthy that bit you? Peradventure, eh?" "Well, I think, but don't know for biting I never met in my life." "I should think so, indeed! with great pleasure. "They're Sicilian fleas; I imported them myself!"

MAKING A CLEAN SWEEP—Giving him a Turkish bath.

SUGGESTED ANIMATION.—A Performer on the trapeze.

Two friends met the other day in the street. "What a shocking bad hat you wear!" exclaimed one of them. "My dear friend, I wear it only because I love my own liberty." "But what on earth has your liberty to do with the hat?" "Oh, a great deal with it! Any person who would never walk out with me as long as I should wear such a hat!"

VIEW OF THE PUBLIC INSTITUTIONS OF CHARITY AND CORRECTION ON BLACKWELL'S ISLAND, EAST RIVER, NEW YORK.—PHOTOGRAPHED BY ROCKWOOD.—[SEE PAGE 91.]



HERON STRANGLED BY AN EEL.—[SKETCHED BY S. CARTER.]

A HERON STRANGLED BY AN EEL.

MR. S. CARTER, an English artist whose sketch we have engraved, states that this singular encounter took place on December 5, at a stream much frequented by herons, near Gooderstone Water-mill, in Norfolk. The strange gestures of the bird had attracted the attention of a miller named CONIES, who came up to it and found it expiring. The heron, it seems, had pierced with its lower mandible an eel through the gullet, when the eel, on being struck, coiled itself tightly round the heron's neck in such a knot as to completely strangle its enemy, to which, however, the miller dealt an unnecessary blow on the head with his stick. But, on discovering the strange nature of the incident, he forwarded the heron and eel, without distributing their relative positions, to Mr. ELLISS, a skilful naturalist at Swaffham, by whom they are now preserved just as they were found; and they are to form part of the collection of Mr. TYSSEN AMHERST, at Didlington Hall, on whose estate, very near the spot where the heron and eel were found, is the heronry, of which Mr. CARTER lately supplied an illustration. The drawing now engraved was made by Mr. CARTER from the victims in the flesh, before they were skinned for stuffing. The heron, which is a fine bird, proved to be in good condition, and very fat. The eel measured 24 inches in length and weighed 8½ oz.

THE MUSIC LESSON.

A NEW STAR.

A FEW words about the star which, not suddenly appeared, or rather, was suddenly observed, in a portion of the heavens where it was known that no such star was visible up to a very recent period.

The honor of this interesting discovery is due to a French engineer, M. Courbebaisse, who has already, as an amateur astronomer, acquired some distinction, as having called attention to the fact that one of the nebulæ of the third magnitude, in the constellation known as the Northern Crown, increases occasionally in brilliancy until it becomes easy to be ranked as a star of the second magnitude, diminishing again in splendor until it almost, if not entirely, disappears from view.

The newly-discovered star was first observed by M. Courbebaisse in the Balance, early in the morning of the 20th November, 1866; and, knowing how many watchful eyes are continually scanning the heavens at every favorable moment, he had not the instant in question for his discovery to the astronomical world.

It has been established, by well-grounded reasonings, that light travels at the enormous speed of nearly ten millions of miles in a minute. Astronomers tell us further, that the distance of some of the visible heavenly bodies is such, that a ray of light from them requires two millions of years to reach this globe; so that the extraordinary fact is presented to us that centuries ages before the appearance of these starry phantoms upon our earth, their further history may have passed into space and have ceased to have their being; and, as a necessary corollary, the whole of the unexplored vault may be but the image of that which has been. Truly, if astronomical science is well calculated to excite our admiration of the power of man's mind, it is just as well calculated to impress us with a sense of his littleness.

PRANG'S AMERICAN CHROMOS.—The "Sunset" view after BIERSTADT is one of the most brilliant landscapes ever issued in chromo.—N. M. Gazette.

DYSPEPSIA TABLETS cure Indigestion, Heartburn, and Sour Stomach. Fifty Cents per Box. Mailed for 60c. Sold by druggists. S. G. WELLING, 571 Broadway.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

GRAND DUCHESS, BELLE HELENE, and Illness other popular Operas, complete for Piano-forte Solo, with Overture and whole of music. Fifty Cents each. Grand Overtures, and large collections of Vocal and Piano-forte Music, in Books, Fifty Cents each. The cheapest and most extensive catalogue of modern music in the world. Also, just ready, free to any address, Boosey & Co.'s Catalogue of their newest publications in full sheet or music-size form.

BOOSEY & CO., 644 Broadway, N. Y.

Who Says No,

it can not be done! I tell you it is false. Catarrh can be radically cured. Use WOLCOTT'S ANNIHILATOR. Post Notice, 25; in native papers, or send to Dr. WOLCOTT, 110 Chatham Square, N. Y., 25, for six plints, sent free of express charges: or one pint for Catarrh in the Head. Paint, if you suffer any pain.

AGENTS WANTED for ZELL'S POPULAR ENCYCLOPEDIA.

FIVE NOS. READY. PRICE 10 CENTS EACH.

The Philadelphia Bulletin says it is the NOBLEST LITERARY UNDERTAKING ever ventured upon in this country.

The Telegraph says it is the CHEAPEST and most COMPLETE Encyclopedia in the world.

The Press says it is WELL WRITTEN, WELL EDITED, WELL PRINTED, AND NEATLY ILLUSTRATED.

T. ELWOOD ZELL,
Send for Sample.] Publisher, Philadelphia.

WATERS'
NEW SCALE PIANOS,
With Iron Frame, Overstrung Bass and Agraffe Bridge.
AND
Melodeons and Cabinet Organs.

The best manufactured. Warranted for five Years.

Fifty Pianos, Melodeons, and Organs, of six first-class makers, at Reduced Price for Cash, during this month. The same to let, and rent allowed if purchased. Monthly Installments received. Second-hand instruments at great bargains. Warerooms, 481 Broadway, New York. HORACE WATERS.

No excuse now for Papers and Magazines lying about loose all the year.

CONANT'S PROVED
PERIODICAL COVERS,

for HARPER'S WEEKLY or BAZAR, sent by mail for $1 25. They Shut like Magazines firmly over every page.

Address R. CONANT, 29 Nassau St., N. Y.

"A good thing."—New York Tribune.

MAGAZINE SIZE, 50 CENTS. SHEET-MUSIC SIZE, $1 00.

for Coloring the Hair Instantly Brown or Black. Single Comb, $1 25. Sent by Mail. Agents Wanted. 612 Broadway, N. Y.

STEADY, EASY EMPLOYMENT—GOOD PAY. Write to A. BEEBEY, 118 JOHN ST., NEW YORK.

THOMAS R. AGNEW,
ESTABLISHED 1836,
260 Greenwich St., corner Murray,
New York,
IS OFFERING CHEAP,
FOR CASH:

COFFEES.—Green, Roasted, and Ground: all grades to suit the palate and the pocket of the million: 15c., 20c., 25c., 30c., 35c., 40c.; Mocha, 50c.

TEAS.—Every body should know who they buy tea of, as all who sell inferior tea are not customers. Mr. Agnew spent three years in China, and knows exactly what tea can be obtained and the differing goods of any kind; consequently every pound of tea sold is warranted as represented, or the money returned.

MOLASSES.—Mr. Agnew has his agent in New Orleans, an agency of the Messrs. Lau, who run the choicest of the crop.

RICE.—Mr. Agnew has a house in South Carolina, who ship him the best head rice in market.

FLOUR is received direct from the mills. Genesee, Indiana, and Ohio. Also, best brands in market, from $7 to $16 per barrel.

GROCERIES.—Every thing desired in families, hotels, restaurants, boarding-houses, steamships and sailing vessels is sold by Mr. Agnew, who is a live man, working 16, 18, and 20 hours every day for the last quarter of a century. He is sometimes compared with the old fossilized grocers, who have been brought up in a mop-dull hurry, are lackeys for others, and now begin to flap their wings when grey-headed. In a word, Agnew is as far ahead of these fossils as the science of the cat-brose when trotting. He is the man for the people—quick as lightning and practical as time.

JOHNSON & MILLER,

REAL ESTATE AUCTIONEERS,
25 NASSAU ST., New York,
Will buy Brooklyn, Westchester, and New Jersey Property, and sell same every SATURDAY,
for free circulation, a City and Country
REAL ESTATE REGISTER.

Thomson's Patent "Glove-Fitting"
THE ONLY PERFECT CORSET! *

The recent improvements in this Corset render it more than ever worthy of its unequaled popularity, a popularity never attained by any other article in this line.

THOMSON, LANGDON, & CO., 591 Broadway, N.Y., Sole Manufacturers and Patentees for United States.

WANTED—AGENTS—$75 to $200 per month, expenses paid, to sell the GENUINE IMPROVED COMMON SENSE FAMILY SEWING MACHINE. Price $18. It will stitch, hem, fell, tuck, quilt, cord, bind, and embroider in a most superior manner. Fully warranted for five years. We will pay the above wages, or pay $100 for any machine that will sew a stronger, more elastic, or more durable seam than our machine makes the "Genuine Letter Stitch." Every second stitch can be cut, and still the cloth cannot be pulled apart without tearing it. We pay $25 extra for this. $200 for much more and expenses, or a commission from which large profits can be made. Address JOHNSON, CLARK, & CO., FITCHBURG, MASS., or 81 LOUIS, MO.

CAUTION.—Do not be induced upon by other parties palming off worthless cast-iron machines, under the entire name or similar name to ours. Ours is the only practical low-priced shuttle machine in the market.

WANTED AGENTS — To Sell the AMERICAN KNITTING MACHINE. Price $15. Capable of knitting the greatest variety of fabrics ever invented. Will knit a pair of stockings from the heel, complete. Recommendations to Agents. Address, AMERICAN KNITTING MACHINE CO., Boston, Mass., or St. Louis, Mo.

DEAFNESS, CATARRH, SCI OFULA. A Lady who had suffered for years from DEAFNESS, CATARRH, and SCROFULA, was cured by a simple remedy. Her sympathy and gratitude prompts her to send it to her fellow-sufferers. Address Mrs. M. C. L., Box 5,817, New York City.

PATENT OFFICE.

Inventors who wish to take out Letters Patent are advised to consult with

MUNN & CO.,
37 PARK ROW, N.Y.

PROPRIETORS OF THE

SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN,

who have prosecuted claims before the Patent Office for over Twenty Years.

There are HALF A MILLION AND EUROPEAN PATENT AGENCY is the most extensive in the world. Charges less than any other responsible agency. Pamphlet containing full instructions to inventors, sent free.

☞ A handsome Bound Volume, containing 150 Mechanical engravings, and the United States Census by Counties, with Hints and Receipts for Mechanics, sent on receipt of 25 cents. The SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN is the best and cheapest Weekly Illustrated Paper published. Devoted to Science, Art, and Mechanics, published in the world. Three dollars a year. Specimens sent. Address

MUNN & CO., 37 Park Row, New York.

MAGIC, MYSTERY. Sent free on receipt of a stamp, by W. REPBURNE, 102 Nassau St., New York.

HITCHCOCK'S
HALF-DIME MUSIC.

Printed on heavy music-paper, 4 pages, with colored titles. Price 5 cents each, or first 20 sent postpaid for $1 00.

NOW READY:

No. 1. Captain Gleeson.....Marlagan.
" 2. Won't you Tell me why, Robin?...Claribel.
" 3. We'll Rest Beside the Stream.....Hatton.
" 4. Nine Eyes.....Molloy.
" 5. Ah!.....Lloyd.
" 6. Good-bye, Sweetheart, Good-bye.....Hatton.
" 7. I really don't know what I shall Marry.....Claribel.
" 8. Praise of Tears.....Flow'ers.
" 9. Serenade, Wilds Performing".....F. Schubert.
" 10. Cha-quipe Charlie.....Lee.
" 11. Skating Rink Polka.....Wyner.
" 12. Genevieve Waltz.....
" 13. Come Where my Love Lies, my Darling.....
" 14. The Danish Boy's Wattle.....Gratz.
" 15. Little Nelson Boy.....Claribel.
" 16. Maggie's Secret.....Claribel.
" 17. Come Shimmer on.....Al. Sacred Song. Foster.
" 17. The Old Cottage Clock.....Molloy.
" 18. Silver Chain.....Bennett.
" 19. The Rose of Erin.....Benedict.
" 20. Arrow-Song.....Polka Mazurka.....Strauss.

SPECIAL NOTICE.—The above can be obtained at the Music, Book, and Periodical Stores, or by enclosing five Cents each to the Publisher. Other choice selections will rapidly follow. Agents Wanted. BEND. W. HITCHCOCK, Publisher, 29 Spring St., New York.

THE NOVELTY Is the best Press ever invented with which to Do your own Printing, and is second to none for General Job Printers.

NORTH LANSING, MICH., JAN. 6, 1868.

BEND. O. WOOD.—SIR: I have received the Queen Novelty Press you sent me, and have done some very fine work on it. It is better than I expected, and will very nearly do my cards, and is just the thing for a Country Printer.

Yours truly, WILLIS T. CORNELL,
Job Printer and Publisher "Echo."

Price of Presses, $15, $20, $25, $50, $63. Send plain directions for using. Also, Specimens of Printing done on the Press, to BENJ. O. WOOD, Proprietor, 27 Federal St., Boston, Mass.

SOZODONT.

An Eminent Chemist says:

420 BROADWAY, N. Y., July 5, 1866.

I have made a chemical analysis of the preparation for the teeth known as "SOZODONT," for Messrs. HALL & RUCKEL, with the object of the analysis being to ascertain whether it contains substances detrimental to the teeth or gums.

An impartial sample of the "SOZODONT" was purchased by me personally from a leading Drug House of this city, and carefully analyzed for acids and other corrosive or injurious substances likely to affect a chemical action on the teeth or gums, but nothing of an objectionable character was found in its composition. JULIUS G. POHLE, M.D., Analytical Chemist,
Late of Dr. JAS. R. CHILTON & CO.

TILTON'S STATIONERY.

Initial Stamping done without extra Charge.

OUR BOXES: The BISMARCK BOX, filled with assorted fine and medium cream-laid note and envelopes, to match. The PATHIAN BOX, French papers of different patterns and styles. Each box, $1 00.

Price of either Box, $1 00.

Stamped with any initial desired, and

SENT BY MAIL,

postpaid, on receipt of price. Address orders to

TILTON & COMPANY,
161 Washington St., Boston.

NEW BOOK.—200 ENGRAVINGS,

The Farmer's and Mechanic's Manual. Edited by GEO. E. WARING, JR., Author of "Draining for Profit," "Farmers' Agriculture," &c. A book of great value to working men of all trades and occupations. 500 pages, 12mo, cloth, $2 00.

E. B. TREAT & CO., Publishers, 654 Broadway, N. Y.

$1000 PER YEAR guaranteed, and steady employment. Address, with stamp, for circular, A. M. WILSON, Williams St., N. Y., or 16 Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill.

A MUSICAL GEM.

Just Published, a beautiful collection of VOCAL and INSTRUMENTAL MUSIC, entitled

THE OPERA BOUFFE,

Comprising the choicest pieces from Offenbach's Operas, arranged for the Piano-forte:

LA GRANDE DUCHESSE. LA BELLE HELENE, BARBE BLEUE (Blue Beard), ORPHEUS, GENEVIEVE DE BRABANT.

Boards, $2 50; Cloth, $3 00; Cloth, full gilt, $4 00.

Sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of price.

Oliver Ditson & Co., Publishers, 277 Washington St., Boston; C. H. Ditson & Co., 711 Broadway, N.Y.

50,000 SOLD. THE MAGNETIC TIME-KEEPER AND COMPASS, Size of a Silver Watch, Open crystal, white enameled dial, steel and metal work, ordinary watch size. Warranted to denote correct time, and to keep it for two years. Satisfaction guaranteed. Sent postpaid for $1; three for $2. Address as above. Circulars free WALTER HOLT, 102 Nassau St., New York.

$245 A MONTH. TO AGENTS. 49 best selling articles. Address JOHN J. HOWARD & CO., Alfred, Me.

CASTARIA, Brouchitis, Incipient Consumption, Sore of the throat, Diphtheria, Sore of Nipples, Mouth, Sores, Nervous Debility, &c. Positive Remedials from Phalta, WM. H. RINGL, Nurseries, Flushing, N. Y. Medical Circulars, 25 cents. Agents wanted.

GRAY'S Patent Brick MACHINE.

Send for circular to WASHINGTON IRON WORKS, Newburgh, N. Y., Manufacturers for the United States.

DUNHAM & SONS,
MANUFACTURERS OF
PIANO-FORTES.
WAREROOMS,
No. 831 Broadway, New York.
SEND FOR CIRCULAR.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.—When the weary sufferer tosses upon his levered pillow, let him use these Pills, which, by purifying the blood, will quickly obstruct his rest, will make him enjoy refreshing sleep.

HARPER & BROTHERS, NEW YORK,
Have just published

I.

Sir Samuel W. Baker.

CAST UP BY THE SEA: or, The Adventures of Neil Gray. By Sir SAMUEL W. BAKER, M.A., F.R.G.S., Author of "The Albert N'Yanza Great Basin of the Nile," "Eight Years' Wanderings in Ceylon," &c. Complete. With Ten Illustrations by Huard. 18mo, Cloth, 75 cents.

II.

Rev. John L. Nevius.

CHINA AND THE CHINESE: a General Description of the Country and its Inhabitants; its Civilization and Form of Government; its Religious and Social Institutions; its Intercourse with other Nations, and its Future Prospects. By the Rev. JOHN L. NEVIUS, Ten Years a Missionary in China. With a Map and Illustrations. 12mo, Cloth, $1 75.

III.

Lyman Abbott.

JESUS OF NAZARETH: his Life and Teachings; Founded on the Four Gospels, and Illustrated by Reference to the Manners, Customs, Religious Beliefs, and Political Institutions of his Times. By LYMAN ABBOTT. With Designs by Doré, De Lorcelet, Feun, and others. Crown 8vo, Cloth, Beveled Edges, $2 50.

IV.

The Author of "Rachel's Secret."

NATURE'S NOBLEMAN. A Novel. By the Author of "Rachel's Secret." 8vo, Paper, 50 cents.

V.

Henry Ward Beecher.

SERMONS by HENRY WARD BEECHER, Plymouth Church, Brooklyn. Selected from Published and Unpublished Discourses, and Revised by their Author. In Two Volumes. 8vo. With Steel Portrait by Halpin. Cloth, $5 00.

VI.

The Author of "John Halifax."

THE WOMAN'S KINGDOM. A Love Story. By the Author of "John Halifax," "A Noble Life," "The Woman's Thought," "Nothing New," &c. Illustrations. 8vo, Paper, $1 00; Cloth, $1 50.

VII.

Rev. Dr. Bellows.

THE OLD WORLD IN ITS NEW FACE: Impressions of Europe in 1867-1868. By HENRY W. BELLOWS, D.D. In Two Vols. 12mo, Cloth, $3 50. Vol. II. just ready.

VIII.

Charles Lever.

THE KNIGHTS OF BISHOP'S FOLLY. A Novel. By CHARLES LEVER. 8vo, Paper, 60 cents.

IX.

C. W. Dilke.

GREATER BRITAIN: a Record of Travel in English-speaking Countries during 1866 and 1867. By CHARLES WENTWORTH DILKE. With Maps and Illustrations. 12mo, Cloth, $1 50.

X.

Shirley Brooks.

THE GORDIAN KNOT. A Novel. By SHIRLEY BROOKS. 8vo, Paper, 50 cents.

XI.

Paul Du Chaillu.

WILD LIFE UNDER THE EQUATOR. Narrative of Travel, Adventure, and Discovery. By PAUL B. DU CHAILLU, Author of "Discoveries in Equatorial Africa," "Adventures in Lapland," Stories of the Gorilla Country, &c. With numerous Engravings. 12mo, Cloth, $1 75.

XII.

Wilkie Collins.

THE MOONSTONE. A Novel. By WILKIE COLLINS. Illustrations. 8vo, Cloth, $2 00; Paper, $1 50.

XIII.

Samuel Smiles.

LIFE OF THE STEPHENSONS. The Life of George Stephenson, and of his Son, Robert Stephenson: comprising also a History of the Invention and Introduction of the Railway Locomotive. By SAMUEL SMILES, Author of "Self-Help," "The Huguenots," "Life of Boulton and Watt," &c. With numerous Engravings. 12mo, Cloth, $3 00.

XIV.

Georgiana M. Craik.

MILDRED. A Novel. By GEORGIANA M. CRAIK. 8vo, Paper, 50 cents.

XV.

Ross Browne.

ADVENTURES IN THE APACHE COUNTRY: A Tour through Arizona and Sonora, with Notes on the Silver Regions of Nevada. By J. ROSS BROWNE, Author of "Yusef; or, the Journey of the Frangue," "An American Family in Germany," "The Land of Thor," &c. With Illustrations. 12mo, Cloth, Beveled, $2 00.

XVI.

Lord Lytton.

MISCELLANEOUS PROSE WORKS OF EDWARD BULWER, LORD LYTTON. In Two Volumes. 12mo, Cloth, $3 00.

XVII.

THE RIGHTFUL HEIR. A Drama in Five Acts. By EDWARD BULWER, LORD LYTTON, Author of "Richelieu," "The Lady of Lyons," "Not so Bad as we Seem," "Money," &c. 12mo, Paper, 75 cents. "What will he do with it?" &c. 16mo, Paper, 15 cents.

XVIII.

Prof. Dalton.

A TREATISE ON PHYSIOLOGY AND HYGIENE. For Schools, Families, and Colleges. By J. C. DALTON, M.D., Professor of Physiology in the College of Physicians and Surgeons, New York. With Illustrations. 12mo, Cloth or Half Leather, $1 50.

XIX.

A Reformed Opium-Eater.

THE OPIUM HABIT: with Suggestions as to the Remedy. 12mo, Cloth, $1 75.

XX.

Sol. Smith.

THEATRICAL MANAGEMENT IN THE WEST AND SOUTH FOR THIRTY YEARS. Interspersed with Anecdotical Sketches, Autobiographically given by Sol. Smith. Retired Actor. With Portraits, Illustrations and a Portrait of the Author. 8vo, Cloth, $2 00; Paper, $1 50.

☞ HARPER & BROTHERS will send any of the above works by mail, postage prepaid, to any part of the United States, on receipt of the price.

THE AMERICAN HOUSEWIFE. Just the paper for the family. It contains Choice Literature: Hints on Health; Etiquette; Recipes for the Household; Receipts in Art and Fancy Work; Fashion Items, and Illustrated Floral and Children's Departments. For premiums offered to agents, specimen Nos. free. Address Mrs. M. M. B. GOODWIN, Indianapolis, Ind.

ESTABLISHED 1861.

THE

GREAT AMERICAN

TEA COMPANY

RECEIVE THEIR TEAS BY THE CARGO FROM THE BEST TEA DISTRICTS OF

CHINA AND JAPAN,

and sell them in quantities to suit customers

AT CARGO PRICES.

The Company have selected the following kinds from their stock, which they recommend to the notice of wants of clubs. They are sold at cargo prices, the same as they themselves sell them in New York, as the list of prices will show.

PRICE LIST OF TEAS.

OOLONG (black), 70c., 80c., 90c.; best, $1 per lb.
MIXED (green and black), 70c., 80c., 90c.; best, $1 per lb.
ENGLISH BREAKFAST (black), 80c., 90c., $1, $1 10; best, $1 20 per lb.
IMPERIAL (green), 80c., 90c., $1, $1 10; best, $1 25 per lb.
YOUNG HYSON (green), 80c., 90c., $1, $1 10; best, $1 25 per lb.
UNCOLORED JAPAN, 90c., $1; best, $1 10 per lb. GUNPOWDER (green), $1 25; best, $1 50 per lb.

—

COFFEES ROASTED AND GROUND DAILY.

Ground Coffee, 20 cents, 25 cents, 30 cents, 35 cents; best, 40 cents per pound.

Hotels, saloons, boarding-house keepers, and Families who use large quantities of Coffee, can economize in that article by using our

FRENCH BREAKFAST AND DINNER COFFEE,

which we sell at the low price of 30 cents per pound, and warrant to give perfect satisfaction.

ROASTED (unground), 50c., 35c.; best, 40c. per lb.
GREEN (unroasted), 25c., 30c., 35c.; best, 40c. per lb.

—

CLUB ORDER.

POUGHKEEPSIE, MICH., August 26, 1868.

To the GREAT AMERICAN TEA COMPANY.

Sirs: I send you Every Saturday, New York.

GENTS: The people here will not let me alone. They say I have got a good lot, and that I have got to send another order for them. So here you have it, in the shape of a club order. In order not to be left Monday, making 8× hundred and forty-four dollars and sixty-four cents. We have sent you about that date.

Hoping this will be as good as former packers, I remain Yours, &c., W. W. BLANKINS.

10 lbs. Uncol'd Japan, Mrs. Kempton...	at $1 00	$10 00
5 " Gunpowder...	" 1 50	7 50
5 " Young Hyson... A. L. Cumminge, jr.	" 1 25	6 25
5 " Imperial..... Elias Stephens...	" 1 25	6 25
5 " Gunpowder... C. F. Chapman...	" 1 50	7 50
5 " Gunpowder... O. A. Watrous...	" 1 50	7 50
5 " Young Hyson... Mrs. Bird...	" 1 25	6 25
5 " Young Hyson... J. Hopkins.....	" 1 25	6 25
5 " Coffee.....	" 0 30	1 50
5 " Gunpowder..... Mrs. Campbell...	" 1 50	7 50
5 " Young Hyson... Wm. H. Dorsey...	" 1 25	6 25
5 " Coffee..... Mrs. Malone...	" 0 30	1 50
2 " do. do. N. Newcomb...	" 1 25	2 50
2 " do. do. Nash Campbell...	" 1 25	2 50
5 " Gunpowder... Judge Miller...	" 1 50	7 50
5 " do. do. Mrs. Bird...	" 1 50	7 50
5 " Imperial..... Mrs. Bird.....	" 1 25	6 25
		$74 25

Parties sending Club or other orders for less than Thirty Dollars can do better send a Post-office Draft or Money with their orders, to save the expense of collections by express; but larger orders we will forward by express, to "collect on delivery."

Hereafter we will send a complimentary package to the party getting up the Club. Our profits are small, but we will be as liberal as we can afford. We send no complimentary packages for clubs of less than Thirty Dollars.

Parties getting their Teas from us may confidently rely upon getting them pure and fresh, as they come direct from the Custom-House stores to the consumers.

We warrant all the goods we sell to give entire satisfaction. If they are not satisfactory they can be returned at our expense within 30 days, and have the money refunded.

N.B.—Inhabitants of villages and towns where a large number reside, by clubbing together, can reduce the cost of their Teas and Coffees about one third. Any number of our Post-Office Box, as appears in this advertiser—ast. This will prevent their orders from getting into the hands of the wrong parties.

POST-OFFICE Orders and Drafts make payable to the Order of

"THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA COMPANY."

Direct Letters and Orders as below (no more, no less):

GREAT AMERICAN TEA COMPANY,
NOS. 31 and 33 Vesey Street,
Post-Office Box 5643, New York City.

—

MEN—AND WOMEN—OF MARK.—Baron Rothschild, Prof. Beche, Mrs. Lily Hay, Baroness Wilde Coltius, Theodosia Burr Alston, Hepworth Dixon, Sec. Gen. Garibaldi—Social: An Attempt to Popularize Skeletal Advice: Napoleon Bonaparte: Self-Instruction and Practical Anatomy: "The Science of Psychological: Influence of Intellect on Social Intercourse: Love and Marriage: How a Man may be a Gentleman by a Pin: Self-Conquest: Resurrection of the Body: Are we Responsible for our Faces? Spiritual Wonders: Face: A Good Citizen: Equality of Minds: Woman's Face: Physiognomy Natural in Boys: The Women of Europe: The Phrenological Journal for February, now ready. Only 20 cents, or $2 a year. Women have it. Address S. R. WELLS, 389 Broadway, N.Y.

—

VELOCIPEDE WHEELS.

Send for Circular to
S. N. BROWN & CO.,
DAYTON, OHIO.

They also make a prime article of Spokes and Rubs for light Carriage and Buggy Wheels. Send for Price-List.

—

$25 KNITTING MACHINE.

WANTED—Buyers and Sellers for the HICKWORD FAMILY KNITTER, the most reliable Invention for the household ever made. It knits 20,000 stitches a minute, runs back and forward, and sets up its own work. Parties are making from $3 to $5 per day at their homes. Our new Book of Instructions is plain and explicit. HICKFORD KNITTING MACHINE CO., 56 Bromfield St., Boston, Ms.

The Celebrated Imitation Gold

$15. HUNTING WATCHES. $20.

THE COLLINS OROIDE WATCH FACTORY.

CASES OF THE

COLLINS METAL

(IMPROVED OROIDE).

SPECIAL NOTICE.

Our regular Goods Watch, as having recently been imitated, and worthless Watches sold in New York, Boston, Chicago, and other cities, represented as our Watches, we have taken out Trade Marks against them, and give notice that we are in no way responsible for these bogus concerns, and only those genuine and directly from us can secure a genuine Watch of our manufacture. We have recently greatly improved our Goods in appearance and durability; and, to protect the public from imposition hereafter, we have named it the

"COLLINS METAL,"

and we give notice that any one making use of this name will be prosecuted to the extent of the law.

This metal has all the brilliancy and durability of Gold; can not be distinguished from it by the best judges; retains its color till worn out, and is equal to gold excepting in intrinsic value. All our Gentlemen's Watches are of the Full-Jeweled Patent Lever, suitable for Ladies on improved Escapement, better than a Lever for a small Watch; all in Hunting-Cases, and fully guaranteed by special certificate. The $15 Watches are equal in neatness, style, finish, appearance, and time, to Watches costing from $50 to $100. The $20 are of extra fine finish, and are fully equal to a Gold Watch costing $200. Chains of every style, from $2 to $6.

JEWELRY.—We are manufacturing all kinds of Jewelry—Pins, Earrings, Sleeve-Buttons, Lockets, Studs, Finger-Rings, Bracelets, Pencils, Charms, Odd Fellow and Masonic Pins, &c., all of the latest and most elegant designs, fully equal to gold in appearance and wear.

TO CLUBS:—Where Six Watches are ordered at one time, we will send one extra Watch free of charge. We positively employ no Peddlers, and consequently can not possibly manufacture the Watches for less than our published prices. Our regular customers, therefore, have the benefit of our lowest prices. Parties in New York or elsewhere representing themselves as our agents are swindlers. The genuine Collins Watches can only be had at our office in New York City. Customers are requested not to send money in letters, as we will collect goods on delivery, or they can send by post for what is taken from the express office. Customers must pay all express charges. In ordering, write plainly the name, town, county, and state. Customers in the city will receive their goods at our office.

Nos. 37 and 39 Nassau Street, Opposite the Post-Office (Up Stairs), New York.

C. E. COLLINS & CO.

—

TAKE NOTICE.

On account of our immense business and depreciation of merchandise, we now receive subscriptions to Agents and Patrons then usual. Any one sending $5 for 60 grand sellers will receive one of the following articles: Lepine Watch, 7 pair Wool Blankets, Long Watch, 15 Yards Brussels Carpeting, &c. Send for full Trade Circular, containing important information. ANDREWS & CO., 139 Fulton St., New York City.

—

AGENTS, FARMERS, GARDENERS, and FRUIT GROWERS.—Send for particulars of Baeh's Improved Fruit Jar, the Most Economical and Exact Destroyer. Samples to test will be forwarded to any part of the United States, on perfect satisfaction guaranteed. Good Agents are wanted in every County in the United States.

J. AHEARN, 63 Second St., Baltimore, Md.

—

A MUSICAL BOX for ONE DOLLAR.

A The Free Press Printer, a Newspaper for Business, durability; in highly-polished case, metallic frame, brilliant tone, and perfect construction, with the most recent improvements, new keyless pattern. Just what Live Agents have been adapted for the livening room table. Guaranteed of the best workmanship and performance. No. 1, with 4 tunes, $1; No. 2, with 6 tunes, $2; No. 3, 24 airs, $3. All sent rare by mail on receipt of the amount. Address J. FAIL, Box 4 Washington Chambers Street, N.Y. All parties who can conveniently send Post-Office Orders are requested to do so.

—

STAMMERING CURED BY BATES' APPLIances. For descriptive pamphlet, address Starrett & Co., Boston, Ms.

—

THIS NO THING: By sending 25 cts., with age, height, color of eyes and hair, you will receive, by return mail, a correct likeness of your future husband or wife, with name and date of marriage. Address W. FOX, P. O. Drawer No. 46, Fulton St., New York.

—

WANTED! WANTED!

A GENTS of either sex, in every town and village, A for the largest ONE DOLLAR SALE in the country. The smallest article sold for a dollar is the Silver-Plated Five-Bottled Revolving Castor, or your choice of 300 other articles equally as useful. Extraordinary inducements to Agents larger than ever. Send for Circular.

S. C. BROOKS & CO.,
126 Federal Street, Boston, Mass.

—

100 BEAUTIFUL LADIES' PHOTOGRAPHS sent on receipt of 10c. BOX 495, Brooklyn, N.Y.

—

WYATT'S GREAT CURE for CONSUMPTION and DISEASES DESTRUCTIVE to the HUMAN SYSTEM restores appetite, expels impure matter, cleanses the system, and invariably gives new life and vigor. Sample free. Address SAYRE & CO., Broadway & Fulton St., N.Y.

—

30,000 ACRES

WESTERN and SOUTHERN LANDS and IMPROVED FARMS, for sale in $100 per acre. Circulars free. Address P. O. Box 4691.

J. Bowling Green, New York.

—

THIRTY YEARS' EXPERIENCE and all modern improvements in Brick Machines, Machinery, and Castings of all kinds. Send for circular to the BROWN MANUFACTURING CO., Peekskill, N. Y. P. O. Box 111.

—

EVERY MAN HIS OWN PRINTER.

With our Printing Outfits, and with materials for paying it, every man can do his own printing, thus saving much time and money. Send for Circulars, containing full information about these Presses, prices, recommendations, &c., sent free on application. Specimens of types, cuts, borders, &c., &c., 10 cents. Now-books of types, cuts, borders, &c., &c., 10 cents.

DAVID WATSON, Ag't, Adams Press Co.,
No. 27 Courtlandt Street, New York.

—

GENUINE OROIDE GOLD WATCH CO.,

Geneva, Switzerland,

Manufacture, on strictly scientific principles, style, finish, durability, and color (is carat gold) a fac-simile of the appearance and superior qualities of the costliest watches, and produce the invaluable as reliable time-keepers. Each Watch warranted by special certificate from the nonage time invariable as reliable time-keepers, and to retain their color equal to gold. Magnificent Oroide Gentlemen's Hunting Cases, $20: Ladies' and Gents' Full-Jeweled Levers, $25: Ladies' Hunting Cases of Fine Gold, Full-Jeweled Patent Levers, $50: Chronometer Balance, $25. Elaborately engraved, $30. Superior Chronometer Balance, Repeaters, Escapements—the most exacting of our customers—have only to test the accuracy and utility of our celebrated watches, and produce the most unexceptionable evidence of their superiority. Each Watch is accompanied by special certificate from the manufacturers, guaranteeing it to be a perfect time-keeper, and to retain their color equal to gold. Magnificent Oroide Gold Watch Co. to be perfect time-keepers, and to retain their color equal to gold. Magnificent Oroide Gold Chains, $5, $6, $7, $8, $9, $10. Clubs for Six Watches will receive an extra Watch free. Express Co's Gold Chains, $5, $6, $7, $8, $9, $10. Clubs for Six Watches will receive an extra Watch free. Express Co's will exhibit the Watch, &c., when requested, on receipt of express charges both ways. Express Co's where, and when paid for on delivery, except orders from California, Far Western Territories, and Texas, which must be accompanied with a Postal Money Order. Customers must pay all charges. The universal demand for our specialties have induced unprincipled persons to counterfeit our inimitable Watch with worthless metal of worthless dial. Beware of such impositions. Genuine only from the Manufactory.

JOHN TOGGAN, Pres't Oroide Gold Watch Co. Only Office in the United States, No. 79 Nassau St., N. Y.

N.B.—Depot of the IMPROVED AMERICAN STEEL SHIRT COLLARS. Mailed, $1 00.

—

VALENTINES.—Col'd Comics only 10c. a doz.; Col'd 4 page Sentimental Valentines, 20c. a doz.; 14 Comics for only $1. Splendid Valentines in Envelopes at 5c., 10c., 15c., 20c., 25c., 50c., and $1, and upward. Lots for dealers at $3, $5, and $10. Sent all THREE TIMES cost. Order early. 50 Valentines, assorted for sample, 25c. Above prices address

HUNTER & CO., HINSDALE, N. H.

—

25 CENT ALBUM.—New patent, bound in Cloth, Gilt Edges, Beveled Boards, Gilt Clasp, only 25 cts. Album and 10 splendid Photographs for 75 cts. Album 70 Photographs for only $1 25. SATISFACTION GUARANTEED. All sent post free. 8 Albums for $1. Send 25 cts. for sample of the Album.

Publishers, HINSDALE, N. H.

—

HUNTER'S GUIDE.—Worth $10 to any boy or farmer. Tells how and where and things all animals to make traps and boats, tan skins, &c., &c., 10,000 sold in two months. Agents wanted. Costs 25 cts., postpaid by HUNTER & CO., Publishers,

HINSDALE, N. H.

—

LOOK! YOUNG MEN AND WOMEN about starting in life. HOW TO GET RICH, by ONE WHO IS RICH. Mailed free. Address, with stamp, GEORGE SIMES, 6 HEMENWAY, JR., Potsdam, St. Lawrence Co., N.Y.

—

WHY will you work for $1 50 per day, when you can make $5 per day in your own locality? Can be done in-door, by either sex. We have 100 brand-new articles never before introduced, and wanted in every house. Samples sent on receipt of 10 cents. Address WALCOTT, HOLT & CO., 189 Broadway, St. 4, N.Y.

—

ARCHITECTURAL DEPARTMENT OF THE

Novelty Iron Works,

NOS. 77 and 83 Liberty Street,
Cor. Broadway, New York.

Plain and Ornamental Iron Work of all kinds for Buildings.

—

25 CENTS.—Now is the time to subscribe to Maple Leaves, the best, the most popular, and the cheapest Magazine for Boys and Girls. Each number contains matter of interest and importance to every body. 28 cents will be sent from now to the end of 1869. Sample copies sent on receipt of stamp to pay postage. Address, Maple Leaves, Keene, N. H.

—

$100 to $250 PER MONTH guaranteed, Male and Female Agents wanted for New Patents. Address, Novelty Iron Works, 83 Liberty St., New York, or write for particulars to the GIHARD WIRE MILLS, 261 North Third St., Philadelphia, Pa.

—

MAGIC PICTURES. Wonderful and Amusing. 25 cents a Package. Clubs, $1 50 Dozen Packages. W. V. KELLEY, 4 Spruce St., N.Y.

—

EPILEPSY (or fits) cured. Address Dr. J. STEPHENS, Lock Box 159, Lockport, N.Y.

—

EPILEPSY (or fits) cured. Those afflicted are earnestly solicited to read the Great Letter of Hon. Testimonials, which will convince the most skeptical of the wonderful power of this remedy. Address W. BURR LOCKROW, M.D., 56 Great Jones St., N.Y. City.

—

EARLY ROSE POTATO, American and Foreign Sugar Canes, Corn, Field Seeds, Clover Seed, Grass Seed, Hops, Fowls, Best Podder Cotton. Send for the EXTENSIVE SEED CATALOGUE. Free. Address GEO. A. DEITZ, Chambersburg, Pa.

—

BANKRUPT STOCK of JEWELRY for sale cheap. Send for Circular. Address No. 5600 pieces assorted for $100; 2500 pieces for $50; 1125 pieces for $25. Sent by express, send free. Address LOCK BOX 431, Providence, R. I.

—

Alaska Diamonds.

The new ALASKA DIAMOND, or carbonized quartz, equal in lustre to the real diamond, mounted at our own factory, in artistic diamond settings, guaranteed fine gold, and sold by us at one sixtieth of the cost of real diamonds, to which they are equal in every respect except intrinsic value.

Look at our Price-List.

Ladies' & Misses' Finger-Rings, $8 and $10: Solitaire Ear-Drops, $6, $8, $10: Cluster Finger-Rings, $10, $12, $15: Cluster Ear-Drops, $6, $12, $14.

Gents' Studs, $10, $15, $20, and $25 each: Cross Rings, $20 and $25.

Gents' Solitaire Pins, $3, $5, $8, $10, $15, $20: Rings, $8 and $10. Gents' Cluster Rings, $8, $10, and $12. Cluster Pins, $8 and $12: with bar, $10. Cross Pins, $6, $10, and $15: Studs, per set, $3, $5, $10.

We do our business from this one factory, located in a city which has a world-wide reputation for its fine jewelry.

Orders less than $5 should be accompanied with P. O. order or Registered Letter, or the goods sent free. Exceeding that amount sent by express, C.O.D., customers paying all express charges. A Large Discount to the Trade. TRY US.

STANLEY, WHIPPLE & CO., Providence, R. I.

—

AGENTS

Wanted. Can make from $10 to $25 a day selling BLAKE'S DOLLAR FAMILY SEWING MACHINE. They sell a Spring and Rocking Chair out of any common chair by attaching from the front legs. Sample, $5 per chair, and can not get out of order; they will last a lifetime. The old-fashioned Rockers are dangerous. For the house and office they are indispensable. Ladies recommend them unequaled for comfort. If you want an Agency, call and see samples, or send for circular, with terms, &c., (3500 Newly Arrived. Satisfaction of any person or persons who shall infringe upon BLAKE'S PATENT CHAIR. Address BLAKE, GODWIN & BLAKE, Prop. & Mfrs, 612 Broadway, N.Y.

—

$10 A DAY FOR ALL. Stencil Tool samples free. Address A. J. STILLMAN, Springfield, Vt.

—

IMPROVED ALUMINUM BRONZE HUNTING-CASED WATCHES.

$50

I will cheerfully give the above amount to any one who can detect the imitation of this Watch from a Gold one. Sent on receipt of price, or will send C.O.D. with privilege of examining. Address CLUB D. HUGUENIN VUILLEMIN, Manufacturer, Locle, Switzerland. Call and examine for yourself.

—

$325 A MONTH, AND EXPENSES—28 new articles. H. B. SHAW, Alfred, Me.

—

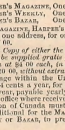
100 PHOTOGRAPHS or BEAUTIFUL WOMEN sent on receipt of 10c. BOX 495, Brooklyn, N.Y.

—

Address C. SEYMOUR, Hoflaen, New York.

—

HARPER'S PERIODICALS.



Harper's Magazine, Weekly, and Bazar. These three periodicals fully merit the high encomiums which they have received from the press and the support which has been given them by the reading public. Whether one considers their beautiful and instructive illustrations, which leave untouched no subject of domestic or foreign importance—their literary merit, which has given them their unrivaled circulation—their literature—or their judicious editorial management—they must be regarded as unsurpassed in either of the best family periodicals in the world.—The Advance: Chicago.

—

TERMS FOR 1869:

HARPER'S MAGAZINE, One Year..... $4 00
HARPER'S WEEKLY, One Year..... 4 00
HARPER'S BAZAR, One Year..... 4 00

HARPER'S MAGAZINE, HARPER'S WEEKLY, and HARPER'S BAZAR, One Year, together, One Year..... 10 00

Any Two of the Above Periodicals, for One Year. 7 00

An Extra Copy of either the MAGAZINE, WEEKLY, or BAZAR will be supplied gratis for every Club of FIVE Subscribers at $4 00 each, or, Six Copies for $20 00, without extra copy.

The Postage within the United States is for the MAGAZINE 24 cents a year, for the WEEKLY or BAZAR 20 cents a year, which must be paid quarterly, at the office where received. Subscriptions from the Dominion of Canada must be accompanied with 24 cents additional for the MAGAZINE, or 20 cents for the WEEKLY or BAZAR, to prepay United States postage.

Subscribers to the MAGAZINE, WEEKLY, or BAZAR will find on each wrapper the Number with which their subscription expires. Each periodical is stopped when the term of subscription closes. It is not necessary to give notice of discontinuance.

The Volumes of the MAGAZINE commence with the numbers for June and December of each year. Subscriptions may commence with any Number. When no time is specified, it will be understood that the subscriber wishes to begin with the first Number of the current Volume, and back numbers will be sent accordingly.

The Volumes of the WEEKLY commence with the year. When no time is specified, it will be understood that the subscriber wishes to commence with the Number next after the receipt of his order.

Remittances should be by Postal Order or Draft payable to the order of HARPER & BROTHERS to prefer able to Bank Notes, which are at the risk of the Publishers, unless they can be renewed without loss to the sender.

In ordering the MAGAZINE, the WEEKLY, or the BAZAR, the name and address should be carefully written. When the direction is to be changed, both the old and the new one must be given.

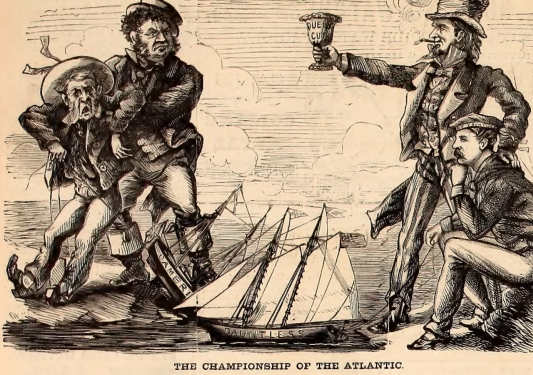
TERMS FOR ADVERTISING IN HARPER'S PERIODICALS.

Harper's Magazine.—Whole Page, $200: Half Page, $105: Quarter Page, $55—each insertion: or, for a less space, $1 50 per line, (nonpareil).

Harper's Weekly.—Inside Page, $1 50 per Line: Outside Page, $2 00 per Line—each insertion.

Harper's Bazar.—$1 00 per Line: Cuts and Display, $1 25 per Line—each insertion.

Address HARPER & BROTHERS, New York.



THE CHAMPIONSHIP OF THE ATLANTIC.

UNCLE SAM. "Come, John, we're ready."
JOHN BULL. "Can't get my Boy up to the Scratch, Sam."

GORHAM MFG. CO.

Sterling Silver Ware,

AND

Fine Electro-Plated Ware,

of the following trade-marks:

Trade-Mark for Silver. GORHAM MFG. CO. Trade-Mark for Electro-Plate.

MANUFACTURED BY THE

GORHAM MANUFACTURING CO.,

PROVIDENCE, R. I.

Orders received from the Trade only, but these goods may be obtained from responsible dealers every where.

THE GORHAM WARE may be obtained of ADAMS, CHANDLER, & CO., No. 20 JOHN STREET, NEW YORK.

WEBSTER'S UNABRIDGED DICTIONARY

3000 ENGRAVINGS. 1040 pp. Octavo. UNABRIDGED!!

Webster's Unabridged Dictionary,

10,000 Words and Meanings not in other Dictionaries.

1840 Pages Quarto. Sheep, Price $12.
In two volumes, Half Turkey, " 16.
In three " " flexible, " 18.
The same, one volume, Russia, " 16.

WEBSTER'S NATIONAL PICTORIAL DICTIONARY.

1040 Pages, Octavo; 600 Engravings. Price $6.

The work is really a gem of a Dictionary, just the thing for the million.—Am. Educational Monthly.

Published by G. & C. MERRIAM, Springfield, Mass.

PRINCE & COS. ORGANS AND MELODEONS. 43,000, now in use. BUFFALO, N.Y. CHICAGO, ILL.

Wm. Knabe & Co.

MAGNIFICENT

Grand, Square, and Upright

PIANOS.

Unapproachable for their IMMENSE POWER OF TONE, GREAT SINGING QUALITY,

Evenness throughout the entire Scale, Easy Action, Workmanship, and Durability, and pronounced Unequaled by all the

FAMED ARTISTS OF THIS COUNTRY AND EUROPE.

Every Instrument Warranted for Ten Years.

WAREROOMS,

650 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

J. BAUER & CO.,

General Agents and Manufacturers and Importers of Musical Instruments, Strings, and Musical Merchandize.

PULLAN & SON, MANUF'RS of Morocheason goods. Stores: 488 Broadway, near Broome, & 27 John St., middle of block. Pipes and Holders made to order and repaired. All goods warranted genuine. Send for wholesale or retail circular. Letter-Box 5046.

CALENBERG & VAUPEL'S

AGRAFFE PIANOS

RECEIVED THE FIRST PREMIUM IN 1868.

Warerooms and Factory, 533 & 535 West 36th St., N. Y.

DR. JNO. V. BURTON'S

TOBACCO ANTIDOTE,

WARRANTED TO REMOVE ALL DESIRE FOR TOBACCO. It entirely regulates the Stomach, Liver, Digestion and nourishes the blood, invigorates the system, possesses great nourishing and strengthening power, is a excellent tonic and appetizer, enables the confirmed to digest the heartiest food, and is a perfect substitute for Tobacco in every form. Smokers and chewers will find it almost marvelous. Price Fifty cents per box, post free. An infallible remedy on the below-named effects of tobacco, with its accompanying nervousness, relaxation, etc., SENT FREE. Agents wanted. Address

DR. T. S. ARNOT, Jersey City, N. J.

FOR SALE BY ALL DRUGGISTS.

☞ Caution.—Beware of humbug imitations.

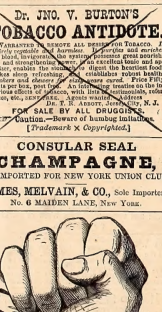
[Trademark & Copyrighted.]

CONSULAR SEAL

CHAMPAGNE,

AS IMPORTED FOR NEW YORK UNION CLUB.

TOMES, MELVAIN, & CO., Sole Importers,
No. 6 MAIDEN LANE, NEW YORK.



OR, THE

PATROON'S DAUGHTER.

A Story of Colonial Times.

By F. HAMILTON MYERS.

NOW READY IN THE NEW YORK WEEKLY.

Price Six Cents.

☞ FOR SALE EVERYWHERE. ☜

$20 A DAY—TO MALE AND FEMALE AGENTS—to introduce the celebrated BUCKEYE $20 SHUTTLE SEWING MACHINES. Stitch alike on both sides, and is the only Licensed Shuttle Machine in the market sold for less than $40. All others are infringements, and the seller and user are liable to prosecution and imprisonment. Full particulars Free. Address

W. A. HENDERSON & CO., Cleveland, Ohio.

COLTON

DENTAL ASSOCIATION, the originators and only Headquarters of Nitrous Oxide Gas for certain Painless Teeth-Extraction. We have the autograph of 21,000 patients testifying to the above. Never had one accident. OFFICE, 19 COOPER INSTITUTE.

PROF. BLOT'S SOUPS.

For Sale by Grocers and Provision Dealers.
Depot, 2 VESEY ST., New York.

DR DE JONGH'S

GOLDEN BROWN COD LIVER OIL

LIGHT-BROWN COD LIVER OIL

Is convincingly proved by the highest medical testimony, and by the practical test of successful experience for twenty years in all parts of the world, to be beyond all question, the purest, the most efficacious, the most palatable, and, from its rapid curative effects, the most economical of all kinds.

CONSUMPTION & DISEASES OF THE CHEST.

DR. DE JONGH'S OIL is administered with extraordinary success in cases of consumption and diseases of the chest. No remedy so rapidly restores the exhausted strength, improves the nutritive functions, stops emaciation, checks the perspiration, quiets the cough and expectoration, or produces a more marked and favorable influence on the local malady.

DEBILITY OF ADULTS AND CHILDREN.

DR. DE JONGH'S OIL possesses unequaled and peculiar nutritive and restorative properties; hence its marvelous efficacy in debility of adults and children. It revives the natural appetite; improves, reanimates, and regulates the functions of digestion and assimilation; and entirely restores health and strength to the most feeble and deteriorated constitutions.

TRADE MARK. Dr. DE JONGH'S GENUINE OIL is shipped to the UNITED STATES in Imperial Half-Pint Bottles ONLY, sealed with a Patent Trade-Mark Capsule, color blue opaque, white top, stamped with a blue fish on a red shield, and the label, under the wrapper, on each bottle, bears THREE SIGNATURES, viz.: those of Dr. De Jongh: of ANSAR, HARFORD & CO.: and of EDWARD GRIFFIN & CO.

SOLE CONSIGNEES,

ANSAR, HARFORD & CO., 77, Strand, London.

SOLE ACCREDITED AGENTS IN AMERICA,

EDW'D GRIFFIN & CO., 58, Vesey St., New York.

Sold by all Druggists, at $1.50 per Bottle.

☞ A Descriptive Pamphlet post free on application.

MARVIN & CO.'s

CHROME IRON SAFES

ARE THE BEST IN THE WORLD.

265 Broadway, N. Y.

THE WILSON SHUTTLE SEWING MACHINES. Cheaper than all others. All Warranted Five Years. Manufactured by THE WILSON SEWING MACHINE CO., Cleveland, O.

GENUINE WALTHAM WATCHES,

IN SOLID GOLD AND SILVER CASES ONLY,

AT EXTREMELY LOW PRICES.

Silver Hunting Watches $18
Gold Hunting Watches, 18 carat Cases . . . $80
Gold Hunting Watches, Ladies' Size $70

Every Watch warranted by special certificate from the American Watch Company. We will send these Watches by Express to any place, with bill to collect on delivery, and give the purchaser the privilege to open the package and examine the Watch before paying, and any Watch that does not give satisfaction may be exchanged or the money will be refunded. Every one is requested to write for our Descriptive Price-List, which explains the different kinds with prices of each.

Please state that you saw this in Harper's Weekly.

Address in full,

HOWARD & CO., No. 619 Broadway, N. Y.

ELGIN

C.O.D. WATCHES, C.O.D.

We will send by express, to be paid for on delivery, the National Watch Company's WATCHES, at the following prices, viz:

"J. Y. Ryerson," full plate, 18 size, steel balance, 7 jewels, 2 oz. Silver case. $35 00
"Mat. Ludin," full plate, 18 size, expansion balance, 3 oz. Silver case. 28 50

Either of the above in 3 oz. case, $2 additional.
Either of the above in 4 oz. case, $4 50 additional.
With the privilege of examining in the hands of the Express Agent before paying for the watch.

FULLER & CO.,

Successors to M. E. Chapman & Co.,
No. 47 LIBERTY ST., NEW YORK.

Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Gout.

Suffering severely for years, even crippled, from rheumatic Rheumatism, I tried at last Dr. HUNT'S RHEUMATIC REMEDY, which gave me immediate relief, and effected a rapid and permanent cure.

EDWARD P. UNDERHILL,
Clerk of Assembly, N. Y. State Legislature, Albany.

I will send on receipt of $2—in money order—a Bottle of my Remedy, containing twenty doses.

☞ A small trial bottle mailed FREE to any address.

Dr. S. Hunt, No. 5 Bedman St., N. Y. City.

NEW MUSIC.

VELOCIPEDE GALOP, illustrated . . . . . 50c.
TELEGRAM WALTZ—STRAUSS. . . . . 40c.
RIVE NOCTURNE. . . . . 30c.
THE HAUNTED TREEMONT. . . . . 40c.
YOU'LL SCATTERS THEM OF MY. . . . . 30c.
LIFE IN MY HEART AND PEACE IN MY. . . . . 30c.

Violin or Flute Arrangements, 15c. each. Music mailed.

FREDERICK BLUME, 110 Broadway, Brooklyn, 208 Bowery.

WOODWARD'S Country Homes.

150 Designs, $1 00, postpaid.
GEO. E. WOODWARD, Architect,
191 Broadway, New York.
Send stamp for catalogue of all new books on Architecture.

SENT FREE, Business Men, Mechanics, Farmers, Professional Men, and Housewives, send red stamp for book of valuable information, and subject in writing to

C. D. HARPER & CO., CLEVELAND, O.

SABBATH PRAISE.—A New Book by J. W. SUFFERN, for Choirs and Singing-Schools; full of new and effective secular and sacred music. This new work is having an immense sale. Specimen pages mailed for 70 cts. Price $1 25, or $12 per dozen. The Silver Bell, by C. Butler, for Schools. . . . 50c.
The Silver Chime, by C. F. Root, for Sunday-Sch. 50c.
Belak's new Piano Method. . . . . 75c.
Gordon's Short Singing Volunteers (new) $1 00
Send for Catalogue of New Books.
S. T. GORDON, 70 Broadway, N. Y.

THIS IS IT! If you are selling Sewing Machines, send your name and P. O. address to us for particular information. Only those that are in the business, or have been, need apply. ADDRESS A. E. CASE & CO., Toledo, Ohio.

Agents Wanted.

FOUNTAIN PENS.—8 styles. 12 pens, 38 cts.; one gross, $2; Gold Pen, 16 carats, $1 66. One dip writes 8 pages. Sells quick. Eraser, pencil-sharpener, and pen-holder combined, 30 cts.; 12 for $1 95, postpaid. Our agents make $50 per week. Address Mosse FOUNTAIN PEN CO., 413 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, Pa.

HARPER & BROTHERS, New York, have just published "CAST UP BY THE SEA," by Samuel W. Baker, M.A., R.G.S. With Ten Illustrations of Hazel. 12mo, Cloth, 75 cents. Mailed postpaid.

FREDERICKTOWN, O., October 9, 1868

LIPPINCOTT & BALDWELL—

Dear Sirs.—For the benefit of all whose desires or necessities make it their business to chop with an axe, I would say: Try the Red Jacket. It cuts deeper than the ordinary. Being round on the cut, it does not bind the wood. Every chopper with the common axe must understand that there is a great labor and strength expended in taking the axe out of the cut as in making the blow. This with the Red Jacket is all saved, from one third to one half the labor is saved in cutting the same quantity. By putting in the same labor that is necessary with a common axe, you can easily make at least three chips per cut; more wood in the same time. You are safe in letting any honest man try your Red Jacket on these tests, and if it fails refund him his money.

Respectfully yours, HARRY BALDWIN.

For sale by all responsible hardware dealers and the manufacturers, J. LIPPINCOTT & J. BALDWELL, PITTSBURGH, PA., Sole Owners of Collum's and Red Jacket Patents.

COMPARE PRICES.

THE MASON & HAMLIN ORGAN CO., whose Organs are acknowledged to be the best, have this season introduced very important improvements and new styles of Organs, and have materially reduced prices. Four-Octave Organs, $60 each; Five-Octave Double-Reed Organs, Five Stops, $125. Every one guaranteed for five years. Purchasers should at least obtain one of their new circulars (which will be sent free), and compare prices. Address the MASON & HAMLIN ORGAN CO., 596 Broadway, New York.

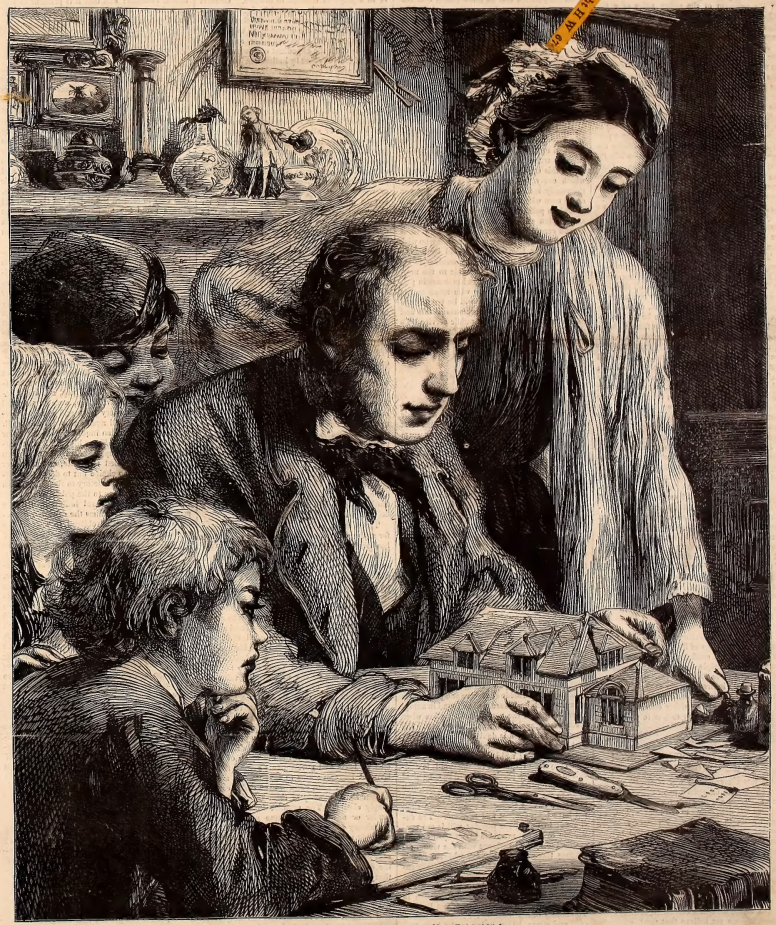
HARPER'S WEEKLY.

A JOURNAL OF CIVILIZATION.

VOL. XIII.—No. 633.] NEW YORK, SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 13, 1869. SINGLE COPIES, TEN CENTS. $4.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE.

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the Year 1869, by Harper & Brothers, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court of the United States, for the Southern District of New York.

LIBRARY OF THE MAY 23 1932



MODELING A HOMESTEAD.—[See Page 105.]

HARPER'S WEEKLY.
SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 13, 1869.

ENGLAND AND THE TREATY.

LAST week, in commenting upon the proposed British treaty, we said that the question of granting maritime rights to a belligerent without a port would necessarily be drawn into the discussion. It is now announced that General GRANT is of opinion that "the treaty is unjust to the United States, because it assumes to measure injury inflicted upon this country by money-value of ships actually destroyed, whereas this class of damage to our commerce was in our ships being driven from the sea by Anglo-Rebel pirates. In addition to this, the sympathy extended by the British Government to the Southern people during the war at least a year, and for all lives lost and money expended for this time England is directly responsible. The treaty proposes to settle all these things by the payment of the paltry value of a few ships." Whether this is the opinion of General GRANT or not, it is certainly that of many other persons.

Now, that the action of England did destroy our commerce and prolong the war, there can be no doubt. Such an offence can be settled in one of two ways: only by war or by treaty. If we go to war the victor will settle the terms of peace. If we make a treaty, the only practicable method for England to atone for the wrong is to apologize or to pay for the losses. But this report represents General GRANT as sneering at payments as a method of settlement, except perhaps upon some scheme that shall include all the expenses of the last year of the war—while for lost lives no compensation is possible. Does the worthy reporter mean that we shall understand it to be the intention of the new Administration to demand an apology and the payment, without commission, of such a bill as we may present? This merely means war, and if General GRANT is an extremely sensible man, we do not believe he will begin his Administration by forcing David to fight.

The Tribune says that our commerce was swept from the seas, "and that is the measure of British liabilities." But how shall the amount of his liability be determined? Shall the Government compute the value of our commerce in 1860, and showing it to England, demand immediate payment, or shall there be an investigation by a commission? If the former course be adopted, it does not seem promising for peace. If the latter, precisely the same result may be reached, and the peace preserved. And as we said last week, there should be no counter British "claims," arising from the recognition of the rebels, during the moment. We do not expect that we will receive money in settlement of our commerce, or our ships, or our claims, or whatever name may be referred, it is at least worth considering whether investigation by a commission is not the preferable method.

But we must begin with one clear understanding. Nothing whatever, as treaty, or payment, can satisfy the deep indignation which the conduct of Great Britain aroused in the American people. It was incredible that a nation of our own race, and so peculiarly related to us, should encourage the attempt of an oligarchy of slaveholders to overthrow this government. But sharp experience soon "knocked incredulity to intense hostility. England was more hated in this country when the war ended than she had been since 1776's treaty. Much of that feeling remains, and we must suppose that it can not be allayed by any kind of diplomacy. It is a wound which time only, as it reveals a more kindly feeling, can heal. But that treaties and statesmanship can do is upon a lower level; and it is essential to understand it.

If the British Government is willing to pay for the consequences of its conduct it confesses its regret for that conduct. If it does not renounce the principle upon which it acted its retribution will be swift and fearful. Governments will do indirectly what they will not do directly; and since we must be the gainers, both in honor and power by either course, it seems hardly worth while to go to war to prove how deeply we were offended.

HOW TO SAVE THE FOURTH DOLLAR.

"I HOPE every voter will remember," said Mr. JENCKES in his speech upon the Civil Service bill, "that out of every four dollars raised in taxes one dollar goes to the thieves!" That would seem a most obviously plainly enough. Twenty-five per cent. of the revenue of the country is stolen and wasted. If there be a more powerful practical argument for a system which should secure honesty and capacity in the civil service we do not know what it is. And notwithstanding the immense part which patronage plays in our politics—for patronage is the power by which the gentlemen in parties, of whom we speak elsewhere, control their followers—we yet believe that great, certainly the best, of the men in public life, would prefer to be relieved of the harassing consequences of the present appointing system.

There are probably to-day scores of thousands of incompetent persons armed with letters of introduction from local politicians, and with no other credentials than what is vaguely called party fidelity, who are hovering expectant and ready to pounce upon the offices upon the succession of General GRANT. The immense majority of those who recommend these persons know nothing whatever about them. If they should urge a bank, or a merchant, or any man to employ a person of whom they knew nothing, they would justly lose their reputation, not only as men of judgment but as men of common honesty. Yet they hardly hesitate to recommend to the Government for lucrative and responsible positions persons whose names they have never heard before and which they forget the next moment.

It is no answer to say that although they do not know the candidates yet they recommend them at the request of friends who do know them, for that does not impose a like obligation upon the petition that he knew Smith who recommended Johnson who recommended Jenkins who recommended Smith 15 to be a gentleman in good party standing, it might be the truth, but Jones's signature would not be of any great weight to the document. Suppose that the signature were equivalent to an indorsement, and that every man who signed a petition for a successful applicant to an office were to be held for the losses that the party could fix from his dishonesty, how many of the present signers would sign? Yet certainly a man's name should be on all the moral force of such an indorsement. Nobody should ask that a man be placed in a responsible situation without a conviction founded upon knowledge that he would not betray the trust.

All this confusion and folly and knavery by which every tax-payer in the country must necessarily suffers, and which intolerably vex every man who wishes to transact the public business of the country, could be avoided by the very simple plan of intrusting the civil service to proved capacity and character. It is obvious that the great multitude of the people who wish to save every fourth dollar would be infinite gainers, and that those who are anxious to reform the present system are liable to the most damaging suspicions. All the hucksters in politics, all the rings, all those who mean to live dishonestly upon the public will be warmly opposed to any change in the present shiftless and absurd method of filling the public service. To the victors belong the spoils, says some vehement partisan. But did the victors ever put an officer whom they had not proved in command of the captured city?

COIN.

WHENEVER resumption takes place prices will be multiplied by the standard of specie instead of that which now prevails. It is the interest of those who have propounded a theory seem desirous of accomplishing resumption, and at the same time holding prices at their present level. As this is an impossibility it is scarcely to be supposed that the schemes which have been hitherto presented with any hope of their adoption. They are to be regarded rather as bids for popular favor.

The subject is one of such vast importance that it should be settled by the present Congress. It is possible that the legislation of gold contracts on a basis to prevent the oppression which would ensue from being obliged to pay gold on a low of legal-tender notes whose purchasing currency may take place, but the work of providing a complete plan will unquestionably be postponed, partly from the fact that the political situation must concur in this view.

A new Administration is about to be installed. It is not too much to say that throughout the Union there is a keen desire on the part of politicians to have some part assigned to them in this duty. They will not peril their chances by any undue opposition upon which the "coming man" may not approve. General BUTLER, however, who has no hope of being invited into the Cabinet, has laid aside all reserve and presented a scheme which he is sure will be satisfactory to the onium to that of the new Administration when it comes to grapple with this great subject. His view of the situation is doubtless correct in this, that the matter will go over to the next Congress. But what will be the precise temper of that body with respect to resumption it is difficult to say. Both parties in it will be compelled to have an affirmative financial policy with which to go to the people for re-election, if during the existence of that Congress some scheme shall not have been devised and adopted. If they are not to offend the popular will is too conciliating to permit members to act upon considerations of duty at variance with the views, erroneous though they may be, which a people long debauched with paper-money generally entertain.

The differences of opinion which prevail on questions of money and industry are due in great part to the experience of Great Britain. The money of that country for ages was mainly gold and silver. But, owing to the imperious demands of war, Parliament, in 1797, made the bills of the Bank of England in effect a tender for debts. England at one period adopted the policy of a tariff for protection. When she became the first manufacturing nation in the world she established free trade. Each of these policies had its supporters in works of great influence, on the ground not merely of what was expedient under the force of exigencies, but as matter of choice under any circumstances. The bullion system generally prevailed in England till about 1821—an experience so recent that the erroneous views in support of the policy, not only as a measure of war, but as one for peace and for all time, has had great effect here.

General BUTLER appears as an advocate of these views. But it will require discussion and time to eradicate them from the public mind.

His assertion that coined money was a device of kings to further their despotic purposes, and that paper-money was devised to by the people as a means of security and defense against despotic assault, must be regarded either as evidence of the most remarkable self-delusion, or as a palpable attempt to deceive. General BUTLER has exactly reversed both the character and function of coin. Fairly coined money is the people's device for a measure, as well as one of the safeguards, of steady labor, and paper-money is often the expedient of government or of individuals resorting to indirection its control.

The stamp of coinage is nothing more than a certificate of the weight and fineness of a coin. If this were not upon it individuals would be obliged to ascertain the value of Baron Rothschild, and establish a private assay office, or some other means of testing the value of coins. The coinage of all countries corresponds with some precedent law regulating the quantity of gold or silver and of the respective alloys which each piece shall contain. The effigy of a king is the device of a state to cumulative evidence of what its reverse alleges as to its denomination or weight and fineness of metal. The labor bestowed on this shape is exchanged for an equivalent amount of usually useful labor in some other shape. For instance, if it take a day's labor to mine and fabricate a gold dollar weighing one hundred grains, and a day's labor to produce a silver dollar weighing 412½ grains, they will be exchanged for each other on equal terms. When, however, this relation of one to the other is disturbed, requiring more labor to obtain the one than the other than now, no government can secure their circulation on an equality.

The proportional value of silver to gold is about 1 to 15, a difference which arises from the fact that both metals are considered indispensable for coinage, that silver is more generally diffused and more easily obtained from the earth than gold, and upon the basis on which gold and silver coins are thus exchanged, other products are also exchanged for them. The monarch who uses no other money allies himself with and acknowledges his dependence upon labor. The paper-money obtains the metal and fabricates the coin. It has never been possible for any government seriously to change the acknowledged proportion of difference between the two precious metals. We have adjusted the weight of the half-dollar at 192 grains, and the weight of the quarter-dollar, dime, and half-dime in a half, a fifth, and a tenth of the weight of the half-dollar, while the dollar itself is 412½ grains.

These small coins were made legal tender for some time for amounts of dollars, the dollar, however—the weight of which corresponds more nearly with that of the dollar of other countries—is made legal tender for all sums whatever. The small coins were fabricated of lower weight in proportion than the dollar in order to remove the temptation to export or melt them. The selling extent, and on a limited scale, it is possible for nations to affect the well-known relation between gold and silver. According to the spirit of General BUTLER's speech, it would be difficult in his estimation to legislate them into entire equality.

If it were possible for Congress to make a material change in the proportional value of gold and silver respectively, adjusted as we have seen at 15 to 1 or thereabouts, then his idea that the value of a coin is due to its stamp, and not to the amount of useful labor required for its production, might be maintained. It requires fifteen times more labor to produce an ounce of gold than an ounce of silver, and hence commerce adjusts the exchange of labor on that basis and governments merely follow. General BUTLER seems to suppose that an accurate idea of what constitutes a dollar can be formed independently of these coins. This is simply absurd. The promise in every legal-tender or national bank note and in every promissory note or bond in naming dollars, is precisely as if the weight and fineness of the metals as they are respectively contained in a gold or silver dollar had been specified. From the exigencies of war Congress has provided that the promise of the Government to pay such a dollar shall be accepted by its citizens for the present as if it were the actual dollar produced not by the printing-press but by labor. General BUTLER would thus convert the temporary substitute into the standard, and have as a perpetual and sole measure of value for the labor and industry of the country the (sometimes) arbitrary and variable promises of the Government. The word dollar on this view would be incapable of definition. If it means the gold or silver dollar his theory is at an end, inasmuch as if the payment of that is promised the promise ought to be performed. He knows or ought to know that the multiplication of those promises expels the actual dollar from circulation, and produces those malignant panics which, in the absence of a legal-tender act such as we now have, inflict ruin upon the community. Delusions of this character must disappear before any return to specie payments can be expected; and if General BUTLER seriously holds any such view, what must be the condition of those less enlightened?

We repeat, therefore, that this Congress in all probability will not provide for complete resumption; but we urge, as the prosperity of all is now "suspended on the wings of paper-money," that a change to the standard of gold and silver as a basis for our circulation is inevitable, and is required at the earliest practicable moment; and that it is prudent to prepare for the difficulty by industry, economy, and freedom from debt.

SCRATCHING THE TICKET.

A CONNECTICUT gentleman has recently published a letter upon corruption in politics, and probably every body will abstractly agree with him in condemning it. But condemnation is not remedy. The best and most intelligent men constantly find themselves in a very unpleasant dilemma. They discover that they must either vote for candidates upon whom they seem to them unfit for the offices for which they are proposed, or they must risk bringing into power a party whose principles they abhor, and whose candidates are no more fit than their competitors. This is an intolerable position. It is easy to scratch the ticket, but that will not always avoid the misfortune. If the choice must necessarily be between corrupt men and a radical change is essential or the whole system will speedily perish,

Now one of the chief reasons of this repulsive choice which is so constantly forced upon the voter is the general indifference to the primary meetings. It is there that the government practically begins. But of all the voters in this country how many attend the primary meetings? A few interested managers take care to fill them with men upon whom they can count, and they thus control the nominations in every office. The delegates to the Convention are selected by these managers, and elected by their trusty followers. The managers will—or the slate—then to be broken only with great difficulty, if at all. This was the way, undoubtedly, in which Mr. and Mr. Sapery, and more recently Mr. THURLOW WEED, were powerful in politics. In every town and almost in every district they had agents who did their will. "Mr. WEED," said an inquirer, "do you know Mr. FILLMORE?" "Know him, Sir! I invented him!" was the reply. And thus a few men in a state controlled the state, and the voter had practically no choice but to do as they dictated, or to help give victory to the party which he thought dangerous to the public welfare.

So long as this general indifference to the primary meeting continues the dilemma will remain; we shall all be obliged to support the regular nominees, or connive at the defeat of the candidates of the party which seems to us the best guardian of the public interests. If, therefore, it be accepted as a fact that the people will not attend themselves to the primaries, they can keep the party pure only by scratching the ticket in cases where they know it ought to be scratched. But if even by our negligence corrupt men should have any where obtained control of the party of our choice, we are bound to do all that we can do to baffle them. A thousand honest men control it no better than any other corrupt party, and if the scratching imperils the whole party it can only be because there is no control it every where, and because it is their custom to name only men that ought to be scratched.

Let every voter, then, if he will not take pains to secure the nomination of good men, at least try to defeat the election of bad men. This protest at the polls will tend to regulate the primaries. It will remind the gentlemen in parties that their candidates will be supported if they deserve to be, and not otherwise; and this consciousness upon their part would promote the invention of proper candidates.

GEORGIA.

WHEN Congress declared that Georgia should be restored it did so upon the distinct ground that the terms and the intention of the reconstruction law had been satisfied. The majority of the Judiciary Committee of the Senate have investigated the facts and have discovered that the presumption was incorrect, and have therefore reported against the admission of the Senator from Georgia. Mr. THURMELL, in his minority report, takes the ground that Congress having decided that Georgia is entitled to admission can not now recede, and asserts that there is no evidence that the conditions have not been complied with. That, however, is a question of detailed proof, upon which the majority disagree with the chairman.

Mr. TRUMBULL will concede probably that the substance of reconstruction is the essential point. The purpose of the Reconstruction Act was restoration upon certain conditions, of which the chief was the political equality of the citizens. Mr. TRUMBULL will not deny that these have been denied to nearly half the people of the State. Does he think that the law properly justifies any such absurdity? and if he does, is he not of opinion that if that absurdity is discovered before the restoration of the State is completed, it is wise to pause long enough to remedy the difficulty? Is it statesmanship or common-sense to admit Georgia with half of the population politically disabled by such law of slavery, and thereby to declare that the disability is consistent with the object and spirit of the reconstruction law and with the peace of the country?

The authority of Congress over the subject does not end with a resolution that Georgia is entitled to representation; and even if the House has admitted members the Senate is certainly not bound to imitate it, if in the mean time evidence has accumulated to show that their election is invalid at its very source.

EXPORTS AND IMPORTS.

Mr. WELLS, in his special report on the Revenues for 1868, states at page 62, as issued from the Government printing-office, that the total imports for 1868 exceeded our exports, the latter reduced to specie, seventy-eight millions five hundred and seven thousand one hundred and sixty-eight dollars ($78,507,168). This he states as the apparent balance; but as our exports of specie and bullion for that year amounted in value to $63,746,161, and as we guaranteed bonds abroad to the extent of $100,000,000 —such is the estimate—the actual balance must exceed that sum.

Our imports are larger than appears at the custom-house, due to undervaluation, and also to smuggling, which is carried on extensively on our southern frontier, into the Southern States, and by those running travellers who are by law large sea-ports are permitted to land their twenty-five or thirty trunks without examination of their contents. Smuggling also is believed to be carried on from the West India and other islands contiguous to our coast with greater facility than before the rebellion, owing to the remains of universally feeling toward the Government and the withdrawal of those means for the detection which obstructed the running of the blockade.

Part of this hundred millions of bonds negotiated abroad during the year was remitted to meet the accrued interest on the public debt due to foreigners and the expenses of Americans in Europe. The whole amount remitted on these various accounts constitutes a balance against us too large to contemplate without serious anxiety.

We are very well aware that the fact that the British statements, which ordinarily show larger imports into the kingdom than are found in ours, it, are capable of explanation so as to show a profit instead of a loss, is relied upon to shake the confidence which our returns appear to create; but actual experience here is the reverse of the experience of Great Britain.

As we are not the carriers of our exports, as the British are of theirs, the value of which in transportation is received by the foreigner, who adds this profit to that of his commission as a banker, and often invests it in foreign securities. The amount of loans made here by English capitalists, of a floating character, on a pledge of our securities, is from fifty to a hundred millions of dollars. The sum is swelled by profits accruing from trade, from interest reinvested, and also from capital sent here from the bankers on the other side, tempted by the high rate of interest paid by us and the low rate earned elsewhere.

No class or our citizens are in the habit of making, or indeed, are able to make, like investments in foreign securities, and hence we have nothing invested abroad to represent the profit upon our exports, which the English, as the chief carriers, are enabled to realize in respect not only to theirs, but also to the exports of this country. It is fair to conclude, therefore, that the figures presented by Mr. WELLS are incapable of such explanation as would arise in England upon an adverse balance upon her statement of imports and exports. We have been full in this statement as the difference between the two countries, because there is much misapprehension on the subject.

The question whether this will lead, and what remedies may be applied, ought to command great attention.

We are now in the fourth year after the war, and yet have not sufficiently recovered from its effects to support ourselves without incurring this heavy debt. Our inability is due in part to the necessity which the severity of the war occasioned of cutting loose from our old moorings with respect to money, and entering upon a wide sea of expansion. Much of it was in excess of actual necessity; indeed it progressed after the war was closed by the creation of National banks up to the prescribed limit. Prussia went through her war with Austria with no visible effect upon the habits of the community, because she had wisely, in advance of the conflict, set apart a fund out of her revenues from taxation to defray the expense. We not only had unusual outlays to meet on the contrary driven away from the country during a time of peace the precious metals, and were obliged to conduct our with paper-money. Prices advanced and large fortunes were made by speculators of all descriptions, and examples were furnished which have withdrawn large numbers from honest industry to engage in operations of a speculative character. Never probably, in any country, has there been an equal amount of display and extravagance to that which is now witnessed in portions of the Northern States.

Although the circumstances may be favorable for a continuation a little longer of the extraordinary folly in this direction, its weakness must soon be ended. We owe our ability to maintain appearances which the truth does not justify to the great condition of trade in foreign countries. Whenever there shall be sufficient activity abroad to require the capital which is temporarily invested here and loaned abroad on our bonds deposited as collateral, a pressure will be felt inconsistent with the extravagance which now prevails.

We think those who despise the plainness and solidity which are appropriate to our republican institutions to consider the experience to which they will presently be condemned, and note to wait for disaster to teach them better with a folly which is sure to incur punishment as it is certain to inflict less injury upon the public.

THE NEW CONSTITUTION OF NEW YORK.

We hope that Senator FOLGER's bill to submit to the people the Constitution, which was adopted by the State Convention last year, will promptly pass. The bill provides that the town elections shall be held upon the 4th of April, and that there shall be two additional ballot-boxes, one for the property qualification clause for colored citizens, and the other for the whole Constitution. Should the Constitution be adopted, an election is to be held in June for Judges of the Court of Appeals and of the city Common Pleas.

It is time that the absurd and barbarous discrimination against certain voters because of the color of their skin should be abolished, and it is humiliating that in such a State as New York there should be such a blot upon the present Constitution. A colored citizen, however intelligent, industrious, and prosperous, must have lived twice as long in the State as the rest of us and pay a tax, which is imposed upon nobody else, as the price of the right of voting.

There are some Republicans who have hitherto opposed this equality of suffrage; but the great weight of the opposition has proceeded from the Democratic party. In the Convention Mr. HENRY C. MURPHY and Mr. WILLIAM CASSIDY rested their opposition upon an alleged inferiority of race. They were unconscious of traces of the traditional aristocratic mastery of that party. The other day the New York World, commenting upon General GRANT's speech to the deputation of the colored convention, spoke of him as being very reticent to the white people, but very complaisant to their "swallows." So the Democratic party speaking of American sympathy for the people of other countries who were trying to mend their condition, described those people as "canaille." The true Democratic estimate of the humblest man, is as foreign to the Democratic managers as it was to a South Carolina overseer.

The party which heaved such portentous sighs over the temporary political disability of those who sought to destroy the Government will doubtless vote against the equal enfranchisement of the citizens of New York. But every man who is opposed to a wanton oppression of any class of his fellow-citizens will vote to equalize the suffrage.

THE SETTLEMENT BY WAR.

Some of the most prominent merchants in Boston have signed a protest against the Alabama treaty, upon the general ground that the destruction of our commerce during the war was an act of piracy upon the part of England. This is substantially the same ground which, as we have elsewhere mentioned, is said to be held by General GRANT. The merchants object to conceding any kind of equality between the claims of British subjects arising from disagreement as to the ordinary forms of neutrality and our claims arising from British piracy. Do these gentlemen expect England to confess that she has acted the part of a pirate? And if she declines to do so, do they recommend war? In other words, do they refuse any kind of arbitration?

The difficulty suggested in the treaty is, that the most important of all the questions, namely that of responsibility, which is in fact the only question, is to be left by chance to a single umpire; and the assumption is, that if he happen to be an Englishman he will decide against us. But no Englishman can afford to decide against us. To decide against us is to decide against the commerce of England. To decide against us is to decide that maritime rights may be granted to a belligerent without loss, even from a friend, and without a war. That is a decision which surely need not trouble us—and because the consequences of such a position are so plain the British Government is willing to satisfy our demands.

It seems to us that the feeling that inspires the Boston petition is one that no treaty can possibly satisfy. Perhaps it is best to settle the account with England by war, but we do not believe it. There is no conceivable misfortune greater even than such an event. Moreover, it is not necessary. England does not wish to go to war, nor do we. She must prove us for the losses which fell upon our commerce by her action, and whether the sum decided for us or against us she will sooner or later inevitably pay. If the question is not settled by an umpire it must be referred to a Congress or to a war.

THE SUFFRAGE AMENDMENT.

The Republican Congress has just adopted another of those great measures which commend it to the confidence of all thoughtful men, and to the gratitude of posterity. Down to the year 1860 this country had been subject for more than a generation to a party whose chief aim was the utter degradation of a seventh of the population. The purpose of the party that succeeded it has been the elevation of every individual to a perfect equality of right and opportunity. The triumph properly crowns the work by the most revolving tyranny; the other aims at permanence and peaceful progress by the most enlightened justice.

Mr. BOUTWELL, in introducing the amendment of equal suffrage, well said that it was a necessary and logical act for the Republican party. It gives to the highest guarantee of the United States to the political equality of all its citizens, and secures the principle of the reconstruction policy. The objection that it infringes the right of the people to settle the suffrage precisely reverses the fact; for the amendment provides that no local law shall deprive any citizen of a fundamental right secured to him by all the people.

There is, as we believe, no sound doubt of the authority of Congress to establish equality of suffrage by law. It can be repealed by a majority in Congress; a constitutional amendment can be distorted only by three-fourths of the State Legislatures. It is certainly true that a provision of such importance should be interwined in the fundamental law; and the general feeling of the country would undoubtedly prefer that it should be so. Those who hold that each State has a final right to arrange the suffrage exactly as it pleases will be less averse to a settlement which requires the separate consent of three-quarters of the States; while those who believe that as the Government is required to secure a republican system in every State it is clearly possible that it may even so set aside a system which is not republican, will yet gladly see the republican form secured by the clear power to the constitutional amendment can be ever formally taken. The only practical reason for the law rather than the amendment, is the greater delay involved in the adoption of the latter, and the possible injurious consequences. But this is a consideration which under the circumstances is secondary to the desirability of the fundamental guarantee. The committee, however, to cover the whole case, have recommended the passage of a law which would serve until the amendment is adopted.

The amendment is also a measure of wise consolidation. It touches no right of which any State can justly be jealous, or which it can reasonably claim as belonging to States. The first essential condition of a popular national government is the equality of its citizens equally secured. Ours, indeed, is not a national government in the strictest form; but on the other hand, it is not a league nor a confederacy of States. It is a national Union. It has a national constitution, and therefore it is not an attempt to regulate a national policy upon the theory of State sovereignty as hitherto maintained is futile. The adoption of the amendment will be the declaration of the people that they perceive the legitimate conditions of a truly national Union.

It will also serve rapidly to remove an exciting question from politics. It is plain now that the current of our political progress, for more than a generation, has been toward the political equality of all the people. The Democratic party, which is the organized opposition to this result, has been constantly defeated upon every field, but still perplexes and delays it. The Democratic representatives in Congress voted in a body against the amendment, upon the ground that it was a subject to be left to the States, the only chance of a possible majority in a State the right to deprive a citizen of the United States of his share in its government, and to establish an unrepublican form if it should choose. But the Republican party, whose watchword is a constantly enlarging liberty as the condition of increasing intelligence, moves with the fraternal spirit of the age, and will not have accomplished its work until it has placed the government of the United States in the hands of all the people.

A STAGE IN LIFE.

The days are sleeting by, and melt away
Like snow-flakes lighting on the sun-pierced ground;
And as the canopy of cloudy gray
Is by wind-hurtled, shows a ruby round,
So now towered life a sharper outline casts
Upon the eternal; and the excited soul
Looks out like one that sees the tops of masts
Rising above the ocean's furrowed roll,
Whose dark must bear him from his native land.
The land whose mossy hills he used to rove,
Now familiar streets have grass'd and lined,
Whose bright home kissed him with unwonted love.
Ah! fluttering soul, then must go all alone—
Pray for the Faith that hails a world unknown.

DOMESTIC INTELLIGENCE

CONGRESS.

January 25:

In the Senate, the bill for the repeal of the Tenure-of-Office Act was reported from the Retrenchment Committee, with an amendment giving the President power to remove or suspend Cabinet officers during a recess of the Senate, and to suspend all civil officers during such recess without specific charges.—The majority report of the Judiciary Committee rejected without debate the claim of Joshua Hill, of Georgia, to a seat in the Senate.

January 28:

In the Senate, a resolution was adopted instructing the Reconstruction Committee to inquire into and report as to what further action should be taken in regard to the representation of Georgia.

January 29:

In the Senate, a bill providing for the reduction of the army to 37,000 men by July 1st was reported with a committee of five to inquire what legislation is necessary to secure the taking of a new census.

January 30:

In the Senate, the Pension, the Naval, and the Military Academy appropriation bills were passed.

In the House, the joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution declaring that "the right of any citizen of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States, or any State, by reason of race, or color, or previous condition of slavery," was passed, 144 to 42.

NEWS ITEMS.

A petition against the ratification of the Alabama Civil Rights Bill was presented before the United States Senate. The petitioners say:

"The so-called treaty proposes to put upon the same footing claims by British subjects which have arisen by reason of disagreement as to the ordinary forms of neutrality, and claims of our own citizens for the wrongs which Government has permitted by British built, British manned, and British armed vessels to prey upon our commerce under the British ports, under protection of the British flag, and burned American ships on the high seas, after having taken them into port for condemnation, and without any claims being made for the wrongs done by British Government, when these atrocities were laid before it by proper authority. In many instances, these pirates were every where received with rejoicing when in the British ports, and when the American Minister of one of them boasted of the same in the British Parliament, for which he received a pension, was received with cheers and expressions of satisfaction. This shows the animus of the British Government, the animus of the British Government toward the Government of the United States."

The full force of Cole's Armory at Hartford is now employed on the contract to furnish the Russian Government with thirty thousand Berdan rifles, and upon the one hundred thousand Remington rifles. The armory is to be enlarged.

Rev. Dr. Hodgson was ordained as Bishop of the new Protestant Episcopal Diocese of Long Island, January 27, in the church of the Holy Trinity, Brooklyn.

Francis W. Pickens, formerly Governor of South Carolina, died at Edgefield in that State on the 25th of January.

Mayor P. Stockton was, January 26, elected Senator by the New Jersey Legislature, to succeed Mr. Frelinghuysen.

FOREIGN NEWS.

The Russian Government urges Greece to agree to the proposition of the Paris Conference for the settlement of the Cretan dispute by the mediation of the Queen and the Ottoman Empire. It is thought that Greece will comply.

Details of the news from Rio Janeiro show that the insurrection in Paraguay is not considered by any to be most complete. All the Paraguayan forts are in their hands. Lopez has captured the entire army and equipage of Loopez's army, and 2000 prisoners. The Dictator has fled to Asuncion, and will, probably be soon surrounded by the Allied troops.

The Spanish Commissaries in Spain, which led to the assassination, recently, of the Governor of Burgos, has resulted in the appointment of a new Commissary-General, clearing the equality of religious sects before the law.

The Fenian Movement is about to withdraw from Ireland. The treatment to which he has been subjected by the Irish Church Establishment has led Mr. Butt, its representatives, and they have professed against the measure offered to them.

The steamship Pereire, Captain Duchesne, sailed from Havre on the 16th, for New York, arrived at New York, touching at Brest, which port she left the day following the 16th. She encountered severe gales of winds and heavy weather almost from the start. The most disastrous of these occurred on the night of her sailing from Brest, it became a furious gale which threatened the destruction of the ship. Every sail was close reefed, her carrying away entirely her forward deck cabin, which contained the first-class passengers' saloon, damaging the engine-room, and partially disabling the ship. The gale increased until the vessel was hove-to, and the passengers and crew were thrown into a state of panic which was fearful to witness. Not a life and injury to person on board are attributable to the gale. The length of the voyage of the Pereire shipped an immense sea, estimated at a thousand tons, which completely flooded the cabins. Not a life was lost, although considerable damage was done, and she arrived safely at Havre on the 26th. Three of the crew and three of the second-class passengers were killed, and many injured during the gale. Others, however, were mainly slight, and all are now doing well. Mr. Callaghan, a passenger, died. Mr. Pendergast's daughter was killed. Puckelberg, were the only passengers killed. The latter had her neck broken. None of the first-class passengers were injured.

THE HON. JOHN SCOTT.

JOHN SCOTT, who was on the 19th of January elected Senator by the Pennsylvania Legislature, was born at Alexandria, in Huntingdon County, where he obtained a fair education, and prepared for the practice of law. He soon acquired a local reputation, which widened until he was recognized as one of the best lawyers in the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. In politics he was formerly a Democrat, but even during BUCHANAN'S Administration he leaned toward the side of the Opposition. In 1860 he was the Democratic candidate for the State Senate from his district, but was defeated; the next year he was elected to the Lower House as a War Democrat. He has since uniformly acted with the Republican party, and in 1867 presided over the State Convention at Williamsport.—He is about 47 years of age. His father was a Representative in Congress from 1829 to 1831. Mr. SCOTT is one of the few examples of a public man attaining to the office of Senator without having been previously a member of the House, or having filled some important position under the State Government.

HON. JOHN SCOTT, SENATOR FROM PENNSYLVANIA.—(PHOTOGRAPHED BY F. GUTEKUNST, 712 ARCH STREET, PHILADELPHIA.)

THE BAY OF SAMANA, SAN DOMINGO.

THE Bay of Samana, San Domingo, of which we give an illustration on this page, was one of Secretary SEWARD'S unhappy bargains. At least Congress does not seem disposed to think it worth while to pay $5,000,000 in gold for the possession of this harbor. It is an extensive inlet of the sea, forty miles long and twelve broad, at the western extremity of the large island of San Domingo, or Hayti. It is formed by the peninsula, or rather island, of the same name, divided from the main land by creeks filled with water at high tide. This shelters the bay on the north side, and it affords a safe and capacious anchorage for any number of ships.—The purchase of this harbor has been contemplated ever since the steps taken by some active New York adventurers sixteen years ago. At that date it was proposed to place 4000 or 5000 American settlers in the country, the population of which is estimated at only about 200,000, and the obvious intent was to acquire this place, with its valuable coal-mines, which are very important for the supply of steamers. The town of Santa Barbara, on the north shore, possesses excellent natural facilities for repairing vessels. The bay affords one of the finest harbors in the world, and occupies an important commercial and military position. The negotiations opened with the Dominican republic for the cession of this port to the United States in 1853 were unsuccessful.

BARTERING FOR ANIMALS.

WHENEVER a vessel from a civilized nation may touch upon the coasts of South America, of the Sandwich Islands, or, indeed, of any semi-barbarous country, one is met upon landing by a group similar to that shown in our illustration on page 101. The natives gather about the newly arrived strangers (if they have not already boarded the vessel before the disembarkation), show their collections of curious animals of every description, and try to negotiate an exchange. These specimens of natural history are often brought home by sailors and naval officers. The scene which we illustrate is more frequently witnessed on the South American coast.

THE BAY OF SAMANA, SAN DOMINGO.

THE LAWYER'S STORY.

EVERYBODY knows Hammer Nailsby. Oho! They know him well enough, and have felt, over and over again, how neatly he can pinch, how lightly he can clutch, how sharply he can bite. The old man has more than one customer in this room. I've made many of you shake in your shoes and sue for mercy in my time; and now, I dare say, you're delighted to see me ruined, broken down, and a prisoner. If I was hard, if I was harsh, whose fault was it? I only wanted my money, I only asked for my own. If you sued to me for time, and sued me in vain, why didn't you write me out a check before you went down on your knees? What's the good of going down on your knees if you haven't got any money? As for your being glad to see me in a stponging-house I don't care a button about it. Whoever I sued—whoever I outlawed—whoever I arrested—whoever I forced into Bankruptcy or Portugal Street—whoever I brought to misery and beggary, had only himself to thank for putting himself into my power. Business is business, and whatever I did was done strictly in the way of business. I hate humbug. I was always open and above-board in business matters. I won't say any thing about being fair, because fairness wasn't in my line of business. But you walked into my place with your eyes open. If I was a shark I opened my mouth and showed my teeth before I ate you. I never asked people to borrow my money; but when they asked me to lend them some I said, "Look here! I'm not going to tell you any lies about parties in the City or clients in the country who want me to lay out their funds for them at good interest. I lend money myself. It doesn't belong to any parties in the City or clients in the country. It's mine—never mind where I got it from—and I intend to make as much money by turning and turning it over as many times a year as ever I possibly can. My rate of interest's sixty per centum per annum. That means, if you don't pay me down on the nail when a bill comes due, a hundred and sixty per cent.—perhaps more. That's your look-out. I don't ask you to take my money. I'd much rather keep it, and there are plenty of uses quite as profitable which I can turn it to. But if you take it here's the stump, and here's the bill, and here's the amount of interest you'll have to pay in three months' time, and here's the money! There's no beating about the bush with me—what I say I mean. I'm none of your shuffling, pettifogging, two-penny-half-penny bull discounters, who put a customer off with half wine, or half pictures, or jewelry, or camel's hits, or ivory frigates, or flint-lock muskets from the Tower! There's so much money coming to you from this bill, and here's a check for the amount, or if you like it better here's the cash in notes or gold!"

Perhaps you'd like to know how I took to lending money? It doesn't matter a rap now if you know all. I'm a broken man—quite gone to the dogs, and I've no motive for concealment. My father lent money before me. He kept an inn in a little market-town in Suffolk, and lent money, at as high a rate as he could get for it, to the farmers round about. They called him "Wensel" Nailsby, although his name was Peter, just as they call me Hammer Nailsby, although my name is John. Many were the standing crops mortgaged to my father; many were the flocks, and herds, and horses, and farming implements which he had seized by the sheriff. His strong-box was full of leases and notes of hand; and then he made all the farmers who were in his debt come to his inn when they attended market, and eat and drink of the best at his own prices. There was a stupid story whispered round about our part of the country that a great squire, Sir Percival Eightborn, of Orley Hall, had positively paid "Wensel" Nailsby a handsome sum of money to go away, and never to show his face—his ugly face, they call it—in that neighborhood again, as he was fairly ruining all the farmers within a radius of seventy miles. But the story was mere lying gossip, and I fancy that Sir Percival Eightborn, of Orley Hall, was himself rather too deep in "Wensel" Nailsby's books to be able to pay him any thing to go away.

However, my father did leave Suffolk eventually, and came up to town, where there was a much wider field for his abilities. He settled, gentlemen, in a highly respectable neighborhood—that of Clare Market; and there, for nearly twenty years, he resided, prospering exceedingly. He made a rule of never lending more than five pounds at a time—and he would have much preferred lending five shillings—and he never lent them for more than a fortnight. Those were in the days before county courts, and all that rubbish, and you could pop a man into the Fleet for forty shillings. In the course of time all the butchers about Clare Market, all the small tradesmen about Drury Lane—ay, and a good many market gardeners and florists in Covent Garden—had done business with "Wensel" Nailsby. Oh, he was a sharp customer, was my dad!

My mother was as sharp as he, and was not above lending a bit of money now and then, quite in a friendly manner, to the wives of workingmen or petty shop-keepers; for which, of course, she took their husbands' I O U's. She was a great hand, too, at persuading women to run up scores with the tallymen, who, in most cases, were merely agents of "Wensel" Nailsby. Ah, if my mother had been alive, I should never have fallen into the cursed scrape which has been my undoing. "John," she used to say to me, "I've done business with my own sex, and it's only a woman that's fit to do business with 'em. They're too sharp for the men, John. They'll have the best of you in the long-run; and, though I say it that shouldn't, I was you to keep clear of women, both in marriage and in money." She's been dead and gone nearly thirty years.

I was sent to a school at Camberwell—a commercial school—when I was nine years old, to make me sharp. The master had been bankrupt in the Irish cattle trade; but he wrote a beautiful hand, and was a capital accountant. We didn't have any Greek and Latin, or French and drawing, or any of that kind of nonsense, but we were kept pretty stiffly to our slates and our copy-books, and at fourteen years of age I could write like copper-plate, and knew all about vulgar fractions and the rule of three. I should like to know how many of you grand young gentlemen who've had a college education, as you call it, can say the same? Directly I came from school, being, as I think, tolerably sharp, I was put into a lawyer's office in Lyon's Inn to make me sharper. Insolvency was the principal part of my employer's business, and my time was mostly spent between Portugal Street, the Fleet, and the Marshalsea. When I was seventeen my father, to make me additionally sharp, made me for a time his own clerk, agent, and collector of rents; for he had by this time bought the free hold of a good many houses about Clerkenwell Market which, as leases expired, let out in rooms at two shillings a week—a better investment for a prudent landlord than the grandest mansion in Pall Mall. When I was twenty I was articled to another lawyer, a solicitor in Carey Street. He never got much in small game and insolvency; but he was a wonderful hand at conducting the affairs of fraudulent bankrupts. He did a good deal of bill fine and bill and I found I was out of my articles I had become not only sharp, but hard—not only hard, but strong. I was full grown, Walkley.

"SPARE HIM! MR. NAILSBY—SPARE HIM!" SHE SAID, SHEDDING TEARS.

BARTERING FOR ANIMALS—SCENE ON THE SOUTH AMERICAN SEA-BOARD.—[SEE PAGE 100.]

I had just been admitted a solicitor—I'm one now, yet I dare say somebody will be trying to strike me off the rolls—when my father, the "Weasel," died, and I found myself the possessor of thirty thousand pounds, put away in safe investments. I was the only child, and sole residuary legatee; and there was no nonsense or bother about the will. I went into business for myself in Chancery Lane, with my attorney-law, of Argyll Street, Regent Street, is, I flatter myself, a character pretty well known. I chose the Lane as a place where to set up my office, for the reason that I had a soul above buttons, that I despised the petty gain to be scraped from lending money to struggling sailors and drunkards' sloop-keepers in Clare Market, and that I felt that my ren- ubove of action was among the "nobs" in Chancery. I made but no great dance to a pretty tune i- my time. Sixty per cent. on a loan of five pounds was all very well in my father, the "Weasel's," time; but even out, even five thousand pounds was a kind of thing that suited Hammer Bailey much better.

If I were to give you a history of all my transactions during the five-and-thirty years I did business in Chancery Lane I should be furnishing you with the materials for five-and-thirty five-act plays and as many three-volume novels, and all I told you would be true, whereas the plays and novels are all fudge. I had but two clerks all this time: one was deaf and dumb—he attended to the tuition business, and was a capital fellow to keep secrets; the other looked after the outdoor work—he drank considerably, but was wonderfully sharp at getting inquiries, serving writs, and hunting out gentlemen who were out of the way. Until my troubles came upon me I always thought it a very pleasant and shabby thing for a gentleman to avoid a person to whom he owed money.

Well, as you know very well, I made a good thing of the money-lending business. I was always the plaintiff and plaintiff's attorney too, and saved a deal of money every year by making out my own bills of costs. I made much, much money. [Here Hammer Nailsby uttered that which I am unwilling between a sigh and a groan, but more closely resembled a groan than either.] I must have been worth at one time near seventy thousand pounds, and now, with all my sharpness, I haven't a penny.

I came to know the peerage, the baronetage, the Army List, the Court Guide, the Law List, and the Clerical Directory by heart. I only did business with people, and I was mostly in those books that I found the swells suitable for my purposes. I never advertised in the papers for custom, and I never employed runners and sharpers to bring flies to my web. I had only to sit in my back office from ten to four every day, and the swells would come trotting in quickly enough of their own accord. There were always two or three broughams standing at Hammer Nailsby's door. I've made the proudest duke in England wait three-quarters of an hour in my front office, not because I was engaged, but because I wanted to take his Grace's pride down a peg or two. Duchesses, countesses, ladies—I've had 'em by dozens, with their diamonds in their reticules, begging and praying me to let them have a hundred-pound note. Members of Parliament and colonels in the army, captains in the Navy, University bucks, Guardsmen, barristers, popular preachers, orators at Exeter Hall, and managers of theatres, every body who had a position, or a title, or a name, came to Hammer Nailsby. I never troubled the aristocratic tradesmen and clubs, and such like tag-rag and bobtail.

Ten years ago I was a very wealthy man, had a splendid business at my banker's. The house I lived in was my own. I had an estate in Suffolk, close to the very house where my father had been a servant in the furnace. I was over-and-twenty thousand pounds for this land, and the house upon it, and I promise you that the son of the great squire, Sir Percival Rightclere, who had now come into the title, was civil enough to plain Hammer Nailsby. There had always been a little banking account open between the Barnet and myself.

I was a bachelor, and I enjoyed myself out of business hours. I had a little, and generally won. I played cards a good deal, and always won. I gave very nice little dinner-parties; and was known as the Good Marquess, the right honorable Barnet, and the noble Captain, if they pleased either engagements, or failed to come up to time, when Hammer Nailsby invited them to put their legs under his mahogany. You've dined in Argyll Street many a time, Sir Frederick Montresor. Do you remember my thirty-four port? do you remember my eighteen-hundred-and-eleven cognac? It was like—it was my charming Host? and my East India Madeira? I wasn't a stingy host. I always gave you a good skinful when you came to Argyll Street.

It was a woman, gentlemen, that was my undoing. They've been getting me into trouble ever since the time of Adam and Eve and the apple; and it was my fate, at last, to find out how much common-sense there was in my old mother's advice, never to have any thing to do with women either in the way of marriage or of money. It happened, ten years ago, as I say, that one of the swell parties with whom I was brought into constant were a Captain Hillbury, of the Life Guards. He was a fine, handsome young fellow, over six feet high, and with as big and handsome a heart. He came to see me him in St. James's Street, on a drawing-room day, ogling the women, and admired, I dare say, by them; and he thought me a swell! That big black horse with the beautiful saddle-cloth you're riding, my fine fellow—that shining helmet and breast-plate—that splendid suit of clothes, right down to your jack-boots, all belong, body and boots, to Hammer Nailsby." He did belong to me, root and branch, and to the thousandth part of him. He had been a ward in Chancery; but I had lent him money before he came of age; and, as soon as ever he was twenty-one, I made him pay up, principal and interest. And then, of course, I lent him more money, and more. He had very soon run through the whole of the latter had left him, which did not amount to more than five thousand a year; but all his connections were rich people. He was heir-apparent to a peerage, and had vast expectations from a rich old aunt. I was foolish enough to let him owe me, and me alone pretty nearly—alone, nevertheless a sum than seven thousand pounds.

Captain Hillbury was not married; but, like many other officers and gentlemen in the Life Guards—and the Foot Guards, too, for the matter of that—he had a charmer established near the St. John's Wood, which cost him a mint of money; and there was a dainty little lady, who was called the Honorable Mrs. Rivers, and who I believe, no more Honorable, and no more Mrs. Rivers, than my dead-and-dumb clerk. A worthless, unwilling, unworthy woman she was. Ugh! I should like to have her throat in my grip, with her long, fair hair, and her big gray eyes that were always beaming with some infernal mischief or other.

This creature had managed to get rid of a pretty slice of the Honorable Captain's money, which Captain Hillbury had, and, if the truth were known, of a good many more thousands to boot. She was the most extravagant thing that you could possibly conceive. Silks, satins, velvets, Brussels and point lace, horses, carriages, French poodles, and Persian cats, Cashmere shawls, Cottons and ladies' maids in ringlets; Champagne suppers and maraschino breakfasts; trips to Richmond, Greenwich, and Blackwall; balls, stalls at the play, and boxes at the opera—that was the way in which Captain Hillbury's money went: or rather, it was the way in which it ceased to be the dogs at South Bank, St. John's Wood. The young scamp had solemnly promised me that he would never let Mrs. Rivers have a horse, brown to the dogs at South Bank, St. John's Wood. The young scamp had solemnly promised me that he would never let Mrs. Rivers have a horse, brown to do business with him, I discovered that he had won six thousand pounds on the Derby and lost them on the St. Leger.

The oldest thing about the Honorable Mrs. Rivers was, that although she was as wasteful as could be, and would have ruined the affairs of Milbray's, so long as he had a shilling to give her, she was passionately fond of him. I believe that she loved Frederick Hillbury with her whole heart and her whole soul. She was never happy but when in his company, and, questionable as her character was, I believe she was certainly faithful to him. Well, one fine morning the young spark's rich old aunt took it into her head to die. In due course of time Frederick, her and her will was read, and the result of the perusal of that precious document was that poor old Hammer Nailsby found that he had been robbed—infamously robbed and swindled of his hard-earned eighteen thousand pounds. I remember once again on the strength of his expectations under his aunt's will, may I be broiled on a gridiron, that I will!

I was, of course, utterly astonished at this coming to an end of all the fine prospects of Captain Hiram Hillbury. The explanation very soon taken. "I'll have those fine jack-boots and buckskins off your legs in no time, my fine packstaggy," I said to myself, and I did. I made the Captain sell his commission to begin with; but he was deeply in debt to his brother officers and to others, and he had to be settled with before I could touch the proceeds, and I barely realized two thousand pounds out of the sale of his commission. Then the horses were ous objects. For, in either of the associations, I should expressly expect him. But such is the designing nature of the man that he steals in where no reasonable precaution or prevision could expect him. As in the following case:

Adjoining the Caves of Ignorance is a country town. In this country town the Mississippi Monmouses, nine in number, were announced to appear in the Town Hall, for the general delectation, this last Christmas-week. Knowing Mr. Barlow to be unconnected with the Monmouses, though holding republican opinions, and deeming myself secure, I took a stall. My object was to hear and see the Mississippi Monmouses as are the bills described as their "National Ballads, Plantation Break-Downs, Nigger Part-Songs, Choice Conundrums, Sparkling Repartees, etc." I found the nine dressed alike, in the black coat and trousers, white waistcoat, very large shirt-front, very large shirt-collar, and very large white tie and wristbands, which constitute the dress of the mass of the African race, and which has been observed by travellers to prevail over the whole number of degrees of latitude. All the nine rolled their eyes exceedingly, and had very red lips. At the extremities of the curve they formed, seated in their chairs were the performers on the Tumbourine and Bones. The centre Monmus, a black of melancholy aspect (perhaps inspired me with a vague uneasiness for which I could not then account), performed on a Mississippi instrument closely resembling what we used to call in this island a hurdy-gurdy. The Monmuses on either side of him had each another instrument peculiar to the Father of Waters, which may be likened to a stringed weather-glass held upside down. There were likewise a little flute and a violin. All went well for a while, as he had had several sparkling repartees exchanged between the performers on the tambourine and bones, when the black of melancholy aspect, turning to the latter, and addressing him in a deep and improving voice as "Bones, Sir," delivered certain grave remarks to him concerning the juveniles present, and the season of the year; wherein I perceived that I was in the presence of Mr. Barlow—cocked.

Another night—and this was in London—I attended the representation of a Christmas piece. As the characters were lifelike (and consequently not improving), and as they went upon their several ways in designs without reference to undressing themselves to me, I felt rather confident of coming through it without being regarded as Tommy; but so, as we were getting on, I drew close to the end. But I deceived myself. All of a sudden, and apropos of nothing, every body concerned came to a check and was transfixed to the foot-lights in a general rally to take dead aim at me, and brought me down with a moral homily, in which I detected the dread hand of Barlow.

Nay, so intricate and subtle are the toils of this hunter, that on the very next occasion that I was again entrapped, where no vestige of a sponge could have been apprehended by the simplest, it was a burlesque that I saw performed; an uncompromising burlesque, where every body concerned, but especially the ladies, carried on a very considerable flirtation with me. Most prominent and active among the corps of performers was what I took to be (and she really gave me very good opportunities of thinking so right conclusion) a young lady of a pretty figure. She was dressed as a picturesque young gentleman, whose pantaloons had been cut off in early infancy, and she had very neat knees, and very neat satin boots. Immediately after singing a slang song and dancing a slang dance with an engaging figure approached the fatal lamps, and, bending over them, delivered in a thrilling voice a random Johnsonian on, and Eccentrication to me, the Virtues. "Great Heaven!" was my exclamation. "Barlow!"

There is still another aspect in which Mr. Barlow perpetually insists on my sustaining the character of Tommy, which is more unendurable yet, on account of its extreme aggressiveness. For the purposes of a Review or newspaper, he will get up an abstruse subject with infinite pains, will Barlow, quarrel regardless of the price of midnight oil, and indeed of every thing else, save cramming himself to the eyes.

But mark. When Mr. Barlow blows his information off, he is not contented with having crammed it home and discharged it upon me, Tommy, his target, but he proceeds flat to make always in possession of it, and made nothing of it, that he imbibed it with his mother's milk, and that I, the wretched Tommy, am more or less perfectly behindhand in not having done the same. I ask, why is Tommy to be always the fat of Mr. Barlow to fire exterior? What Mr. Barlow had not the slightest notion of himself a week ago, it surely can not be any very heavy task for sliding in me not to have at my fingers' ends to-day! And yet Mr. Barlow systematically carries it over me with a high hand, and will mutter, and ask me in his articles whether it is possible that I am not aware that every school-boy knows that the fourteenth turning on the left in the approach of Russia will conduct to such-and-such a wandering tribe? With other disparaging questions of like nature. So, when Mr. Barlow addresses a letter to any journal as a volunteer correspondent (which I frequently find him doing), he will previously have gotten somebody to tell him some tremendous technicality, and will write in the coolest manner: "Now, Sir, I may assume that every reader of your columns, possessing average information and intelligence, knows as well as I do that"—say that the draught from the touch-hole of a cannon of such a calibre bears such a proportion in the nicest fractions to the draught from the muzzle; or some equally familiar little fact. But whatever it is, he certain that it always tends to the exaltation of Mr. Barlow, and the depression of his enforced and enslaved pupil.

Mr. Barlow's knowledge of my own pursuits I find to be so profound that my own knowledge of them becomes as nothing. Mr. Barlow (disguised and bearing a feigned name, but detected by me) has occasionally taught me, in a sonorous voice, from end to end of a long dinner-table, trifles that I took the liberty of teaching him five-and-twenty years ago. My closing article of impeachment against Mr. Barlow is, that he goes out to breakfast, goes out to dinner, goes out every where high and low, and will not let me preach to me, and thus I can't get rid of him. He makes of me a Promethean Tommy, bound; and he is the vulture that gorges itself upon the liver of my minstructed mind.

DR. TYNDALL'S LAST DISCOVERY

That ever-active physicist, Dr. Tyndall, who has already proved himself a worthy successor of his illustrious master, Faraday, has just added to his other valuable discoveries the discovery of a new kind of chemical experiment, remarkable for its simplicity of idea, and which there is reason to believe will soon open a very large field of inquiry. "It consists," to use his own words, "in subjecting the vapors of volatile liquids to the action of continuous sunlight, or to the concentrated beam of the electric light;" and some of the results which he records are of such singular, almost inconceivable beauty, that for this reason alone, and putting aside their important application to many atmospheric phenomena, and probably to art, they have a claim to be noticed in these pages.

He uses the experimental tube. It is connected with an air-pump, and with a set of tubes used for the purification of the air, and at one end of the tube, which lies horizontally and is closed by plates of glass, a small platinum lamp is arranged that the axis of the tube and that of the parallel beam issuing from the lamp are coincident.

The substances whose vapors were passed into the tube and there exposed to strong light are known to chemists as iodide of amyl, iodide of allyl, iodide of isopropyl, hydrobromic acid, hydrochloric acid, hydriodic acid. To the great majority of our readers these names, excepting perhaps the last three, convey no more information than the appalling word, Hinterlabungsverhaltungsverfassungsverschwendschaft (which is quoted in the Cosmos of Sept. 26), would do to a person totally ignorant of German. This is, however, of little consequence, and all that need be known is that they are all readily converted into vapors by the application of a moderate heat. These vapors are exposed to the above-described action, clouds of the most beautiful appearance, and at some points vividly iridescent, show themselves in the tube. When the nitrite of amyl vapor is mixed with a little air the cloud is white; "but if air is freely admitted and the nitrite vapor thus attenuated, the cloud varies in color from a milky blue to a little air-bubble." "There could scarcely," says the author, "be a more impressive illustration of Newton's mode of resolving the colors of natural bodies by the experiment than that here exhibited; for never, even in the skies of the Alps, have I seen a richer or a purer blue than that presented by a suitable disposition of the light falling upon the precipitated vapor. May not the aqueous vapor of our atmosphere act in a similar manner?"

The cloud yielded by iodide of allyl was extremely beautiful. The whole column revolved round the axis of the descending central beam, and was nipped so as to have an hour-glass appearance, while round the globular dilatations delicate cloud-filaments wandered, sometimes in spirals. It also folded itself into convolutions resembling those of shells. When hydrogen is made the vehicle of the vapor, the cloud assumes a pearly lustre, such as Dr. Tyndall has often noticed in certain conditions of the atmosphere in the Alps.

The action of light upon the vapor of iodide of isopropyl occasions in the course of a few minutes some singularly graceful developments. The column of cloud is seen to divide into two parts near the middle of the tube, and in one experiment a globe of cloud formed at the centre with axis projecting right and left. Sudden commotions were observed in the nebulous mass, knots of cloud shooting out and growing into flower-like forms. In one case the cloud-bud grew rapidly into a wreath, which, a moment was formed, and from the mouth a cord of cloud, resembling a tongue, was rapidly discharged.

The aqueous vapor of hydrobromic acid mixed with air gave rise to the formation of two clouds five inches apart, and united by a slender cord of cloud of the same illustrious appearance. After undergoing various modifications of form, both clouds presented the appearance of a series of concentric funnels with open mouths, the interior ones being seen through the gaseous walls of the outer ones. As many as six of these concentric vases were observed.

The aqueous solution of hydrochloric acid yields a vapor which required an exposure of fifteen or twenty minutes to the electric light for the production of a fully developed cloud. It was then divided into several sections, united to each other by a slender cord. "Each of these sections," says Dr. Tyndall, "possessed an exceedingly complex and ornate structure, exhibiting ribs, spears, funnels, leaves, involved scrolls, and iridescent fleurs-de-lis. Thus the structure of the cloud from beginning to end was perfectly symmetrical; it was a cloud of revolution, its corresponding points being at equal distances from the axis of the beam."

The aqueous vapor of hydriodic acid yields a nebula which so far resembles those of the two preceding acids that the process commences by the formation of two small clouds united by a cord; but it exhibits more vivid colors (green and crimson) than the other vapors. Of the various substances experimented on none gave such astonishing results as this. "The development of the cloud," says Dr. Tyndall, "was like that of an organism, from a more or less formless mass at the commencement, to a structure of marvelous complexity;" and this grand simile is fully borne out by his description of the changing phenomena which he observed. After a time the cloud formed into a spectral cone with a circular base, from which filmy drapery seemed to descend. On this base was an exquisite vase, with a vase of similar shape in its interior, and from the edges of the vases fell the finest clouds. The anterior portion of the cloud assumed in succession the forms of roses, tulips, and sunflowers; it also presented the appearance of a series of beautifully shaped bottles placed (like the funnels in a previous case) one within the other; and once it positively assumed the form of a fish, with eyes, gills, and feelers. "The grasses of the animal form," says the observer, "was displayed throughout, and no disk, coil, or speck existed on one side that did not exist on the other." For nearly two hours Dr. Tyndall looked in wonder at the extraordinary vision which his magic skill had evoked.

These experiments are capable of almost any degree of modification and extension. They have already revealed to us a new world abounding in images of almost incomparable beauty; but it is very probable that they have more than an æsthetic value. The assistants who watched the phenomena with the Professor, and whose minds were probably of a more practical cast, remarked that these reactions "would prove exceedingly valuable in pattern-designers," and if artistic skill can seize these fleeting phantoms there is no reason why this idea should not be carried out.

The chemical reactions which occur in these experiments are only slightly noticed, and do not admit of a popular explanation; it is, however, in the highest degree probable that future chemists will make this form of experiment a potent auxiliary to the laboratory, while future meteorologists will find in it the true explanation of various atmospheric phenomena which as yet remain in more or less obscurity.

HUMORS OF THE DAY.

A DARKEY in Natchez was boasting to a grocer of the cheapness of two pounds of sugar he had bought at a rival store. "Let me weigh the sugar," said the grocer. The darkey assented, and it was found two pounds short. The colored gentleman looked perplexed for a moment, and then said: "Guess he didn't chest de child much; for he'll be wa sure'ing the sugar I stole two pair of shoes."

MEN seem to kiss among themselves,
And scarce would kiss a brother,
But women want to kiss so badly,
They kiss and kiss each other.

A LADY REPLIES.

Men do not kiss among themselves,
It's well that they refrain,
The bitter dose would vex them so
They ne'er would kiss again.

RIDDLES BY A WRETCH.

What is the difference between a surgeon and a wizard?—The one is a cupper, and the other is a sorcerer.

Why is America like the set of reflection?—Because it is a roomy-nation.

Why is your pretty cousin like an alabaster vase?—Because she is an objet de beauty.

A letter bearing the following superscription was recently received at the Dead Letter Office, from Iowa:

"Augustus Jones, a web-foot scrub.
To whom this letter wrats to go,
Where the pond-wood for his grub
In Silver City, Idaho."

THE NEW BACK-GAMMON—The Grecian bend.

THE SWELLS.

Hear that noisy lot of swells—
Hear those swells!
What a deal of trashy talk their company foretells!
How they chatter, chatter, chatter,
In the ball-room of a night!
Making such a fearful clatter,
As if something were the matter,
And had put them in a fright.
Killing time, time, time
Never thinking it a crime!
With the foolish conversation, to the little, laughing belles,
Of the swells, swells, swells, swells,
Those swells, swells, swells!
While a-waiting and a-talking with the belles.

See those dissipated swells—
Heathen swells!
What a tale to temperance they they tumble tells!
In the startled air of night
Ringing bells in with great delight,
And singing songs with all their might,
Although the words they do not quite Distinctly utter,
Reeling, reeling, reeling,
Standing, standing, standing,
Rolling, rolling, rolling,
On their honorable journey stirring
With a resolute endeavor
To show to all, or never
Side by side with their companions in the gutter,
Are in arm with their companions in the gutter.

See those horrid dandy swells—
Those swells!
What a world of rapid talk their company compels!
How distressing their flirtation,
And affected alienation
Of envy's contamination
Of the belles!
Oh, malicious young and single!
Lest your ears with pain should tingle,
You never listen to the jingle
Of the swells—
Of the swells, swells, swells, swells,
To the jingling and the mingling of the swells.

A doctor was very much annoyed by an old lady who always stopped him on the street to tell him of her many ills. Once she met him when he was in a great hurry. "Ah, doctor, how you are quite feeble," said the doctor. "Shut your eyes and show me your tongue." She did so, and the doctor moved off left her standing there for some time in this ridiculous position, to the infinite amusement of all who witnessed the funny scene.

GROSS DERAVATION—Getting fat.

HISTORY OF BOSTON.

Boston, in the State of Massachusetts, is a city of no mean pretensions. In age it antedates the Pyramids. When first discovered by the Tyrian Phœnicians, 1200 B.C., it bore the marks of extreme antiquity.

Faneuil Hall is supposed to have been the original Solomon's Temple, and Boston Common is known to be the Garden of Eden with modern improvements. The Tree of Life has been removed to make room for the magnificent Old Elm, and the Four Rivers are represented by the beautiful fountain which squirts continually.

Boston was named in honor of a certain cracker, which was there made in great perfection by the pre-Adamite inhabitants. And it retains the name—and the cracker—to this day.

A certain of its poets, whose name orpheus is Holmes, has called Boston the Hub of the Universe. Hub, and also a place where the rabbit muscles are never used, it may truly be termed the centre of creation.

No one laughs in Boston, and whoever would smile must go half a hundred miles to do it.

The streets in Boston are unlike the one in Damascus which was called Straight. When paved out, back in the carboniferous period, the Street Commissioner did not heed the injunction of the "Great Expounder:" "Ye solid men of Boston, drink no strong potations." And so the ruts and crevices of the town stagger about after the similitude of a rum's gait.

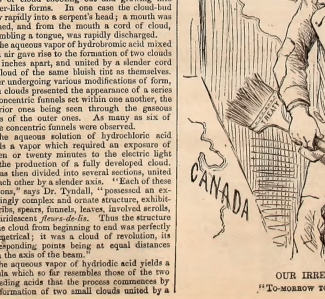
The principal hotel was formerly kept by Theodore Parker, and is still called the Parker House. It is kept on the European plan, which is, to charge so much for a room that you have no money left to invest in a breakfast.

Boston includes the towns of Cambridge, Jamaica Plains, Roxbury, Framingham, Worcester, Salem, and indeed all Massachusetts.

An Irish girl told her forbidden lover that she was longing to possess his portrait, and intended to obtain it.

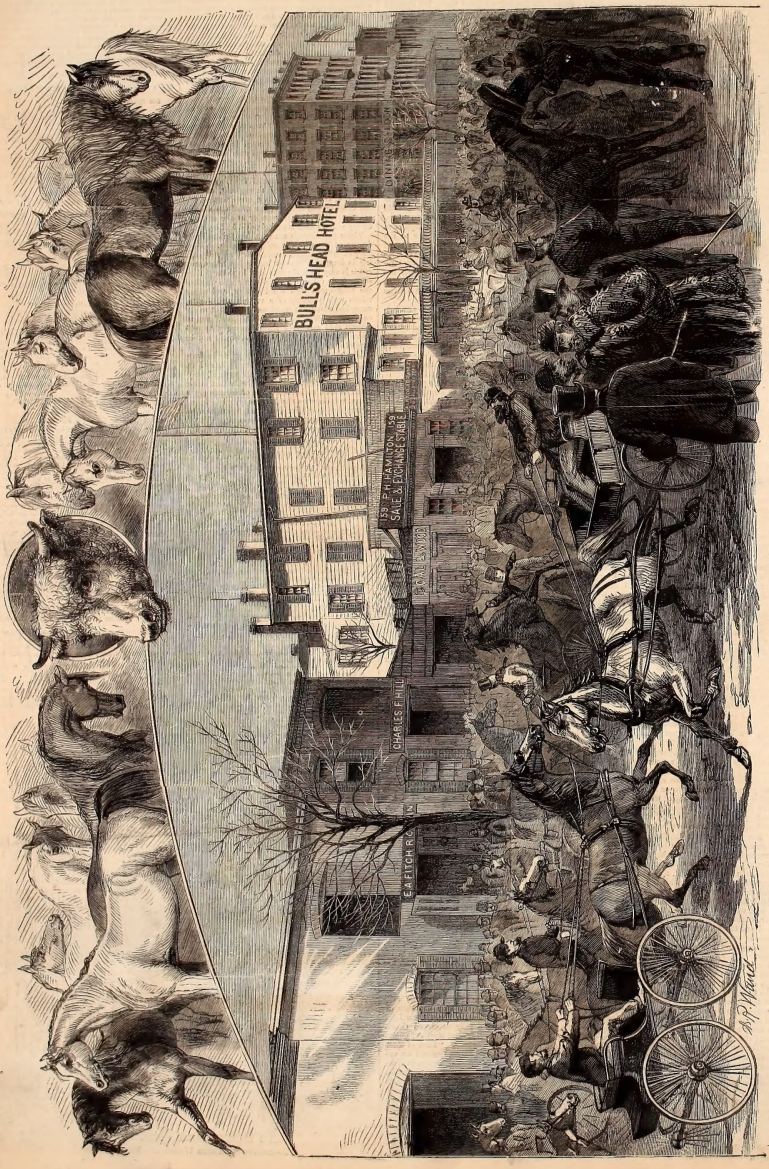
"But how if your friends see it?"

"Ah, and I'll tell the artist not to make it like you, so they won't know it."



OUR IRREPRESSIBLE "BILL"-STICKER.

"TO-MORROW TO FRESH WOODS AND PASTURES NEW."



BULL'S HEAD HOTEL
CHARLES F. HILL
P. H. HAMILTON
SALE & EXCHANGE STABLE
P. H. HAMILTON
SALE & EXCHANGE STABLE
P. H. HAMILTON
SALE & EXCHANGE STABLE

"THE WELL-KNOWN KNOCK."

A simple and touching story of duties and trials in humble life, of wifely devotion and marital constancy, is told in our illustration on this page. By the dresses of the young mother and the little one who has risen with her, and also by the candle brought and placed on the stairs—not to be blown out at the door by, perhaps, a stormy wind raging without (and the "cast shadows" thrown by which are so well-managed by the artist)—we see that the summons for admission to a beloved home has come at night. That it is the return of husband and father we have an additional assurance in the title. By the ear of affection that knock could never be mistaken: sweeter music could not reach it. We are further told, by the eager gratification depicted on the pleasant countenance of the wife, and in her attitude of haste, so wholly free from any trace of doubt or apprehension, and by the quiet confidence of the child, longing likewise to give the kiss of welcome, that absence has been enforced by duty, and any delay was compulsory. This is no return of base truant, vile drunkard, reckless gamester, or penitent prodigal. However long the return has been expected, there will be no look or word of upbraiding in the reception. Perhaps it is some service of responsibility and danger which detains the man from home habitually far into the night; perhaps some public duty by sea or land. It may have been some ordinary journey; but very possibly it is the return from a long and perilous voyage, and the "well-known knock" comes like an angel voice in the still night, announcing glad tidings of joy and comfort to the yearning heart of the young wife and mother—mother perhaps since the husband's absence. A thousand conjectures the spectator may please to indulge in; but however romantic the explanation to which he inclines the picture forbids any denouement for the story but one of the fruition of hope and love in bliss unqualified. No subject could more forcibly suggest the perfect happiness of home.

"THE WELL-KNOWN KNOCK."

MODELING A HOMESTEAD.

The group represented on our first page is very suggestive. During the long winter evenings what occupation can be more interesting to the family gathered about the fireside than that of "modeling a homestead?" The first question with birds—the first problem they set about solving—is that of nest-building. With every frugal family the establishment of a permanent homestead should have the same prominence. It is of the first importance. Our population is rapidly increasing, the demand for houses, and consequently the price of rent, is daily growing greater, especially in our large cities and in their neighborhood; and the question presses imperatively upon all citizens: "Shall we pay rent in houses built for us upon the plans of speculative landlords, or shall we build for ourselves, and upon our own plans, such as our several necessities and our tastes suggest?"

The freedom from the thralldom of rent is in itself a great end to be secured. But this is by no means all. The homestead, which is the outward and material symbol of the spiritual significance of home, should become ours not simply by legal possession; it should be an outgrowth from our own souls, stamped with the impress of our own deep sin. The robin can not build a nest for the swallow; and why should Mr. Boodle or Mr. Coodle build a homestead for you or me? Of course, we may need to consult those who are more experienced than ourselves as to materials best adapted to certain ends, as to cost, or as to the practicability of our plans, considering the means at our disposal. But every good housewife knows exactly what sort of a kitchen or pantry would suit her best. Every farmer can agree as to what would be the nicest kind of parlor for itself, or what kind of sitting-room would precisely meet the ideas of comfort and tidiness. Even the hall can have a sort of individuality impressed upon it, so that the first impression of a stranger would disclose some hint as to the tastes of the occupants. The size of the bedroom and the number of its closets; the degree of convenience and abundance of closet-room; the number, arrangement, and shape of the windows; the style of porties or piazzas; every thing, in fact, from the floor of the cellar to the chimney-top is a subject for mature deliberation, and for the exercise of individual taste. The house we live in, not less than the garments we wear, should furnish some indication of our predilections.

The first thing is the determination to build; such a purpose will furnish an additional motive to economy and industry. Then comes the planning—the delicious occupation of many pleasant hours spent in family consultation. Even the youngest members of the household are interested, and may participate in the work. The outlined sketches of plans on paper may be by means satisfactory. I therefore our group in the illustration prefers modeling. This may be done either by the use of colored blocks or of pasteboard; the latter being more convenient, because more easily managed. In this way a perfect model of the end of the finished homestead. It is a happy little fireside company, which we commend to our readers. Let us hope that the house will not only be modeled but built, and that it will shelter those who will always be as ready to re-operate with and help each other as they do now in this "modeling of a homestead."

THE NIGHT-SUMMONS.

I WISH could quite make up my mind to like Captain Standrid. He was only Lieutenant Standrid when he first came to Buckholme, and let my sister Alice see how deeply he was in love with her. He is a very good-looking and very well accomplished; and in the eyes of Alice and mamma, he was simply perfection. Any opposition that I, a raw schoolgirl of fifteen, might feel inclined to offer to my sister's engagement would have been worse than useless: it would only have aroused the storm which the most complete had heretofore reigned, and would not have influenced Alice's after-fate in the least. So the wedding came and went, and left me for our dear one with it. Mamma and I were left in the old house alone; and Buckholme had never seemed so dreary to either of us as it did now that Alice's pleasant laugh was no longer heard in its rooms.

About six months after Lieutenant Standrid's marriage his regiment was ordered to Ireland; and then Alice would have been lost to us entirely but for the letters that passed to and fro between Buckholme and the little town where she was in garrison with her husband.

My sister had been gone about a couple of years when that terrible affair of the bank-failure took place. Mamma lost two-thirds of her entire fortune in the crash, and my little portion went the same way.

As a consequence of this calamity we were obliged to quit Buckholme, the spot where Alice and I had been born and brought up, and close to which was the churchyard where our dear father lay buried. Mamma could no longer afford to keep up so large an establishment. We were even obliged to let our old Scotland, a pet of my girlish fancy, crossing the Border was like going into a foreign country. Mamma had a little house, in her own property, in one of the northern counties of England, and that was to be our future home. After Buckholme, it was a mere cottage, and for several weeks after our arrival we seemed to have scarcely breathing-room in it. But the feeling of narrowness and want of space quickly wore itself away, and we came to look upon the little house emphatically as home, and to love it as we grew to love it. It was pleasantly situated on an upland slope of rich pasture-land. From its windows you looked across a wide expanse of undulating valley to the foremost spurs of a range of great hills that stretched northward — one giant pressing close on the other, instead of another shown in Border itself—and formed no bad substitute for the more rugged grandeur of my native land. Our tiny domain was about in one and the sluggish waters of a canal. This canal was a great eyesore to mamma, who always spoke of it as "that ditch;" but for my part I did not dislike it. The slow-trailing barges, laden with coal or merchandise, and the gay packet-boats that passed and repassed twice a day, coming up and down—lent a touch of human interest to the landscape, and were of service to us in drawing our thoughts away a little while from ourselves and our immediate troubles.

Alice had been gone about three years. Of late her letters had been very infrequent, and those that we did receive were confined to details of the meagrest kind. They breathed no syllable of complaint, yet there was always a troubled look in my mother's eyes for a day or two after she had received one of them. In the last letter sent us by Alice there was no hint of what came to pass such a short time afterward; consequently, our surprise was all the greater when, in the dusk of a certain summer evening, I duly stepped at our garden-wicket and the next moment I clasped my sister to my heart.

It was only natural, after the first glad surprise of the meeting was over, that both mamma and I should want to know how it happened that Alice had come back so unexpectedly, and without a single word of announcement. But my sister stopped us at the outset.

"Captain Standrid's regiment is ordered to Canada," she said. "I am not accompanying it. I decline going to Canada; consequently, I am come back home. I have nothing further to tell you; and if you love me, you will ask me a single question more."

And nothing further did she tell us. We were too happy to have her with us to question her against her will as to her reasons for returning.

During the six months that followed between the night of her return and the strange incident which I have now on record, Alice received but two letters from her husband. Whether the news they contained was good or bad no one ever knew but herself. All that was, that Captain Standrid was quite well and seemed indifferent regards to mamma and me; but she seemed even more melancholy after the receipt of them than she had been before, although not the fastest murmur or complaint of any kind escaped her lips. Both mamma and I were anxious on the score of her health, which seemed to wane with the waning year; the listless, brooding sadness that had come upon her during the month to month, and the doctor's visits grew more frequent as Christmas drew near. But Alice's illness was of the kind that all the leeches in the world would have availed her but little.

That winter was the hardest that had been known south of the Border for many years. We had been used to hard winters all my life. The black frost, which set in about the middle of December, generally brought to afford an opportunity of indulging in my favorite pastime of skating, which, on leaving Buckholme, I had given as a last parting present to something which I could hope but rarely to enjoy again. Every morning when I awoke the first glance was to the window of my room, to see whether a filigree of frost-work still obscured the panes; and morning after morning my anxiety found was there again, telling me that the frost had not yet broken.

When the frost had lasted four days I sent Simon, our solitary man-servant, who was coachman, butler, and gardener in one, to make a secret reconnoissance of the canal, reporting to me as to the character and capabilities of its ice.

"It 'll bear all right by to-morrow, Miss Theo, will 't 'ee," was Simon's report.

Next morning I imparted my project to mamma; but she was not nearly so hopeful as I was later, when my importunities induced her to yield a reluctant consent. I must go alone, or not go at all; but I did not mind that. I had been many a solitary hour skating on the great loch near Buckholme, with no company but my own thoughts. So long as mamma was sure of the edge of the canal and put on my skates for me, and then I started. I had a glorious three hours on the ice; and I came back from the bridge just as the sun was dipping into the gray mists of the dying afternoon.

A week passed and still the frost held without the slightest sign of a break. Every day I went for a longer or shorter time; and mamma was quite as anxious as myself when I assured that the ice could not give way—that I should enjoy a splendid exercise while I had an opportunity of doing so, as I had often said her wishes in the matter. Dear mamma! She would enjoy Alice's company, and would indeed my spirits if I staid too much indoors; that I should catch the trick of sadness without having its warrant.

On the morning of Christmas-eve there came a third letter from Canada addressed to my sister. We were both much puzzled when it was brought in, for, this morning, Alice received a letter than usual, and had come down quite unexpectedly. Something in the shape of news that trembled slightly. As her eyes took in the contents a deep angry flush mounted to her white face. Her hands trembled, looking beautifully indignant, and, crossing the floor, thrust her husband's letter between the bars of the grate, and did not speak a word till every bit was burned to ashes. Then she crossed the room to leave it. She was going back to the middle of her own little parlor, when mamma, anxiously, as Alice's hand was on the door.

"Captain Standrid is well, dear?" asked mamma, anxiously, as Alice's hand was on the door.

"Captain Standrid is well," she answered, coldly, and next moment she was gone.

Later in the day I went out on the ice as usual, but the edge of the canal seemed to be cut off by my sister's evident trouble. If only she would have made a confidante of mamma, and have told her every thing, I felt sure that one half the sting would have been taken out of her trouble. But she trusted it in solitude, brooding over it in lonely misery, and, by her obstinate silence, making all three of us far more wretched than we need have been, and not her lips been sealed by mistaken pride.

I was not by mamma on entering the house. Alice is more than usually thin this afternoon," she said. "The letter she received this morning seems to have given a shock to her nervous system which has utterly prostrated her. I would send for Dr. Webb but that she is so obstinately bent on not seeing him after his visit of yesterday; and when she sets her mind either for or against any thing you know how determined she can be."

Has she said any thing to you respecting the contents of the letter?"

"Not a word."

As the evening advanced Alice seemed somewhat better, but still very silent and depressed; and altogether it was the most wretched Christmas-eve I had ever known. I was glad when bedtime came. After I had put out my light I stood peering out of the window for a few moments. A slight snow-shower had fallen a few hours before, but the clouds had rolled themselves away by this time, and the wide landscape, white and solemn, lay bathed in clearest moonlight. What a pity it seemed, I thought, to waste a night that was fit could claim so much beauty as their own!

I was fast enough asleep, however, when mamma came into my room about two o'clock, and touched me on the shoulder. "I want you to get up, dear," she said. "Alice is much worse, and I am beginning to be very anxious about her."

Mamma's anxiety was at once shared by me when I entered my sister's room. That she was very dangerously ill was quite evident even to my inexperienced eyes. "Dr. Webb must be summoned at once," said mamma; "but whom can we send to fetch him?"

Dr. Webb lived at Dale-end, a little town five miles away. The ordinary was the position of our house that he was the nearest practitioner. Under ordinary circumstances there would have been no difficulty in summoning him. Old Simon would have got out Ball, the pony, and have driven him over to Dale-end with the basket-carriage; but Ball had brought the doctor back with him. But to-night is so happened that neither Simon nor the pony was available. The former was ill with bad Christmas with some friends several miles away; and Ball, a few days previously, had fallen lame, and was for the present unfit for work. Besides mamma and myself there remained in the house only two maid-servants, who would rather have perished than have attempted to have walked five miles along a lonely country road at that uncanny hour.

"I will go and summon Dr. Webb," I said, in answer to mamma's question.

"You, Theo, you can never walk five miles at this time of night!"

"I both can and will do it. Dr. Webb will bring me back in his gig."

"It will never do for you to go alone. Bessy, the house-maid, must accompany you."

"She would only be an encumbrance, and I am not at all afraid. I should get along twice as well without her. You know my walking powers of old, mamma."

"I must really insist, Theo, upon Bessy going with you. Otherwise I shall go to Dale-end myself."

I should probably have carried my point in the end, but just then a sudden thought struck me, which left me for the moment powerless to speak, and mamma at once took to call Bessy.

Five minutes later Bessy and I were ready to start. Mamma let us out at the front-door and bade us God-speed, and stood watching us till we shut the garden-wicket behind us and were lost to view. The moon and stars were shining brightly, and all the country-side lay white before us. The snow was not thick enough to impede walking, but was just enough to deaden the noise of our footsteps on the hard ground. There was a keen frosty wind that smote us like a scourge when we left the sheltered lane and turned our faces northward.

Beg your pardon, Miss Theo, but you are taking the wrong road to Dale-end," said Bessy.

"No we shall, Bessy; or rather I shall. There will be a nearer way to go."

"But Mrs. Saltoun said I was to go with you, Miss Theo; and, my how, this is not the road."

"Let me assure you: I am going to skate there along the canal."

"Law! miss, you will never be so foolish!" exclaimed Bessy, aghast at the idea.

"Whatever will your mamma say?"

"Mamma has had to forgive me many worse things than that," I said to Bessy. Dale-end is the time it would take me to go by road, and Dr. Webb will be able to see my sister so much the sooner. You have to go down to the canal with me and assist me on with my skates. After that you can go back home and tell mamma what I am doing."

Bessy grumbled, but was obliged to give way. I sat down on a large stone by the canal side, and she assisted me to put on my skates. My dress was well looped up, so as not to impede my movements; my hands were protected by a warm muff. Bessy fixed a handkerchief over my hat and under my chin. Then I started. Good hearted Bessy stood on the bank and waved me a farewell signal, as though I were going on a voyage of a thousand miles.

The ice was in splendid condition. The keen wind that had sprung up since midnight had swept the powdered snow off its surface almost as well as a broom could have done. To find myself on the ice by night was to remind me of old happy hours in Scotland when we used to go out, a party of us, with torches and hot pipes, and skate on Buckholme Loch. I gave myself to the occasion, and determined to do the distance at good speed. It was six miles, a mile further than by road. When the black span of the first bridge was touched and passed, and Bessy told me I had a mile behind, the overpowering solitude of the scene began to weigh upon my heart. But the condition of my nerves of itself compelled me to make me feel sad and anxious. It could not surely be that we were going to lose her? And yet there was something in her appearance to-night that excited my worst fears. In my own mind I could not help connecting my sister's increased illness with the letter from her husband which she had received that morning while at breakfast. If that hateful Captain Standrid had never come to Buckholme Alice would have left her, and not all the after-misery of her life resulting from her marriage with that man would have been spared her.

Such was the precise nature of the thought in my mind at the moment that a faint sound struck on my ear and caused me to turn my head. I was disagreeably startled to find that I was not quite so entirely alone on the ice as I had imagined myself to be. There was some one behind me—a man. "Some belated skater, no doubt," said I to myself, "who has been detained by good cheer and company, and is now making the best of his way home."

Without feeling exactly frightened I was yet rather anxious and excited, and at once put on my speed to the utmost with the view of distancing the stranger behind me. But I quickly perceived that my effort was a futile one. My pursuer —for such, although I had no reason whatever for so doing, I could not help calling him in my own mind—was rapidly lessening the distance between us. The ring of his skates was plain enough now to my ear above the noise made by my own motion. Suddenly I decided to slacken my speed, so as to let this troublesome individual shoot ahead of me, since that seemed the only way to get rid of him. In my wretchedly unquickened beating of the heart that I put this plan into operation and reduced my speed by half. "Pass me, you stranger now coming up," I said over hand." "He will reach me at the bridge," said I to myself, calculating the distance with my eye. So it was. As we shot under the bridge, he was skating in my shadow; as we shot out on the other side, he and I were abreast. I kept my eyes fixed straight before me and skated on, but still at a reduced speed. I was momentarily expecting to see the stranger glide on in front of me, having no desire to pursue my own course. But he did nothing of the kind. We had left the bridge about two hundred yards behind, and he was still skating in an exact line with me. My indignation was rapidly overcoming my timidity.

"A piece of unwarrantable impertinence to intrude his company on me in this way," I said to myself. With that I turned to fix him with a haughty stare; perhaps to question him, and saw—whom?

"Captain Standrid!"

My first thought was one of utter surprise on finding by my side a person whom I had at that moment believed to be some thousands of miles away. But this feeling quickly merged itself, and was lost in one that was far more unpleasant —in one of sheer horror. In the first moment of my surprise seeing Captain Standrid I pronounced his name, and was about to add some simple question, but a second glance at him caused the words to die away in my throat. As well as I could make out he was dressed entirely in furs. On his head he wore a close-fitting cap, made of the skin of some animal, from which his pale sharp-cut features and shapely mustache stood out clear and distinct in the moonlight. On his face was a pallor that was more than pale; it was white—a dull, deathlike, green white in the light of the moon—the face of a dead man. My soul seemed to shudder with a dread ineffable, as the conviction forced itself upon my mind that I was in the company of a dead man. He was looking straight before him at the moment I pronounced his name, and he took no apparent notice of my ejaculation. We were still gliding swiftly forward on our shoes of steel—I almost mechanically; we were still in a line one with the other, with a space of five or six feet between us; we had progressed about half a mile from the spot where Captain Standrid had come up with me, when he suddenly turned his head, and his eyes full upon mine—terrible eyes, with nothing of earthly speculation left in them, but in its place a nameless indescribable something, lighting them up with a strange inward light of their own, as this fearful procession was as clear to me as if I had seen them by the broad light of day. The horror that was upon me deepened till it was almost unbearable. Earth and sky, moonlight and starlight, and the whistling by floor which my feet were devouring so swiftly, all seemed out of the cognizance of unconsciously as a dream fades out of the brain at the moment of waking. We seemed to be skating, my dread companion and I, over a sea of glass toward a precipice that could be discerned dimly in the distance, and over which, having no power to stop ourselves, we must inevitably go headlong to destruction.

As in dreams we have no real knowledge of the duration of time, so, in my terror in which I then was, I seemed to have passed hours in skating over the sea of glass, whereas it could only have been half a minute at the most before I came back to a recognition of time and place, and the real circumstances around me; and felt rather than saw, with a shock of indescribable relief, that my companion's baleful eyes were no longer fixed upon me. In the mere fact of his presence there was something unspeakably terrible; but had he kept his eyes on me much longer I must either have died or gone mad.

There was something appalling in my companion's utter silence. I became possessed by an almost irresistible desire to challenge him, to question him, to do any thing that would cause him to speak; and yet in my secret heart I was intensely thankful that he did not speak: it was a consolation to me that I am not a coward. Had he spoken to me, I should never have summoned up courage to answer again. Nothing, indeed, save the strong consciousness of acting within me that the errand on which I was bound must be accomplished at every risk gave me the strength needful to accomplish my purpose. Had I been supported by a sense of any duty less stern and exacting than support would have been in vain; I should infallibly have broken down; I should have shrieked aloud for help, though no help could have come to me; I should have turned and fled by the way I had come; or else I should have fallen senseless on the ice, and have been found next morning frozen and dead. Last year I drew my breath hard, and set my teeth, and murmured to myself: "Not twenty Captain Standrids, dead or alive, shall stop me from going where I want to go!"

I increased my pace and Captain Standrid increased his. Onward we sped along a winding course that followed every bend and twist of the little valley, the white meadows, solitary and far-reaching, and the pines on either side. Not a sky road without a sign of human life or habitation. Such a journey for which I was inspired by in a fold of the valley, and could not be seen from the canal till you were close upon it. My heart began to beat more freely at the first thought that now the end of my journey was not very far away. Almost a mile before you reach the town, the canal makes a sharp bend into two branches, and after forming a loop (for purposes of trade), comes together again in the large basin at the terminus. Each of the two branches would have answered my purpose equally well, there being little or no difference in their length; but I had made up my own mind to take that which led to the right. When we were about a dozen yards from the point of division the dark and speechless figure by my side shot suddenly ahead in the direction of the left-hand channel. I now saw, what I had not noticed before, that my weird companion was shadowy indeed. The noise made by his oars cutting the ice could be distinctly heard above that made by mine; in bulk and figure he seemed, as other men, to have become steeped in night, and was apparently as palpable to the touch as my own; yet, despite all this, as he shot forward in the lead, he bounded, not the slightest shadow was cast by his figure on the ice. I saw, and, thrilled from head to foot as I saw. At the entrance to the left-hand channel, my companion paused in his career, turned his head slowly, and beckoned to me to follow him. As though impelled by some fatal fascination from the moment I had determined on in my own mind, my feet, without any apparent effort of my own, turned off to the left, as if in obedience to my ghostly summons. Another instant and I should have been close upon him, when suddenly I heard my sister's voice, as clear and distinct as ever I heard it in my life, say close to my ear: "Follow him not, Jack!" I took a half-smothered cry, I swept swiftly round, and next moment I was racing at a headlong speed down the channel to the right.

I thought I had got rid of my ghostly pursuer. My eyes went stealthily round and could see no signs of him. For a couple of minutes more, as I emerged from the shadow of a bridge, he was by my side again. But every minute now my nerves were growing in steadiness, for the end of my journey was nigh. Presently we shot into the great basin of the canal, the roofs of Dale-end were seen over, and my heart gave utterance to a brief silent thanksgiving for my safe arrival. I sat down on the wharf steps to take off my skates. My dread companion vanished; I was alone.

As I hurried up the narrow tortuous streets of the little town I seemed to be conscious of a vague shadowy presence accompanying me; but whenever I turned my head there was nothing to be seen. This impalpable something followed me close up to the doctor's door, but was gone utterly the moment I laid my hand on the bell. The good doctor was quickly down in answer to my summons. "Dr. Webb,—your sister!" was all I could say; and then I fell insensible at his feet.

When I recovered my senses I found Mrs. Webb by my side, whom her husband had fetched out of her bed to attend to me. There, too, was the doctor himself, busily engaged for the journey.

"You had better stay here for the rest of the night, my dear Miss Salteon," said the doctor, "or else I may have two patients on my hands instead of one."

"I am quite well now; and I must get back home," I said, for I could all the while discern efforts of the kind-hearted couple persuade me to the contrary. Five minutes later, well wrapped up in some shawls and rugs, I was seated beside the doctor in his gig, on my way home. As we were going along I narrated to Dr. Webb the details of my solitary journey on the ice. He answered me, as I quite expected he would do, that my nervous system was out of order: that the delicate membranes of the brain were slightly disarranged; that my mind had been dwelling too much on Captain Standrid and the letter written by him; and then he added that mental health was affected in a certain way nothing was more simple than to explain such a spectral illusion for a creature of flesh and blood. Finally, it was Dr. Webb's opinion that what I wanted most was tone; and he would write a prescription for the tonic morning which would put all ghostly fancies to flight for the future.

"What you say may be quite correct," I replied; "nevertheless, I am as perfectly convinced that Captain Standrid is dead, and that he died within a few hours of the present time, as I am that I am sitting here and speaking with you. All I ask of you is, that you will put down the exact day and hour in your pocket-book, and leave the event to prove whether I am right or wrong."

"Agreed," he said. "There can be no harm in my doing that. You will not, I presume, say a word either to Mrs. Salteon or your sister respecting what you have just told me?"

"Certainly not. It will be time enough for them to know when the news shall come."

"The news never will come, my dear Miss Salteon, take my word for it."

We found my sister no worse than when I had left home. Dr. Webb staid with us till breakfast-time. Before taking his leave he showed me the memorandum which he had made in his pocket-book.

A fortnight later came the news of Captain Standrid's death. He had been out skating on Christmas-eve with a party of friends on one of the smaller of the Canadian lakes. After some time he had left the ordinary track of the rest of the party for a solitary run up the lake; and when about a mile and a half away from any assistance he had unwittingly skated into a large air-hole, which had been made by some Indians on the ice for fishing purposes. His body was recovered, but not till life was extinct. In the suddenness and terrible nature of his calamity every thing was forgiven and forgotten by his widow, except the fact that he had been her husband, and that once on a time she had loved him very devotedly. By one loving heart Captain Standrid was long and sincerely mourned.

After a time, and from other sources, some particulars of my sister's married life reached us. What I had heard was unhappy one, marked by gambling and dissipation on the one hand, and by patient endurance on the other, is all that need be said here. But from a child upwards a woman can not forgive, and Captain Standrid did that which would not allow of his wife accompanying him home. She received a letter on the first morning of Christmas-eve contained a request that she would try to persuade mamma—poor as the latter now was—to cut out five hundred pounds' worth of stock, and remit him the proceeds.

I have nothing further to add, except that I was afterward informed that at the time of my journey to Dr. Webb's the ice of the left-hand channel had been purposely weakened in order to undermine the bridges. Had I taken that channel, as summoned to do by my ghostly conductor, I should, in all human probability, have met a fate similar to that of Captain Standrid.

Dr. Webb is, however, still skeptical, and always will be, about what he is "a very remarkable case of spectral illusion."

REUNION OF THE NEW YORK CHASSEURS.

THE Chasseurs left New York city, under their Colonel, JAMES COCHRANE, on the 27th of August, 1861. They were mustered originally as members of the renowned Seventh Regiment. ALEXANDER SHALER was their Lieutenant-Colonel, and JOSEPH E. HAMBLIN their Major. The regiment was organized by the written authority of the Secretary of War, SIMON CAMERON, by whom its Colonel was concurrently (June 11, 1861) mustered into the service of the United States.

On the 28th of October, following a commission as Brigadier-General, the officers of the regiment took commissions from the State of New York, appointing them officers of a regiment thence numbered the Sixty-fifth New York Volunteers. Before this regiment Colonel COCHRANE made his memorable speech, in which he pledged himself to the slaves, and it was the one which introduced into the army the singing of "John Brown."

The Chasseurs were brigaded with Sumner and in Maryland under General M'CLELLAN, and having been incorporated with the Sixth Army Corps in the Summer of 1862, they were present at and participated in all its battles on the Rappahannock, in the Valley, Maryland, Pennsylvania, at Petersburg, and Five Forks, and closed the war with Assistant Adjutant-General of the Corps, Brevet Major-General M. T. M'MAHON, says that "on the 18th of April, 1865, the Sixty-fifth New York Volunteers (Chasseurs), the last regiment of the greatest army that has ever illumined history by its deeds, was duly discharged from the service of the nation. When mustered out but forty veterans of its original rank and file were left.

Its first field officers, Colonel COCHRANE and HAMBLIN, became successively Brigadier-Generals, and subsequently Major-Generals by brevet. Two of its Captains, EUGENE and THOMAS H. HIGGINBOTHAM, became Colonels of other regiments, and the first-named a Brigadier-General by brevet. The Lieutenant-Colonel, as we have said, was commanded by Colonel HENRY C. FISK.

The second reunion of the officers of the regiment was held on the 7th inst., at the house of the General COCHRANE. The occasion was honored with the presence of the various Generals under whom it served. Gen. EUGENE FRANKLIN, SMITH ("Baldy"), NEWTON, WRIGHT, ABERCROMBIE, and FRED GRAHAM were in attendance, with the ladies of the officers.

When the Chasseurs and their guests drew round the banquet-board General COCHRANE introduced the theme of the evening with the recitation of the following lines written by him for the occasion. Our artist has represented the scene at the words

"Comrades, a toast—all standing—"

when the whole company arose, and silently drank the toast:

"Our dead in Freedom's fight!"

Resuming their seats the General proceeded with the stanza. The following is a copy of the entire poem:

THE CHASSEURS.

We bore your colors, once our comrades! a thousand strong;
But battle and fever have thinned the martial throng.
The fiery breath of conflict
Consumed our stricken band,
When Death mowed down the Chasseurs,
And on Cold Harbor's strand.

O comrade! from the blood-red field
Bring here your scars to-night;
And, comrade, maimed and marrowless,
Bring to our feeling sight
Your battles won—the Wilderness,
Fair Oaks, and Malvern Hill;
And bear the word at Gettysburg
Proclaim ye your valor still.

When men shall in the future
Make up the roll of fame,
Unsummon'd your deeds remember,
Immortalized your name.

We left them there behind us—
We left them there to die;
But many a sigh and tearful eye
Mourn them we loved so well.

We gazed upon their battle-shrouds,
Upon each pallid face;
Then laid their grimed accouterments
Each in its proper place.
We pinned their badges on them,
Their swords we placed between;
Beneath each head its knapsack laid
With each his old canteen.

They're sleeping where we laid them
In Slocum and Wright,
Comrades, a toast—all standing—
Our dead in Freedom's fight!
We've poured the sad libation,
Drained deep each sable bowl;
With last behest we pray them rest
To their immortal souls.

On friendship's burning altar
Lay now your mutual hands;
Be kindness and forbearance
With love our mutual bands.
Our country claims us comrades,
Each to his duty true;
The boon conferred at Petersburg
Was PEACE, GOD-WILL TOWARD MEN.

HOME AND FOREIGN GOSSIP.

INTELLIGENCE continues to arrive from California of the prevalence of small-pox in various parts of the State, particularly in San Francisco. Great anxiety and distress prevail, especially because the disease assumes the most malignant type, and the symptoms are in many cases so frightful as almost to prevent any necessary attention to the sufferer. The city authorities have adopted every expedient to check the spread of the epidemic, and it was determined to convey all persons afflicted, whether rich or poor, to a hospital outside the city, and every man was carried out. But the name of "pest-house" alarmed the community, and the word "hospital" was substituted. A number of ladies, members of the Howard Association, have their services as nurses, and measures were adopted to place these facilities within a species of quarantine. The epidemic, however, still increased, and during the first week in January there reported in San Francisco were over five hundred, the population of the city being only one hundred and thirty thousand. The most remarkable circumstance in connection with the very startling feature of the epidemic, as described in the San Francisco papers, is that vaccination appears to afford no reliable protection. This is by some ascribed to the character of the vaccine matter employed; and the wish is expressed that the people of the Atlantic coast would forward vaccine matter which could be trusted on the Pacific. Others appear to think that the disease is of too malignant and formidable a character to be stayed by the effects of vaccination upon the system, although properly performed. All agree in recommending the use of soap as the accounts come of the cases. One case related is that of a man who was frightfully pitted by the small-pox, who, after the use of soap for a time, presented in the doctor's office when several persons were being vaccinated, and on the severing of a thing, the doctor vaccinated him. Strangely enough the operation took effect, and he was subsequently proof against all the local and constitutional symptoms of the disease. Another case is related of a child who was vaccinated with the same lancet that had been used in a case of small-pox, and carried to the same child. The disease assumed the confluent type and he died in a few days.

A Sacramento paper has the following incident, indicating in a most unusual manner how extensively the epidemic has enlisted the attention of the community. The writer says: "A little friend of ours found among her many collections of curiosities, a bone the position of some of Mund, and it taken out every pleasant morning for a walk. In her walk she met with a piece of orange meriua pinned on a stick by the nursery maid, I proceed to the children, who I was quickly notified to leave by little Charley, who seemed to be acting in the capacity of doctor, 'for Maud was todays small-pox girl how she would get, and the yellow flag was hung out!' Dear only knows how much nursing Maud had to undergo, and how many medicines I heard some painful discords and failures in an attempt at singing the little nursery hymn of 'Sister, thou wast mild and lovely,' after which I beheld a little procession, in which Charley carried the dog, and Floy the cat, closing the procession, and as they slowly round up the hill into the garden, I understood from the mournful tone of voice that it was a matter of grief and distress, that it was a funeral going on, Maud having died from which I arrived at the little graveyard under the geranium-bush just in time to rescue the lovely wax doll from being buried. 'She's saved by a hair,' said Floy, 'and we would 'a buried her too!'"

A very bold and startling robbery was committed lately at the National Park Bank. At about half past eight o'clock in the morning a man entered the bank; placed upon the counter a check of the office, and then suddenly but deliberately smashed the large plate-glass window in the money department with a huge octagon-shaped plate of iron fully ten inches in diameter and a foot in length. The man then coolly found no difficulty in reaching the piles of bank-notes that lay in the open safe, and thus obtained a booty amounting $8636 in National Bank bills of various denominations, with which he darted from the building, the large iron bar still in his hand, astounding all in the bank. He was pursued, arrested, and sent to prison. Strange to say, his counsel pleaded that he was not, in the deed, he insisted that he was innocent, and desired opportunity to prove himself so. Perhaps he might plead insanity! If so, query, would the jury acquit him?

It is announced that several oratories will soon be given in this city, with Madame Parepa-Rosa as soprano. This is a step in the right direction. Every quantity of nitro-glycerine from this city. We have seen. It is now impossible for the city in boxes marked "gasoline." Unusual care being manifested in its transportation suspicion was aroused. The boxes were examined, and found to contain nitro-glycerine. If this very dangerous mixture had exploded while passing through the streets the result must have been terrible. The explosive power of nitro-glycerine is variously estimated at from five to thirteen times that of gunpowder. Suddenly heated to 360° Fahrenheit it explodes. The temperature of 70° Fahrenheit it is liable to spontaneous decomposition. The facts above mentioned having come to the public the President of the company from whom the nitro-glycerine was purchased stated that it was packed and transported according to law, that it was marked "Nitro-Glycerine—Dangerous," in large letters, but "in order to make sure of careful handling, it seems the purchaser marked on another end of the boxes 'Gasoline,' in pencil, that article being more dangerous than nitro-glycerine."

For some time past there has been on free exhibition at Sueddene's Art Gallery "The Yosemite Valley," a fine painting by Thomas Hill. The Yosemite Valley is a long, rocky chasm in California, shut in by stupendous walls of granite, over whose perpendicular precipices waterfalls tumble headlong. It is from six to seven miles in length, and half a mile to a mile in width, its trees, wild grasses and rocks resembling quite closely the banks of the Connecticut Valley. Hardly less than the natural scene is Mr. Hill. The Merced River, a clear blue stream, meanders through it; its banks are fringed with the fir, the oak, the willow, and the birch; and here and there, luxuriopened stand a broad, green, quiet meadows of rich grass, there are groves of trees of immense size and wonderful picturesqueness. In Sueddene's gallery there are also many other fine landscapes as well as numerous chromos. Lovers of the fine arts, even if they have no desire to purchase, may spend a leisure hour most pleasantly in examining this collection.

Not long ago a Russian peasant entered the office of a publisher at St. Petersburg, and asked him for employment. The publisher thought he wanted a place to do manual labor. To his great surprise, however, he learned that the peasant, on the contrary, desired employment as translator from the Italian, French, German, Spanish, and Italian. He said his name was Ivan Trunin, and he lived in the district of Jaroslavl, where he owned a farm of about a piece of ground. All the above-mentioned languages he had acquired there in retirement and diligence. An examination showed that he was able to translate the most difficult passages in a very pure and literary style. The publisher engaged him immediately to translate the English Bible into Russian. The most curious feature about this learned peasant is that he works all day in the field, and devotes only his leisure hours to the exercise of his literary employment.

The frequent loss of life in this city occasioned by the explosion of kerosene lamps resulted in a thorough investigation of this matter by the Board of Health. It was ascertained that a large proportion of the oil sold in this city was absolutely unsafe. At a recent meeting of the Board an ordinance was adopted regulating the manufacture of this article of use. The substance of this ordinance is, that no kerosene oil, or other liquid having similar properties, shall be kept or offered for sale as a burning fluid unless it can stand the following tests: 1. That it shall not take fire or burn at a temperature below 110° degrees of Fahrenheit; and 2. That it shall not evolve an explosive vapor below 100 degrees Fahrenheit. The Board of Health had thus restricted the sale of kerosene oil, supposing that it had the authority to do so, but Metropolitan Fire Department announced that by a State law or local ordinance, the right to test kerosene sold in the city, and to recover such as failed, was one of the law. The Board of Health has certainly done a great thing in putting up the high standard, as to a sense of duty, and it is to be hoped some decisive action on the subject will be taken hereafter.

The one hundred and tenth anniversary of the birthday of Robert Burns, the illustrious Scotch poet, was celebrated last night by a grand banquet at the Metropolitan Hotel. It was been customary heretofore to confine these annual dinners to gentlemen only, but on the occasion a number of ladies were invited, and their presence added to their pleasure. The question of ladies to public dinners will doubtless be thus approved by many, yet there can be no question but that their presence would be welcomed by some sunshine, and exert a wholesome, restraining influence upon those who are inclined to indulge in too much wine.

The Portland Press informs us that at one period the salmon were so numerous in a spring near the bank of Location Falls that after the fish had gone from the river their backs formed a bridge on which one might venture to walk. This is a fish story; but it is certain that now both salmon and trout have disappeared from the spring, and the river generally. The noble streams of Maine have been depopulated by neglect and improvidence, and must now be restocked with fish.

A shocking occurrence is reported from Belleville, Clermont. The family daughter of a farmer, named —, a lovely girl of eighteen—died and was buried. The day after the funeral, the grief-stricken parents visited the grave of their child, when, to their horror, they found evidences of its having been disinterred. To relieve their minds somewhat, they came to the conclusion that the clothes and ornaments had been stripped from the body and carried away. The matter was at once disarranged condition as to require to be redressed and interred. Upon again doing so, they found pockets at this gross indignity and outrage can not be described. They have caused the remains of their beloved child to be interred in a more secure manner, and their residence, where it is hoped they will be permitted to remain in peace.

A novel vessel—which is named Novelty, by-the-way —has lately been launched in Boston. This is an iron boat, designed to carry anchors and chain. As the hold she has seven circular tanks, secured on an iron framework, which can be filled with water, and are connected with one another in such a manner that they can be used as ballast or discharged at pleasure. Their combined capacity is 90,000 gallons. On the deck is a steam-pump of large capacity for ballasting, and also over each there is a hatchway, so that they can be examined around, above and below, at all times. The hull is divided into seventy-two feet by bulkheads, and it is estimated that in six hours her cargo can be pumped out. At the place where she will discharge in Boston there is a tank to receive her cargo.

In the Iowa Agricultural College two of the students are women.

Everybody who has seen the novelty lately announced as the "Fowler Adding Machine," says that "this instrument, small enough to be carried in one hand, will add up more than a thousand items on common note-book, and simple in its construction as a child's playthings, will put together sums of figures, in quantities ranging from the limits of simple addition to the most complicated combinations of the higher rules of arithmetic with as much ease and certainty as a boy will tell marbles." The inventor says that "all there is about it is that it is the easiest thing in the world to add up columns of figures, and that it will do it with perfect accuracy." We therefore suggest to the Board of Education that arithmetic may now be omitted from the course of study, as hereafter all sums can be footed up by machinery. "I would I were a boy again!" will then be the song of those who in former years groaned over the addition table. Seriously, however, the accuracy of this machine is said to be beyond a doubt, the rapidity of its action marvelous, and its simplicity remarkable; and if this is the case, to book-keepers, accountants, and business-men generally, it must prove of immense value.

THE RIVER-POLICE BOAT ON THE LOOK-OUT.—[SKETCHED BY P. FRANZENY.]

THE RIVER-POLICE BOAT.

ON illustration on this page represents a boat belonging to the Metropolitan River Police force, hidden behind a pier and on the look-out for suspicious crafts that, under the cover of night, move up and down the river for the accomplishment of illegal purposes. The River Police is a regular branch of the city force, organized under Captain HART. It has two sergeants and twenty-two officers, and has at its disposal a number of oarsmen and sailors, ten or twelve boats, and a steamer. The duties of this force are similar to those devolving upon other policemen—the protection of life and property, and the enforcement of sanitary regulations. It is a rough and toilsome service, and not unattended with peril; for this force is brought into contact with some of the most desperate characters which infest our city. The utmost vigilance is required, as every thing depends upon a sudden and unlooked for descent upon the river thieves, who must be caught before they can sink their booty. The boats are usually manned with two or three officers, two oarsmen, and a pilot or boatswain. The boat itself is stoutly built and guarded on both sides by rope fenders to subdue any noise occasioned by running against piers or vessels.

RÉUNION OF THE NEW YORK CHASSEURS, FEBRUARY 3, 1869.—[SEE PAGE 107.]

CAUGHT IN THE ACT.

BULL'S HEAD HORSE MARKET

THE Bull's Head Hotel was built about forty-two years ago, when the neighboring region consisted of open fields, with here and there a country villa or a farm-house. Lots on the Bowery at that time could be bought for $300 or $400 each. The old tavern at the corner of Twenty-third Street is almost the only relic of that time. In those days the drove-yards were here; now they are up town, and horse-dealers and stables monopolize the neighborhood. The trade in horses is always dull at this season of the year. The open winter, with very little sleighing, lessens the demand for the finest horses. The chief call just now is for railroad horses, which bring from $150 to $200 each, and for work horses at from $200 to $400. The weather has been favorable for opening streets, grading parks, etc., and there is a fair demand for strong, serviceable horses adapted to this sort of labor.

SCENE IN A VELOCIPEDE RIDING-SCHOOL, NEW YORK CITY.

The stock of horses in this country has been very much reduced since the war. The call for fine spirited and other driving horses has been such as to lead to the conversion of many splendid stallions into geldings, leaving a scarcity of good breeders.

THE WITCH.

I think he'd like to be a witch,
To sail upon the sea,
In a tub or sieve, in storm or shine,
Mid wild waves flashing free.

I'd catch the billows by the mane,
The bounding billows and strong,
Goad them, and curb them, or trample them down,
Or lall them with a song.

I'd churn the sea, I'd tether the winds,
As suited my fancy best,
Or call the thunder out of the sky,
When the clouds were all at rest.

I'd wreck great ships if they crossed my path,
With all the souls on board,
Wretched, but no wretched as I,
In the judgments of the Lord.

And then, may be, I'd choose out one
With his floating yellow hair,
And save him, for being like my love,
In the days when I was fair.

In the days when I was fair and young,
And innocent and true;
And then, perhaps, I'd give him a kiss,
And drown him in the blue.

In the blue, blue sea, too good to live
In a world so false and bad,
I think I'd like to be a witch,
To save me from going mad!

OLD LOVES.

THE love of a boy or girl is unique. It is never repeated in kind, though it may be even surpassed in degree; for the love of the mature heart is more powerful than that of the youthful; but its freshness, the ecstatic sense of certainty, the sudden belief in itself and its own immortality, in its unchangeableness and future, characteristic of the first young love, have no echo even in the strength and fidelity of the mature. Besides, it is so divinely blind; and its blindness remains, though the eyes may be coached to see every thing else. Though our early charmer was snub-nosed and red-headed, and fully half a dozen years our elder, yet our memory plays magic tricks with reality, and we think of her to this day, as we believed her at the time: beautiful, golden-haired, and sixteen. If we have never seen her since that fatal hour we console ourselves from her side in an agony of despair at the cruel fate which sent us to New Zealand or the West Indies, no shock of personal experience has shattered the sweet falsehood of our boyish dreams, and we should always be to us what she was; but if we have seen her after our eyes have been couched, we stand aghast, as at the discovery of some blunder in her upward state. That plain-featured, commonplace dowdy is no more the peerless Dulcinea of only ten years ago than she is her grandmother. Heavens! such she is two persons: the one, living in memory: the other in actuality; and of the two the remembrance is the more real.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

BOOSEY'S DOLLAR SERIES of Popular Operas for Piano-forte Solo, with Overture and whole of Music, splendidly bound in vermilion and gold, now ready. The cheapest and most extensive catalogue of Modern Music in the world. Mailed free on application. Any work mailed on receipt of price.
BOOSEY & CO., 644 Broadway, N. Y.

PAIN PAINT
will stop pain when Doctors fail. Wheeler's PAIN PAINT will do it; and if you have Catarrh, recollect that Wheeler's Catarrh Cure, pint bottles, $1, will eradicate the disgusting disease, root and branch. Sent post-paid, free of express charges, for $3, or one pint of Wheeler's PAIN PAINT and Catarrh Cure. Address Dr. WHEELER, 110 Chatham Square, New York. Small bottles sold at all drug-stores.

MAGIC PICTURES, Wonderful and Amusing. 25 cents a Package. Chibs, $2 90 Dozen Packages. W. C. DAVIS, 3 Astor Place, N. Y.

$245 A MONTH. TO AGENTS. New and useful articles. Address JOHN J. HOWARD & CO., Alfred, Me.

THOMAS R. AGNEW,
ESTABLISHED 1836.
260 Greenwich St., corner Murray, New York,
IS OFFERING CHEAP,
FOR CASH:
COFFEE—Green, Roasted, and Ground; all grades to suit the palate and the purse. The million, 10c., 20c., 25c., 30c., 35c., 40c.; Mocha, 50c.
TEAS.—Every body should know why who buy teas of us, as all who sell watches are not watchmakers. Mr. Agnew spent three years in China, and knows exactly what teas are, and does not deal in damaged goods of any kind; consequently every pound of tea sold is warranted as represented, or the money returned.
MOLASSES.—Mr. Agnew has in store 1,000 hhds. Orleans, an expert in the business, who ships him the choicest of the crop.
RICE.—Mr. Agnew has a house in South Carolina, who ship him the best head rice in market.
FLOUR is received daily from the mills. Genesee, Indiana, and St. Louis, best brands in market, from $7 to $16 per barrel.
GROCERIES.—Every thing desired in families, hotels, restaurants, boarding-houses, steamships and sailing vessels is sold by Mr. Agnew, who is a live man, working 16, 17, and 18 hours every day for the interior of a century. He is a steam-coach compared with the old fossilized grocers, who have been brought up in a soup-fat barrel, or as lackeys for others, and now begin to flap their wings when prey-headed. In a word, Agnew is as far ahead of the trade as Dexter is of the cart-horse when pounding mud in the sun for the people—quick as lightning and punctual as time.

WATERS'
NEW SCALE PIANOS,
With Iron Frame, Overstrung Bass and Agraffe Bridge.
Melodeons and Cabinet Organs.

The best manufactured; Warranted for Six Years.
Fifty Pianos, Melodeons, and Organs, of six first-class makers, at Reduced Prices for Cash, during this month. The interest, and value of money, is all purchased. Monthly Installments received. Second-hand instruments at great bargains. Warerooms, 481 Broadway, New York. HORACE WATERS.

THE TEETH'S SALVATION.

The interior bark of the Soap-Tree of Chili is added by botanical skill to the process rendering preservative qualities unshared by any other known substance. Its native properties are detersive, vitalizing, to mask clean. This matchless antiseptic is a main component of Sozodont, rendering the use of teeth known as SOZODONT, which has long since taken the lead of every other article of its class throughout the Western Hemisphere.

JOHNSON & MILLER,
REAL ESTATE AUCTIONEERS,
25 NASSAU ST., New York,
Sell New York, Brooklyn, Jersey City, and New Jersey Property, and issue every SATURDAY for free circulation, a City and Country
REAL ESTATE REGISTER.

PIANOS! PIANOS! PIANOS!
"THE PARLOR FAVORITE."

The immense demand for this popular instrument has induced us to make the improvements we have made, and we are consequently enabled to offer them at much lower rates than any other first-class instruments by other makers. Inquire of resident dealer, or send for our Illustrated Circular and Price List.
Address GEO. M. GUILD & CO.,
Piano-forte Manufacturers, Boston, Mass.

No excuse now for Pipers and Moyamites lying about loose all the year.
CONANT'S IMPROVED
PERIODICAL COVERS,
for HARPER'S WEEKLY or BAZAR, sent by mail for $1 25. They bind the numbers from the back.
Address R. CONANT, 39 Nassau St., N. Y.
"A good thing."—Harper's Weekly and New Monthly Magazine, Size 20 Cents. Sheet-Music Size, $1 00.

THE BEST.—The best paining thing ever invented. $10 will clear $100 a week. Sample by mail, post-paid, $12 capital only required. The AMERICAN POCKET PAINTING MACHINE. Sells by the dozen or single. One half the proceeds allowed to selling Agents. Superior Canvas regularly sent by the machine at a cost of one cent each. A single machine sent by mail on receipt of $12, or one to each subscriber will be furnished for $12. Agents wanted in every town. Address AMERICAN CIGAR MACHINE CO.,
39 COURT STREET, BOSTON, MASS.

25 CENTS.—Now is the time to subscribe to "MORE LEAVES," the best, the most popular and the cheapest monthly published. Each number contains matter of interest and importance to every body. 25 cents will pay for it from now to the end of 1869. Specimen copies sent to any address free of postage. Address O. A. ROORBACH, 102 NASSAU ST., N. Y.

$1800 PER YEAR.—FOR EMPLOYMENT AND A WATCH FREE, address
J. B. MASSEY & CO., ST. LOUIS, MO.

CHARLES READE'S NOVELS.
POPULAR EDITION
CHEAP, PORTABLE, AND LEGIBLE.
PUBLISHED BY
HARPER & BROTHERS, New York.
HARPER & BROTHERS
Have just Ready:
HARD CASH.
A MATTER-OF-FACT ROMANCE.
By CHARLES READE.
With Illustrations. 8vo, Paper.
PRICE THIRTY-FIVE CENTS!
To be followed immediately by
SIMILARLY CHEAP EDITIONS
of the other popular novels of
CHARLES READE.
"HARD CASH" sent by mail, postage prepaid, to any part of the United States, on receipt of 35 cents.
HARPER & BROTHERS, New York.

EPILEPSY CAN BE CURED.—Those having fits, and their friends afflicted are earnestly solicited to send for a Circular Letter of References and Testimonials, which will convince the most skeptical of the curability of the disease. Address VAN BUREN LOCKWOOD, M.D., 346 Grand Street, N. Y. City.

EARLY ROSE POTATO, American and Foreign Spring Wheats, Oats, Barley, Corn, Clover Seeds, Grass Seed, Hops, Fowls, Best Fodder Cutter. Send for the EXPERIMENTAL FARMER. Only 20 cents. Address GEO. A. DEITZ, Chambersburg, Pa.

BANKRUPT STOCK of CLOTHING, &c., to be closed out at once, 8000 pieces assorted for $1000; 2500 pieces for $501 125 pieces for $100. Circular sent free. Address LOCK BOX 451, Providence, R. I.

EVERY Agent receives a $20 60 Watch FREE. 1000 more agents wanted, male and female. Profits immense. Address VAN WICKLE & CO., 665 Fulton, N.Y.

ARCHITECTURAL DEPARTMENT OF THE
Novelty Iron Works,
Nos. 77 and 83 Liberty Street,
Cor. Broadway, New York.
Plain and Ornamental Iron Work of all kinds for Buildings.

IMPROVED ALUMINIUM BRONZE HUNTING-CASED WATCHES.
$500.

I will cheerfully give the above amount to any one who can surpass my imitation of Gold Watches. Description of metal and goods sent free on demand.
Prices, from $16 to $22.
They are sent C. O. D. with charges. Address JULES B. HUGUENIN VUILLEMIN, No. 44 Nassau Street, N. Y.
Call and examine for yourselves.

TAKE NOTICE.
On account of the immense business and depreciation of merchandise, we now offer better inducements to agents and Patentees than ever. Any one sending $1 for 60 printed notices will receive one of the following articles: Ladies' Portable Wood Bleacher, Long Shawl, 18 yards Hemp Carpeting, &c. Send for Jan. Trade Circular, unbiased report. Good Agents are wanted in every County in the United States. Address
JAMES LABARE, 61 Fulton St., Baltimore, Md.

A MUSICAL BOX for ONE DOLLAR.
The French Great Sensation; novelty, cheapness, durability; is highly-polished case, metallic tongues, brilliant tone, simple construction are the most recent improvements, new keyless pattern. Sent to any address, postage paid, on receipt of One Dollar bill. Guaranteed of the best workmanship and performance. No. 1 plays 8 airs, $1; No. 2, 16 airs, $2; No. 3, 24 airs, $3. All sent free by mail on receipt of the amounts. ADOLPH GALL & PAUL, 65 & 67 New Chambers Street, N.Y. All parties who can conveniently send Post-Office Orders are requested to do so.

STAMMERING cured by BATES' APPLIANCES. For descriptive pamphlet, address STAMMER & CO., Box 5076, N. Y.

WANTED! WANTED!
AGENTS of either sex, in every town and village, for the SUNSHINE DIAL. Sells at sight. Liberal salary. The smallest article sold can be exchanged for Dial. Send for Circular. Reference, Harper & Bros. Our choice of 200 articles upon exchange list. Commissions to Agents and Buyers free. Send for Circular.
S. C. THOMPSON & CO.,
116 Federal Street, Boston, Mass.

30,000 ACRES
WESTERN and SOUTHERN LANDS and IMPROVED FARMS. 40c. to $100 per acre. E. G. SHEPPARD, P.O. Box 4881, 2 Bowling Green, New York.

EVERY MAN HIS OWN PRINTER.
With one of our presses, and the material accompanying it, every man can do his own printing, thus saving much time and expense. Circulars containing full information about these Presses, prices, recommendations, &c., sent on application. Specimens-books of types, cuts, borders, &c., &c., 10 cents.
DAVID WATSON & CO.,
99 Courtlandt Street, New York.

Alaska Diamonds.
The new ALASKA DIAMOND, or carbonized quartz, equal to brilliancy to the real diamond, mounted at our own factory, in artistic diamond settings, guaranteed fine gold, and sold by us at about 1-20th the cost of real diamonds, to which they are equal in every respect except intrinsic value.

Look at our Price-List.
Ladies' Solitaire Engagement Rings, $3 and $10; Solitaire Ear-Drops, $5, $6, $10.
Cluster Finger Rings, $10; Cluster Ear-Drops, $6, $12, $14.
Gents' Rings, $15, $20, and $25 each; Cross Sets, $20 and $30.
Gents' Solitaire Pins, $3, $5, $8, $10, $15, $20: Rings, $8 and $10. Gents' Cluster Rings, $8, $10, and $12. Cluster Pins, $10 and $11; with Chain, $14; Cross Pins, $6, $10, and $15; Studs, per set, $3, $5, $10.
We do our business direct from our factory, located in a city which has a world-wide reputation as a fine jewelry.
Orders less than $5 should be accompanied with P. O. Order or Registered Letter: and the goods sent free. Exceeding that amount by express, C. O. D., customers paying all express charges. A Large Illustrated Price List sent FREE. Address
STANLEY, WHIPPLE & CO., Providence, R. I.

THE PIANIST'S ALBUM;
A new and brilliant collection of Piano Pieces, suited to every capacity, and within reach of every pianist who would improve, and enjoy the THE PEARL AND DIAMOND OF THE BAZAR. A very large number of the Gems contained in this book have not before been in print, a fact that will render it the leading one of its class. Price, $2 50 in cloth, $3 in full gilt. $2 50 in boards. Sold by all Music Dealers, and mailed, postpaid, A liberal discount to Teachers. GILBERT & COMPANY, C. H. Publishers, 277 Washington Street, Boston; C. H. DITSON & CO., 711 Broadway, New York.

100 PHOTOGRAPHS OF BEAUTIFUL WOMEN sent, postpaid, for 25 cents. Address for Circulars. Address C. SEYMOUR, Holland, New York.

$15 WETHERSFIELD CLOCKS GUARANTEED for 1 Year. Useful Sewing Machine Sent for $15. Valuable Samples Sent for 25 cents. Agents Wanted. Catalogue Free. Address C. SEYMOUR, Holland, New York.

$25 CENT ALBUM.—New patent, bound in Cloth, gilt, holds 32 full-size cards, for only 25 cts. Also, the New Photographic Album, holds 20 With 20 Photographs for only $1 25. Satisfaction Guaranteed. Sent by mail. Agents Albums for 25. Send 25 cts. for sample to HUNTER & CO., Publishers, Hinsdale, N. H.

HUNTER'S GUIDE.—Worth $10 to any boy or girl, How to hunt and trap ALL animals: to make traps and baits; fun alone worth the price. Sold in two months. 64 pages. Costs 25 cts. only, postpaid by HUNTER & CO., Publishers,
Hinsdale, N. H.

HARPER & BROTHERS, New York,
Have just Published:

I.
Charles Reade.
HARD CASH. A Matter-of-Fact Romance. By CHARLES READE, Author of "Love me Little, Love me Long," "It is Never Too Late to Mend," &c. With Illustrations. New Edition. 8vo, Paper, 36 cents.

II.
Sir Samuel W. Baker.
CAST UP BY THE SEA: or, The Adventures of Ned Grey. By Sir SAMUEL W. BAKER, M.A., F.R.G.S., Author of "The Rifle and the Hound in Ceylon," &c. With Illustrations. New Edition. 8vo, Paper, 36 cents.

III.
Lyman Abbott.
JESUS OF NAZARETH: his Life and Teachings; Founded on the Gospels: for Sunday and Home Reference to the Manners, Customs, Religious Belief, and Social Institutions of the Times. By LYMAN ABBOTT. With Designs by Dore, De Lacroix, Gerlach, and others. Complete, Cloth, Beveled Edges, $3 50.

IV.
Rev. John L. Nevius.
CHINA AND THE CHINESE: a General Description of the Country and its Inhabitants: its Civilization and Form of Government; its Religious and Social Institutions; its Intercourse with other Nations; and its Present Condition and Prospects. By the Rev. JOHN L. NEVIUS, D.D., for Nine Years a Resident in China. With a Map and Illustrations. 12mo, Cloth, $1 75.

V.
The Author of "Rachel's Secret."
NATURE'S NOBLEMAN. A Novel. By the Author of "Rachel's Secret." 8vo, Paper, 50 cents.

VI.
Henry Ward Beecher.
SERMONS BY HENRY WARD BEECHER, Plymouth Church, Brooklyn. Selected from Published and Unpublished Discourses, and Revised by the Author. In Two Volumes, 8vo. With Steel Portrait by Halpin. Cloth, $5 00.

VII.
The Author of "John Halifax."
THE WOMAN'S KINGDOM. A Love Story. By the Author of "John Halifax," "A Noble Life," "Two Marriages," "Fairy Book," &c. Illustrations. 8vo, Paper, $1 00; Cloth, $1 50.

VIII.
C. W. Dilke.
GREATER BRITAIN: a Record of Travel in English-speaking Countries during 1866 and 1867. By CHARLES WENTWORTH DILKE. With Maps and Illustrations. 12mo, Cloth, $4 00.

IX.
Shirley Brooks.
THE GORDIAN KNOT. A Novel. By SHIRLEY BROOKS. 8vo, Paper, 50 cents.

X.
Rev. Dr. Bellows.
THE OLD WORLD IN ITS NEW FACE: Impressions of Europe in 1867-1868. By HENRY W. BELLOWS, D.D. 2 vols., 12mo, Cloth, $3 50. Vol. II. just ready.

XI.
Charles Lever.
THE BRAMLEIGHS OF BISHOP'S FOLLY. A Novel. By CHARLES LEVER. 8vo, Paper, 50 cents.

☞ HARPER & BROTHERS will send any of the above works by mail, postage prepaid, to any part of the United States, on receipt of the price.

ESTABLISHED 1861.

THE

GREAT AMERICAN

TEA COMPANY

RECEIVE THEIR TEAS BY THE CARGO FROM THE BEST TEA DISTRICTS OF

CHINA AND JAPAN,

and sell them in quantities to suit customers

AT CARGO PRICES.

The Company have selected the following kinds from their stock, which they recommend to meet the wants of clubs. They are sold at cargo prices, the same as if a cargo were sell them in New York, as the list of prices will show.

PRICE LIST OF TEAS.

OOLONG (black), 70c., 80c., 90c.; best, $1 per lb.
HIKSON (green and black), 70c., 80c., 90c.; best, $1 per lb.
ENGLISH BREAKFAST (black), 80c., 90c., $1, $1 10; best, $1 25 per lb.
IMPERIAL (green), 80c., 90c., $1, $1 10; best, $1 25 per lb.
YOUNG HYSON (green), 80c., 90c., $1, $1 10; best, $1 25 per lb.
GUNPOWDER (green), $1, $1 10; best, $1 25 per lb.
OOLONG JAPAN, 80c., $1, $1 10; best, $1 25 per lb.
GUNPOWDER (green), $1 25; best, $1 50 per lb.

COFFEES ROASTED AND GROUND DAILY.

Ground Coffee, 70 cents, 75 cents, 80 cents, 85 cents; best, 90 cents per pound.

Hotels, saloons, boarding-house keepers, and Families who use large quantities of Coffee, can economize in that article by using our which we sell at less than one price of the cents per pound, and warrant to give perfect satisfaction.

FRENCH BREAKFAST AND DINNER COFFEE,

ROASTED (unground), 30c., 35c.; best, 40c. per lb.
GREEN (unroasted), 30c., 35c., 40c.; best, 50c. per lb.

CLUB ORDER.

PHILADELPHIA, MONDAY, August 24, 1868.

To the GREAT AMERICAN TEA COMPANY,

31 and 33 Vesey Street, New York:

GENTS: The enclosed form will not be necessary. They say I have learned the road, and that I have got to send another order for them. So here you have it in the shape of my seventh order since the 6th of May last, making in all one hundred and forty pounds and sixty-four cents I have sent you since that date.

Hoping this will be as good as former orders, I remain

Yours, &c., JOHN W. HAWKINS.

10 lbs. Uncolored Japan, Mrs. Kemptop..... at $1 25 ..... $ 12 50
6 " Imperial..... " " 1 25 .. 7 25
6 " Young Hyson..... A. L. Cummings, at 1 25 .. 7 25
3 " Imperial..... Elias Stephens, at 1 25 .. 3 75
2 " Oolong..... J. L. Chapman, at 1 25 .. 2 50
2 " Gunpowder..... O. A. Watson, at 1 50 .. 3 00
1 " Imperial..... Mrs. Taylor..... at 1 25 .. 1 25
4 " Young Hyson..... J. Hopkinson..... at 1 25 .. 5 00
4 " Coffee..... " ..... at 50 .. 2 00
6 " Gunpowder..... John Stephens, at 1 50 .. 9 00
4 " Young Hyson..... Wm. H. Dorsh, at 1 25 .. 5 00
1 " do. do. ..... H. Malone..... at 1 25 .. 1 25
1 " do. do. ..... S. Newcomb..... at 1 25 .. 1 25
4 " do. do. ..... Noah Campbell, at 1 25 .. 5 00
2 " Gunpowder..... Joseph Miller..... at 1 50 .. 3 00
4 " do. ..... A. Gale..... at 1 50 .. 6 00
2 " Imperial..... Mrs. Bird..... at 1 25 .. 2 50
$ 74 25

Parties sending Club or other orders for less than Thirty Dollars had better send a Post-office Draft or Money with their orders, to save the expense of collections by express; but larger orders we will forward by express, to "collect on delivery."

Hereafter we will send a complimentary package to the party getting up the Club. Our profits are small, but we will be as liberal as we can afford. We send no complimentary packages for clubs of less than Thirty Dollars.

Parties getting their Teas from us may confidently rely upon getting them pure and fresh as they come direct from the Custom-House stores to our warehouses.

We warrant all the goods we sell to give entire satisfaction. If they are not satisfactory they can be returned at our expense within 30 days, and we will the money refunded.

N.B.—Inhabitants of villages and towns where a large number reside, by clubbing together, can reduce the cost of their Teas and Coffees about one third besides the large cash saved by sending directly to

"THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA COMPANY."

CAUTION.—As some concerns, in the city and others, are imitating our name and style of advertising and doing business, it is important that our friends should be very careful to write our address in full, and also to put the name of our Post-office Box, as it appears in this advertisement. This will prevent their orders going into the hands of parties imitating us.

POST-OFFICE Orders and Drafts make payable to the Order of

"THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA COMPANY."

Direct Letters and Orders as below (no more, no less):

GREAT AMERICAN TEA COMPANY
Nos. 31 and 33 Vesey Street,
Post-Office Box 5643, New York City.

DUNHAM & SONS,
MANUFACTURERS OF
PIANO-FORTES.
WAREROOMS,
No. 831 Broadway, New York.
SEND FOR CIRCULAR.

VELOCIPEDE WHEELS,
MANUFACTURED BY
S. N. PECKHAM & CO.,
Doyleston, Ohio.

These also make a spirine article of Spokes and Hubs for light Carriage and Buggy Wheels. Send for Price-List.

MAGIC, MYSTERY, & MIRTH.
Sent free on receipt of a stamp, by
W. HEPBURNE, 102 Nassau St., New York.

WORDS OF WISDOM for YOUNG MEN on the Ruling Passion in Youth and Early Manhood, with Self-help for the erring and unfortunate. Sent in sealed letter envelopes, free of charge.
Address PHILANTHOS, Box P, Philadelphia.

GRAY'S Patent BRICK MACHINE
Send for circular to WASHBURN IRON WORKS, Newburgh, N.Y., Sole Manufacturers for the United States.

The Celebrated Imitation Gold
$15. HUNTING WATCHES. $20.
THE COLLINS OROIDE WATCH FACTORY.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

Our superior Oroide Watches having recently been instituted, and worthless Watches sold in New York, Boston, Chicago, and other cities, represented as our Watches, we hereby caution the public against them, and give notice that we are in no way responsible for their deception, and only those purchasing direct from us can secure a genuine Watch of our manufacture. We have recently greatly Improved our Oroide in appearance and durability, and to protect the public from imposition hereafter, we have named it the

"COLLINS METAL,"

CASES of the COLLINS METAL (IMPROVED OROIDE).

$39 NASSAU ST.

and we give notice that any one making use of this name will be prosecuted to the extent of the law.

This metal has all the brilliancy and durability of gold; can not be distinguished from it by the best judges; retains its color till worn out, and is equal to gold excepting in intrinsic value. All our Gentlemen's Watches are Full-Jeweled Patent Levers; those for Ladies an improved Escapement, better than a Lever for a small size, style of finish, general appearance, and time-keeping qualities. The cases are equal in neatness, fine finish, and are fully equal to a solid gold watch costing $100. Those for $20 are of extra QUALITY, with heavy Hunting-case, and for time, to a Gold one costing $100. Those for $20 are of extra QUALITY, with heavy Hunting-case, and for time, to a Gold one costing $100. Those for $30 are of extra QUALITY, with heavy Hunting-case, and for time, to a Gold one costing $200. Those for $30 are of extra QUALITY, with heavy Hunting-case, and for time, to a Gold one costing $200. Chains of every style, from $2 to $8.

JEWELRY.—We are manufacturing all kinds of Jewelry of the Collins Metal—Pins, Earrings, Sleeve-Buttons, Lockets, Studs, Finger-Rings, Bracelets, Pencils, Charms, Gent's and Misses' Vest and Massive Chain, &c., &c., of the COLLINS METAL, which we sell very cheap.

TO CLUBS:—Where Six Watches are ordered at one time, we will send one extra Watch free of charge.

We positively employ no agents (who would require a commission), as we can not possibly manufacture the watches for less than our prices. Our Watches are sold on their merits. Our reputation is the benefit of our lowest prices. In New York or elsewhere representing themselves as our agents are swindlers. The genuine Collins Watches can only be had at our office in New York City. Customers are requested not to send money in Registered Letters, but send goods to any part of the United States by express, when taken from the express office. Customers must pay all express charges. In ordering, plainly the name, town, county, and state. Customers in the city will remember that our only Office is

Nos. 37 and 39 Nassau Street, Opposite the Post-Office (Up Stairs), New York.

C. E. COLLINS & CO.

TILTON'S STATIONERY.

Initial Stamping done without extra Charge.

OUR BOXES: The Best Paper, Envelopes, and with assorted sizes of paper, with envelopes to match. The PARISIAN BOX, French paper, with different patterns and sizes, with envelopes to match.

Price, $1 and $2.00.

Stamped with any initial desired, and

SENT BY MAIL,

postpaid, on receipt of price. Address orders to

TILTON & COMPANY,
No. 160 Washington St., Boston.

AGENTS WANTED in every city, town, and county in the United States, to sell our new and popular Engraving, THE FRIENDS OF THE UNION. THE STATES, elegantly engraved and handsomely printed in colors, suitable for framing, and every loyal person will want a copy. Exclusive territory, or three for $1. Address M. A. JAGGERS, Calhoun, Ill.

Holloway's Ointment and Pills.—The first cures old sores after every remedy has failed; the second instills more strength and richness into the blood than a hundred times its own weight in gold.

WANTED — AGENTS — $75 to $200 per month, everywhere, male and female, to introduce the celebrated and only genuine NEW FAMILY SEWING MACHINE. This Machine will stitch, hem, fell, tuck, quilt, cord, bind, braid, and embroider in a most superior manner. It will run by any child. Price only $15. Fully warranted for five years. We will pay $1000 for any machine that will sew a stronger, more beautiful, or more elastic seam than ours. It makes the "Elastic Lock Stitch," alike on both sides, and can not be ravelled. We want the right of one county without exception. We pay Agents from $75 to $200 per month and expenses, or allow a large commission, which rules that amount can be made. Address, SECOMB & CO., Pittsburgh, Pa.; BOSTON, Mass.; or ST. LOUIS, Mo.

CAUTION.—Do not be imposed upon by other parties palming off worthless machines, by advertising some name or word like ours. Ours is the only genuine and really practical cheap machine manufactured.

WANTED — AGENTS — To Sell the Only Perfect Family Knitter.

Price $25. The simplest, cheapest and best Knitting Machine ever invented. Knits the entire stocking, leaving only the fashioning to Agents. Address, AMERICAN KNITTING MACHINE CO., Boston, Mass.

$1000 PER YEAR, guaranteed, and steady employment. We want a reliable agent in every county to sell our Patent White Wire Clothes Lines (Patented). Address AMERICAN WIRE CO., 27 William St., N. Y., or 16 Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill.

DEAFNESS, CATARRH, SCROFULA.—A Lady who has suffered for years from DEAFNESS, CATARRH, and SCROFULA, was cured by a simple remedy. Will send a description of it on application, for her to send the receipt free of charge to any one similarly afflicted. Address Mrs. M. C. L., Hoboken, N. J.

$10 A DAY FOR ALL.—Agents wanted. Address A. J. FULLAM, Springfield, Vt.

THE MODEL PARLOR MAGAZINE OF AMERICA.

DEMOREST'S ILLUSTRATED MONTHLY. Combining Art, Literature, and Fashion, and presenting, in the Extent of its Entertaining, Useful, and the Beautiful, by the best authors. To include the Stories, Poems, Music, Fashions, with other useful and entertaining novelties, and the only one of the kind containing Paper Dress Patterns. Fully illustrated, and got up in the most elegant manner. Only $3 a year. Yearly, $3 00, with a choice of numerous and valuable premiums for each subscriber. Specimen Number Clubs, and Premium Club Order Cooler, with Circulars, mailed free on receipt of 15 cts. 838 Broadway, N. Y.

NEW BOOK.—200 ENGRAVINGS,

The Farmer's and Mechanic's Manual. Edited by Gen. E. W. Gantt. Entitled "Practical Treatises" or "Elements of Agriculture," &c. A book of great value for working men. Price, $1 50. Sent by mail, post-paid, $2 00. Send for 16 page Circular.

R. R. TREAT, Publisher, 654 Broadway, N.Y.

50,000 SOLD.—THE MAGNETIC POCKET TIME-KEEPER AND COMPASS, in a handsome case, with a case crystal, white enamel dial, steel and metal work, ordinary watch size, warranted to keep correct time, and to last well in order two years. Satisfaction guaranteed. Sent postpaid for $1; three for $2. Address, enclosing stamp, C. FREY & CO., 162 Nassau St., New York.

PATENT OFFICE

Inventors who wish to take out Letters Patent are advised to consult with

MUNN & CO.,
37 PARK ROW, N.Y.

PROPRIETORS OF THE

SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN

who have prosecuted claims before the Patent Office for over 7 years.

THEIR AMERICAN AND EUROPEAN PATENT AGENCY is the most extensive in the world. Charges less than any other reliable agency. A pamphlet containing full information, sent free, on application.

The Scientific American.

A handsome Bound Volume, containing 150 Mechanical engravings, and the United States Census by Counties, Cities, and Localities of Mechanics, mailed on receipt of 25 cents. The SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN is the best and cheapest Weekly Illustrated Newspaper, devoted to Science, Art, &c. Mechanics, published by MUNN & CO., 37 Park Row, New York. Specimens gratis. Address

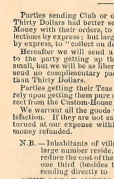
$25 KNITTING MACHINE.

WANTED—Buyers and Sellers for the BICKFORD KNITTING MACHINE. The latest and most reliable invention for the household ever made. It knits and stitches a mitten, runs back and forward, and sets up the work, and finishes perfectly ready for use. Sold by all at their homes. Our new Book of Instructions free to agents. Circulars free. RICHARD KITTING MACHINE CO., 82 Bromfield St., Boston, Mass.

GOLD WATCH CO.,
Geneva, Switzerland,

Manufacture, under strictly scientific principles, style, finish, durability, and cost, the surest safeguard to a fashionable public, the most complete description of Gold Watches. They are manufactured with Hunting Cases, Patent Levers, Chronometer Balance Escapements, $10 and $15; Patent Chronometer Balance Escapements, $20; Patent Levers, $20; Chronometer Balance Escapements, $30; Full-Jeweled Watches, $25; Chronometer Balance Escapements, $40; Full-Jeweled Patent Levers, $25; Chronometer Balance Escapements, $50. Each Watch is regulated and tested in various positions and temperatures—the most exacting of any combination watch factory in the world. Each Watch is accompanied by a Certificate of Warranty.

JOHN FOGGAN, Pres't Oroide Gold Watch Co. Only Office in the United States, No. 78 Nassau St., N.Y. Steel Shirt Collars (Enameled White) mailed on receipt of $1 00. Direct as above.



GENUINE OROIDE GOLD WATCH CO.,
Geneva, Switzerland,

thoroughly demonstrated the scientific durability, accuracy, and utility of our celebrated watches, and are now offering them invaluable as reliable time-keepers. Each Watch warranted by special certificate from the Oroide Gold Watch Co. to be perfect time-keepers, and to retain their color equal to gold. Magnificent Oroide Gold Chains, $6, $8, $7, and $10. Clubs for Six Watches will receive an extra Watch free. Express Co's will exhibit the Watch, &c., when requested, on receipt of express charges both ways. Expressed every where, to be paid for on delivery, except orders from California, Far Western Territories, and Texas, which must be accompanied by Post-Office Order or Draft. Information of the most reliable character, upon which for our specialties have induced unprincipled persons to counterfeit our inimitable Watch with worthless metal watches that forsake us on closing the case. Our Watches are sold only by ourselves.

A. M. BLAKE'S PATENT CHAIR SPRINGS.

Ease and Comfort Combined

AT THE USE OF

BLAKE'S PATENT

CHAIR SPRINGS!

PRICE ONLY ONE DOLLAR.

They make a Spring, Oscillating, or Rocking Chair out of a common chair, and that most indomitable nuisance, Steam, not entirely dispensed with.

These Springs fit any Chair, and can be placed in position for use by a child, as simple are they in their construction; they are made of the best steel, from the well-known KALAMAZOO MANUFACTURING CO., St John Street, N. Y., and possess the most delicate elasticity. They require no finish to the Chair, and are the delight of the household. They are not the best take any extra room, and can be used every day in the year, they are unanimous in their praise, for they make the EASIEST CHAIR EVER INVENTED!

The Ladies, one and all, pronounce them unequaled as a SEWING CHAIR. They make somebody the pleasantest Family Chair in the world. They are indispensable where comfort is considered. Blake's Dollar Chair Springs are invaluable for Families, Offices, Hotels, Court-Rooms, Cars, and Steamers.

(PATENTED BY A. M. BLAKE, APRIL 28TH, 1868.)

They will last a lifetime.
They are easily adjusted to any Chair.
They can not get out of order.
Rockers are entirely dispensed with.
They take up but little room.
They are sure to please in general use, and people will discard all other Rocking Chairs.
For economy and comfort, is the most valuable invention of the age.

500 DOLLARS REWARD

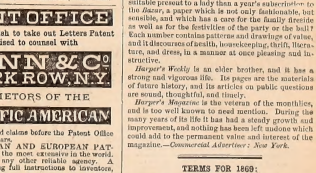
will be paid for information upon the conviction of any person or persons that shall in any manner infringe upon Blake's Patent Chair Springs, therefore all manufacturers of any factory or foundery where such articles may be made without the consent of said Company & Blake will give us such information that will lead to the conviction of such offenders and their conviction shall receive the above reward.—FIVE HUNDRED DOLLARS. GOODWIN & BLAKE.

Agents wanted throughout the United States.
Liberal discounts to the trade.
For sale, Wholesale and Retail, at

613 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

All orders must be addressed to

GOODWIN & BLAKE, 613 Broadway, N. Y.



Harper's Periodicals.—As the year draws to a close the time comes when the publication of weekly and monthly journals are in order. Can there be a more suitable present to a lady than a year's subscription to the Bazar, a paper which is not only fashionable, but valuable, and which has a care for the family fireside as well as for the fashions of the party or the ball? Each number contains patterns and drawings of value, and it discusses with a delightful vivacity, thrift, literature, and dress, in a manner at once pleasing and instructive.

Harper's Weekly is an elder brother, and it has a strong and vigorous life. Its pages are the materials of future histories, and its articles on public questions are sound, thoughtful, and timely.

Harper's Magazine is the veteran of the monthlies, and is too well known to require more than to say the many years of its life it has had a steady growth and improvement, and although it has been left undone which could add to the permanent value and interest of the magazine.—Commercial Advertiser: New York.

TERMS FOR 1869:

HARPER'S MAGAZINE, One Year..... $4 00
HARPER'S WEEKLY, One Year..... 4 00
HARPER'S BAZAR, One Year..... 4 00

HARPER'S MAGAZINE, HARPER'S WEEKLY, and HARPER'S BAZAR, for one year, $10 00; or any two for $7 00.

Volumes of either of the MAGAZINE, WEEKLY, or BAZAR will be supplied gratis for very Club of Five Subscriptions at $20 00 each. Back Volumes, when not forming a set, will be sold at the Counter for $2 50 per volume, without extra cost.

The Postage required by the United States is for the MAGAZINE 24 cents a year, for the WEEKLY & BAZAR 20 cents a year each, which must be paid quarterly, or yearly, at the office where received. Subscriptions from the British Provinces must be accompanied with 24 cents additional for the MAGAZINE, or 20 cents for the WEEKLY or BAZAR, to prepay the United States postage.

Subscribers to the MAGAZINE, WEEKLY, or BAZAR will find on each wrapper the Number with which their subscription will expire. Renewals should be made when the term of subscription closes. It is not necessary to send for discontinuances.

The Volumes of the MAGAZINE commence with the Number for June and December of each year. Subscriptions may commence with any Number. When no time is specified, it will be understood that the subscriber wishes to begin with the first Number of the current Volume, and back Numbers will be sent accordingly.

The Volumes of the WEEKLY commence with the year. When no time is specified, it will be understood that the subscriber wishes to commence with the Number next after the receipt of his order.

Remittances by mail, in Post-Office Order or Draft payable to the order of HARPER & BROTHERS is preferable to Bank Notes, since remittances at risk of the publishers, if lost or stolen, it can be renewed without loss to the subscriber.

In ordering the MAGAZINE, the WEEKLY, or the BAZAR, the name and address should be clearly written. When the direction is to be changed, both the old and the new one must be given.

TERMS FOR ADVERTISING IN HARPER'S PERIODICALS.

Harper's Magazine—Whole Page, $300: Half Page, $150: Quarter Page, $76—each insertion; or, for a less space, $1 50 per Line, each insertion.

Harper's Weekly—Whole Page, $1 50 per Line; Outside Page, $2 00 per Line—each insertion.

Harper's Bazar—$1 00 per Line; Cuts and Display, $1 25 per Line—each insertion.

Address HARPER & BROTHERS, New York.

HOW OUR SERVANTS GET THEIR CHARACTERS.

DEALER IN CERTIFICATES. "Well, Young Woman, what kind of a Karacter do you want?"
GIRL. "Aisy, Amiable Dishpositon, Fund of Children, and Strictly Honest."
DEALER. "Then you'll hev to pay Fifty Cents more. I always charge extra for Honesty."

GORHAM MFG. CO.
Sterling Silver Ware,
AND
Fine Electro-Plated Ware,
of the following trade-marks:

Trade-Mark for Silver. GORHAM MFG. CO. Trade-Mark for Electro-Plate.

MANUFACTURED BY THE
GORHAM MANUFACTURING CO.,
PROVIDENCE, R. I.

Orders received from the Trade only, but these goods may be obtained from responsible dealers every where.

THE GORHAM WARE may be obtained of ADAMS, CHANDLER, & CO., No. 20 JOHN STREET, NEW YORK.

DR. DE JONGH'S
LIGHT-BROWN COD LIVER OIL

Is convincingly proved by the highest medical testimony, and by the practical test of successful experience for twenty years in all parts of the world, to be, beyond all question, the purest, the most efficacious, the most palatable, and, from its rapid curative effects, the most economical of all kinds.

CONSUMPTION & DISEASES OF THE CHEST.
DR. DE JONGH'S OIL is administered with extraordinary success in cases of consumption and diseases of the chest. No remedy so rapidly restores the exhausted strength, improves the nutritive functions, allays emaciation, checks the perspiration, quiets the cough and expectoration, or produces a more marked and favorable influence on the local malady.

DEBILITY OF ADULTS AND CHILDREN
DR. DE JONGH'S Oil possesses unequaled and peculiar nutritive and restorative properties; hence its marvelous efficacy in debility of adults and children. It revives the natural appetite; improves, reanimates, and revitalizes the functions of digestion and assimilation; and entirely restores health and strength to the most feeble and apparently constitutional.

TRADE MARK. DR. DE JONGH'S GENUINE OIL is shipped to the UNITED STATES in Imperial Half-Pint Bottles ONLY, sealed with a Patent Trade-Mark Capsule, color blue opaque, white top, stamped with a blue fish on a red shield, and the label, under the wrapper, on each bottle, bears THREE SIGNATURES, viz.: those of Dr. De Jongh (of Ansar, Harford & Co.) and of Edwards Greef & Co.

DR. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD LIVER OIL

SOLE CONSIGNEES,
ANSAR, HARFORD & CO., 77, Strand, London.

SOLE ACCREDITED AGENTS IN AMERICA,
EDWD GREEF & CO., 28, Vesey St., New York.

Sold by all Druggists, at $1.50 per Bottle.

☞ A Descriptive Pamphlet post free on application.

COMPARE PRICES.
THE MASON & HAMLIN ORGAN CO., whose Organs are acknowledged to be the best, have this season introduced very important improvements and new styles of Organs, and have materially reduced prices. Four-Octave Organs, $60 each. Five-Octave Double-Reed Organs, Five Stops, $125. Every one of the many kinds of parlor-case an Organ should at least obtain one of their new circulars (which will be sent free), and compare prices. Address the MASON & HAMLIN ORGAN CO., 596 Broadway, New York.

THE WILCOX SILENT SEWING MACHINES. Cheaper than all others. AGENTS WANTED. Manufactured by THE WILCOX SEWING MACHINE CO., Cleveland, O.

Guardian Mutual
LIFE INSURANCE CO.,
No. 102 Broadway, New York.
Assets - - $1,500,000.
All Approved Forms of Insurance Issued.
All Policies Non-forfeitable by their Terms.
Liberal Modes for the Payment of Premiums.
ANNUAL DIVIDENDS.
The Entire Profits of the Company Divided Equitably among the Insured.

DIRECTORS:
HON. JOHN A. DIX, WM. WILKENS,
JOHN J. CRANE, WM. T. HOOKER,
WM. M. VERMILYE, ISAS. G. ROCKWOOD,
HON. GEO. OPDYKE, MINOT C. MORGAN,
THOMAS RODNEY, BENJ. B. SHERMAN,
AARON ARNOLD, RICHARD B. BOWNE,
HON. JAMES HARPER, JULIUS H. PRATT,
WM. W. WRIGHT, CHAS. J. STARR,
WILLIAM ALLEN, GEO. W. CUTLER,
GEO. T. HOPE, JOHN H. SHERWOOD,
WALTON H. PECKHAM, EDWARD H. WRIGHT,
GEO. W. FARLEE, WM. L. COGSWELL,
E. V. HAUGHWOUT.

WALTON H. PECKHAM, President.
HENRY V. CAHAGAN, Secretary.
LUCIUS McADAM, Actuary.
W. E. VERMILYE, M.D., Med. Ex.

VELOCIPEDES.

WOOD BROTHERS,
596 Broadway, New York,
Manufacturers of the Pleasure Carriages, are now prepared to receive orders for the celebrated
PARISIAN VELOCIPEDES,
of their own manufacture, which for durability and beauty of finish are not equaled.

SENT FREE, Business Men, Mechanics, Farmers, Professional Men, and Housewives, send red stamp for book of valuable information, and our object in sending it.
C. D. HARPER & CO., CLEVELAND, O.

JUST PUBLISHED:
WOODWARD'S
NATIONAL ARCHITECT.
By GEO. E. WOODWARD, Architect.
A practical work, containing 1000 designs, plans, and details, for country, suburban, and village houses, all drawn to working scale.
Perspective Views, front and side elevations, sections, and full detail drawings, with specifications and estimates. Also, detail drawings to working scale, of Brackets, Cornices, French Roofs, Sectional and Framing Plans of French Roofs, Dormer Windows for French Roofs, Bay Windows, Inside Shutters, French Windows, Balconies, Verandas, Porches, Lattice-Work, Stairs, Newels, Balusters, Sliding Doors, Window-Casings, Gable Finish, Finials, Crestings, Canopies, Hoods, Observatories, Base, Architrave, Plaster Frieze, Cornice, Ceilings, Hard-Wood Mantels, and all that is easy to be had by a Builder, to design, specify, erect, and completely finish dwelling-houses in the latest and most approved style.
One large quarto volume, superbly bound.
PRICE TWELVE DOLLARS, prepaid to any address.
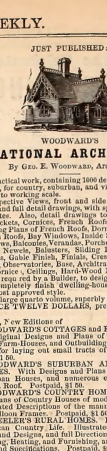
Also, 7 new Editions of WOODWARD'S COTTAGES and FARM-HOUSES. 168 Original Designs and Plans of low-priced Cottages, Farm-Houses, and Outbuildings, and numerous plans for laying out small tracts of ground. Postpaid, $1 50.
WOODWARD'S SUBURBAN AND COUNTRY HOUSES. With Designs and Plans of Country and Suburban Houses, and numerous examples of the French Roof. Postpaid, $1 50.
WOODWARD'S COUNTRY HOMES. 150 Designs and Plans of Cottage Houses of moderate cost, with Illustrated Descriptions of the manner of constructing Balloon Frames. Postpaid, $1 50.
WHEELER'S RURAL HOMES. "Houses suited to American Country and Village Life. With Original Plans and Designs, and full Directions for Designing, Building, Heating, and Furnishing, and Form of Contract and Specifications. Postpaid, $2 00.
WHEELER'S HOMES FOR THE PEOPLE. For the Suburb and Country. The Villa, the Mansion, and the Cottage. 100 Original Designs, with full descriptions and constructive and miscellaneous details. Postpaid, $2 00.
JACQUES' MANUAL OF THE HOUSE. How to Build Dwellings, Barns, Stables, and Outbuildings of all kinds. With a chapter on Churches and School-Houses. 170 Designs and Plans. Postpaid, $1 50.
RURAL CHURCH ARCHITECTURE. Comprising a series of Designs for Churches. Exemplified in Plans, Elevations, Sections, and Details. By UPJOHN, RENWICK, WHEELER, WELLS, AUSTIN, SCOTT, CLEVELAND, BAUDE, BAUDUY, REEVE, &c. One folio volume, printed in colors. 24 plates. Postpaid, $12 00.
Send stamp for catalogue of all book on Architecture. GEO. E. WOODWARD,
Publisher of Architectural Books,
No. 191 Broadway, New York.

DR. JNO. V. BURTON'S
TOBACCO ANTIDOTE.
WARRANTED TO REMOVE ALL WISH FOR TOBACCO. It counteracts the poisonous effects of tobacco upon the system, and enriches the blood, invigorates the nervous system, gives great nourishing and strengthening power, as an excellent tonic and appetizer, combats the tendency to disease, digest the heartiest food, makes sleep refreshing, and establishes robust health. Smokers and Chewers find it a positive cure. One fifty cents per box, post paid, with printed instructions for use. Sold by druggists, or sent by mail on receipt of price, 50 cents, $1, or $2 per box.
Dr. J. R. ABBOTT, Jersey City, N. J.
FOR SALE BY ALL DRUGGISTS.
☞ Caution.—Beware of humbug imitations.
[Trademark × Copyrighted.]



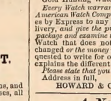
OR, THE
PATROON'S DAUGHTER.
A Story of Colonial Times.
By F. HAMILTON MYERS.
NOW READY IN THE
NEW YORK WEEKLY,
Price Six Cents.
☞ FOR SALE EVERYWHERE. ☜

POLLAK & SON, Manufr's of Meerschaum Goods. Stores: 403 Broadway, near Broome, & 17 John St., middle of block. Pipes and Holders cut to order and repaired. All goods warranted genuine. Send for wholesale or retail circular. Letter-Box 5346.

THIS IS IT! If you are selling Sewing Machines, send your name and P. O. address to us for particular information. Only those having a good Machine, and who need apply. Address A. E. CHASE & CO., Toledo, Ohio.

GENUINE WALTHAM WATCHES,
IN SOLID GOLD and SILVER CASES ONLY,
AT EXTREMELY LOW PRICES.
Silver Hunting Watches $18
Gold Hunting Watches, 18 carat Cases $80
Gold Hunting Watches, Ladies' Sizes $75
Every Watch warranted by special certificate from the American Watch Company. We will send these Watches by Express to any place, with bill to collect on delivery, and give the purchaser the privilege to open the package and examine the Watch before paying, and any Watch that does not give satisfaction may be exchanged or the money will be refunded. Every one is requested to write for our Descriptive Price-List, which explains the different kinds with prices of each.
Please state that you saw this in Harper's Weekly.
Address in full,
HOWARD & CO., No. 619 Broadway, N. Y.

A New Wonder.



[The above cut is about one-third real size.]
WEBB'S ADDING MACHINE.
The Only Practical One in the World.
It gives instantaneous additions where numbers are called off, or carries up ledger accounts two columns at a time. It has already come into popular use, and has the endorsement of our most eminent men, the press, and leading accountants. We reproduce some of the best-known names.
"It is a wonderful triumph of Inventive Genius."—SCHUYLER COLFAX.
"An ingenious and useful machine, and a valuable help to accountants."—HON. GEO. WM. BROWNE.
"One or two city accountants have tested the 'Adder' under my direction and inspection. They and I find it so correct and so expeditious that I shall endeavor at once to have the stationers for City and Government supply your 'Adders' into the various departments."—Hon. A. OAKEY HALL, Mayor New York.
"We have one of your 'Adders,' and find it correct in every respect, and that it is of great assistance in proving and adding extended columns. We recommend its use to accountants, and our confidence of its success."—NORTH AMER. LIFE INS. CO., 129 Broadway.
"Of the first convenience, robbing figures of their horrors, leaving the wearied brain, saving precious time, and preventing damaging errors."—New York Tribune, December 16, 1868.
"Saves all the trouble and chance of mistake in making the numberless and tedious additions which most kinds of business require."—New York Times, January 3, 1869.
"Destined to be the most popular and useful mathematical machine ever invented."—Springfield (Mass.) Republican, December 21, 1868.
"The best testimonial is the fact that, out of all sold, not a word of dissatisfaction has been expressed, all purchasers being united in its praise; it has never disappointed their expectations, and until now it has been impossible to supply accumulating orders. It is guaranteed to do all claimed for it in the advertisement. Price, in brass, $6 00; in silver, $8 00; extra plated, $10 00. Sent by express, C.O.D. Territorial rights for sale.
C. H. WEBB, 571 Broadway, N.Y.

ELGIN WATCHES.
CAUTION.—The public are respectfully cautioned against purchasing our watches, or watches purporting to be of our manufacture, of those who advertise to send them "C.O.D." We have no connection with such house, and do not furnish our goods to any house for that purpose. The excellence and good reputation of our watches have caused several Foreign and American Watch Companies to make swindling imitations of the same or similar trademarks as ours. Avoid all parties who advertise to send our goods "C.O.D.," as we have not suggest the real Elgin Watches purchase only of dealers in your vicinity, who are known to you to be honorable.
THE NATIONAL WATCH COMPANY,
ELGIN, ILLINOIS.
Business Office, No. 169 and 161 Lake St., Chicago, Ill.

NEW MUSIC.
VELOCIPEDE GALOP, illustrated . . . . . 50c.
FLEECIE HOSIERY.—Song . . . . . 35c.
KITTY MCGEE, 35c.; THE HAUNTED TROUBADOUR. . 40c.
YOU'LL SOMETIMES THINK OF ME. . . . . 35c.
LIVE IN MY HEART AND PAY NO RENT. . . . . 35c.
Sold at Flute Arrangements, 5c. Catalogue mailed.
FREDERICK BLUME, 1125 Broadway, 1st door above 25th St. Branch, 805 Bowery.

PRINCE & CO.
ORGANS
AND MELODEONS,
43,000 now in use.
BUFFALO, N.Y. CHICAGO, ILL.

CONSULAR SEAL
CHAMPAGNE,
AS IMPORTED FOR NEW YORK UNION CLUB.
TOMES, MELVAIN, & CO., Sole Importers,
No. 6 MAIDEN LANE, NEW YORK.

$50 WORTH OF MUSIC FOR $2 50!—THE WELCOME GUEST contains a choice repertoire of Piano-Forte Music, as follows: 16 Rondos, Variations, &c., as "Departed Days," "Monastery Bells"—19 Marches and Quicksteps, as "Italian Band," "Soldier's Dream," and "Congress Marches"—35 Waltzes, as "Dream on the Ocean," "Flowers of Spring," "Sounds from Home"—29 Polkas and Schottisches, 7 Mazurkas and Polka Mazurkas, 5 Polkas Redowas, Medleys, Directions and Cotillions, 88 Hornpipes, Dances, and Reels, comprising in all 204 pages. Sent by mail on receipt of $2 50. S. T. GORDON, 704 Broadway, New York.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

A JOURNAL OF CIVILIZATION.

VOL. XIII.—No. 634.] NEW YORK, SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 20, 1869. [SINGLE COPIES, TEN CENTS. $4.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE.

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the Year 1869, by Harper & Brothers, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court of the United States, for the Southern District of New York.

THE LETTER-BOX.—[See Page 114.]

THE LETTER-BOX.

MR. JEWETT'S expressive drawing, published on our first page, is so suggestive in itself that it is scarcely necessary to make any comments or attempt to interpret a story that is so well told by the artist's pencil. The sadly-anxious face of the wife and mother as she deposits her missive with a silent prayer "that he may get it soon," and the address of the letter, let us at once into the whole secret. How many such letters are daily dropped into the letter-box! and sad indeed is the story they tell of necessary separation, even of the faithful love full of hope, yet full also of anxiety which follows the absent father and husband. As in our illustration, those mailings seem to bear along with them the prayers of the mother and the kisses of the children.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 20, 1869.

"THE FALLACIES OF HOPE."

THERE more hopeful Democrats profess a cheerful faith that the Republicans already "doubt" General GRANT. "They doubt him; they doubt him" exclaimed Mr. W. W. EATON, with great zeal, in the Connecticut Democratic Convention; and the doubt which he so vehemently affirmed appears to give Mr. EATON peculiar satisfaction. And so also many of the chief Democratic papers chuckle with great delight at what they hope to be the quarrel of coming trouble between the new President and the Republican party.

It would seem, indeed, that the Democratic experience of the withdrawal of Mr. JOHNSON from his party, and the total want of any substantial benefit in consequence to the hungry Democracy, should be held inspiring reasons to justify such enthusiasm over the prospect of a similar defection. The Democratic newspapers tended President JOHNSON to the utmost; but the World at last said that there was only one way in which he could prove that his sentiments were truly sound, and that was in bestowing the patronage upon the faithful. Congress, however, enacted its little Tenure-of-Office bill, and now not even the Connecticut Democracy, with Mr. JAMES F. BABCOCK, the great original Democrat of Connecticunia, at their head, has so much as a word of sympathy or admiration or regret for the retiring distributor of the Constitutional.

The next Democratic hope is, that General GRANT will imitate ANDREW JOHNSON. He has not, indeed, hitherto shown a remarkable admiration for that example; but it is supposed that he is not a party President, that the Republican party was compelled to take him, that he is not an extreme man, that his only military training—and, indeed, reasons are as plentiful as blackberries when you have once made up your mind that you must have them. But at least it is the one evident point of difference between these gentlemen. GRANT is reasonable and firm; JOHNSON most delightfully unreasonable and obstinate. It would be hard to find any thing more comically absurd than his grave recommendation to Congress that, as the country had now finally decided against his policy, Congress should vote to succeed to adopt it. That was worthy of Sancho PANZA in Barataria.

There is also another point of difference which is evident enough. Mr. JOHNSON was a Border State Slavery politician of the poorest kind—of so poor a kind indeed that there has always been a question whether his love for the Unionism was not quite as much hostility to a certain social class in his part of the country as to their disloyalty to secession. The war and his position undoubtedly cast a glamour upon him under which he was nominated by the Republicans in 1864. But he had never shown then, he certainly has never shown since, that he understood in the least the controlling cause of the war, and consequently what must be the policy to secure peace. He has been a stupidly contemptuous and hostile toward the colored population, to whom he proposed himself as a Moses, as he has been dogmatic in urging his policy upon the country. General GRANT, meanwhile, has supported Congressional reconstruction upon the profoundest conviction that it was the best practicable plan.

But it is not in any specific point that the baselessness of the hopes of our Democratic friends is to be found. General GRANT is, as the French would say, a political child of the war. He naturally takes the view of the situation that logically results from the war. The man is constantly very foolish who doubts that General GRANT'S Administration will pursue the fundamental Republican policy. It will defend the equality of civil and political rights under the law. It will maintain the public faith toward every body, freedmen and creditors. It will aid the most vigorous possible reduction of the public expenses. Its spirit will be that of charity toward all, of malice toward none. In doing this it will be simply carrying out the principles proclaimed by the Convention that nominated the President, and in doing it, also, General GRANT'S Administration will be in the truest sense a Republican Administration.

Such being, as every body will admit, the undoubted policy of the new Administration, is its chief likely to ask the assistance of HORATIO SEYMOUR of FERNANDO WOOD, of WADE HAMPTON or FRANK BLAIR? In the conduct of an Administration based upon the principles of equal rights and good faith, is the President likely to look to a party which has always asserted and maintained those principles, or to one that has always derided and opposed them? Is there any conceivable reason why General GRANT should undertake to gather figs of thistles by depending upon the Democratic party for a policy of national justice and honor? Are duplicity and intrigue characteristic of him? Is he inordinately ambitious? Yet, if he sympathized with the Democratic party on any question, he might undoubtedly have had the Democratic nomination. Has any thing happened within the year that should give him greater respect for the policy or the principles of that party? Has any thing occurred, upon the other hand, which should give him a suspicion of the Republican party? In the highest way, General GRANT'S political comprehension of the situation is that of the Republicans. In the lowest view, he has nothing to gain by going over to the Democrats.

On the other hand, that the new President will wear no man's collar we most gladly and fully believe. That he will resist any and all attempted dictation from those who call themselves the "leaders" of the party we have no doubt whatever. That some other candidate for office than mere party service will be demanded by him we most sincerely hope. Party relations will not, of course, be disregarded by him; for he is personally only a man of sagacity, and he knows that in our political situation the results at which he aims can be achieved only with party support. But that reduced to party relations justice and honor are in doubtless wholesomely skeptical. Capacity, knowledge, integrity, experience, prudence, sagacity, are quite as essential to the right use of the Administration as "claims" founded upon "doing all the dirty work of the party." Cliques and rings and factions in the Republican party, as in all other parties under the same circumstances, will doubtless be disappointed and disgusted by the conduct and the appointments of the new Administration. But those who are delighted to trust to doubt that the great mass of the party, its intelligence and character, will most heartily sustain the new President, and that his Administration will be wise and strengthen it. Our Democratic friends have been mistaken in him before. As a soldier, they announced him as a blunderer; and when, as a Presidential candidate, they sneered at him as brainless. Now, when they hopefully praise him as a second-hand ANDREW JOHNSON, they will find themselves as deeply in error.

MOUNT VERNON.

THE return of the anniversary of WASHINGTON'S Birthday naturally suggests curiosity as to the present condition of Mount Vernon, and more especially as it is the day when Congress is asked to make an appropriation for the Mount Vernon Association. This association and its objects have been always a little in disfavor, with chilly cowings of the shoulders in the cold. There was, indeed, something which struck the public as an attempt to save the Union by a mere sentimentality when the project was announced, and when the demand for $200,000 JOHN A. WASHINGTON as the price of the estate; the charter from the State of Virginia; the Presidency of the Association by a lady of South Carolina; the advocacy of Mr. EVERETT, who was thought to be politically weak, if not "Southern," all favored the impression that the enterprise was of the party kindred of JOHN A. WASHINGTON, and for the local glory of "the South."

It was nearly seven years before the war that Miss PAMELA CUNNINGHAM, of South Carolina, suggested that the women of America should own Mount Vernon. An Association was formed of one representative lady in each State, called a Vice-Regent, and a presiding officer, the Regent. Miss CUNNINGHAM was naturally elected Regent, and she has given to it very much of her fortune to the object. From the report of November 19, 1866, it appears that the receipts of the Association from the beginning were $68,000, of which $18,000 or 20 was contributed by Mr. EVERETT as the proceeds of his Washington oration and of his Ledger papers. The sum of $200,000 demanded by JOHN A. WASHINGTON was paid. The charter was granted, and the Association kept an agent at Mount Vernon in charge of the estate, and a lady Secretary in charge of the house, and during the darkest days of the war another lady as companion. The agent was a connection of the WASHINGTON family, a Confederate and her friend were from the State of New York.

During the war the annual meetings of the Council were held, thinly attended and almost exclusively, of course, by Northern women. The Regent, Miss CUNNINGHAM, was at home in the interior of South Carolina, and her ample fortune was lost in the general wreck of Southern prosperity. The revenues of the Association were derived from visitors to Mount Vernon, and when the steamers were forbidden to stop there, during the war, the income also stopped. But the visitors did not stop coming, and they did not stop stealing. They whittled bedsteads, and they even wrenched off the ivory keys from MARTHA WASHINGTON'S harpsichord. Some of the rooms were closed for safety, and it was necessary to keep watchmen to save the property from the hands of patriotic and sentimental thieves. Such necessary expenses produced a debt; but since MISS CUNNINGHAM'S restoration to health and duty she has successfully paid off the debt, and the treasury is empty. The agent has been dismissed as an act of economy, and the Regent herself, with the consent of the Council, is to live at the house in charge of the estate. The daily receipts are now the only revenue of the Association, and it is impossible, with so uncertain a dependence, to take the care which is essential to save the estate from decay.

In the year 1865 the Council, at a meeting from which the Regent was absent, and which was attended by Northern women only, petitioned Congress for indemnification for the entire loss of income caused by the withdrawal of the boat. The Appropriation bill, in which the grant was an item, was not passed that year. At the last session the indemnification passed the Senate, but was lost in the House by four votes. On the 4th of February, 1864, the Vice-Regent for New York proposed in the Council that the estate should be given to the United States under certain restrictions. Mr. EVERETT favored this plan, and thought that the consent of Virginia could be procured at that time. But the Council disapproved, and nothing was done.

The Association wishes to make the estate self-supporting by a new system of agriculture; but it has not yet made the experiment. It is supposed that Congress may grant seven thousand dollars; but that sum is needed for immediate repairs. We suggest to the Council that, as all of feeling on the subject has now died away, a proper appeal to the public, not to Congress, would raise a small but sufficient fund, while the daily receipts will give an income for current expenses. The interest and exertions of the women have saved Mount Vernon from destruction and division. If now the people of the country really care to preserve it, they will raise a fund. If they will not, let it remain deserted, stripped, and destroyed. It is useless to feign a sentiment upon such a subject. We do not believe now, nor did we ever believe, that the country cherishes any peculiar feeling for Mount Vernon. But there are those in the country who do, and let it be their pious charge.

AID TO RAILROADS.

THE combination formed at Washington to press a bill through Congress to guarantee for thirty years the payment of interest at six per cent. on bonds to the amount of thirty thousand dollars per mile, to be issued by the respective companies as they severally complete twenty miles of road, is a combination which involves the safety of the public credit and the existence of the Republican party. If this extensive Ring can drive this entering wedge into the Treasury to the amount proposed, the end will be driven still farther from year to year, until the Treasury will be split into fragments.

The combination embraces schemes of all descriptions, classified generally as good, bad, and indifferent; but they stand on the same footing in the estimate of the Ring, and are expected to share together in the public bounty. The supposed danger of its passage results from the fact that this present Congress will expire on the 4th of March, and that a number of unsatisfied members will be out of service by private life. The scheme for payment is of such proportions as to gratify the appetite of the most voracious and greedy. A combination of the division among the trusted friends of members of the stock is a controlling part of it of thousands of miles of projected railroads. The statement that fabulous amounts have been divided among the forty or fifty stockholders and directors of the Union Pacific Railroad in the shape of the Credit Mobilier, and the open manner in which its directors, unrebuked, have used their influence as members of the House to further its interests, have undoubtedly contributed to the production of the present new railroad scheme character.

But it must be borne in mind that, although it is in the power of the Government of the United States to push one great highway forward to the Pacific, at a time when money is stagnant in the leading foreign markets and our credit remains untarnished, the passage of a bill requiring the payment by the Government of interest on the vast sums which these new enterprises are to cost, would create in all prudent minds here and abroad such an apprehension of the dishonesty of the national legislature as to peril the construction of even the road across the continent, which we now expect to see running in June.

The readiness of capitalists in Europe to invest in our bonds—due in great part to the want of activity in the productions which they make and export—and the exhibition of skill and power in the rapid construction of the road—presenting a spectacle to mankind favorable to the fame of our country—these are circumstances which can not be expected to coexist hereafter. The members of Congress who signalize their separation from the Fortieth Congress by passing this omnibus bill will find that industry abroad will revive before their schemes are under way, and that there will be use for the capital elsewhere which is now so freely lavished on, even if the impudence of the vote failed to alarm the fears of those who are accustomed to these loans.

The rapid construction of the Union Pacific road is the result of a clear comprehension of the financial condition. It is doubtless hoped, and there is reasonable ground for expecting, that the ebb, which dates its movement from the expiration of the flood, will not begin till they have carried this enterprise through to the ocean. But although we commanded the energy which the country with just pride has witnessed, it is now manifest that a painful impression is felt in many quarters as to the manner in which the trust—for this is partially its character—has been performed by those who occupy the triple character of directors, stockholders, and contractors. The eyes of the whole world are now turned upon this great work; and it were better that he had not been born who in this high trust justly encounter the public censure.

The measure before Congress ought to be promptly defeated. The country is in no situation to stand this serious drain upon its resources. The guarantee of interest in gold five years in currency will be deemed a Congressional decision that the difference between currency and gold is expected to continue for that time, if not to be permanent. The sagacious will see in the declaration of this policy now a wide difference from that which at a wholly different period provided for issuing bonds for the Union Pacific road with interest payable in currency. It will amount to a significant indication that specie payments are to be indefinitely postponed.

We urge upon all who hold a share in the obligations of the United States, upon the banks, whose credit and means are so constantly interwoven with the public faith, and upon the Republican party, which will be held justly responsible for this defiance of prudence, wisdom, and honesty, to take measures to defeat this scheme of plunder, and save the party from certain defeat and our finances from the confusion which its passage must occasion.

THE PREVIOUS QUESTION.

THE Tribune is impatient of the discussion in the Senate of one of the gravest possible constitutional amendments. When its excellent editor was a member of the New York Constitutional Convention of 1867 he was equally opposed to debate. He was of opinion that the work ought to be done in a month or six weeks. It is not clear that he would not have put the whole Constitution through under the previous question. But have we not had nearly enough of the previous question upon the most fundamental and far-reaching measures? The Tribune very pertinently inquires whether a great deal of difficulty, say the Georgia muddle, might not have been avoided if Congress had been as anxious to do its work well as it was to do it rapidly. Mr. THADDEUS STEVENS used to rise and say that to-morrow at eleven o'clock he proposed to demand the previous question. It was marvelous that a body of intelligent men, armed with interests so momentous, confessedly dealing with a condition of affairs entirely without precedent, and upon which they were generally so ignorant, should have submitted to so despotic and unreasonable a demand. Mr. STEVENS used to add, with peremptory good humor, as he called out of vigilance, that every body's mind was made up, as General BUTLER said the other day about the Tenure-of-Office bill, at the outset, whose mind had indeed made up upon the abstract question that some measure of the kind proposed was necessary, yielded to the ingenious sophistry and consented to obtain light.

It is time that this abominable abuse of the previous question was ended. Fortunately there is no such gag in the Senate, and therefore no measure is adopted except upon consideration of its merits. It is very true that Americans and Englishmen talk a great deal, but it is equally true that they have the freest governments in the world. The difference between a free and a despotic government is talk. A despotism is a permanent Previous Question. Talk upsets thrones, and therefore the first blow of tyranny is at the tongue. The old slave aristocracy in this country knew this. It was willing that Yankees should think what they chose if they would hold their tongues. But as the Yankee means to talk down all abuses, and will not hold his tongue, the slave masters resolved to cut it out. They failed utterly; and the war has abolished the previous question in the Southern States, and has opened them all to the freest and fullest talk upon every subject.

The Parliamentary previous question is intended to restrain factious debate. When the discussion of a question has been plainly exhausted, and it is continued solely for the palpable purpose of preventing a decision, it is fair for the majority to use its power for the public welfare. But it is a wanton and criminal abuse of power for a majority to drive the most vitally important measures to a decision by mere force of numbers. Congress then ceases to be a deliberative body. The Government is no longer reasonable but arbitrary; and a party whose majority so outrages the very genius of a popular system will justly be deprived of power.

Now in the case of the fifteenth or suffrage amendment, the debate in the Senate at which the Tribune impatiently exclaims was conducted with great ability upon the side of the friends of the measure by Senators FERRY and MORTON. Their suggestions were very valuable, and may very materially improve the amendment, which, substantially, will of course pass both Houses. Senator FERRY observed the important fact that the Democratic opposition was no longer to the measure itself but to the method of its submission for approval; and Senator MORTON showed that the amendment was negative, and not affirmative in its terms, and that it did not necessarily attain its proposed end. He, therefore, favored an amendment directly declaring who shall have the right of suffrage and of holding office. Is there really no need whatever of discussing in what manner a result so important shall best be attained? Is it mere "verbosity" to consider whether our net setting a trap to catch yourself? Is it advisable that Congress should abdicate its most essential function, namely, to determine not only what shall be done, but how it can most wisely be done?

THE SUFFRAGE.

In his speech upon the Suffrage Amendment Mr. SUMNER elaborated the view which he had before expressed, and which we have vindicated in these columns, of the constitutional power of Congress over the suffrage. The constitutional provision, that the electors in each State shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the Legislature, is certainly not a grant of prohibitory power to the States. That is certainly so unless we look for the peremptory disabling of a class. A qualification, as Mr. SUMNER well says, is something attainable by well-directed effort. A person may not have a qualification, nor the color of the eyes, nor the form of the nose. These are unchangeable conditions, and no man having them can reasonably qualify himself for a function which requires that he shall not have them. In like manner color of the skin can not be considered a qualification, for it is neither attainable nor alienable. That only is a qualification in an honest sense which the industry of average men can acquire, or which, like age, is in its nature necessarily attainable by all men.

The character of the qualification must be determined by the circumstances of the case. The United States are bound by the Constitution to secure a republican form of government to every State. Before they can execute this behest they must, of course, determine what is republican, and as that is a term of progressive, or at least of changing meaning, it is obviously wise to remove all occasion of friction between the States and the power which is authorized to decide the question. Thus the final authority upon this subject should not be left to the States, we suppose is rapidly becoming the general conviction. Every man can see how desirable, how essential, it is that no State should be allowed to destroy the fundamental right of any citizen of the United States. The question becomes, then, one of method. In what way should this point be settled?

Mr. SUMNER thinks that an amendment would be no more permanent than a law, because, the suffrage once equalized, no future Congress would ever desire to restrict it. But with an amendment, no future Congress ever could restrict it. The probability undoubtedly is as Mr. SUMNER states, but the certainty is with the amendment. He then urges, however, that a law settles the question at once, while the preparation of an amendment holds it open indefinitely. Nobody is bold enough to think that there are States enough which would ratify it immediately, and to propound it is, therefore, merely to exasperate party spirit. Mr. SUMNER finally appeals—if considerations of justice under the Constitution are insufficient—to the desire of party success. There are, he says, three thousand voters in Connecticut ready to respond to the call of Congress upon the side of the party which enfranchises them. There are thousands more in Pennsylvania. Why should the dominant party refuse their aid when it has the authority to summon it? Mr. SUMNER, however, we think, from the tone of his speech, and perhaps from the fact that the amendment has been so unanimously supported by the Republicans in the House, does not expect to secure the result by a law.

Indeed, it seems to us that he hardly sufficiently considers the present state of public opinion upon the subject. The real force of a law is in common consent, and while the whole Democratic party would vehemently oppose this one, a very considerable and not the least intelligent portion of the Republican party would seriously doubt its constitutionality or expediency. Mr. SUMNER would certainly not wish a snap judgment upon such a question, and the time necessary to gain a moral consent to the law would perhaps be about the same as that to secure the amendment. We put it doubtfully, for there are good reasons for passing a law instead of proposing an amendment. But in the one form or the other the Republican party, in the adoption of this great measure, adds another to the list of its illustrious services to the country and to mankind.

AN ADMIRABLE PLAN.

WE observe that a delegation waited upon General GRANT during his recent visit to New York, and the Chairman informed him that they represented the Irishmen of America, and as there were a great many of them in the country he was respectfully requested to give a good office to some Irishman.

It is understood that the numerous body of our fellow-citizens of German birth and descent also propose to wait upon General GRANT with a similar request.

Item, the English and Scotch.

Item, the French, Spanish, and other foreign American citizens.

The colored citizens, who are a very large and important part of the population, will present each their claim.

The Methodists, who are counted by hundreds of thousands, will proceed to the White House and request the bestowal of a good office upon some representative Methodist.

The hard and other shell Baptists would also like a comfortable place.

Ditto, the Presbyterians.

Ditto, the Congregationalists.

Ditto, the Episcopalians.

Ditto, the Latter-Day Saints, Mormons, and other communions.

The various professions and trades will also attend by delegation, and request the appointment of some member of each to office as a reward for the claims of doctors, masons, lawyers, blacksmiths, ministers, and carpenters.

The bootblacks will meet in the Park to designate the candidate by whose appointment they propose that the President shall recognize them.

It is hoped that by this admirable arrangement every nationality, sect, and industry in the country will be as much satisfied as the public service will be benefited.

AN OBJECTION TO THE NEW STATE CONSTITUTION.

THE NEW YORK World recently objected to the new Constitution proposed for the State that it based the senatorial districts upon those of territory instead of population. The Western New Yorker, at Warsaw, Wyoming County, well says that, if the objector had given himself the trouble to read the article which he rose to condemn, he would have seen that in providing for the districts it prescribes that "each district shall contain, as near as may be, an equal number of inhabitants."

The truth is that the new Constitution, as probably the majority of the Democratic members of the Convention will agree, makes a modern but very vital change in the general provisions of the present Constitution, except in the casual management, relieves it of a certain friction in working which has sometimes revealed. Indeed, nothing was more amusing than to observe the distaste with which any suggestion of radical change was received by the Convention; and it was with exceeding difficulty that Mr. ORDYKE succeeded in persuading it to adopt his article for the prevention of bribery. The lawyers, we think, will generally agree that the Judiciary Article is a great improvement upon the present one; and, if the eminent Democratic lawyers in the Convention are consulted, we doubt if their party, as such, will very vehemently oppose the new Constitution.

MADRIGALS.

THOSE who have supposed that the musical taste of New York was hopelessly perverted, and that the Opera Bouffe and Humpty Dumpty alone divided the enthusiasm of the town, may have been agreeably undeceived by the recent madrigal concerts at Steinway Hall. The melody and charm of this quaint old music, with its really learned skill in composition, and the remarkable excellence of its execution, were thoroughly appreciated by an enthusiastic audience that filled the place. There were no brass trumpets blown; there were very few of the ordinary methods of advertising; but somehow the faithful knew what was coming, and it was truly delightful to see the audience and share its feeling of the purest gratification.

The madrigal is a pastoral glee for many voices. The words and the music describe that fair and impossible realm, the pretty world of swains and shepherdesses, which is a kind of foolish-fond realization of some fancy of the Golden Age. It is indeed Arcadia that the madrigals imply—the lovely scenes and nymphs that never were of CLAUDE's landscapes—the world of Corydon and Sophron, of Doris and Phillis. This music was formerly the accomplishment of fine society, as the Italian music has more recently been. But while it has ceased to be distinctively fashionable it has retained a certain domestic character, so that it now seems to be, in the highest sense, family music. It was impossible to remark the simplicity of the whole performance, and the quiet self-respecting air of the singers, without thinking of the scenes of delightful private clubs and societies in which this music is probably most cultivated—but alas! not in our own. The ladies and gentlemen who took part in the concert were all trained singers. Their voices blended into one full rich sound, which was as delicately shaded as a single voice; and we do not remember to have heard a finer choral effect.

As these accomplished singers united for this occasion only, we can hardly expect from them more than the single repetition of the concert which they have given us. But they must remember that duty is proportioned to power, and that those who can so satisfactorily render such unusual and captivating music as to truly gratify its sincerest lovers, ought to be willing to take some pains for so great a pleasure oftener, say, than once in a quarter of a century!

A LOST ART.

A FRAGMENT of a statue is sometimes found which reveals a nobler art than ours. In the following letter, written in the year 1810 and never before published, is found a fragment of honor which is rapidly disappearing, if it be not wholly lost, in our politics? The writer had been elected Senator, but doubts had been suggested of the regularity or legality of the election:

"The appointment to the office of a Senator of the United States with which I was honored at last June session is thought by some of the citizens of this State liable to doubt and objection upon Constitutional grounds. Though, upon the fullest consideration which I have been able to give to this subject I can discover no solid foundation for such doubts, yet the fact that some reputable citizens entertain them is sufficient to call upon me for the resignation of a consequence inconvenient to the State. I wish to hold no office, however honorable or desirable, if attended in any degree questionable. I have been summoned by the President of the United States to attend a session of the Senate upon the fourth day of March next; and I should feel myself wanting in a proper respect to my own character and to the rights and dignity of the State to take a seat in that honorable body under a doubtful title, especially as the present session of the General Assembly presents a fit opportunity to submit the subject to their decision.

"If it be objected that the proceeding at June session should be reshed, it is important that the mode of doing it should be consistent with the law and with the dignity of the Legislature. With the advice of several judges and friends I have thought it best to relieve the subject from all embarrassment, and the General Assembly from the necessity of taking it up for consideration, by declining the appointment with which they honored me in June. By thus placing the subject again before them, I manifest my respect for that body by relieving them from the necessity of an interference in a case in which the propriety of it might be questioned, and all apprehension of future inconvenience from a controversy will be entirely removed. The General Assembly will thus have it in their power to proceed to an election of a Senator without reference to any thing that passed upon the subject.

"I do therefore beg leave to decline accepting the appointment of a Senator in Congress with which I was honored at the last June session, and request your Excellency to communicate the same to the General Assembly. I hope the General Assembly will consider this step on my part as a proof of my respect for and confidence in them, and also acknowledgments for the favor and consideration with which that honorable body has often distinguished me.

"I have the honor to be, with sentiments of great regard and sincere friendship, your Excellency's obedient servant."

LITERARY.

SIR SAMUEL W. BAKER says, that, after the publication of his books upon the Albert Nyanza and the Sources of Abyssinia, he received so many and such grateful and interesting letters from boys, that he could not forbear acknowledging them in a story of adventure, in which the chief points are facts. This story he calls "Cast up by the Sea," and dedicates it to "boys from eight years old to eighty. It is profusely and excitingly illustrated, and is issued by the HARPERS in a very neat and cheap volume. It is an admirable present it to boys and girls and to those who purvey reading for them, as it would be to urge them to read a new story by the author of "Robinson Crusoe."

THE late United States Consul at Tunis, Mr. AMOS PERRY, found himself in a country of singular historical interest, and with abundant leisure for accurate study of the ruins of HANNIBAL and Dido, the jealous rival of Rome, now almost wholly deserted. In this handsome volume just issued by the Providence Press Company Mr. PERRY publishes the results of his study, and personal exploration and observation. Carthage and Tunis, past and present, is a history of the country and a picture of its condition to-day. The author has collected in a convenient form a great deal of valuable information, and the details of the customs of Northern Africa life at this time are very interesting. Mr. PERRY has evidently diligently improved all his official opportunities, and his work may be consulted with advantage.

ABOUT a year ago we called attention to a very extraordinary drawing, in India ink, of the Rhine-valley, by Mr. HAIG. The vigor, freedom, precision, and effectiveness of the work were equally remarkable; and, as a piece of curious character-drawing, it was novel and most interesting. But, handy as the work was, the wonder grew when it was considered as that of an unfortunate paralytic, lying helpless upon his back, with no other means of holding a brush than his mouth. Indeed this little picture, intrinsically excellent and attractive, with others executed in the same way, is already a subject of scientific, as well as aesthetic attention; and Mr. MILLS, the owner, has published, from the press of HURD & HOUGHTON, a brief pamphlet of the artist, with facsimile illustrations of his little works, a volume entirely unique and full of curious interest. The pamphlet name was JOHN CARTER, a silk weaver in Essex, England, who, hard-working one night, fell from a new frame that he had framed, upon the pavement and foor again. He lived utterly helpless until 1850, when he died in consequence of the accident. He began to wager in which he was unable to take the air. RICHMOND, the famous English draughtsman, drew his portrait, and the Lancet had an article upon the singular and interesting case. The fac-simile of the drawing of his head shows a face of great gentleness and beauty; and the life of so saint, nor any Sunday-school tract, describes a truer heroism, or is a more touching and inspiring story than this simple Memoir of JOHN CARTER.

THE three days ago Mr. C. W. DILKE "followed England round the world." He made a journey through the English-speaking or English-governed lands, and has published an account of his travels in a handsome volume, issued by the HARPERS, called "Greater Britain." Mr. DILKE is a shrewd observer and a lively writer, and his sympathies were entirely with the Northern sentiment during the rebellion. Toward our part of the English-speaking world he is generous quite beyond the customary British tone; while from the regions still subject to the British rule his work may be expected to be the latest authentic report, and it is extremely interesting as the "Young England" view of the situation.

DOMESTIC INTELLIGENCE.

CONGRESS.

February 2:

In the House, the bill authorizing the construction of a bridge over the Niagara River was passed.

In the Senate, the resolution declaring vacant the offices held by disqualified persons in the late rebel States was concurred in.

February 3:

In the Senate, the Consular and Diplomatic Appropriation bill was passed.

In the House, the bill for the construction of a railroad bridge over the Canadian River was passed.

February 4:

In the Senate, the bill providing for the sale of the arsenal grounds at St. Louis was passed.

In the House, the Indian Appropriation Bill was passed. During the debate Mr. Holbrook, delegate from Dakota, said that Mr. BENJAMIN, the delegate "which he knew to be unqualifiedly false." Mr. HOLBROOK subsequently said that he had no idea that offensive language having been taken down, a resolution of censure was passed without a division. The Sergeant-at-Arms then brought Mr. Holbrook to the bar of the House, and the Speaker administered to him the censure called for by the resolution.—The Senate bill to prohibit the use of the stationery franked by Dempsey & O'Toole was agreed to; also the Senate bill to prohibit the coolie trade.

February 5:

In the Senate, a bill was passed authorizing the President to enter into treaties with foreign nations to protect alleged criminals delivered up to the authorities of the United States upon the subject.

In the House, a bill was passed for the relief of Andrew Johnson and other officers and men of the fleet who passed Forts Philip and Jackson under fire. The bill provides that the officers and men of the fleet would have been entitled to and the courts of Louisiana been open at the time.

NEWS ITEMS.

In the Georgia Senate a resolution to restore the expelled colored members to their seats was defeated after a hearing; but the lower house has passed a resolution to submit the question of citizenship to the people.

The Connecticut Republican Convention on the 3d unanimously renominated Governor Jewell.

The entire amount of bonds issued to the Pacific Railroads to January 1, 1869, was 64,623,512, and the annual interest at six per cent. is $3,905,938. The amount of interest redeemed by the United States by the several roads, from freights, etc., up to January 1, 1869, was $1,905,938.

The challenge of the owner of the American yacht Dauntless to the Cambridge yacht Sappho Cousolera, for an ocean race, has been accepted.

Mr. Chevalier, the Belgian aeronaut, has brought over to this country a monster balloon, with a bomb-built car, in which he proposes to cross the Atlantic. It is fantastic in the same. He believes the thing can be done, and will get up to a current of wind which will waft him toward the globe itself at a height of eight or ten thousand feet.

The International Hotel at St. Paul, Minnesota, was burned by fire on the 3d of February. The guests escaped, but lost all their clothing. The total loss is estimated at $100,000.

The official records of the Internal Revenue Department show that the receipts from cotton taxes at fifty cents per gallon are greatly in excess of the former estimates. For the last week they were $1,000,000.

From the annual report of the Metropolitan Police Board it appears that during the month ending November 1, 96,861 persons were arrested, being 4,861 more than in 1867, but 9,000 more than the average of the past nine years. The whole force consists of 2,919 men.

FOREIGN NEWS.

THE cabinet ministers of the Greek Government have resigned on account of their opposition to the compromise offered by the Paris Conference. The question is of great difficulty in forming a new cabinet.

A Reporter has been killed in a duel in Madrid, the cause of which he was recently elected. The Carlist organ of Madrid says that the pretender to the throne is not of Spain; bands of this faction have appeared in Catalonia, but they can scarcely hope for any success. Ex-Queen Isabella has issued another manifesto from Paris against the Provisional Government, and asserting her own right to the throne. The contents of the Governor of Burgos are to be executed.

The Marquis of Moustier, late French Minister of Foreign Affairs, died on the 8th instant.

A fierce battle is reported to have been place in Turkey between the Turks and the Montenegrins, near Nikschitza.

HON. DANIEL D. PRATT.

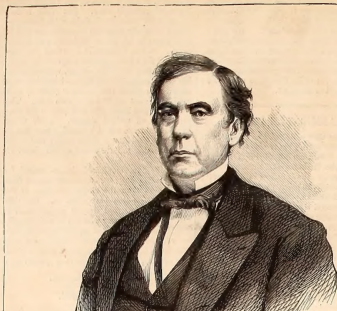
THE Hon. DANIEL D. PRATT, recently elected Senator, vice Mr. HENDRICKS, by the Indiana Legislature, was last year elected a Member of the Forty-first Congress. He has been a resident of Logansport for thirty years, and is one of the oldest and ablest lawyers in the State, but his experience as a public officer does not extend beyond a couple of years' service in the State Legislature. He is about forty years of age, and is said to weigh nearly 400 pounds. He was an old Whig, and is now a very strong Republican.

UNDERGROUND LODGINGS FOR THE POOR.

IT is estimated that in a single year from 90,000 to 100,000 persons are lodged in the New York city police-stations. The "floating population" of this city includes not only strangers staying here temporarily, and passengers detained for a time, but also thousands of vagrants and poor people, who "have not where to lay their heads." Many of them find a most uncomfortable lodging at our police-stations; others are allowed for a mere pittance to stow themselves away for the night in some cellar like that in Greenwich Street, shown in our illustration on this page. During the day they lounge in the lowest groggeries, go on begging excursions, loaf listlessly about the streets, or steal.

Our sketch gives a fair representation of the underground lodgings of these vagabonds. In the daytime the cellar is a kitchen or oyster-room, to become at night again the common sleeping-room of the vagrant guests above described. Then mattresses and blankets are spread on the floor. The lodgers are accommodated according to their means, the most indigent being compelled to content themselves with the bare floor. The price of a night's lodging varies from ten to twenty-five cents. The room is generally overcrowded, twenty or thirty persons being huddled together, without regard to sex, in an atmosphere scarcely endurable for one-fifth of that number. The guests are usually old men and women, and boys and girls from fifteen to twenty years of age.

It is needless to say that this lodging system encourages vagrancy, and both directly and indirectly promotes demoralization and vice. The lodgers are made up of the idle rather than of the unfortunate poor. The abuse cries loudly for reformation, and some other alternative than the cells of the station-house must be found, in order to effect a radical cure. For those who are simply unfortunate provision can and ought to be made; and those who can but won't work should be placed where they must. The lodging-houses are nurseries of disease and crime, and should be broken up promptly and effectually by our City Government.



HON. DANIEL D. PRATT, SENATOR FROM INDIANA.—[PHOT. BY H. G. FETTER.]

THE LASH IN MONKISH HANDS.

THE Jesuits have lately come to grief in France, owing perhaps to want of care on the part of some of their order in the indulgence of their favorite pastime. Since the days of Loyola they have confessedly been fond of flagellation. Their theory of the absolute subjugation of the will, and of the inexorable right to enforce obedience at any cost to ghostly authority, has never been disclaimed; and, taken in connection with their success in rendering their pupils proficients in the syntax and the smut of classic literature, their example has often been cited by those who politically hate the Company of Jesus as good reasons for the practice of brutality in domestic and academic education. Along with Bourbonism, harlotdom, and unbelieving priestcraft, the Reformers of 1789 broke up the whipping-dens of the Jesuits, and enacted, as a fundamental item of the criminal law, that to strip a child, or still more a youth approaching the age of adolescence, for the purpose of indecently scarifying his body, was a cowardly and filthy act, no matter what its pretense or excuse, to be punished with imprisonment and fine. Napoleon thoroughly adopted their noble and humanizing ideas in this respect. There are terrible words of his upon the subject on record, which we need not quote. The Restoration never ventured to give back the whip into the cruel hands of the drummer or the priest; and for now three generations the youth who is able and has the pluck to resist indecent exposure and the attempt to flog him, no matter by whose hand, is justified by the criminal law of France, and likely to be applauded, even though he fail in the attempt. The result is, that only by stealth have the monkish Fathers ventured to resume their enjoyments of this kind. Occasionally, however, they do walk unwarily; and hence the singular exposé that has just taken place at Bordeaux.

At Tivoli, a short distance from the provincial capital, an academy has for some time been conducted by the order of Jesuits. It is said to make good Latin scholars and submissive sons. Parents puzzled what to do with their sprightly and unmanageable offspring, have been glad enough to send them to the holy drill-shed, out of which they hear that they will come skilled in carrying intellectual arms, and orderly through the fear they learn there of being caught tripping by the world, the flesh, or the devil. How the regulating terror is put into them careless and skeptic parents do not trouble themselves to inquire. Their sons come home for the holidays demure and well-behaved; no tales are told out of school; they go back when term begins, and as for the ultimate figure who takes thought of that? The weaker-minded wither into superstition and asceticism; the coarser natures turn the educational trick they have learned to account, and wait oft their revenge on others for all they have suffered in the process. It so happened, however, that in the course of last autumn rumors spread in the locality that their Reverences were indulging somewhat too freely in the traditional privileges of their order. A boy named Ségelat had the impiety to tell an unbelieving father that for a set-to about twenty-five centimes with a class-fellow, in which he had made his playmate's nose bleed, he had been sent to what is called the prison, a place without fire or furniture, and kept there without food or drink for the space of twelve hours. When thus, as it was supposed, reduced to a fitting temperament of submission, he was visited by Père Commire, with whip in hand, and told to strip for chastisement. Being fourteen years of age, and never having been thus used before, he naturally resisted, whereupon the holy father deliberately tore his shirt and trowsers off him, and then proceeded with his purpose. The boy after a time broke loose and fled for shelter into the sleeping-room of Père Judie, who happened to be engaged in pious meditation. In vain the culprit appealed to him for protection. Père Judie inexorably waved his hand and beckoned him to withdraw. But his tormentor reappearing at the moment, he was flung upon the bed of the holy man, his mouth stopped to stifle his cries, and the search recommenced from throat to ankles for spots hitherto untasted by the many-tongued lash. How long the feast of pain lasted neither of the reverend gentlemen could, on cross-examination, be made to disclose; but as appetite grows on what it feeds upon, it appeared in evidence that other pupils approaching to the tempting age when muscular development begins, and the courage of provoking resistance commences to throb in the adolescent veins, were sought out by Père Commire and his accomplices. Several other youths were called as witnesses before the Imperial Court at Bordeaux, who testified to what they had endured, the offenses, or rather the pretenses, being infinitesimally and insignificantly small. A case more revolting than the rest was that of a young man of eighteen years of age, who, for some lapse in Latin verse, was fixed on for priestly prey. He was led up to the attic, in the hope of diminishing the chances of detection, ordered to strip naked and submit; and on his refusal seized and held by reverend accomplices wearing masks, until the passion of the flagellant was satisfied.

UNDERGROUND LODGINGS FOR THE POOR, GREENWICH STREET, NEW YORK.—[SKETCHED BY P. FRENZENY.]

In vain the accused special pleaded about the number of many-tongued strokes inflicted: in vain they produced several terror-stricken little boys to swear that they had never been beaten, and in one instance a fanaticized and half-crazy creature, who had been taught to believe that, for the sake of his immortal soul, it was good for him to have the epidermis periodically whipped off his loins and thighs. The President of the Imperial Court made no secret of the judicial scorn and loathing wherewith he regarded this shuffling defense. Sternly and clearly he cited the fundamental maxims of the law which forbids all that can humble the spirit and brutalize the nature of youth, and which punishes as a grave offense in those who undertake the function of teachers all that touches lewdness and cruelty. The reverend fathers were sentenced to pay a heavy fine and costs, and to be imprisoned as common misdemeanants for a period of two months. The trial is reported to have caused great excitement, and the sentence is stated to have been received with general satisfaction.

Happily the time has gone by, even in Roman Catholic countries, when Papal bulls can counteract civil reforms, or when the vestments of the sacerdotal order can cover gross indecency.

"MR. HAUTVILLE TOOK HIS LETTERS, ONE AT A TIME, FROM THE SALVER."

A PINCH OF PEARL.

IT was a wild night on the Jersey shore, the close, as the fishermen hoped, of one of those fierce easterly storms which annually strew the Atlantic coast with wreck and desolation.

Nor had this proved more merciful than its kind; for just as the sun in setting tore a great rift in his black veil, and glared angrily out over sea and shore, a breathless messenger arrived at Philip Bayley's house, summoning him to the beach half a mile below, where a packet-brig gone ashore was thumping its life out upon the reef.

Philip, who to his nominal profession of fisherman added, as circumstances demanded, those of wrecker, pilot, or life-boat man, was not slow to obey the summons; and girding his "oil-clothes" about him, tying his flapped sou'wester beneath his grizzled beard, and dropping into his huge hip-boots, he only paused to administer a few parting charges to wife and daughter before following the impatient messenger.

"I want to go too, mother," impetuously exclaimed the younger woman as the door closed behind her father.

"Nonsense, child. You sha'n't do any such thing," briefly replied Mrs. Bayley, shading her face with both hands, while she peered through the window into the gathering night. "First place, you'd blow away; next place, you'd get wet to the skin; and if there weren't any other reasons, the bench will be full of men. I suppose you want to see how Jake West carries sail in such a time as this, but I can't have you making a town-talk of yourself running after him, or any fellow."

"I didn't think of Jake West, mother. I only wanted to see the wreck," replied the girl, indignantly, while the red flush rushing over cheeks and brow added beauty to a face already pretty enough to please the most critical observer.

"Well, you won't see no wreck to-night, Dora Bayley, without you see it through the window; so go to work and pick up this kitchen while I see to the fixings, in case any of the folks is brought up here."

"Did Reuben say they'd bring them up here?" asked the girl, excitedly.

"Yes; I told him he might. I'm going up to get some blankets before it's too dark. You see to the fire and hang the kettle over."

The busy housewife bustled away as she spoke, and Dora, with a wistful glance toward the window fronting the sea, applied herself to her task, sweeping the white scoured floor and reddened hearth, piling the old iron dogs in the fire-place with pieces of drift timber and lumps of turf, hanging the great iron tea-kettle over the blaze, and pushing the settle, which served for couch and sometimes bed to the guests of the Bayley cottage, nearer to the fire.

Then Dora stole a glance at her own pretty face in the little mirror over the sink, smoothed back her never-smooth brown curls, and smiled just enough to show two rows of fresh white teeth.

"I wonder if Jake will come up with the men?" murmured she, going to the window and peering into the darkness.

An hour later, as Mrs. Bayley, her preparations complete, sat knitting before the fire, and Dora, unable to settle herself to any thing, flitted from door to window, from the settle covered with hammock blankets and warm wraps to the table, where various restoratives and some substantial food were set forth, both of them heard and recognized the tramp of heavy feet upon the oyster-shell walk between the gate and the house.

"They've come, mother," cried Dora, breathlessly, flying to the door.

"And they've brought something to be took care on," muttered the elder woman, listening intently, while she rolled up and laid aside the long blue stocking in her hands.

LOVE'S CROSSES—CROSS LOTS.

"Father!" said Dora, pushing half timidly into the black night beyond the door she held open.

"Stand away, girl! we've got a—man here. Where's mother?" replied the rough voice of the wrecker as he and his fellows passed a moment upon the threshold, their awful load in their hands.

"Here, Philip. Bring it right in and lay it on the settle, or here on the floor, if there's life in it," replied Mrs. Barley, cool and ready for emergency she had met more than once before.

At her word the men, taking a firmer grasp of what they held, tramped across the threshold and toward the fire-place, leaving a broad, cozy track across the sanded, pure white floor, and filling the quiet room with the steam and reek of wet clothes and boots, and their own deep breathing.

"Is he dead?" whispered Dora, sliding into the group about the fire-place.

"We don't know yet," replied a good-looking young fellow, rising but an instant from upon the face of the young girl with evident good-will and admiration.

"Where did you find him, Jake?" continued she, not heeding the glance or replying to it.

On the beach. He washed inshore lashed to a spar, and would have washed back with the undertow if we hadn't hung on to him like grim death."

"Dora! fetch that bottle of sperit!" sharply commanded Mrs. Barley, and as the girl obeyed she added, in an under-tone, "And do, for the Lord's sake, leave off chattering with Jake West, and make yourself handy."

With a laughing glance Dora knelt near her mother beside the prostrate figure upon the hearth and began rubbing one of the clammy hands, glancing, meanwhile, at the white, calm face, so curiously lighted by the uncertain flame.

It was the face of an old man, with thin white hair clinging to the narrow and wrinkled forehead, with stern straight brows and hollow eyes, with the high aquiline nose and sallow skin of an Oriental, and with a venerable beard, tangled and disheveled with clinging drift and sea-weed.

"Poor old man!" murmured Dora, pitifully, and just then the stern eyes opened and fixed upon her face.

"He's alive! Take yourself out of the way you women-folk, till we strip and rub him a bit," said Philip Barley, who had, with his comrades, been refreshing themselves with meat and drink after their vigorous exertions.

"As soon as he's dry and warm get him into bed. I've fixed a place for him in the fore-room," said Mrs. Barley, rising, and throwing Dora aft-er her into the next room.

The young man called Jake West followed them.

"There's enough to take care of him," began he, rather presumptuously. "And I wanted to ask if Dora is really going away, as I heard tell at the shore to-day."

"At the shore!" echoed Mrs. Barley. "Yes, you men get together at the shore and gossip like women-folks by the hour together. To my mind a young woman's name had better be kept chicker than that."

"It was Bayley himself said she was going away," replied West, a little maliciously.

"Well, he'd better have held his tongue," retorted Bayley's wife, shortly.

"But are you going, Dora?"

"Yes, Jake, next week."

"Where, and what for?"

"To New York, to live in a family."

"What! live out?"

"Yes. I'm to take care of the best room where they receive company, and to mend the table. There won't be any thing hard about it," replied Dora, rather doubtfully, for her lover's face expressed both wonder and disapprobation.

"Well now, Dora, what are you going to do it for? it isn't work at all, at least."

"Why, I want to see something of the world before I die, something beyond Rocky Point and Newby Beach and the three tiresome sea. That is all I ever saw yet," said the girl, wearily.

"And maybe you want to get some new friends instead of the old ones you've got as well as the sea does," said Jake, in a low voice, for Mrs. Bayley was busy in a closet at the other side of the room, and the young people were virtually alone.

"Well, I don't know that I've thought much about that, Jake."

"Think of it now then, Dora, and give me a promise before you go that you'll come back the honest girl you are now—come back and marry me. Don't you like me well enough, Dora?"

"I always did like you, Jake."

"And I love you better than meat or drink, bass; so give me your promise, or what is better, give up that crazy plan, and let us be married as soon as I can get a home ready for you."

"No, Jake, I won't give up going to New York, nor will I make any promises before I go. I feel just as if there was something splendid and surprising out in the world, and if I went and looked about me I'd find it. I can't tell you so as to make you understand; but I'm bound to go and seek my fortune, and go I must.

Jake West looked keenly into the flushed and beautiful face of the girl he loved with the blind, deep passion of his kind, and then he said:

"Dora, I'm going to Nassau in a place like York is easy found, Dora, and an easy speak. After that comes Blackwell's Island, or for them that's luckier the river and the fishes. Surprising enough, but not so splendid as you've dreamed of it, my girl."

"What do you mean, Jake?" asked Dora, turning pale and catching at his arm.

"I mean what, like it or not, Dora Bayley, when you go away from here you'll carry all that makes a man of Jacob West along with you, and it's for you to look to that you bring it back safe and sound. You haven't any right to turn out bad, Dora, for you've got my life in your hands."

"Come, mother, and you too, Dora. He's shed now, and we must be off. Come along, Jake!"

And Philip Bayley, drawing the three after him by an autocratic gesture, returned to the kitchen, where the men were already standing at the door ready to depart.

"I'll see you to-morrow, Dora, and ask your mind once more," muttered Jake, searching behind him for his hat.

"My mind's made up and won't change. I'm going," replied the girl in the same tone, and so they parted.

Following her mother into the next room, Dora bent over the gaunt figure stretched upon the bed, her eyes full of tears—it may be for him, it may be for herself.

"He's alive, mother; but how bad he looks!" murmured she.

"Yes. Some sort of a foreigner, I reckon. They think the brig was German, a Hamburg packet. Say, friend, can you speak any English?"

The sick man turned his eyes wearily toward the speaker, but made no attempt at reply. Then they wandered to the fairer face at the other side of the bed, and lingered there with a weird, anxious look needing no words to explain it.

"He wants something, mother. What is it, poor old man? What can I do for you?" And the girl bent above the pallid, haggard face upon the pillow, touched the forehead gently with her finger-tips, smoothing away the scant hair, and expressing, as plainly as words, her pity and sympathy and pity tendy to blossom into kind deeds so soon as the sufferer can make known his need.

The old man fell the spell, and both remaining some words in a tongue unknown to his hearers, he took the caressing hand in his, carried it to his lips, and kissed it with fervent gratitude.

Dora smiled, blushing a little also, and let the hand remain where it was placed; but the thin fingers that had grasped the girl's hand never ceased to watch the covering which Mrs. Bayley had deliberately drawn close beneath the stranger's chin when her daughter first bent above him.

"He is trying to pull away the sheet, mother," said Dora, in a low voice. "Perhaps he is feverish."

"Feverish! The poor fellow is struck with death, and never will be warm again, not in this world," replied the matter-of-fact woman devoid of one who knows her subject well. "They most always put a pall at the bed-clothes that way before they go."

"But, mother, he wants something done for him, I'm sure. Don't he want to rest on his breast?" persisted Dora, looking anxiously down at the dying man, who was indeed making a terrible effort to express, by gestures and muttered words, some meaning at which the young girl could not guess.

"Maybe it is hurt there. Stand away, Dora, and I'll look. You needn't," said the mother; and as Dora drew timidly back, she uncovered the sick man's breast, and examined it.

"Lor' he's got a little pouch slung round his neck, covered with oil-silk. That's what he wants to tell about. What is it, mister?"

The tone interpreted the words, and the old man replied to it by a gesture. Feebly touching the little basket upon his breast he pointed to Dora standing at the back of the room, and murmured the name,

"Senaid."

"You want she should take this and give it to Senaid, if she can find him?" asked quick-witted Mrs. Bayley, comprehending at once.

The sick man murmured something—it might be assent—and wearily closed his eyes.

"He's going, Dora. Don't stop here. It isn't pleasant, nor what you're used to, and you can't do any good. Run over to Noble's and ask Semanthy to step right in, and get Sally to come back and stop with you to-night."

So ordered the young girl, though brusque, tender though imperious, delicate though original, en, like many another woman of her class and country.

Dora obeyed without reply, and as she ran hastily across the sandy barren between her father's house and the nearest neighbor's, she thought more, it must be confessed, of Jake West's parting words than of the dying man she left behind her.

Sally Noble willingly returned with Dora, and the two girls went immediately up stairs, leaving their mothers to watch by the dead, and their last offices in which such women appear to be but mysterious and solemn delight.

The husband having Mrs. Bayley stood beside her daughter's bedside in the early dawn, the little oil-silk pouch that had hung around the dead man's neck in his hand.

"Here, Dora, wake up! I've brought you what the old man wanted you to keep for Senaid. You've got a right to open it yourself, so I left it for you. Here's the scissors."

And Dora, a little less curious than her mother, sat sleepily up on her bed, and patiently first the oil-silk bag and then a soft leather one within it. A white, round, or rather pear-shaped something, the size of a large filbert, dropped into her hand.

"What is it?" gazed Dora, poking it with the point of her scissors.

"Lawful sakes! what is it, sure enough?" exclaimed her mother, peering over at the window, and examining it by the gray, stormy light of the early morning.

"It beats me. Why, there's a hole through the neck part of it, to put a string through, I expect. Maybe it's some sort of medicine, or a charm, like, such as folks wear round their necks to keep off sickness. A string of rose-bay is the true cure, and guinea-peas will help the scarlet-rash. But I don't know what this would be good for, I'm sure."

"Nor I; but I'll put a string through, and wear it round my neck for good luck," said Dora, laughing; "and then, you know, when 'Sumuel comes, he'll see it and claim it."

"I'll tell you what would be pretty," remarked Sally Noble, who, having wakened by degrees, was now prepared to join the conversation. "Take them gold beads that your grandmother left you, Dora, and string them over with this thing right in the middle like a locket, you know. You was wishing you had one."

"So I was. Yes, that's what I'll do, and have it to wear when I go to the city next week," said Dora, stifling a sigh, and turning very pale.

Sally Noble looked at her sharply.

"So you're bound to go?" Jake thought you wouldn't."

"Jake was too sure. I'm going down stairs. Are you ready?"

And without waiting for reply Dora was gone, and the girls were left alone for neglected upon her little pine dressing-table. Sally looked at it carelessly, and tried to chip it with her thumb-nail.

"Sort o' ground glass, or maybe a shell from foreign parts," concluded she, tossing it down again.

A few days later Dora left home for her city place, and Jake West slipped for a fishing-cruise. The shipwrecked stranger was buried in a nameless grave, and his memory faded from the minds of those who had rescued and buried, or separated from them scores of years before and since the night that cast him upon their shores.

"You have a new servant, mother?"

"Yes, Edward, and a much better one than we have ever before found for her department. She is an old servant, from New Jersey. I asked Mrs. Bond, when she went down there to visit her people, to find me a nice, tidy, good-looking girl, as I was tired of waiting. She brought this one, and I am quite satisfied."

"What did you have to pay for her?" asked the young gentleman, peeling another banana. Mrs. Hautville stared.

"Pay!" echoed she.

"Yes. You spoke as if you engaged this Mrs. Bond to purchase you a parlor-maid among the other domestic stores for which you generally send into New Jersey."

"Nonsense, Edward. Mrs. Bond is a woman who sees her own, and, of course— But what is the use of trying to argue against nonsense?"

"There is none. Will you please ring the bell, mother?"

"For what?"

"The girl—what is her name, please?"

"Dora."

"No other?"

"I am sure I don't know. You might ask her," replied Mrs. Hautville, with great sarcasm.

"I will, with your permission," returned her son, as yet unwhirled. The door opened, and Dora appeared, looking hot and angry. Mrs. Hautville took a rapid and comprehensive glance at her pretty face, trim figure, and neat dress before he said,

"Dora—what is your other name, please?"

"Bayley, Sir."

"From New Jersey—what town?"

"Near Sandy Hook, Sir."

"Yes, I remember a Bayley in that neighborhood when we were fishing off Sandy Hook last year. We went ashore one night, mother, to get some fresh provisions after that gale."

"Yes, Edward, I remember."

"You stopped at our house, Sir; but it was near dark."

"You need not speak, Dora, except when Mr. Hautville asks you a question," interposed the mistress, with cold authority. Mr. Hautville raised his eyebrows with a slightly, for this tall young man was a radical, and a republican, and a stickler for human equality and self-respect, and various other obnoxious theories, which description perhaps accounts for the fact of his generally leading his home elsewhere than under his mother's roof.

Both as a son and as a gentleman, however, he always treated the mistress of that house with perfect respect, and now he only said,

"I requested Mrs. Hautville to rung for you, Dora, that you might tell James I wish him to go to the post-office and inquire for letters. Will you do so, directly, please?"

"Yes, Sir," replied Dora, and to that man again, Sir," stammered Dora, very red as to the cheek, and very tremulous as to the lips.

"Why, what's the matter, Dora?" Hautville, indignantly; but her son, begging the floor by a gesture, interposed,

"Why, what's the matter, Dora?" Hautville, indignantly; but her son, begging the floor by a gesture, interposed,

"Why not Dora? Has he been rude to you?"

"He—he—he kissed me in the entry, and I won't stand it; he hadn't any right to, and—

"Dora put her apron full of hands and a white apron to cover the burst of tears that would not be longer denied.

"Go, Dora, to your room, Dora!" ordered Mrs. Hautville; but Mr. Hautville again interposed,

"Will you be so kind, mother, as to allow Dora to remain for a few minutes longer?"

"Certainly, Edward, if you wish it; but why—"

Mr. Hautville rose and rang the bell beside the fire-place. This summons meaning coals, the factory trust in New York, hearing the scuttle, was immediately heard, and that good-looking, impudent young Irishman presently appeared.

"Put down the scuttle, James," said his master, sternly. "I have a few words to say to you upon the part of Mrs. Hautville and myself. You have been rude to this young woman, I understand."

"Why, indeed, Sir, I had no thought of it. I was just for givin' her a small salute like as how other young oman 'ould took and said 'Thank ye' for, and she—well I wouldn't wish to be mak-in threshold, Sir, but she—"

"Well, what did she do?" asked Mr. Hautville, much amused, but exceedingly grave.

"I slapped him in the face, Sir, and I don't care. I can go home again, and I had better have staid there when—"

"That will do, Dora. James, I desire that this may be the last instance of such rudeness upon your part, or I can not retain you in my service. It is not safe to conclude that every young woman likes to be kissed by strangers because some do; and my mother does not allow her maids to be annoyed in such a manner. That will do. You may go to the post-office now, and see after letters for me. Dora, there is a little present for you."

"Thank you, Sir, I don't want it," replied the parlor-maid, glancing at the bank-note with some disdain.

"Yes, Dora is all; except, Dora, I hope there are to be no more of these disturbances in the house on your account,' said her mistress, severely.

"I'm sure I hope so too," replied Dora, so simply and so ruefully that Edward Hautville could not repress a smile.

"Don't look so indignant, mother," laughed he, when they were alone. "You expressed a hope, and Dora endorsed it; how was she to know that an unmeaning 'No, ma'am,' was all that her position allowed her to reply?"

"A servant must not be educated, thoroughly trained until she submits to the etiquette of servitude," replied Mrs. Hautville, loftily.

"The etiquette of servitude," repeated her son, musingly; "what a charming phrase, mother, and quite new, too, I believe! Shall I read you the Evening Times?"

"Yes, if you please, my son," replied the mother, much pleased at the attention; and the reading was not over, when Dora appeared with some letters and papers upon a salver. She had washed her face, put on her toilet, and to put the string of gold beads with its white pendant about a neck almost as white as that.

Mr. Hautville took his letters, one at a time, from the salver, examined them in a leisurely manner, and laid them upon the table. Then he said:

"Dora, won't you light this other burner just above my head? You know how, don't you?"

"Oh, yes, Sir."

"Yes, that is right," remarked the young gentleman, watching her. "Now please put on the drop-light, and close the shade."

Dora obeyed in silence; and then, taking her salver, was about to depart.

"Stop, Dora. Dora. Please bring me a glass of water from the dining-room."

"Yes, Sir," meekly replied Dora, thinking that this thing promised a progression in great deal of waiting upon, but that the service was not disagreeable.

Mr. Hautville sipped the water slowly, and replaced the glass upon the salver.

"Thank you: that will do," said he at last, and Dora returned, leaving Mr. Hautville with her drowsy knitting and her son to his correspondence.

But after opening one or two of his letters the young man paused with the third in his fingers to say,

"Do you know, mother, I want to paint a picture of that girl?"

"What girl, Edward?" asked Mrs. Hautville, waking with a start, and sitting very upright.

"Why, this little Dora of yours."

"Dora! Paint her! Why, what can you see in that red-headed, wide-mouthed creature to attract you so wonderfully?"

"Her hair is very nice, just the color that Titian loved so much, and her mouth is none too wide for beauty. Should you object to her sitting to me for an hour a day, here at the house, of course? I want to put her into my Court of King Arthur."

"Why, if she can be useful to you in your business, of course she shall make herself so; but I hope it won't be putting silly notions in her head, and making her fit for her proper station," remarked the mother, reflectively.

"What is her proper station, mother?" inquired Edward, curiously.

"That of a servant, of course."

"But she never was a servant until this month, and she is at least twenty years old. Has she been out of her station all this time, and just found it now?" asked Mr. Hautville; and then, perceiving the tone of annoyance upon his mother's face, he added:

"Don't be vexed at your saucy boy, mother. Listen to Adelaide Wallbius's letter from Vienna. You know you always like his letters."

And without waiting for reply Edward Hautville began translating the letter of his German college friend, skipping the Kantish philosophy and skeptical queries, and dwelling upon the bits of court gossip, news, and personal details which his mother liked to hear. Among the rest came this paragraph:

"A grand deal of commotion in certain circles has been caused by an audacious and partially successful attempt to rob the pretty Russian Princess Wosowski, as she was leaving the palace after the last court ball. The thief introduced himself among the servants waiting about the carriage-door, and as the Princess advanced grasped suddenly at the magnificent necklace of diamonds and pearls about her neck. The fastening held so well, however, that he only secured the pendant hanging from the centre; but this is in itself a fortune, being no other than the great pearl called 'The Sea of Milk,' purchased in Ceylon by an agent of the last King of Oude, and sold by him to Prince Ivan Worowski, who bequeathed it as a fortune to his brother, the present Prince. This magnificent jewel is said to be as large as a pigeon's egg or a large pear-shaped, and pierced through the neck for the wire by which it hung to the necklace of the Princess. This Sea of Milk is said to be worth fifty thousand thalers; that is to say, in your money, about thirty-seven thousands of dollars, is it not? The city has been searched, the country has been searched, Europe, the world have been searched for the thief and the jewel, to which it seems the Princess attached a superstitious value, but no news of either is obtained as yet. Upon wide your eyes, then, my friend, and tell me if it is not hidden in America, this marvelous Sea of Milk, at whose loss the brightest eyes in Venice have cried themselves dim, and the sharpest detectives in the world have proved themselves but blind bats."

So ended the quotation, and Edward Hautville, allowing the letter to fall upon his knees, retreated, thoughtfully, "Open my eyes, and see? it would be very strange if it should prove so.

A few days after this sittings commenced, and Dora, in a strange flutter of delight and shame, found herself posed as the object of the handsome artist's admiring scrutiny and critical criticism. Of course she dressed herself in her simple best, and by no means omitted her solitary ornament—the string of gold beads with the singular white pendant.

"That white dress does very well, especially as it is of the shoulders, and I can arrange this crimson scarf—allow me!"

And with grave delicacy of touch the artist laid the soft folds of Indian wool about the white neck, allowing them to trail gracefully away from one of the dimpled shoulders. Suddenly he stopped.

"That is a peculiar necklace of yours," said he. "Will you allow me to look at it?"

"Oh, yes!" and Dora raised her chin and leaned a little forward, wondering why any one should need to ask before looking at any thing so obvious.

"I meant to ask if I might take it a moment," said the young man, smiling a little at the childish gesture.

Dora colored, she scarce knew why, but unclasped the necklace and laid it in his hand.

"They were grandmother's beads, and she willed them to me when she died," said she, simply.

"Yes. And this thing: what is this?" And taking the pendant between his fingers, Mr. Hautville examined it attentively, and then glanced sharply at the girl, who answered, without embarrassment,

"I don't know, Sir. Mother thought it was some sort of bead, and that it would keep off sickness."

"And where did your mother get it?"

So Dora, beginning with the stormy March night, and the wreck of the Hamburg brig, told all the story of her treasure, and at the end asked, somewhat anxiously,

"Why, is it good for any thing, Sir? or do you know any thing about it?"

"Well, Dora, I am not sure, but I have an idea that this is a very remarkable pearl, and worth a great deal of money. At present we scarcely lost in Vienna no better than this, as this appears, and it was valued at more than thirty thousand florins."

"Thirty thousand dollars!" gasped Dora, turning as pale as ashes.

"Yes. It is a great deal of money, is it not?" suggested Edward Hautville, eying her attentively.

"A great deal. And would it be mine?"

"Who is this Samuel of whom the old man spoke?"

"I don't know, I'm sure."

"Well, I think I do. Will you trust this pearl to me until to-morrow?"

"Oh yes, Sir, of course I will."

"Thank you. Now stand still, please, just as you are."

With these words artist and model assumed their relative stations, and not another word was spoken until the end of the sitting. Then Dora, taking up the bit of thread that held the Sea of Milk in its position as pendant to old Mother Bayley's gold bead necklace, restored the latter to Dora, and dismissed her with a pleasant but absent-minded nod.

Left alone for about five minutes at his picture, then glanced at the pearl in his hand, and muttered,

"By George! What a beauty the girl is! and this, if it belongs to no one else, would be a fortune for her, Stranger things have happened."

Then Mr. Hautville wrote a little note, sent it to its address, and resumed his painting.

The next day when Dora made her usual modest entrance into the studio she found the gentleman in conversation with her young master, as we may style our artist in distinction to the old masters, and was about to withdraw when he called out:

"Come in, Dora; it's all right. Take your place just as you did yesterday—there, that will do, now you have only to stand still."

And having arranged his model Mr. Hautville returned to the easel and resumed his conversation with the visitor, apparently quite oblivious of any interruption.

"And you don't know what has become of your father?"

"Since writing that he was about to visit me in this country I have heard nothing of him at all. He did not mention the name of the ship he would take or the port from which he would embark," replied the visitor, in a voice of such peculiar accent that Dora, having her eyes at liberty, turned them rather curiously upon him.

"What a handsome young gentleman!" was her mental comment, as she surveyed the olive-tinted face, with its long, dark eyes, bright red mouth, abundance of glossy hair and beard, and glancing white teeth. True, the nose was somewhat over prominent, and of that aquiline and vulgarly called hooked, and the glossy quality of the hair seemed to have communicated itself in a degree to the olive-tinted skin, and the long, dark eyes had a cunning and treacherous expression; but Dora was inexperienced both in the rules of beauty and in ethnological traits, and failed to draw the same deduction from these defects that we have already drawn, or to be as much repelled.

"You have written to Vienna, you said?" pursued Mr. Hautville, absently.

"Yes, some months since—immediately after receiving your letter, in which, in fact; but I can only hear that my father has left the city to go no one knows where."

"Very strange—very indeed!" pursued the artist, in that exasperating, dreamy tone always used by artists at their work; and then filling back a few paces to contemplated his picture with half-closed eyes and the end of his mustick pressed against his teeth.

"It turn it a little this? Yes, that will do very nicely. Like that pose, Samuels?"

"Admirable. You are a genius, Mr. Hautville," replied the visitor, beaming with enthusiasm. Mr. Hautville smiled.

"Oh no, not quite that, Samuels, not quite that yet. I had a letter from Vienna yesterday by-the-way. Nothing about your father in it of course, but an old story of a lost jewel, a pearl called the Sea of Milk."

And in the true, artistic, exasperating style, Mr. Hautville repeated, with many pauses and interruptions, the extract from his friend's letter which we have already read.

"Good thing for whoever has got that pearl, concluded he, absently.

"Capital! Capital! Thirty-seven thousand dollars you say, and a fortune to a man with by judicious management!" exclaimed the guest, rubbing his hands.

"I dare say—by judicious management—yes. Well—possibly it may be offered you for sale yet. The person who—who has it may wish—to dispose of it. You would be afraid to buy, eh?"

"Afraid? Why, then?"

"Oh, on account of this Princess What's-her-name. Suppose the jewel was much stir."

"It could never be reclaimed. We are not Germans, and there is no international search-warrant for missing trinkets," said the visitor, chuckling.

"No; ha! ha! Pretty good, Samuels. No; could not be reclaimed. Well, I'm glad to see you take it by all means, Samuels; take it, and pocket the thirty-seven thousand dollars."

"I wish that, you may be sure, Mr. Hautville. All is fair in love and war, and all is fair in business that the law does not pronounce unlawful. The law knows," replied Mr. Samuels, with an air of candor.

"I'm. Now is that crimson drapery the thing against the deep green, or Genevieve's robe—to use see."

And Mr. Hautville became so absorbed in his work that, when his visitor rose to leave, he only said,

"Going, Samuels? Well, let me know if you get hold of The Sea of Milk, won't you?"

Yes indeed, Mr. Hautville, you shall have the first chance of securing it, you may depend," smiled Mr. Samuels, and so departed.

For a few moments Mr. Hautville continued to paint in silence. Then he laid aside brush and pallet, saying,

"Dora, sit down in this chair. I have something to say to you."

Dora obeyed silently and in wonder, while the artist quietly continued,

"Dora, Dora, is named Samuel Samuels. He is a German Jew, and deals after a blind fashion in jewels and other valuables. I have had transactions with him, and a year or more ago he came to offer me some antique emerald cameos which he said his father had written from Vienna to mention to him. I declined the jewels, and some time since I sent to inquire after them. Samuels came to inform me that he could get no things of the kind, but that he would keep his eye on his way to this country, as he had been for some time arranging to come.

"Yesterday, when you told me your story, it occured to me at once that this old man with Jewish features, wrecked in a German vessel, speaking no English but one word, Samuel, and conceiving upon his person a jewel of such value as the pearl you intrusted to my care, was very likely to be the friend Samuels's missing parent. I sent for him to-day and questioned him in your presence with the view of settling this question. Dora, you have behaved very well, and to my own satisfaction, and the result is glad things."

"The robber of the Princess Worowski, afraid to retain his booty, sold it for a trifle to this old Jew, just about to leave Germany on his country on a visit to his son. The old sinner succeeded in hiding it, and escaping with it, but took the precaution to write to Samuels that out of the vessel and port he selected. A quick retribution, or an unlucky fate, overtook him upon the American coast, and you know the rest."

"Oh, Sir! And he did look so like the gentleman that was here just now! The hooked nose and all!" cried Dora, clasping her hands in astonishment.

"Did he? very probably. Well now, Dora, here comes the best probably. And it is one for you to settle. Supposing my theory to be correct, our old friend Samuels senior evidently desired to have this Sea of Milk, the jewel in the shape of a pearl, conveyed to his son, young Samuels. Now, is that the best thing for us to do with it? It is a genuine pearl, by-the-way. I ascertained that last night, and is worth perhaps fifty thousand dollars."

"Of course, Sir, I will give it to the gentleman. I should never think of keeping it, if it was worth twice fifty thousand dollars," exclaimed Dora, in some heat.

"That would be a hundred thousand dollars, Dora," said Mr. Hautville, coolly. "But you are quite right so far. Well, then, it is to Mr. Samuels we are to give the pearl?"

"Why, yes, Sir."

"But what about the Princess Worowski?"

"Oh!" exclaimed Dora, and then considered a little. "But won't Mr. Samuels give it back to her if you tell him all about, Sir?" asked she at length.

"Did he talk like it?" asked Hautville, quietly. Dora shook her head and sighed a little impatiently. "I wish—" began she, and then, less petulantly,

"Would you be so kind, Sir, as to send it back to those who have a right to it?"

"And get the reward offered for finding it? That is not a bad idea, especially if it is done quickly," said Hautville, coolly.

"Why quickly, Sir?"

"Because the lapidary to whom I showed it last night proposes to buy it from me at his door and a few sparkling scales will be all that remains of the thousands of Milk. Some pearls, and especially unusually large ones, ran a trick of crumbling away in this fashion, and my friend the lapidary suspects that this is one of them. But after we have returned it to the Princess Worowski and got the reward—"

"Why, Sir, as you think I would take a reward for giving up a stolen pearl, and never tell that it was rotten!" exclaimed Dora, rising, with scarlet cheeks.

"Wouldn't you?" asked Hautville, looking at her curiously.

"Of course I wouldn't, Sir; and, once for all, I wish you'd take this pearl and do whatever you think right with it. I never want to see it again; and I'm going home this morning."

"Going home, Dora? What's that for?"

"To see an honest man. There's one lives there, and I know he is."

She began to cry, and Mr. Hautville crossed the room and stood beside her.

"Dora, forgive me. I was only trying you, child; sounding your heart, to see if it was as true as your face. I know it now, as I believed it before. Dora, will you stay here and—be my wife?"

"Your wife, Sir?"

"Yes. I have no foolish prejudices to overcome, thank God, and I recognize a true and beautiful soul under a dress as quickly as under a silk one. Dora, will you let me educate you and make you my wife?"

Dora sat with head bent face flushed, her eyes downcast for a moment, then frankly said:

"It is a great temptation, Sir, and it is very kind of you; but I cannot not, if you please."

"Rather not marry me, or rather marry some one else?" asked Mr. Hautville, quietly.

"I am sorry, Sir, but I do not. I did about going home to find an honest man, for I believe now that you are one—"

"Thank you, Dora—"

"But there is a man, Sir, that has wanted to marry me for a great while, and I—"

"Well, Dora?"

"And I didn't know how much better I liked him than I can any body else till now."

"And he is that man, Dora?"

"Yes, Sir."

"Then, in God's name, child, go home and marry him; and be as happy as such a man as such a woman ought to be.

"Thank you, Sir, and like enough you will be glad, by-and-by, I didn't take you at your word. I shall never tell any body about it, Sir."

"I don't suppose you will, Dora. I have just that faith in you. Dora, I hope he will value you as I should have done, and honor you as I do."

"He loves me, Sir," said Dora, naively, and so the conversation ended.

A few months later Edward Hautville came, an honored guest, to Dora Bayley's wedding, and Mr. Samuels, in the course of the evening he spoke to the bride apart:

"Dora, you showed your own good sense when you refused the pearl, and refused me also. You will be happier with him than I could have made you."

"And you are happier, too, Sir," said Dora, shyly. "And he nor any one else has ever known."

"I you promised they should not, Dora, and I never imagined you could break your word. The pearl belongs to the end of the Sea of Milk. I communicated, through a friend in Vienna, with the owners of the lost pearl, who were glad enough to hear of it, and offered to pay the reward, which I refused for you. The pearl was sent out carefully sealed in a little box. It arrived, was opened, and found to be—as you opened the box and found—what do you suppose?"

"The pearl, Sir?"

"A little white powder, Dora—nothing more. The Sea of Milk and the thirty-seven thousand dollars it represented had crumbled to a pinch of white dust—nothing more. And now, good-night; and God bless you!"

HOME AND FOREIGN GOSSIP.

A MODERN case of trance is reported from Burlington, Wisconsin. A little girl twelve years old had a severe attack of measles and diphtheria. She has nearly recovered, when, one day, she called her father to her bedside and told him she was going to sleep, and that she would sleep for a long, long time. She said she would look as though she was dead, and she made the father promise that he would not bury her, which promise it may readily be supposed has been faithfully kept. Soon after making the request, the child to all appearance was quietly and peacefully into her last sleep. As it was supposed she was dead, the body was embrowned and placed in a coffin. Yet the body retained the signs of death, except the pulse, the heart, and the respiratory organs had ceased to perform their natural functions. Thousand many days in this condition a vein was opened, and the blood flowed naturally. Her case was considered by the medical faculty as most remarkable. All efforts to resuscitate her were in vain; yet her friends did not wholly despair until twenty days had passed, when indications of death appeared. It is now believed that the girl lay in a trance for at least twelve days before death ensued, and that had she been kept in her bed instead of her coffin she would have recovered.

The Boston Public Library is now said to rank second among American libraries in the number of volumes. In August, 1868, it contained 164,000 volumes and about 30,000 pamphlets, a number only exceeded in this country by the library of Congress. It is also rapidly increasing. The last report of the trustees gives some facts indicating the comparative popularity of reading authors among the reading population of Boston. In the following table the first column gives the number of volumes of a given author owned by the library, and in the second the number of times they were borrowed during 1868:

Dickens	341	4777
Scott	321	1677
Cooper	177	6417
Bulwer	171	1066
Charles Reade	164	1000
Thackeray	155	809
Hawthorne	132	2423
Mrs. Heatz	118	3670
G. P. R. James	116	1520
Charles Lever	102	1166
W. O. Stoddard	100	1702
George Elliot	84	1237
Muhlbach	79	2577
Miss Muloch	119	1001

Among the poets Shakspeare, Longfellow, Scott, and Tennyson seem to be the most popular. Mrs. Stowe, Mosley, Bancroft, Prescott, and Abbott among historians. Barnard Taylor leads all names of travellers, Agassiz's "Brazil" following close upon him. Dr. Hayes next, and then Dr. Kane and Livingstone. Muskie's books were often taken out, as was Hugh Miller, and Schoolcraft. Of Dickens's books "Pickwick" and "Bleak House" had the most readers, Scott's next; of Bulwer's, "Paul Clifford;" of Cooper's, "Spy;" of Hawthorne's, "Scarlet Letter;" of Scott's, "Ivanhoe;" of Thackeray's, "Vanity Fair;" of Hawthorne's, "The House of Seven Gables." Mayo's Kentucky and Oliver Optic's [illegible] were the most popular juveniles. In drawing out references from facts like these, however, allowance must be made for the difference between the number of works issued by different authors. Thus, the writings of Scott, Dickens, and Cooper have some thirty or forty volumes of each writer to draw from, while those of Hawthorne, George Eliot, and Miss Muloch a much smaller number. Also the circulation shown is that of Boston only. But if similar statistics could be furnished by the different libraries throughout the country, and an average table made from them all, we would furnish valuable information to those deriding upon works for publication or selection for the public libraries of the country.

San Francisco is to be supplied with ice from the summit of the Sierra Nevada, in a very novel way. A party of speculators have contracted to build a wooden conduit of holding 90 or 100 tons of ice near the Pacific railroad route. From a stream on the Sierra above a flume has been run to the top of the ice-house, where the water is allowed to fall in small jets and freeze in the building below. In this manner they expect gradually to form a mass of solid ice which will fill the entire building. Won't this be a (a) ice way?

A Washington paper says that Miss Vinnie Ream has so nearly completed the model of her statue of Lincoln that its merits can be somewhat fairly judged. Although Miss Ream's abilities have been a theme for discussion of opinion in regard to this statue, it has been pronounced by some of the intimate friends of President Lincoln as an excellent likeness.

A few days ago a couple of idle fellows, bent on having some sport, strolled into a church in a neighboring city. The service was being conducted by a colored minister, and the young men thought it a good chance. But when the minister rose to preach, before announcing his text, he leaned forward on the pulpit, and looked around on his fair congregation.

"Brethren," said he, at length, "may do Lor' hab mercy on the sinners?" A long pause. "May do Lor' hab mercy on all the sisters?" Solemn pause. "May de Lor' hab mercy on de preacher? Brethren, he de doer!" The scoffers retired before the benediction.

The Siamese Twins have visited Edinburgh to obtain the advice of Professor Syme as to the practicability of severing the intercommunicating band by which they have been so long held together. After a careful examination he was strongly of opinion that such an operation would be extremely dangerous to their lives, and accordingly advised that the operation should not be performed. It is intended, however, to take the opinion of a second professor on the case.

A rope-dancer was lately performing some jaggery feats in a Bengalee theatre, when, much to the cry, "You are on fire!" arose from the audience. In case of burning stuff from one of the lighted torches had fallen on his dress, and he forgot how to act. With one foot on the iron rope and another in the air, he remained there, and the audience, seeing that he passed her hand over her clothes, and felt nothing. He then looked at his foot and cried the contrary people. She understood, and, carrying her hand to her head, rapidly clapped it there. She then continued her performance as if nothing had happened.

"They appear to have had colder weather in the Adirondacks than we have had in this region. A Western paper gives extraordinary accounts of the effects of a recent cold snap. It asserts that a jet of a marble statue was frozen stiff. It is thought it will have to be amputated. Barbers' poles, signs, and lamp-posts were frozen off. The air is so cold that in many cases it is used to cut up sausage-meat. Physicians have ordered citizens out to breathe it until the edge has been taken off; a benevolent gentleman in town is busy day and night taking the edge off."

The juvenile students of a certain Western college have demanded the removal of "certain words" applied to their classical literature fraud, and have substituted "colic-pills," as being more suited to their tastes.

The latest defense for crime, on the ground of insanity, is after this style: "A man who commits a crime is not to be blamed for it, but his wife; for how is he, sane against himself, in the second place, he was against his fellow-man, and in the third place, he sins against his Creator—and, gentlemen of the jury, you know as those three things and be a perfectly ease man!"

Are gentlemen aware of the popular interpretation given to the fashionable queue worn by the ladies? Report says that this solitary ringlet, which floats from so many waterfalls, is a notification on the part of the wearer that they are not engaged. If it is certain that the queue is supposed to be every desirous of getting spliced at once—if only moderately long, it shows that only good offers will be entertained—but extremely long, or short, signifies that the wearer is very particular as to whom she accepts, but nevertheless shows that she is not yet engaged.

JURORS LISTENING TO COUNSEL, SUPREME COURT, NEW CITY HALL, NEW YORK.—DRAWN BY WINSLOW HOMER.—[SEE PAGE 122.]

WAITING FOR CUPID—A SPINSTER'S REVERIE.

ST. VALENTINE'S DAY.

VALENTINE'S DAY is now almost every where a much degenerated festival, the only observance of any note consisting merely of the sending of jocular anonymous letters to parties whom one wishes to quiz, and this confined very much to the humbler classes. The approach of the day is now heralded by the appearance in the printsellers' shop-windows of vast numbers of missives calculated for use on this occasion, each generally consisting of a single sheet of post-paper, on the first page of which is seen some ridiculous colored caricature of the male or female figure, with a few burlesque verses below. More rarely, the print is of a sentimental kind, such as a view of Hymen's altar, with a pair undergoing initiation into wedded happiness before it, while Cupid flutters above, and hearts transfixed with his darts decorate the corners. Maid-servants and young fellows interchange such epistles with each other on the 14th of February, no doubt conceiving that the joke is amazingly good; and, generally, the newspapers do not fail to record that the postmen delivered so many hundred thousand more letters on that day than they do in general. Such is nearly the whole extent of the observances now peculiar to St. Valentine's Day.

At no remote period it was very different. Ridiculous letters were unknown; and, if letters of any kind were sent, they contained only a courteous profession of attachment from some young man to some young maiden, honeyed with a few compliments to her various perfections, and expressive of a hope that his love might meet with return. But the true proper ceremony of St. Valentine's Day was the drawing of a kind of lottery, followed by ceremonies not much unlike what is generally called the game of forfeits. Misson, a learned traveler of the early part of the last century, gives apparently a correct account of the principal ceremonial of the day.

"On the eve of St. Valentine's Day," he says, "the young folks in England and Scotland, by a very ancient custom, celebrate a little festival. An equal number of maids and bachelors get together; each writes their true or some feigned name upon separate billets, which they roll up, and draw by way of lots, the maids taking the men's billets, and the men the maids'; so that each of the young men lights upon a girl that he calls his valentine, and each of the girls upon a young man whom she calls hers. By this means each has two valentines; but the man sticks faster to the valentine that has fallen to him than to the valentine to whom he is fallen. Fortune having thus divided the company into so many couples, the valentines give bulls and treats to their mistresses, wear their billets several days upon their bosoms or sleeves, and this little sport often ends in love."

WAITING FOR CUPID—A BACHELOR'S REVERIE.

In that curious record of domestic life in England in the reign of Charles II., Pepys my wife, we find some notable illustrations of this old custom. It appears that married and single were then alike to be chosen as a valentine, and that a present was invariably and necessarily given to the choosing party. Mr. Pepys enters in his diary, on Valentine's Day, 1667: "This morning came up to my wife's bedside (I being up dressing myself) little Will Mercer to be her valentine, and brought her some written verses, blue paper in gold letters, done by himself, very pretty; and we were both well pleased with it. But I am also this year my wife's valentine, and it will cost me £5; but that I must have laid out if we had not been valentines." Two days after he adds: "I told my wife Mrs. Pierce's little girl is my valentine, she having drawn me: which I was not sorry for, it ending me of something more that I must have given to others." But here I do first observe the fashion of drawing mottoes as well as names, so that Pierce, who drew my wife, did draw also a motto, and this girl drew another for me. What mine was, I forget; but my wife's was "Most courteous and most fair," which, it may be used, or an anagram upon each name, might be very pretty." Noticing, soon after, the fact that one of the celebrated Miss Stuarts who became Duchess of Richmond, he says: "The Duke of York, being once her valentine, did give her a present worth £800: and my Lord Mandeville, her valentine this year, a ring of about £300." These presents were undoubtedly given in order to relieve the obligation under which the being drawn as valentines had placed the donors. In February, 1668, Pepys notes in Audience: "This evening my wife did with great pleasure show me her stock of jewels, increased by the ring she hath made lately, as my valentine's gift this year, a Turkey-stone set with diamonds. With this, and what she had, she reckons that in her purse now hundred and fifty pounds' worth of jewels of one kind or other; and I am glad of it, for it is fit the wretch should have something to employ herself with." The reader will understand wretch to be used as a term of endearment.

Notwithstanding the practice of relieving, there seems to have been a disposition to believe that the person drawn as a valentine had some considerable liking for the person drawing the associate of the party in wedlock. At least, we may suppose that this idea would be gladly and easily arrived at, where the drawing of names was at all slightly from other considerations. There was, it appears, a prevalent notion among the common people, that this was the day when the birds selected their mates. They seem to have imagined that an influence was inherent in the day, which rendered in some degree irresistible the bent of choice by which any youth or maid was now led to fix his attention on a person of the opposite sex. It was apparently in accordance with that first unnatural person of the other sex whom one met on St. Valentine's morning in walking abroad, as the destined wife or a destined husband. Thus Gay makes a rural dame remark:

"Last Valentine, the day when birds of kind
Their pairings take (and others clapping find),
I early rose just at the break of day,
Before the sun had chased the stars away:
A-field I went, amid the morning dew,
To milk my kine (for so should housewives do).
Thrice first I spied—and the first swain we see,
In spite of fortune shall our true love be."

A forward Miss in the Connoisseur, a series of essays published in 1754–56, thus adverts to other notions with regard to the day: "Last Friday was Valentine's Day, and the night before I got five bay-leaves, and pinned four of them to the four corners of my pillow, and the fifth to the middle; and then, if I dreamed of my sweetheart, Betty did we should be married before the year was out. But to make it more sure, I boiled an egg hard, and took out the yolk, and filled it with salt; and when I went to bed, ate it, shell and all, without speaking or drinking after it. We also wrote our lovers names upon bits of paper, and rolled them up in clay, and put them into water; and the first that rose up was to be our valentine. Would you think it? —Mr. Bisket was up to us. I lay dead and shut my eyes all the morning, till he came to our house; for I would not have seen another man before him for all the world."

St. Valentine's Day is alluded to by Shakspeare and by Chaucer, and also by the poet Lydgate (who died in 1440). One of the earliest known writers of valentines, or poetical amorous addresses for this day, was Charles, Duke of Orleans, who was taken in the battle of Agincourt. Drayton, a poet of Shakspeare's time, full of great but almost unknown beauties, wrote thus charmingly:

TO HIS VALENTINE.

Muse, bid the morn awake,
And virtue's lover declines,
Each bird doth choose a mate,
This day is St. Valentine's:
For that good bishop's sake
Get up, and see
What beauty it shall be
Which for fortune to assigne.

But in happy hour,
The place wherein she lies,
In youthful chimney tower
Gilt by the glittering rise;
Oh, Jove! that in a shower,
As once that thunderer did,
When he in drops lay hid,
That I could her surprise!

Her canopy I'll draw,
With spangled plumes bedight,
No mortal ever saw
So terrible a sight:
That it the gods might awe,
And powerfully transgress
The globy universe,
Out-shooting every light.

My lips I'll softly lay
Upon her heavenly cheek,
Dyed like the dawning day,
As polished ivory sleek:
And in her ear I'll say,
"Oh thou bright morning-star!
'Tis I that come so far,
My valentine to seek."

Each little bird, this tide,
Doth choose her loved peer,
Which constantly abide
In wedlock all the year,
As nature is their guide:
So may it fare with me
This year, nor change for new,
As turtles constant be.

Let's laugh at them that choose
Their valentines by lot;
To wear their names they use,
Whom lidy they have got.
Such poor choice we refuse,
St. Valentine befriend:
We this like mistress may spend,
Else, Muse, awake her not.

THE JURY BOX, NEW YORK SUPREME COURT.

MR. WILSON HOWARD'S characteristic drawing on page 120 shows the pleading of a case before the jury of our State Supreme Court in New York city. The scene is laid in the New City Hall. The picture is remarkable for its delineation of character, apart from its value as a faithful representation of life in the arena of jurisprudence.

THAT BOY OF NORCOTT'S.

CHAPTER XX.

OUR INNER LIFE.

LET me open this chapter with an apology. And I mean it not only to extend to errors of the past, but to whatever similar blunders I may commit hereafter. What I desire to ask pardon for is this: I find in the attempt to place before my reader the events, small as they might be, that influenced my life and moulded my destiny. Had I not gone to this fete, for instance, had I taken my holiday in some quiet mumble into the hills during the first week in—as I have passed scores of happy hours—in the solitude of my own room, how different might have been my fate!

We all of us know how small and apparently insignificant are the events by which the course of our lives is shaped. A boy who catches at parting—a word spoken that might have passed unheard—a pressure of the hand that might or might not have been felt—a glance among all our smiling orders are revoked, and instead of north we go south. Bearing this in mind, my reader will perhaps forgive me, and at least believe him that these things are not done by me through inadvertence, but of intention and with forethought.

"So we are shunted," was what I learned to me as I awoke and found my old companion at my bedside. "You're the twenty-fifth that has 'shunted' me," he continued. "But look to it, Knabe; change is not always betterment."

"It was none of my doing, Hansel; none of my wishing."

"If you had worn the grey jacket you wear on Sundays there would have been none of this, lad! I have seen double a dozen years in the yard as you have been in the world, and none have ever seen me in a gentleman's table or walking with the master's daughter."

I could not help smiling in spite of myself at the thought of such a mesalliance.

"Nor is there need to laugh because I speak of dancing," said he, quickly. "They could tell you in the Rathhaus there are worse performers than Hans Spitzer; and if he is not an Englishman, he is an honest Austrian!" This he said with a sort of defiance, as if he expected a reply.

"I have told you already, Hans," said I, soothingly, "that you need not fear that I am to be transferred from the yard. I was very happy there—very happy to be with you. We were good-tempered in the past, as I hope we may be good friends in the future."

"That can scarcely be," said he, sorrowfully. "I can have no friend in the man I must see 'Sir' to. It's Herr Ignaz's order," went he on, "he sent for me this morning, and said, 'Hansel, when you are ashore, tell Knabe to come by, he said Herr von Owen—' never forget he is your superior; and though he once worked with you in the yard, he is now your boss, and friend—" he will do so no more."

"But, Hans, my dear old friend—"

"Ja, ja," said he, waving his hand. "'Jetzt ist nus.' It is all over now. Here's your rockling, and the cup of coffee; and when you've told the gentlemen that the guitar you bade me give her ten, but four was plenty—that makes seventeen six-and-sixty: and you've twenty-three and fifteen—four kreutzers is that packet, and so Leb wohl." And with a short wave of his hand he turned away; but as he left the room I saw that the other hand had been drawn over his eyes, for Hansel was crying and I buried my face in the clothes and sobbed bitterly.

My orders were to present myself at Herr Ignaz's private office by noon. Careful not to presume on what seemed at least a happy turn in my destiny, I dressed in my everyday clothes, studious only that they should be clean and well brushed.

"I had forgotten you altogether, boy," said Herr Ignaz, as I entered the office, and he went on closing his desk and his iron safe before leaving for dinner. "What was it I had to say to you? Can you help me to it, lad?"

"I'm afraid not, Sir; I only know that you told me to be here at this hour."

"Let me see," said he, thoughtfully. "There was no complaint against you?"

"None, that I know of, Sir."

"Nor have you any to make against old Hansel?"

"Far from it, Sir. I have met only kindness from him."

"Ach, wait, wait," said he. "I believe I am coming to it. It was Sara's doing. Yes, I have it now. Sara said you should not be in the yard; that you had now well brought up and cared for. A young girl's fancy, perhaps. Your hands were white. But there is more bad than good in them. Men should be in the station they're fit for; neither above nor below it. And you did well in the yard; ay, and you liked it?"

"I certainly was very happy there, Sir."

"And that's all one strives for," said he, with a faint sigh; "to be at rest—to be at rest: and why should one change, boy?"

"I am not seeking a change, Sir. I am here because you bade me."

"That's true. Come in and eat your soup with us, and we'll see what the girl says, for I have forgotten all about it."

He opened a side door which led by a narrow stair into a back street, and shuffling along, with his hat drawn over his eyes, made for the little garden at the back, unlocked the gate, and to his door. This he unlocked, and then bidding me follow, he ascended the stairs.

The room into which we entered was furnished in the most plain and simple fashion. A small table, a square chest and some common ware, stood ready for dinner, and a large loaf on a wooden platter occupied the middle. There was no sign of any other but the old man who speedily arranged a third place, muttering to himself the while, but what I could not catch.

At this moment the door to the Fräulein entered. She was dressed in a sort of brown serge, which, though of the humblest tissue, showed her figure to great advantage, and fitted to perfection, and designed the graceful lines of her shoulders and her taper waist to great advantage. She saluted me with that frank and pretty smile, and said: "You are come to dine with us?"

"If there be enough to give him to eat," said the old man, gruffly. "I have brought him here, however, with other thoughts. There was something said last night—what was it, girl?—something I was to tell you: do you remember it?"

"Here is the soup, father," said she, calmly.

"We'll bethink us of these things by-and-by." There was a sharpness in the tone of command that she said, the tone of one who asserted a certain supremacy, as I was soon to see she did in the household. "Sit you, Herr von Owen," said she, pointing to my place; and her words were uttered like an order.

In perfect silence the meal went on; a woman-servant entering to replace the soup by a dish of boiled meat, but not otherwise waiting on us, for from time to time we drew plates and served us with fresh ones; an office I would gladly have taken from her, and indeed essayed to do, but at a glance I perceived that there was no room, taking, I sat down again, and, unmindful of my presence, they soon began to talk of business matters, in which, to my astonishment, the young girl seemed thoroughly versed. Cargoes of grain for Amsterdam and for use in house were now to be transferred to some other. There were large orders from France for staves, to meet which some one should be at once dispatched into Hungary. Hemp, too, was wanted for England. There was a troublesome litigation with an Insurance Company in Hamburg, which was evidently going against the House of Oppovich. So unlike was all this the tone of dinner conversation I was used to that I began to wonder, however, how they could devote the hour of social enjoyment and relaxation to details so perplexing and so vulgar.

"There is a large affair of the leakage, too," cried Herr Ignaz, setting down his glass before drinking; "I had nigh forgotten it."

"I remember, father this morning," said the girl, gravely. "It is better it should be settled at once, while the exchanges are in our favor."

"And pay—pay the whole amount!" cried he, angrily.

"Pay it all," replied she, calmly. "We must not let them suppose, father, that we have friends here," and she laid emphasis on the word, "that would not be grieved to see you get the name."

"Twenty-seven thousand gulden!" exclaimed he, with a quivering lip. "And how am I to save money for you, Lowzy, girl, with losses like these?"

"You forget, Sir, we are not alone," said she, proudly. "This young Englishman can scarcely feel interested in these details." She arose as she spoke, and, taking up a pack of cards that lay on the table, and then served us with coffee; the whole done so unobtrusively and in such quiet fashion as to leave the observer appear a routine that could not call for remark.

"The Diebaut will not take our freight," said he, suddenly. "There is some combination against us there."

"I will look to it," said she, coldly. "Will you try these figs, Herr von Owen? Fiume, they say, rivals Smyrna in purple figs."

"I will have no more to do with figs or olives either," cried the old man. "The Englishman bent you down to the lowest price, and then refuse your cargo for one damaged crate. I have had no luck with England."

Unconsciously, I know it was, his eyes turned fully on me as he spoke, and there was a defiance in his look that seemed like a personal challenge.

"If he does not mean it for you," said the Fraulein, gently, in my ear, and her voice gained a softness I did not know it possessed.

Perhaps the old man's thoughts had taken a very gloomy turn, for he leaned his head on his hand and seemed sunk in reverie. The Fräulein arose quietly, and beckoning me to follow her, moved noiselessly into an adjoining room. This chamber, furnished with more taste than I had a piano, and some books and prints lay about on the tables.

"My father likes to be left alone at times," said she, gravely; "and when you know us better you will learn to see what these times are." She took up some needlework she had been engaged on, and sat down on a sofa. I did not well know whether to take my leave or keep her company, and while I hesitated she appeared to read my difficulty, and said, "You are free, Herr von Owen, if you have any engagement."

"I have none now," said I; then remembering that the speech might mean to dismiss me, I added, hastily, "but it is time to go."

"Good-by, then," said she, making me a slight bow; and I went.

CHAPTER XXI.

THE OFFICE.

On the following day the cashier sent for me to say it was Herr Oppovich's wish that I should be attached to some department in the office till I had fully mastered its details, and then be transferred to another, and so on till I had fully acquainted myself with the whole business of the house. "It's an old caprice of Herr Ignaz's," said he, "which repeated failures have not yet discouraged him with. You're the fifth he has tried to make a supervisor of, and you'll follow the rest."

"Is it so very difficult to learn?" asked I, modestly.

"Perhaps to one of your acquirements it might not," said he, with quiet irony; "but for a slight example: here, in this office, we correspond with the countries in their own language, consequently that room, they talk modern Greek, and Albanian, and Servian; there's the Hungarian group next door, bow-wunders, and then Arabs in the Lower Danube; and in what we call the Expeditions department, there are fellows who speak seventeen dialects and can't write so twelve. So much for languages. Then what do you say to mastering—since that's the word they have for it—the grain trade from Odessa, rags from Transylvania, staves from Hungary, fruit from the Levant, cotton from Egypt, minerals from Brody, and Bohemia, and woollens from Bohemia? We do something in all of these, besides a fair share in oak-bark and hemp."

"Stop, for mercy's sake!" I cried. "It would take a lifetime to gain a mere current knowledge of these."

"Not quite the finance department," said he; "watching the rise and fall of the exchanges, buying and selling gold. That's French, in that office with the blue door, could tell you's not to be picked up of an afternoon. Perhaps you might as well begin with him. His is not a bad school to take the fine edge off you."

"I shall do whatever you advise me."

"I'll speak to Herr Ignaz about it," said he; and he left me, to return almost immediately, and conduct me within the precincts of the blue door.

Herr Ulrich was a tall, thin, ascetic-looking man, with his hair brushed rigidly back from the prominent bone of his head. His whole look of life was the office, which he arrived at by daybreak, and never left, except to visit the Bourse, and late at night. He disliked, of all things, new faces about him; and it was a piece of malice on the cashier's part to bring me before him.

"I believe I have said existed, Herr Ignaz already, but, to the cashier, "that I am not a schoolmaster."

"Well, well," broke in the other, in a muffled voice, "try the lad. He may not be so incompetent; they tell me he has had some education."

Herr Ulrich then specified the various books that he from head to foot for some seconds. "You have been in the yard?" said he, in question.

"Yes, Sir."

"And is counting oaken staves the first step to learning foreign exchanges, think you?"

"I should not, Sir."

"I know whose scheme this is well enough," muttered he. "I see it all. That will do; you may leave us to talk together about it," to the cashier. "Sit down there, lad; there's your own famous newspaper, the Times. Make me a précis of the articles relative to stocks, Austrian securities and Austrian enterprises; contrast the report there given with what that French paper contains; and bring it to me finished." He returned to his high stool as he spoke, and remained to work. On the table before me lay a mass of newspapers in different languages, and I sat down to examine them with the very vaguest notion of the service expected of me.

Determined to do something—whatever that something might be—I opened the Times to find out the meaning of précis; but, totally unfamiliar, I turned from page to page without discovering it. At last, I thought I should find it by carefully examining the columns of a leader on damages for injuries incurred on the rail. None of these, certainly, were financial articles. At the head of the next column I read, Court of Probate and Divorce. "Mr. Spanks moved that the decree nisi, in the suit of Claremont v. Claremont, be made absolute. Motion allowed. The damages in this suit against Sir Roger Norcutt have been fixed at eight thousand five hundred pounds."

From these lines I could not turn my eyes. They revealed nothing, it is true, but what I knew well must happen; but there is that in a confirmation of a fact brought suddenly before us that always awakens deep reflection; and now I brought up before my mind my poor mother, deserted and forsaken, and my father, ruined in character, and, perhaps, in fortune.

I had made repeated attempts to find out my mother's address, but all my letters had failed to reach her. Could there be any chance of discovering her through this suit? Was it possible that she might have intervened in any way in it? And, last of all, would this lawyer, whose name appeared in the proceedings, take compassion on my unhappy condition, and aid me to discover where my mother was? I meditated long over all this, and I ended by convincing myself that there are few people in the world who are not well pleased to do a kind thing which costs little in the doing; and so I resolved I would write to Mr. Spanks, and address him at the court he practiced in. I could not help feeling that it was at a mere straw I was grasping; but nothing more tangible lay within my reach. I wrote thus:

"SIR,—I am the son and only child of Sir Roger and Lady Norcott; and seeing that you have lately conducted a suit against my father, I ask you, as a great favor, to let me know where my mother is now living, that I may write to her. I know that I am taking a great liberty in offering this request upon you; but I am very friendless, and very little versed in worldly knowledge. Will you let both these deficiencies plead for me? and let me sign myself,

"Your grateful servant,

"DIGBY NORCOTT.

"You can address me at the house of Hoding and Opprovich, Frome, Austria, where I am living as a clerk, and under the name of Digby Owen—Owen being the name of my mother's family."

I was not very well pleased with the composition of this letter; but it had one recommendation, which I chiefly sought for—it was short, and for this reason I hoped it might be favorably received. I read it over and over, each time seeing some new fault, or some omission to correct; and then I would turn again to the newspaper, and ponder over the few words that meant so much and yet revealed so little. How my mother's position would be affected—if at all—by this decision I could not tell. Indeed, it was the mere accident of hearing divorce discussed at my father's table that enabled me to know what the terms of the law implied. And thus I turned from my letter to the newspaper, and back again from the newspaper to my letter, so engrossed by the theme that I forgot where I was, and utterly forgot all about that difficult task Herr Ulrich had set me. Intense thought and weariness of mind, aided by the unbroken stillness of the place, made me heavy and drowsy. From poring over the paper I gradually bent down till my head rested on it, and I fell sound asleep.

I must have passed hours thus, for it was already evening when I awoke. Herr Ulrich was about to leave the office, and had his hat on, as he aroused me.

"It is supper-time, youngster," said he, laying his hand on my shoulder. "Yes, you may well wonder where you are. What are you looking for?"

"I thought, Sir, I had written a letter just before I fell asleep. I was writing here." And I turned over the papers and shook them, tossing them wildly about, to discover the letter, but in vain. It was not there. Could it have been that I had merely composed it in my mind, and never have committed it to paper? but that could scarcely be, seeing how fresh in my memory were all the doubts and hesitations that had beset me.

"I am sure I wrote a letter here," said I, trying to recall such circumstance in my mind.

"When you have finished dreaming, lad, I will lock the door," said he, waiting to see me pass out.

"Forgive me; one moment, Sir, only one," cried I, wildly scattering the papers over the table. "It is of consequence to me—what I have written."

"That is if you have written any thing," said he, dryly.

The grave tone of this doubt determined the conflict in my mind.

"I suppose you are right," said I, "it was a dream." And I arose and followed him out.

As I reached the foot of the stairs I came suddenly on Herr Ignaz and his daughter. It was a common thing for her to come and accompany him home at the end of the day's work, and as latterly he had become much broken and very feeble, she scarcely missed a day in this attention. "Oh, here he is," I heard her say as I came up. What he replied I could not catch, but it was with some earnestness she rejoined:

"Herr von Owen, my father wishes to say that they have mistaken his instructions regarding you in the office. He never expected you could at once possess yourself of all the details of a varied business; he meant that you should go about and see what branch you would like to attach yourself to, and to do this he will give you ample time. Take a week; take two; a month, if you like." And she made a little gesture of friendly adieu with her hand, and passed on.

BLUE AND WHITE.

"Or all the colors, sweet Sir, what may your favorite be?"
And the lad I had burst back to life looked up, and made answer to me:
"Two colors I choose—blue and white." Then up from my throat did there spread,
Yes, to my very temples, a dye of the happy red:
For a maiden's face will flush at the lightest thing evermore;
And blue was the ribbon that bound my hair, and white was the gown that I wore.

"May I tell you all, lady sweet?" "Ay, Sir, an' it please you so."
All alone with each other we sat in the fire-light's glow:
He the lad whom our men had found nigh dead close by,
And the mother that bare him could never have cursed him more gently than I.

"Sister—nay, pardon my freedom—but oh, you have been so good,
I well could wish that I owed you the duty of brotherhood;
Crown your sweet favors with this, the greatest of all, and be
As tender to her I love as you have been tender to me."

Then over every sense there swept down a terrible, dim
Dusk of oblivion, as there I sat, and listened to him.
Silence a moment, and then, by the helping of God
His grace,
I answered: "Yes, brother, I will," with a very smile on my face.

"Now, God bless you, sister. Listen. A year ago
She gave herself to me for ever and ever, and so,
One sweet autumn eve, in the time of the falling of dew,
I crowned her little white hand with a circlet of sapphires blue.

"She, my own lady, taketh ever the most delight
In the calm virginal colors—the delicate blue and white:
And, sister, mine eyes were soothed with a sense of lovesome repose
When I saw you this evening wear the hues that my darling chose."

Oh, but the bonnie blue ribbon pressed on my head all too tight!
Oh, but my heart beat wild beneath its virginal white;
Oh, but the hours were long as I knelt in the dusk alone,
Moaning: "My Father, teach me to say but, 'Thy will be done.'"

THE MERCANTILE LIBRARY, NEW YORK.

THE Mercantile Library in this city has now 100,000 volumes, embracing the best works on every topic. About 10,000 volumes are added yearly. Popular works are largely duplicated; often 200 copies of a popular novel are purchased. All English books of interest to general readers, or of special value, are imported as soon as published. The yearly income of the Library Association is $60,000, and it holds real estate valued at $500,000; it has $150,000 worth of books. The number of stockholders is 2000, and there are 10,000 members. The Reading-room is supplied with 3000 books of reference and 400 periodicals, foreign and domestic.

The Association began its career in 1820; it grew out of a meeting in the Tontine Coffee House of a number of clerks who felt the importance of a society for the promotion of the intellectual improvement of their class. The Library was first opened at 49 Fulton Street. In 1826 it was removed to Cliff Street, where it occupied rooms in Harper & Brothers' publishing house. Then the Clinton Hall Association was organized, and erected the building on the corner of Nassau and Beekman streets, now occupied by the Nassau Bank. Here the Library grew and prospered until the purchase, in 1854, of its present and more eligible quarters up town. We hope that ere long the Association will be able to erect a building more suited to its wants—one which will do New York city as much credit as the magnificent and stately edifice recently erected by the Brooklyn Mercantile Library Association does to Brooklyn.

HUMORS OF THE DAY.

TEN MOVEMENTS—Grave digging.

HOW TO CURE A COLD—Swallow the oven.

NOVEL PROPOSAL.

ALGERNON. "Is that little Skye-terrier yours?"
LUCRETIA. "Yes, it is."
ALGERNON. "Do you know the saying, 'Love me, love my dog?'"
LUCRETIA. "Yes."
ALGERNON. "Do you agree with its philosophy?"
LUCRETIA. "Oh yes!"
ALGERNON (after a moment's pause). "By Jove, I love your dog awfully!"
He was accepted.

CURIOUS STATISTICS.

"It has been estimated that the cost of washing linen that might just as well be worn two days longer, amounts to nearly in this country to more than defray the expenses of the American Board of Foreign Missions.

"The expense of buttons on the backs of our coats, where they are of no use earthly, is equal to the support of our orphan asylums.

"The amount of time lost in the case of old boots thrown aside, whilst a little more wear is left in them, is longer, by more than enough to buy a flannel nightgown for every baby in the land. Also, that the cost of every inch on the full chirt-collars of our young men, is equal to the sum necessary to put a Bible in the hands of every Patagonian giant."

PERSONS FOR A GIRL OF THE PERIOD—A bottle of olives, and a box of cigars.

The Boston Transcript says: "The hand that can make pie is a cushional feast to the husband that marries it."

"SLEEPING IN CHURCH."

One of our preachers ventilated seeing six hundred people asleep at one time while in church.

O'er their devoted heads,
While the law thunderers,
Smugly and heedlessly
Snored the six hundred,
Great was the preacher's theme,
Screwed on was all the steam,
Neither with shout nor scream
Could he disturb the dream
Of the six hundred.

Terrors to right of them,
Terrors to left of them,
Terrors in front of them—
Still itself plundered
Of its most awful things
Wide-minded preacher flings—
Kindly he spoke, and well
All he dared dare to tell,
Well was his hardest yell
Fearful and thundered:
Yet, eyeing—the truth to tell—
Neither for heaven nor hell
Snored the six hundred.

Still with redoubled zeal,
Still he spoke onward,
And, in a wild appeal,
Striking with hand and heel—
Making the pulpit reel,
Shaken and thundered—
Called them the church's foes—
Threatened with hand and heel—
Faintly the answer rose
(Proof of their sweet repose)
From the united nose
Of the six hundred.

A young lady in the course of a lecture, the other day, said, "Get married, young men, and be quick about it, too. Don't wait for the millenniums, hoping that the girls will turn to angels before you can trust yourself to one of them. A pretty thing you would be alongside of an angel, would you not, you brute?"

Adam was the only man who never tantalized his wife about "the way mother used to cook."

ST. VALENTINE'S DAY, 1869.

THE ENGLISH CUPID.

THE AFRICAN CUPID.

THE YANKEE CUPID.

THE IRISH CUPID.

THE FRENCH CUPID.

THE GERMAN CUPID.

A gentleman once thus addressed a letter to his bride: "My dearest Maria." The lady replied: "My dear John, I beg that you will mend either your morals or your grammar. You call me dearest Maria—am I to understand that you have other Marias?"

STAGE MANAGER. "John, go and see if the ballet are all dressed, for it is time to ring up the curtain." BOY returns. "About ready, Sir; got most of their clothes off."

A "MARINE PARADE"—A naval review.

POINTED ARCHITECTURE—The Cathedral of Spires.

The lovely hair my Celia wears
Is hers; who would have thought it?
She swears 'tis hers, and true she swears,
For—I know where she bought it.

A VERSE BY NATURE'S POET—The uni-verse.

A GRATE WORK—Repairing a stove.

The following touching lines are inscribed on a tombstone in a country church-yard in this State:

Died, when years and life were juvenile,
Of the whooping-cough, our Tyrone.

A LEARNED FISH—The re(a)d herring.

Kate was talking glowingly of "love-apples."
"That's strange!" exclaimed Charlie, feeling accepted lover. "Why should love be associated with apples? On the contrary, I thought love always went in pairs."
Kate smiled approvingly.

THE GRECIAN BEND.
Throw up the chin and out the chest;
Assume the form of the letter S:
Like a kangaroo your arms extend,
And then you'll have the "Grecian Bend."

A "PERFECT" MEASURE—Half a quarter.

Why was Mohammed like a man in church with a bad cold? Why—because his coughing (oughs) had to be suspended!

THE ICE VELOCIPEDE.

THE moment any style of locomotion creates general excitement there appears to be a tendency to put the thing on ice. At least this appears to be the case along the Hudson River. When the yacht-racing fever came on the ice-yacht enterprise soon followed at Poughkeepsie. A few days since a velocipede of the style represented in our sketch on this page was observed on the ice near Tarrytown. The frame of this velocipede is built like those which are commonly in use in this city. It has but one wheel, steered with a bar as in the land machine, but armed with sharp points to prevent its slipping. Instead of the two wheels behind are two sharp steel runners, like those attached to the ice-boats. This velocipede is propelled with astonishing rapidity.

THE ICE VELOCIPEDE.

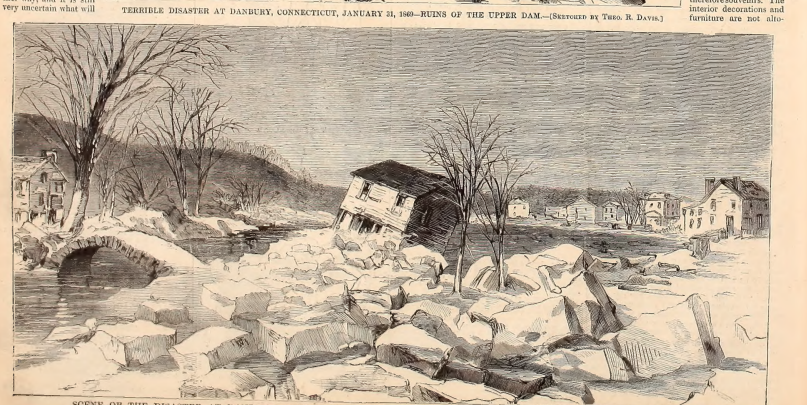
THE DANBURY DISASTER.

THE city of Danbury, Connecticut, was the scene of a frightful calamity on the evening of Sunday, January 31. The city is supplied with water from reservoirs five miles distant, and 250 feet above the level of the river which runs through the town. Some four months ago a break was discovered in the upper dam, but was neglected. Suddenly, just after the bells had ceased ringing for church on the Sunday evening alluded to, the dam gave way, emptying sixty acres of water upon the lower and smaller reservoir, which also gave way. This immense and rushing volume of water came upon the town through the gorge above Flint's Dam, bringing with it huge masses of ice and lumber. With terrible velocity it struck the houses on Main Street near the river bank, instantly sweeping them from their foundations. Rushing down the flats along the north stream and east of Main Street it swept all before it. The water seethed and roared fifteen feet above the bed of the river; the noise of wrecked houses mingled with the screams of drowning men, women, and children; and what the water did not overwhelm was demolished by the rushing ice and timber. At Still River, near White Street, the current poured along the railroad for the distance of a mile and a half, rooting up the ties and damaging the bridge over Washing River. The blow fell suddenly upon the town, and in less than half an hour accomplished its fatal work. Thirteen persons are known to have been drowned. The entire loss of property is estimated at $100,000. Our illustration at the foot of the page shows the scene of the catastrophe where the loss of life mainly occured.

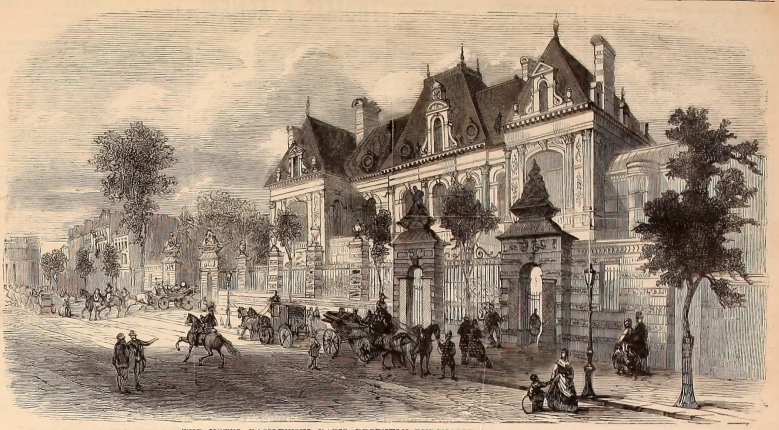
QUEEN ISABELLA IN PARIS.

AFTER all, the "affairs of Spain" have not altogether borne out either the hopes or the fears of those who prophesied of the results of the revolution. Few great events do exactly answer people's expectations either way, and it is still very uncertain what will be the course pursued by patriots or politicians. It would seem, however, that the ex-Queen is waiting for another chance, even though she can have very little hope of being restored. Their Majesties are, it is true, on most friendly and intimate terms with the French Emperor and Empress, the latter going, as it would seem, out of her way to express her profound sympathy; but there is no need to give a fictitious importance to the courtesy of the heads of the politest nation in the world to those who are their unfortunate guests and seek an asylum in their very capital. It was impossible for ISABELLA to remain at PAU, where it was at first believed she would endeavor to maintain correspondence with the frontier, and for some time the residence in Paris was uncertain; but her ex-Majesty has now settled down, and a good many of the royal jewels, or a pretty penny of the royal savings, must have been expended in the completion of the purchase of the Hôtel Basilewski. House property is enormously dear in Paris, and this hotel has been no exception to the rule; indeed, it was rumored that her Majesty was willing to be off her bargain, but matters have somehow been arranged, and the hotel is now consigned to its new tenant. It was built by Count BASILEWSKI three years ago in the new, or HAUSSMANN, district of Paris, and carte blanche was given to the architects and decorators to make it worthy of the modern portion of the capital. It occupies a fine position in the Avenue Roi de Rome, almost at the angle of the Rue Pauquet. Six gates—four large and two of smaller dimensions—give access to the court-yard, and each of these gates is flanked by two stone pillars supporting allegorical figures, from the workshops of Bloche, representing the four quarters of the globe. Allegory, indeed, seems to have presented itself to the artists in all departments of the palace, even in the decorations of the façade, where warlike figures in all branches of the military and naval services do duty. The building, which is two stories high, is composed of three divisions, the outer ones extending laterally into the court-yard; while the centre, which is furnished with a portico supported by eight columns of the Composite order, is surmounted by the heraldic shield of the Counts BASILEWSKI. The court-yard, paved with asphalte, is surrounded with evergreen shrubs, and there is accommodation for eight horses and twelve carriages. Altogether, the space on which the hôtel stands is very circumscribed, for ground costs gold in Paris, and there is very little of either to spare; so that, when the new tenants desired to extend their grounds, the adjoining proprietors raised their prices from 150 francs to 400 francs. The vestibule of the house is of white marble, supported by eight fluted columns, and the furniture is simple enough, consisting of a dozen or so of black wooden chairs, picked out with gold lines. These chairs come from the château of La Granja, near Madrid, and are therefore souvenirs. The interior decorations and furniture are not altogether completed, but they will be elegant; and the dwelling itself is not by any means an unworthy retreat even for an exiled Queen and her royal consort.

TERRIBLE DISASTER AT DANBURY, CONNECTICUT, JANUARY 31, 1869—RUINS OF THE UPPER DAM.—[SKETCHED BY THEO. R. DAVIS.]



SCENE OF THE DISASTER AT DANBURY, CONNECTICUT, JANUARY 31—HEAD OF MAIN STREET.—[SKETCHED BY THEO. R. DAVIS.]



THE HOTEL BASILEWSKI, PARIS, RECENTLY PURCHASED BY QUEEN ISABELLA.

Our correspondent in Paris sends us a graphic sketch representing the reception of Queen ISABELLA at the Luxembourg, on the 18th ult. The occasion excited great interest. "On Friday the 18th," says our correspondent, "it was rumored that the Queen of Spain was to visit the Gallery of the Luxembourg; consequently the streets in that vicinity were crowded with eager beholders of all shapes and colors. There stood the waiting throng for three long hours, their optic nerves stretched to the utmost tension, watching the two-horse cabs and gilded flunkies until 4 o'clock, when their expectation was rewarded by the arrival of the large female who bears the name of Queen. After passing through various portions of the building she made her appearance in the picture-gallery. There stood many copyists, boxes in hand, waiting patiently to behold her ladyship. As she passed through many lifted their hats, some removing them altogether, while others merely smiled by way of greeting. It was evident that she did not admire pictures by the way she hobbled along, keeping her eyes directly in front, while her escort was doing his prettiest to call her attention to some of the principal historical works. When she had got about half-way round the gallery an order was given to clear out the common humans, leaving the Queen and her escort to view the interior of the building at leisure. Myself being one of the common humans, I was turned out with the rest, and so can say no more on that subject."

MATURE SIRENS.

THAT mature sirens can be passionately loved, even when very mature, history gives us more than one example; and the first name that naturally occurs to one's mind as the type of this is that of the famous Ninon de l'Enclos. And Ninon, if a trifle mythical, was yet a fact and an example. But not going quite to Ninon's age, we often see women of forty and upward who are personally charming, and whom men love with as much warmth and tenderness as if they were in the heyday of life—women who count their admirers by dozens, and who end by making a superb marriage and having quite an Indian summer of romance and happiness. The young laugh at this idea of the Indian summer for a bride of forty-five: but it is true; for neither romance nor happiness, neither love nor mental youth, is a matter of years; and, after all, we are only as old as we feel, and certainly no older than we look. All women do not harden by time, nor wither, nor yet corrupt. Some merely ripen and mellow and get enriched by the passage of years, retaining the same delicate womanliness—we had almost said girlishness—into quite old age, and blushing under their gray hairs while they shrink from anything coarse or vulgar or impure as sensitively as when they were girls. La femme a quarante ans is the French term for the opening of the great decade beyond which love can not pass; but human history disproves this date, and shows that the heart can remain fresh and the person lovely long after the age fixed for the final adieu to admiration, and that the mature siren can be adored by her own contemporaries when the rising generation regard her as nothing better than a chimney-corner treasure. Mr. Trollope has expressed the claims of the mature siren in his "Orley Farm" and "Miss Mackenzie;" and no one can deny the instantaneousness of the chunsters and the interest of the stories.

VISIT OF QUEEN ISABELLA TO THE GALLERY OF THE LUXEMBOURG, PARIS.—[SKETCHED BY OUR ARTIST-CORRESPONDENT.]

THE LAST SNOW OF WINTER.

'Tis the last snow of winter, so pure and so white,
Coming gently from realms far away,
To apparel the earth in a garment of light
At the dawn of its blossoming day.

Then art failing so softly and tenderly now,
Embracing the world of ours,
Just before it shall put a new wreath on its brow
And become a bright garland of flowers.

Then lovest our dark world, and fain thou wouldst spread
Thy mantle of purity o'er,
That no more it may seem like the home of the dead,
But bright as the glorified shore.

But a moment thy white robes shall linger, fair Snow,
Like a dream they will vanish away:
Too spotless and pure for these regions below
Is the vesture thou givest to-day.

Old Boreas is gone, with the storm on his trail,
But his farewell our favorite will bring:
As Nature so gently withdraws this light veil
For the music and blossoms of spring.

CHICOPEE, S. C., 1869. BENJAMIN F. JACKSON.

PRANG'S AMERICAN CHROMOS are fac-similes of oil and water-color paintings by the best masters. They are artistic copies, and in most cases fully equal to the originals. — Farmers' Home Journal.

DYOTTVILLE TALBARY CASE Indigestion, Heartburn, and SOUR STOMACH. Fifty cents per Box. Medical Depot, 56 Sold by druggists. S. G. WELLING, 871 Broadway.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

BOOSEY'S DOLLAR SERIES of Popular Operas for Piano-forte Solo, with Overture and whole of Music, splendidly bound in vermilion and gold, now ready. The cheapest and most extensive catalogue of Modern Music in the world. Mailed free on application. Any work mailed on receipt of price.
BOOSEY & CO., 641 Broadway, N. Y.

THE RIGHT Study of Mankind is Man.
A PICTORIAL MAGAZINE
OF Human Science, CONTAINING
Ethnology, Physiology, Phrenology, Physiognomy, and Psychology. Their application to HUMAN IMPROVEMENT.
THE PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL
AND LIFE ILLUSTRATED,
only $2. Single numbers, by first post, 20 cents. Address,
S. R. WELLS, No. 389 Broadway, New York.
"KNOW THYSELF."
WHAT IS SAID OF IT.
"A first-class family Journal."—N. Y. Eve. Post.
"Edited with marked ability."—Christian Inquirer.
"Very instructive."—Christ. Advocate. "Always up to high standard of literature."—Hearth and Home.
"Filled with valuable matter."—Examiner.
"Deserves the success it will over the land."—Rural New Yorker. Agents wanted. SUBSCRIBE NOW.

I will print this Journal, and Harper's Magazine, Bazar, or Weekly, for $6.00 a year. S. R. WELLS.

RICH, RARE, RACY.—See Star-Spangled Banner for March. $2 for 75 cents.

CHARLES DICKENS, Esq., President of the Metropolitan Benevolent and Provident Institution.

WE announce with much pleasure that Mr. Charles Dickens has become the Chief at the annual dinner to be given in behalf of this Institution at Free-Masons' Hall, on the 15th of April next. Gentlemen who will generously give their names as Stewards, and will attend the Dinner, please address the Secretary, WALTER W. JONES,
The Savings Bank, Lambeth, London.

MAGIC, MYSTERY, & MIRTH.
Send five on receipt of a stamp, by
W. HEPBURNE, 162 Nassau St., New York.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.—For restoring the lost appetite, and removing those excretions which cause headache, pain, heartburn, dyspepsia, diseases of the Liver and Kidneys, this medicine has no equal.

HITCHCOCK'S HALF-DIME MUSIC, printed on heavy Music Paper, 4 pages, Colored Titles, music and words. Price 5 cents each. Mailed postpaid on receipt of price.
NOW READY:
Nos. 1. CAPTAIN JINKS. Wallace, Winner.
2. WON'T YOU TELL ME WHY, ROBIN? Claribel.
3. WED BETTER BIDE A WEE. Claribel.
4. BLUE EYES. Molloy.
5. NOT FOR JOSEPH. Lloyd.
6. GOOD-BYE, SWEETHEART, GOOD-BYE. Hatton.
7. I REALLY DON'T THINK I SHALL MARRY. Claribel.
8. PEARLS OF THE FAWARS. Lee.
9. CHAMPAGNE CHARLIE. Lee.
10. SKATING WALTZ. Polka Mazurka. Strauss.
11. GENEVIEVE WALTZ. Winner.
12. COME HOME, FATHER, BY BABY'S DARLING. Winner.
13. THE ENGLISH BOY'S WHISTLE. Graff.
14. LITTLE MAGGIE MAY. Rumphin.
15. MARGUERITE WALTZ. Winner.
16. HIS LOVE SHINES OVER ALL. Sacred Song. Fortee.
17. THE OLD COTTAGE CLOCK. Molloy.
18. SILVER STREAM. Claribel.
19. THE ROSE OF ERIN. Benedict.
20. ARMOLSKIM. Polka Mazurka. Strauss.
21. SHE MIGHT NOT SUIT YOUR FANCY. Lee.
22. RIDING DOWN BROADWAY. Andrews.
23. WAITING DOWN AT LOOP CHANNEL. Andrews.
24. STILL DO I LOVE THEE. Dobson.
The whole Twenty-four mailed for $1.00.
The above can be obtained at the Music Book, and Periodical Stores, or from the publisher, 25 CENTS EACH, to the Publisher. Other choice selections will rapidly follow. Sample Number.
BENJ. W. HITCHCOCK, Publisher,
98 Spring St. (New York Circulating Library Hotel).

IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT.
VALUABLE ADDITION TO GRAY'S
Botanical Text-Books.
By ASA GRAY, M.D.,
Fisher Prof. of Natural Science in Harvard University.
The Teacher, the Student, and the Botanist will hail with delight the appearance of this new and valuable CLASS-BOOK, just added to this popular Series, namely:
SCHOOL & FIELD BOOK of BOTANY.
—This consists of the "LESSONS IN BOTANY" and the "FIELD, FOREST, AND GARDEN BOTANY," bound together in one compact volume, forming a comprehensive SCHOOL BOTANY. This will be the most generally used class-book for the whole Series, adapted to beginners and advanced classes, to Agricultural Colleges and Schools, as well as to all other grades in which the science is taught.
This work supplies a great desideratum to the Botanist and Botanical Teacher, there being no similar class-book published in this country. Price, with 623 pages. Price, $2 00.
☞ Single copies sent by mail on receipt of price.
Address the Publishers,
IVISON, PHINNEY, BLAKEMAN, & CO.,
47 & 49 Greene St., NEW YORK.

"It Still Waves," That "Star-Spangled Banner."

Amateur Cultivator's Guide
TO THE KITCHEN AND FLOWER GARDEN.
THE SEVENTH EDITION of this valuable and useful work, which has met with so great favor in the past and which will, and improving. Accordingly description of the Flower Garden, Seeds worthy of cultivation, embracing over 2,500 varieties; and a Calendar, published with reference to Flowers as well as Vegetables; also directions for the choicest French Hybrid Gladiolus, Phlox Drummondii, Verbenas, Pansies, &c., &c. Price, by Mail, 25 cents. Address,
J. J. THOMAS, Editor and Proprietor of the Royal Hart. Soc. of England.)
"Please accept thanks for your valuable work. I think you have given us a good deal for the money. It is at once very useful and extensively arranged."—Hon. Wm. Parry, Cincinnati, Ohio.
"Your manual is the best work of the kind that I have found fitted for any table often wanted and always at hand."
From Andrew S. Fuller, Brooklyn, N. Y. Rep.
"There is no one in denying the fact that Washburn's Cuticlean is the best preparation thing out for the hair in this country."
Its above work comprises 150 pages. Tastefully bound in cloth, with beautiful colored Frontis. — and numerous engravings of the choicest other engravings. Price 50 cents, post paid. Paper Cover, one Colored Plate, and hundred Engravings, 25 cents. Address
WASHBURN & CO.,
Horticultural Publishers, Fitchburg, Mass.

$5000 a Year can be made by live agents, selling my new and valuable inventions. Address
J. WILLCOX BROWN, New York.

DUNHAM & SONS,
MANUFACTURERS OF
PIANO-FORTES.
WAREROOMS,
No. 831 Broadway, New York.
SEND FOR CIRCULAR.

ALASKA DIAMONDS.
The new ALASKA DIAMOND, or carbonized quartz, equal in brilliancy to the real diamond, manufactured by the Alaska factory, are now ready, enumerated for sale, and sold by us at our sixth of the cost of real diamonds, to which they are equal in every respect except intrinsic value.
LOOK AT OUR PRICE-LIST.
Ladies' Solitaire Finger-Rings, $8 and $10; Solitaire Ear-Drops, $5, $6, $10.
Cluster Finger-Rings, $8, $10, $12; Cluster Ear-Drops, $6, $12, $14.
Gents' Solitaire Sets, $18, $20, and $25 each; Gents' Studs, $5, $6, $10.
Gents' Cluster Sleeve Pins, $8, $5, $8, $10, $15, $20; Rings, $8 and $10. Gents' Cluster Rings, $6, $10, and $12.
Cluster Pins, $10 and $12; with ball, $10: Cross Pins, $6, $10, and $15: Studs, per set, $3, $5, $10.
Every piece warranted to be as represented, or money refunded. Send for circular containing the reputation for its fifty years' standing.
Orders over $25 should be accompanied with P. O. Order or Registered Letter, and the goods sent free. Exceeding that amount sent by express C.O.D., customers paying all express charges. A Letter Directed to the Factory, Alaska, Sitka, Russian America, will reach us in Safety.
The following letters are a proof that our goods are what we represent them to be, and we are receiving them daily:
MESSRS. STANLEY, WHIPPLE, & CO.—Gentlemen: Send, via Express, C.O.D., One Lady's Cluster Ring, price $10: One Set Ear-Drops, Cluster, $12: One Gentleman's Cluster Ring, $10. The Pin sent was a good article. If the articles ordered are as good as the Pin, I can open a good trade for you in this market. Respectfully yours, E. PRATT BUELL.
WEATHERSFIELD, CAL., Dec. 4, 1868.
MESSRS. STANLEY, WHIPPLE, & CO.—Gents: The Cluster Pin you sent me is received. In reply, I enclose you P. O. Order to the amount of $12, for which please send me immediately, if possible, One Pair Cluster Ear-Drops to match Breast-Pin, and oblige yours truly, J. MCPHERSON.
NASHVILLE, TENN., Nov. 14, 1868.
MESSRS. STANLEY, WHIPPLE, & CO.—Gentlemen: Enclosed find P. O. Order for $10. I like your goods very much. Will a single article do? Please answer this. Yours truly, S. H. LAIN.

THOMAS R. AGNEW,
ESTABLISHED 1836,
260 Greenwich St., corner Murray, New York,
IS OFFERING CHEAP,
FOR CASH:
COFFEES.—Green, Roasted, and Ground; all grades to suit the palate and the pocket of the million; 18c., 20c., 25c., 30c., 35c., 40c., and 50c.
TEAS.—Every body should know who they buy teas of, as all who sell coffee are not watchmakers. Mr. Agnew spent three years in China, and knows exactly what teas are and are not good in damaged goods of any kind; consequently every pound of tea sold is warranted as represented, or its money returned.
MOLASSES.—Mr. Agnew has his agent in New Orleans, an expert in the business, who ships him the choicest of the crop.
RICE.—Mr. Agnew has a house in South Carolina, who ship him the best Carolina rice in market.
FLOUR is received direct from the mills. Genesee, Indiana, and St. Louis, fancy brands in market, from $7 to $16 per barrel.
GROCERIES.—Every thing desired in families, hotels, restaurants, boarding-houses, steamships and sailing vessels is sold by Mr. Agnew, who is a live man, looking in his store every day for the good quality of a country. He is a steam-cracks compared with the old-fashioned grocer, who have been brought up in a one-horse way, or as lackeys for others, and now have to dig their wages or lose business. In a word, Agnew is as far ahead of the trade as Dexter is of the cart-horse men. He is the man for the people—quick as lightning and punctual as time.

Humbugs Exposed.—See "Star-Spangled Banner" for March.

IMPROVED ALUMINIUM BRONZE HUNTING-CASED WATCHES.
$500.
I will cheerfully give the above amount to any one who can surpass my imitation of Gold Watches. Description of metal and goods sent free on demand.
Prices, from $16 to $22.
They are sent C. O. D. with privilege. Address JULES D. HUGUENIN VUILLEMIN, No. 44 Nassau Street, N. Y.
Call and examine for yourselves.

WANTED BY A MANUFACTURING CO.—Salesmen to travel and sell by sample a new line of goods. Permanent employment. Address H. E. RICHARDS & Co., 413 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, Pa.

CHICOPEE SEWING MACHINE—First-class, and fully Warranted. Wanted. For circulars address CHICOPEE S. M. CO., Boston, Mass.

No excuse now for Papers and Magazines lying about the House.
CONANT'S IMPROVED
PERIODICAL COVERS,
for HARPER'S WEEKLY and BAZAR, sent by mail for $2 25. They bind the numbers firmly every week.
Address H. CONANT, 13 Spruce St., N. Y.
"A good thing."—New York Tribune.
MAGAZINE BINDERS CHEAP. SAMPLE-MUSIC SIZE, $1 00

MAGIC LETTERS. Wonderful and Amusing. 25 cents a Package. Clubs, $1 50 Dozen Packages. NEWCOMB, 3 Astor Place, N. Y.

$245 A MONTH. TO AGENTS. New and useful articles. Address 49 HOWARD & CO., Alfred, Me.

MAPLEWOOD YOUNG LADIES' INSTITUTE, P. Pittsfield, Mass., Rev. C. V. SPEAR, Principal. Fifty-third year begins September 15th; opens March 4th, 1869. Facilities and Location unsurpassed.

$100 to $250 PER MONTH guaranteed, by the GREAT WESTERN, 3 Astor Place, N. Y. Salaries paid weekly to Agents every where selling our Patent Reversible White Wire Clothes Lines. Call or write for particulars to the GIRARD WIRE MILLS, 561 North Third St., Philadelphia, Pa.

WANTED — AGENTS — $75 to $200 per month, to introduce the GENUINE IMPROVED LOCK-STITCH FAMILY SEWING MACHINE. The Machine will stitch, hem, fell, tuck, quilt, cord, bind, braid and embroider in a most superior manner. Price only $15. It will do the whole range of work that any $100 Machine will do. We pay Agents more Wages, more benefits, or more exclusive territory, or sell on more favorable terms than any other Machine Company. Address SECOMB & CO., PITTSBURGH, PA.; BOSTON, MASS., or ST. LOUIS, MO.
☞ Agents must not be induced upon by other parties pairing off worthless machines, under the same name or otherwise. Ours is the only genuine and really practical low-priced Lock-Stitch Machine.

WANTED — AGENTS — To Sell the AMERICAN KNITTING MACHINE.
Price $25. Capable of knitting 30,000 stitches per minute. Stitches are identical with those made by hand. Liberal inducements to Agents. Address, AMERICAN KNITTING MACHINE CO., Boston, Mass., or St. Louis, Mo.

HARPER & BROTHERS, NEW YORK,
Have just Published:
I.
Miles O'Reilly.
THE POETICAL WORKS OF CHARLES G. HALPINE (MILES O'REILLY). Consisting of Odes, Poems, Sonnets, Epics, and Lyrical Effusions which have for many years been collected in vain. With a Biographical Sketch and Explanatory Notes. Edited by ROBERT BONNER. Portrait on Steel. Crown 8vo, Cloth, $2 50.
II.
Charles Reade.
HARD CASH. A Matter-of-Fact Romance. By CHARLES READE, D.C.L., Author of "Love me Little, Love me Long," "Never too Late to Mend," &c. With Illustrations. New Edition. 8vo, Paper, 35 cents.
III.
F. Whymper.
TRAVEL AND ADVENTURE IN THE TERRITORY OF ALASKA, formerly Russian America—now Ceded to the United States—and in various other parts of the North Pacific. By FREDERICK WHYMPER. With Map and Illustrations. Crown 8vo, Cloth, $2 50.
IV.
Sir Samuel W. Baker.
CAST UP BY THE SEA; or, The Adventures of Ned Grey. By Sir SAMUEL W. BAKER, M.A., F.R.G.S. Author of "The Albert N'Yanza Great Basin of the Nile," "The Nile Tributaries of Abyssinia," &c. Unabridged. With Ten Illustrations by Hard. 12mo, Cloth, 75 cents.
V.
Rev. John L. Nevius.
CHINA AND THE CHINESE: a General Description of the Country and its Inhabitants; the Civilization and Forms of Government; its Religious and Social Institutions; its Intercourse with other Nations; and its Present Condition and Prospects. By the Rev. JOHN L. NEVIUS, Ten Years a Missionary in China. With a Map and Illustrations. 12mo, Cloth, $1 75.
VI.
Lyman Abbott.
JESUS OF NAZARETH: his Life and Teachings; Founded on the Four Gospels, and Illustrated by Reference to the Manners, Customs, Religious Beliefs, and Political Institutions of the Times. By LYMAN ABBOTT. With Designs by Doré, De Lorcelle, Penn, and others. Crown 8vo, Cloth, Beveled Edges, $3 50.
VII.
The Author of "Rachel's Secret."
NATURE'S NOBLEMAN. A Novel. By the Author of "Rachel's Secret." 8vo, Paper, 50 cents.
VIII.
Henry Ward Beecher.
SERMONS BY HENRY WARD BEECHER, Plymouth Church, Brooklyn. Selected from Published and Unpublished Discourses, and Revised by their Author. First Series. Crown, With Steel Portrait by Halpin. Cloth, $5 00.
IX.
The Author of "Ruth Halifax."
THE WOMAN'S KINGDOM. A Love Story. By the Author of "John Halifax," "A Noble Life," "Two Marriages," "Ruth Halifax," &c. Illustrations. 8vo, Paper, $1 00; Cloth, $1 50.
X.
Rev. Dr. Bellows.
THE OLD WORLD IN ITS NEW FACE: Impressions of America. By HENRY W. BELLOWS, D.D. 2 vols., 12mo, Cloth, $3 00. Vol. II. just ready.
XI.
Charles Lever.
THE BRAMLEIGHS OF BISHOP'S FOLLY. A Novel. By CHARLES LEVER. 8vo, Paper, 50 cents.
XII.
C. W. Dilke.
GREATER BRITAIN: a Record of Travel in English-speaking Countries during 1866 and 1867. By CHARLES WENTWORTH DILKE. With Maps and Illustrations. 12mo, Cloth, $2 00.
XIII.
Shirley Brooks.
THE GORDIAN KNOT. A Novel. By SHIRLEY BROOKS. 8vo, Paper, 50 cents.
XIV.
Paul Du Chaillu.
WILD LIFE UNDER THE EQUATOR. Narrated for Young People. By PAUL DU CHAILLU, Author of "Discoveries in Equatorial Africa," "Ashango Land," "Stories of the Gorilla Country," &c. With numerous Engravings. 12mo, Cloth, $1 75.
XV.
Wilkie Collins.
THE MOONSTONE. A Novel. By WILKIE COLLINS. Illustrations. 8vo, Cloth, $2 00; Paper, $1 50.
XVI.
Samuel Smiles.
LIFE OF THE STEPHENSONS. The Life of George Stephenson, and of his Son, Robert Stephenson: comprising also a History of the Invention and Introduction of the Railway Locomotive. By SAMUEL SMILES, Author of "Self-Help," "The Huguenots," &c. With Steel Portraits and numerous Illustrations. 8vo, Cloth, $3 00.
XVII.
Georgiana M. Craik.
MILDRED. A Novel. By GEORGIANA M. CRAIK. 8vo, Paper, 50 cents.
XVIII.
Ross Browne.
ADVENTURES IN THE APACHE COUNTRY: a Tour through Arizona and Sonora, with Notes on the Silver Regions of Nevada. By J. ROSS BROWNE, Author of "Yusef," "Crusoe's Island," "An American Frigate," &c. Illustrations. 12mo, Cloth, $2 00.
XIX.
Lord Lytton.
MISCELLANEOUS PROSE WORKS OF SIR WILLIAM EARLE LYTTON. In Two Volumes. 12mo, Cloth, $2 50.
XX.
THE RIGHTFUL HEIR. A Drama in Five Acts. By EDWARD BULWER, Lord LYTTON, Author of "Richelieu," "The Lady of Lyons," &c. 8vo, Paper, 25 cents. Also, as we Seem," "Pelham," "The Caxtons," "What will he do with it?" &c. 8vo, Paper, 35 cents.
XXI.
Prof. Dalton.
A TREATISE ON PHYSIOLOGY AND HYGIENE. For Schools, Families, and Colleges. By J. C. DALTON, M.D., Professor of Physiology in the College of Physicians and Surgeons, New York. With Illustrations. 12mo, Cloth, $1 75; Leather, $2 00.

☞ HARPER & BROTHERS will send any of the above works by mail, postage prepaid, to any part of the United States, on receipt of the price.

ESTABLISHED 1861.

THE

GREAT AMERICAN

TEA COMPANY

RECEIVE THEIR TEAS BY THE CARGO FROM

THE BEST TEA DISTRICTS OF

CHINA AND JAPAN,

and sell them in quantities to suit customers

AT CARGO PRICES.

The Company have selected the following kinds from their stock, which they recommend to meet the wants of clubs. They are sold at cargo prices, the same as the Company sell them in New York, as the list of prices will show.

PRICE LIST OF TEAS.

OOLONG (black), 70c., 80c., 90c.; best, $1 per lb.
MIXED (green and black), 70c., 80c., 90c.; best, $1 per lb.
ENGLISH BREAKFAST (black), 80c., 90c., $1, $1 10; best, $1 20 per lb.
IMPERIAL (green), 80c., 90c., $1, $1 10; best, $1 25 per lb.
YOUNG HYSON (green), 80c., 90c., $1, $1 10; best, $1 25 per lb.
UNCOLORED JAPAN, 90c., $1, $1 10, $1 25 per lb.
GUNPOWDER (green), $1 25; best, $1 50 per lb.

COFFEES ROASTED AND GROUND DAILY.

Ground Coffee, 20 cents, 25 cents, 30 cents, 35 cents; or, if you prefer to grind your own coffee, we sell the unground Java, Mocha, Rio, Maracaibo, Laguayra, and Costa Rica coffees.

Hotels, saloons, boarding-house keepers, and Families who use large quantities of Coffee, can economize in this article by using our

FRENCH BREAKFAST AND DINNER COFFEE,

which we sell at the low price of 20 cents per pound, and WARRANT to give perfect satisfaction.

ROASTED (unground), 20c., 25c.; best, 40c. per lb.
GREEN (unroasted), 20c., 30c., 35c.; best, 50c. per lb.

CLUB ORDER

PORTSMOUTH, MICH., August 26, 1868.

To the GREAT AMERICAN TEA COMPANY,

No. 31 and 33 Vesey Street, New York.

GENTS: The people here will not let me alone. They say I have learned the road, and that I have got to send another order for them. So here you are. It is the shape of my seventh order since the 6th of May last, making in all one hundred and forty-four and a sixty-first cents I have sent you since that date.

Hoping this will be as good as former packages, I remain Yours, &c., JOHN S. HAWKINS.

10 lbs. Uncolored Japan, Mrs. Kempton, at $1 . . . $10 00
1 " Imperial, " " at 1 25 . . . 0 75
1 " Young Hyson, A. L. Cummings, at 1 25 . . . 0 75
1 " Imperial, . . . Silas Stephens . . . at 1 25 . . . 0 75
1 " Coffee, ... E. A. Chapman . . . at 0 30 . . . 0 30
1 " Gunpowder . . . O. A. Wattrus . . . at 1 50 . . . 0 90
1 " Imperial, ... T. Taylor, ... at 1 25 . . . 0 75
1 " Young Hyson . J. Hopkins . . . . . at 1 25 . . . 0 75
1 " Coffee, ... " " . . . . . at 0 30 . . . 0 30
1 " Gunpowder . . . John Stephens . . at 1 50 . . . 0 90
1 " Young Hyson . Rev. H. Bancroft . . at 1 25 . . . 0 75
1 " do. do. . . H. Malone . . . . . at 1 25 . . . 1 25
1 " do. do. . . O. Newcomb, ... at 1 25 . . . 0 75
1 " do. do. . . Noah Campbell . . at 1 25 . . . 0 50
1 " Gunpowder . . . Archie Miller . . . . at 1 50 . . . 0 60
1 " do. . . . . A. Gale, ... at 1 50 . . . 0 60
2 " Imperial . . . . . Mrs. Rice . . . . . at 1 25 . . . 0 75
$14 35

Parties sending Club or other orders for less than Thirty Dollars bid better send a Post-office Draft or Money with their orders, to save the expense of collections by express; but larger orders we will forward by express, to "collect on delivery."

Hereafter we will send a complimentary package to the party getting up the Club. Our profits are small, but we will be as liberal as we can afford. We send no complimentary packages for clubs of less than Thirty Dollars.

Parties getting their Teas from us may confidently rely upon getting them pure and fresh, as they come direct from the Custom-House stores to our warehouse.

We warrant all the goods we sell to give entire satisfaction. If they are not satisfactory they can be returned at our expense within 30 days, and have the money refunded.

N.B.—Inhabitants of villages and towns where a large number reside, by clubbing together, can reduce the cost of their Teas and Coffees to the one third (besides the Express charges) by sending direct to

"THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA COMPANY."

CAUTION.—As some concerns, in this city and other places, have taken the name and style of advertising and doing business, it is important that our friends should in every case write our address in full, and also to put on the number of our Post-Office Box, as appears in advertisement. This will prevent all mistakes in orders from getting into the hands of bogus imitators.

POST-OFFICE Orders and Drafts make payable to the Order of

"THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA COMPANY."

Direct Letters and Orders as below (no more, no less):

GREAT AMERICAN TEA COMPANY,
Nos. 31 and 33 Vesey Street,
Post-Office Box 5643, New York City.

YOU WANT IT That "Star-Spangled Banner."

HUNTER'S GUIDE Revised, Enlarged, New Type, Secrets added, 70,000 already sold. New edition of 6000 copies NOW READY. Enlarged. 20 new Secrets added (3 cost $5 each). Also, the Hunter's Guide and Trapper's Companion tells how to hunt and trap ALL animals from mink to bear; minks traps, boats, &c.; how to tan and dress all hides, &c., &c.; to collect furs and skins. New Secrets just added. The secret receipts in this book would cost $20 anywhere else. Sent to hunt, fish, hair-dressing, furnitures, &c., &c. A NEW BOOK, well printed and bound, 64 pp. Price (post-paid), but only 25 cts., 8 for $1. Mailed free. Sold by all dealers. All wholesale newsdealers sell it. Send for circulars, etc. Wants 100 active hunter, or boy.—Only a "Quarter!"

Address HUNTER & CO., Publishers,
HINSDALE, N. H.

$15. WATCHES!! $20.

Before purchasing watches get our Manufacturers' Catalogue of Prices. Sent Free. Call or address ORODE WATCH CO., 93 Washington St., Boston, U.S.

FUN AND UTILITY COMBINED.—A new, useful, and amusing article, that must become indispensable to Housekeepers everywhere, is greatly wanted. Capital required small. Profits 100 per cent. Samples sent free for 50c. Judson Manufacturing Co., 5 Beekman St. (Room 2), N.Y. City.

The Celebrated Imitation Gold

$15. HUNTING WATCHES. $20.

THE COLLINS ORODE WATCH FACTORY.

CASES OF THE COLLINS METAL (IMPROVED ORIDE).

SPECIAL NOTICE.

Our superior Orode Watches having recently been illustrated, and worthless Watches sold in New York, Boston, Chicago, and other cities, represented as our Watches, we hereby caution the public against such frauds, and notify that we are in no way responsible for them, and to beware, and only those purchasing direct from us can secure a genuine Watch of our manufacture. We have recently greatly improved our Orode in appearance and durability, and, to protect the public from imposition hereafter, we have named it the

"COLLINS METAL,"

and we give notice that any one making use of this name will be prosecuted to the extent of the law.

The metal has the brilliancy and durability of Gold; can not be distinguished from it by the best judges; retains its color till worn out, and is equal to gold excepting in intrinsic value. All our Gentlemen's Watches are Full-Jeweled Patent Levers; those for Ladies an improved Escapement, better than a Lever for a small Watch; all in Hunting-Cases, and fully guaranteed by special certificate. The $15 Watches are equal in neatness, style of finish, general appearance, and for time, to Gold ones costing $100. These for $20 are of extra fine finish, and are fully equal to a Gold Watch costing $200. Chains of every style, from $2 to $8.

JEWELERS.—We are manufacturing all kinds of Jewelry of the Collins Metal—Pins, Earrings, Sleeve-Buttons, Lockets, Studs, Finger-Rings, Bracelets, Pencils, Charms, Gold Fellow and Masonic Pins, &c., all of the best and most elegant styles, and fully equal to gold in appearance and wear.

TO CLUBS.—Where Six Watches are ordered at one time, we will send one extra Watch free of charge.

We positively employ no agents; we would require a commissioner, as we can not possibly manufacture Watches for less than our published prices. Our regular customers, therefore, have the benefit of our lowest prices. Parties who have Watches to repair can rely upon having their orders executed promptly. The Collins Watches can only be had at our office in New York City. Customers are requested not to send money in letters, but to send Drafts or Post-office Orders to pay our part of the bill for when taken from the express office. Customers must pay all express charges. In ordering, write plainly the name, town, county, and state. Goods sent C.O.D. when desired. Please remember that our only Office is

Nos. 37 and 39 Nassau Street, Opposite the Post-Office' (Up Stairs), New York.

C. E. COLLINS & CO.

TAKE NOTICE.

On account of our immense business and depreciation of merchandise, we now offer better inducements to Agents than ever before. Any one sending us $1 for 60 printed notices will receive one of the following articles: Jaquar Watch, Gold Pen and Pencil, Jet Shawl, 18 yards Hemp Carpeting, &c. Send for Jaquar Trade Circulars and other information. Address ANDREWS & CO., 66 and 54 Elm St., Boston, Mass.

AGENTS, FARMERS, GARDENERS, and Others, send for our Circulars and Price-list of "Bob's Improved Fruit-Tree and Vine Invigorator" from Bones and Fish. Agents wanted. Will be forwarded to any part of the United States, and perfect satisfaction guaranteed. Address Bob's Fertilizer Depot, in every County in the United States. Address

J. C. BOB, Fertilizer Manufacturer, Baltimore, Md.

A MUSICAL BOX for ONE DOLLAR. The French Great Sensation: novelty, cheapness, durability, and the most delightful music; plays tongues, brilliant in tone, of the best construction, with the most recent and popular airs. Sent by mail, post-paid, Right Sided Airs. Eminently adapted for the drawing-room table. Satisfaction guaranteed in every case and performance. No. 1 size, 8 airs, $1; No. 2, 16 airs, $2; No. 3, 24 airs, $3; No. 4, 36 airs, $4. Cash must accompany the amount. Address PAUL & PAUL, No. 4 New Chambers Street, N. Y. City. Circulars sent on receipt of stamp. Wholesale and Retail. Dealers are requested to do so.

STAMMERING cured by BATES' APPLIANCES. For descriptive pamphlet, address SUMNER & CO., Box 5076, N. Y.

WANTED! WANTED!

AGENTS of either sex, in every town and village, for the Sale of the GOLDEN SHUTTLE SEWING Machine. The smallest article sold can be exchanged for a Machine. Illustrated Circulars sent free, and our choice of 200 articles upon exchange list. Commissions to Agents liberal. Address for first circulars,

S. C. THOMPSON & CO.,
136 Federal Street, Boston, Mass.

30,000 ACRES

WESTERN and SOUTHERN LANDS and Inventors FARMS. 40 to $100 per acre. Send for CIRCULAR, P. O. Box 4033, 2 Bowling Green, New York.

EVERY MAN HIS OWN PRINTER.

With one of our presses, and the material accompanying it, every man can do his own printing, thus saving much time and expense. Circulars containing full information about these presses, testimonials, &c., mailed free on application. Specimen books of type, borders, &c., &c., 20 cents.

DAVID WATSON, Act'r, Adams Press Co.,
No. 24 Park Row, New York.

GET A PACK OF THOSE MAGIC CARDS!

Price 25 cents. Address AUG. BAUER,
90 West Baltic St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

A WORLD OF THANKS IS DUE to the Botanist who first discovered the virtues of the Quillaya Saponaria, or Soap-Tree of Chile. The wonderful cleansing and purifying property of its bark gives to the Quillaya Saponaria Soap of its unrivaled efficacy as a preservative of the teeth.

25 CENTS.—Now is the time to subscribe to "MAPLE LEAVES," the best, the most popular, and the cheapest monthly published. Each number contains matter of interest and importance to every body. 25 cents will pay for it from now to the end of 1869. Sample copies sent on receipt of stamp to pay postage. Address O. A. ROORBACH, 102 Nassau St., N.Y.

GENUINE ORODE GOLD WATCH CO.,

Geneva, Switzerland,

Manufacture, on strictly scientific principles, style, finish, durability, and color (in our specialty) a no-mode Watch that is unsurpassed by any production of Gold Watches. They are manufactured with Jeweling. Hunting Cases. Ladies' size Genuine Orode Watch Co. to be perfect time-keepers, and to retain their color equal to gold. Magnificent Orode Gold Chains, $3, $6, $7, and $10. Clubs for Six Watches will receive an extra Watch free. Express Co's will exhibit the Watch, &c., when requested, on receipt of express charges both ways. Expressed where, to be paid for on delivery, except orders from California, Far Western Territories, and Texas, which must be accompanied with a Postal Money Order. Customers must pay all charges. The universal demand for our specialties have induced unprincipled persons to counterfeit our inimitable Watch with worthless metal watches that are a shame, claiming for them the virtues of our Genuine Gold Watches.

JOHN FOGRAN, Pres't Orode Gold Watch Co. Only Office in the United States, No. 78 NASSAU St., N.Y.

Steel Short Colors (Enameled White) mailed on receipt of $1 00. Direct as above.

AGENTS WANTED in every town to sell the celebrated Clipper Hectograph and Reporter—lightest draft and most durable machines made. Send for circular.

CLIPPER MANUFACTURING CO., 74 Cliff St., New York.

PROTECT YOUR LIFE AND PROPERTY WITH A

FIRE EXTINGUISHER

Send for Circular. U. S. FIRE EX. CO., 2 Dey St., N. Y.

GUNS, REVOLVERS, &c.

DOUBLE-Barrel Shot-Guns, $9 to $90; Single Shot Guns, Men's and Boys', $3 50 to $30; Musket Shot-Guns, rifle sights, $15; Rifles, $10 to $100; Pistols, $2 and upward; Revolvers, $5 to $50; Sword-Canes, $15; Gold and Silver Watches, &c. For priced catalogue send stamp to the GREAT WESTERN GUN WORKS, Pittsburgh, Pa. Established in Agents, Dealers, or Clubs. Terms C. O. D.

GET THE BEST—The NOVELTY JOB PRINTING PRESS, for Amateurs, Druggists, Merchants. Descriptive circular and specimens of work mailed free. NOVELTY MANUFACTURING CO., Cincinnati, O.

$100,000 FORTUNES.—This book shows by incontrovertible facts that magnificent properties can be acquired. Mailed for One Dollar, by A. T. PECK, Danbury, Conn.

Cure for the Blues—"Star-Spangled Banner."

EPILEPSY CAN BE CURED.—Those having the Fits, and who have tried in vain, are earnestly solicited to send for a Circular Letter of References and Testimonials, which will convince the most skeptical of the curability of the disease. Address VAN HORN LOCKE, 1 Park Row, Grand Avenue Sc., N. Y. City.

EARLY ROSE POTATO, American and Foreign Spring Wheats, Oats, Barley, Corn, Clover Seeds, Grass Seed, Rock Plaster, and Fodder Cutter. Send for the EXPERIMENTAL FARM JOURNAL. Only 20 cents. Address WM. D. LITTLE, Chambersburg, Pa.

BANKRUPT STOCK of JEWELRY to be closed out at once. 6000 pieces assorted for $100; 3000 pieces for $51; 125 pieces for $26, wholesale. Circular sent free. Address LOCK BOX 431, Providence, R. I.

GRAY'S Patent BRICK MACHINE.

Send for circular to WASHINGTON IRON WORKS, Newburgh, N. Y., Sole Manufacturers for the United States.

HARPER & BROTHERS, New York.

Have just published:

CAST UP BY THE SEA;

OR,

The Adventures of Ned Grey.

BY

SIR SAMUEL W. BAKER, M.A., F.R.G.S.

WITH TEN ILLUSTRATIONS BY HAND.

12MO, CLOTH, 75 CENTS.

☞ Sent by mail, postage prepaid, to any part of the United States, on receipt of 75 cents.

CHARLES READE'S NOVELS.

POPULAR EDITION.

CHEAP, PORTABLE, AND LEGIBLE.

PUBLISHED BY

HARPER & BROTHERS, New York.

Have just Ready:

HARD CASH.

A MATTER-OF-FACT ROMANCE.

By CHARLES READE.

WITH ILLUSTRATIONS. 8VO, PAPER.

PRICE only FIVE CENTS!

To be followed immediately by

SIMILARLY CHEAP EDITIONS

of the other popular novels of

CHARLES READE.

"HARD CASH" sent by mail, postage prepaid, to any part of the United States, on receipt of 35 cents.

HARPER & BROTHERS, New York.

FUN, WIT, WISDOM.

"STAR-SPANGLED BANNER."

"IT BEATS WEBER."—A splendid Steel Engraving, "Past and Future," sent on roller to every subscriber. The Banner is a large (mammoth) illustrated paper (Ledger size), overflowing with splendid reading, and only to cost for a whole year, and above all, a present of art (worth $2) free gratis. NOW IS THE TIME. Only 75 cents. Agents wanted. Send for circulars and 1000 new subscribers weekly. Send NOW! A splendid variation of Marsh Number, mailed for 4 cents. "Is there Room in Angel Land?" A Bright Idea. "Tens of Indigo." No Wood Pavements. Sixteen Golden Jokes, Clerical Wit, Well Played, Children and Fools, Wisdom, Wit, Humor, Incidents, and Whim, Mind Innocence, Cuckoo Sun, Borrowing Trouble, Benevolence and Advertising, Charity—All Loving, Under the Snow, Little Brown Hands, How Tastes Differ, Signor Blitz and the Indian (funny). Our Parlor Box, Pen and Scissors, Things Worth Knowing, Prestidigitation, Take away your Cocktail, Magic Figures, Everything in a Sleeping-Car, Railroad Jokes, Election Jokes, Diamond and Diamond, Our City Basket (very-end Funny Items), Literary Notices, Correspondence, Humbugs Exposed—Swindling Advertisers, Hoaxing Music-Boxes, "Butter Swindles." Humbug Papers &c., &c. Thirty-two Answers to Correspondents, and One Hundred Short Articles, all in the "Star-Spangled Banner" for January—only 4 cents. Try it. Ten cents a year, and the splendid Engraving, "Past and Future" (usual price $2), free and postpaid to every subscriber. Subscribe NOW. Only 75 cents. Specimen free for stamp. Buy it of your newsdealer. Agents supplied by American News Co., New York, and N. R. News Co., Boston, and by S. N. BROWN & CO., Publishers,
STAR-SPANGLED BANNER, Hinsdale, N. H.

ARCHITECTURAL DEPARTMENT OF THE

Novelty Iron Works,

Nos. 77 and 83 Liberty Street,
Cor. Broadway, New York.

Plain and Ornamental Iron Work of all kinds for Buildings.

WATERS'

NEW SCALE PIANOS,

With Iron Frame, Overstrung Bass and Agraffe Bridge.

Melodeons and Cabinet Organs.

The best and most powerful Harmonium for the Years.

Fifty Pianos, Melodeons, and Organs, of six first-class makers, at Reduced Prices for Cash, during this month. The new Scale Pianos are the most powerful Monthly Installments received. Second-hand instruments at great bargains. WATERS' Warerooms, 481 Broadway, New York. HORACE WATERS.

$3 WONDER.

INDUSTRY SEWING MACHINE.

Only THREE DOLLARS. Simple, practical, and durable. Makes the genuine stitch, and adapted for all kinds of plain sewing. Any child can operate it. An elegant Gift Enterprise, with each machine. Perfect order on receipt of price, $3. Address INDUSTRY SEWING MACHINE CO., Manchester, N. H.

100 BEAUTIFUL PHOTOGRAPHS sent on receipt of 16c. Address N. Y. PICTURE CO., No. 49 Wall St.

TILTON'S STATIONERY.

Initial Stationery done without extra Charge.

OUR BOXES: Tilton Business Box, filled with assorted sizes of paper, with envelopes to match. Tilton Parisian Box, French paper, with fashionable patterns and sizes, with envelopes to match.

Price of either Box, $1 00.

Stamped with any initial desired, and

Sent to any Address in U. S. Boston.

postpaid, on receipt of price. Address orders to

TILTON & COMPANY,
Washington St., Boston.

$25 KNITTING MACHINE.

WANTED!—Buyers and Sellers for the HICKFORD FAMILY KNITTER, the most useful invention of the nineteenth century made. It knits 20,000 stitches a minute, runs back and forward, and sets up its own work. Parties are making from $5 to $8 per day at their homes. Our new Book of Instructions is just published. Price, HICKFORD KNITTING MACHINE CO., 52 Bromfield St., Boston, Ms.

MONEY REFUNDED to every one not satisfied with the "STAR-SPANGLED BANNER."

100 PHOTOGRAPHS or BEAUTIFUL WOMEN sent, postpaid, for 25 cts. Send for Circulars. Address C. SEYMOUR, Hoosick, New York.

VELOCIPEDE WHEELS,

MANUFACTURED BY

S. N. BROWN & CO.,

BOSTON, MASS.

They also make 3 prime article of Spokes and Hubs for light Carriage and Buggy Wheels. Send for Price-List.

THE BALL SEASON.

YOUNG LADY. "Oh, Horrors! We can never Ride in such a Disgusting Conveyance!"
PROPRIETOR OF COACH. "Well, Mum, yer see that's the Worse of being Born to have the Best of Every Thing."

[NOTE.—At all Public Balls there is a Police Regulation which compels those leaving the Ball, and who wish to ride, to take Coach opposite the Door. Some of these Carriages are the most dirty, dilapidated old Hacks imaginable.]

GORHAM MFG. CO.
Sterling Silver Ware,
AND
Fine Electro-Plated Ware,
of the following trade-marks:

Trade-Mark for Silver. Trade-Mark for Electro-Plate. GORHAM MFG CO

MANUFACTURED BY THE
GORHAM MANUFACTURING CO.,
PROVIDENCE, R. I.

Orders received from the Trade only, but these goods may be obtained from responsible dealers every where.

THE GORHAM WARE may be obtained of ADAMS, CHANDLER, & CO.,
No. 20 JOHN STREET, NEW YORK.

Agents Wanted.
FOUNTAIN PENS.—3 styles. 12 pens, 25 cts.; one gross, $2. Gold Pens, 16 carats, $1 60. One dip writes 2 gross. Sells quick. Eraser, pencil-sharpener, and pen-holder combined, 20 cts.; 12 for $1 20, postpaid. Our agents make $60 per week. Address Monro Fountain Pen Co., 413 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, Pa.

Wm. Knabe & Co.
MAGNIFICENT
Grand, Square, and Upright
PIANOS.
Unapproachable for their
IMMENSE POWER OF TONE, GREAT SINGING QUALITY,
Evenness throughout the entire Scale, Easy Action, Workmanship, and Durability, and pronounced Unequaled by all the FAMED ARTISTS OF THE COUNTRY AND EUROPE.
Every Instrument Warranted for Ten Years.
WAREROOMS,
650 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

J. BAUER & CO.,
General Agents and Manufacturers and Importers of Musical Instruments, Strings, and Musical Merchandise.

THE EMPIRE Self-inking Hand-stamp Outfit complete, $10 to $50 a day made by Agents in every town, the greatest novelty out. The AMERICAN POCKET CIGAR MACHINE. Sells to every smoker at sight. One half the profits allowed to selling Agents. Superior Cones rapidly made by this machine at a cost of one cent each. A stuffy machine sent by mail on receipt of $5, or one box containing 10 machines for $45. Agents wanted in every town. Address AMERICAN CIGAR MACHINE CO.,
23 COURT STREET, BOSTON, MASS.

HORSE-THIEVES, look out for, arrested, and fee sale by WILLIAM H. CUDDIN, & CO.,
No. 3 MAIDEN LANE.
Safe Agents for the Celebrated
NARDIN WATCH.

BRANDING IRONS FOR DISTILLERS, &c. KNIGHT BROS., SENECA FALLS, N. Y.

WANTED—LADY AGENTS, in every Town and Village, to sell what every lady will purchase at sight. Address Miss MORLEY, 139 Fulton St., N. Y.

A FORTUNE in any State.—Rights for Sale.—New Patent Article. Sample, $2 00. Address INVENTOR, P. O. Box 5658, New York.

FURNITURE.
WARREN WARD & CO.,
Nos. 75 & 77 Spring St., corner of Crosby.
Established 1850. Wholesale and Retail Manufacturers of the latest styles of BEDROOM, PARLOR, DINING, and LIBRARY FURNITURE, MATTRESSES, SPRING BEDS, &c., &c. Suitable for City and Country residences.
ALL GOODS WARRANTED AS REPRESENTED.

Dr. JNO. V. BURTON'S
TOBACCO ANTIDOTE.
WARRANTED TO REMOVE ALL DESIRE FOR TOBACCO. It entirely eradicates the habit, however inveterate, and enriches the blood, thereby restoring to the system genuine great nourishment, and a healthy appetite. For an excellent tonic and appetizer, combine the Remedy to digest the heartiest food, relieve sick headache, and strengthen the entire system. Sensitive and delicate females can use it with perfect safety. Price Fifty cents per box, post-paid. Sold by druggists generally. Beware of imitations, with similar names, and of persons who represent themselves as agents, etc., etc. Dr. J. E. ARNOLD, Sole Proprietor, No. 3 Bond St., N. Y.
FOR SALE BY ALL DRUGGISTS.
Caution.—Beware of lumbug imitations.
[Trade-mark & Copyrighted.]

NEW MUSIC.
VELOCIPEDE GALOP, illustrated.....50c.
TELEGRAM WALTZ—STRAUS.....40c.
KITTY MCGEE, &C.: THE RAVING TROUBT.. 30c.
YOU'LL SOMETIMES THINK OF ME.....30c.
LIVE IN MY HEART AND PAY NO RENT.....30c.
Violin or Flute Accompaniments, 15c. each. Music mailed, 3d door above 29th St. Brunch, 708 Bowery.

MARVIN & CO.'S
CHROME IRON SAFES
ARE THE BEST IN THE WORLD.
265 Broadway, N. Y.

£150,000,000
Sterling. Unclaimed Money and Estates Registry, commencing 1869. Fee to search for any name, $2. GEO. C. KAUFMANN & CO., 4 Wardle Street, London, England.

THE WILSON SHUTTLE SEWING MACHINES. Cheaper than all others. AGENTS WANTED. Manufactured by THE WILSON SEWING MACHINE CO., Cleveland, O.

WOODWARD'S

NATIONAL ARCHITECT.
A practical work, just published, containing 1000 Designs, Plans, and Details in Working Scale of Cottages, Suburban and Village Houses, with specifications and estimate of cost, enabling a builder to design, specify, cost, and completely finish dwelling houses in the latest and most approved style. One large quarto volume, superbly bound.
PRICE TWELVE DOLLARS, postpaid.
WOODWARD'S COUNTRY HOMES.
150 Designs, $1 50, postpaid.
GEO. E. WOODWARD, Architect, 191 Broadway, New York.
Send stamp for catalogue of all new books on Architecture.

PRINCE & CO'S. ORGANS AND MELODEONS.
43,000, now in use.
BUFFALO, N. Y. CHICAGO, ILL.

ELGIN WATCHES.
CAUTION.—The public are respectfully cautioned against purchasing our watches, or watches represented to be of our make, of parties who advertise to send them "C.O.D." We have no connection with such houses, and do not furnish our goods to any house for that purpose. The excellence and good repute of the real ELGIN WATCH has procured several Foreign and American Watch Companies to make certain imitations with the same or similar trademarks as ours. Avoid all parties who advertise to send our goods "C.O.D." as in such case you get the real ELGIN WATCHES purchaser only of dealers in your vicinity or elsewhere whom you know to be honorable.
THE NATIONAL WATCH COMPANY,
ELGIN, ILLINOIS.
Business Office, Nos. 159 and 161 Lake St., Chicago, Ill.

SENT FREE. Business Men, Mechanics, Farmers, Professional Men, and Housewives, send, red stamp for pamphlet, valuable information, and our object in sending it.
H. HARPER & CO., Cleveland, O.

M. S. DICKEY, 735 BROADWAY, offers his large Stock of Fancy Goods, SWISS CARVED-WOOD ARTICLES,
Musical Boxes, Cuckoo Clocks, suitable Wooden Wedding Presents, at 50 per cent. reduction.

ADDRESS TO SMOKERS.
In reply to the many inquiries made daily in regard to Meerschaum Pipes, we wish to state that we recommend, especially for home and office use, the Hungarian and Egg Bowls, with Vulcanite Stems. These bowls are the most tobacco, and are the most durable and cleanly pipes made, being the coolest to clean. Or the Hamburg Bowls, having the largest surface to smoke on. For travelling and street smoking, we recommend the London Straight and Zouave Bowls.
Being represented extensively throughout the country by our goods, we are desirous to have our Pipes—which are unequaled, as many testify, by more extensive smokers—by those who relish a good smoke, and not Cigars too expensive. Therefore we have reduced our prices to the following:
Bowls, No. 1, $5; No. 2, $4, and CHARGE $1 additional for every number higher: therefore No. 4 costs $6; No. 8, $10; No. 12, $15, &c. Pipes from No. 4 to No. 8 are considered full-sized pipes. From No. 8 upwards they are called Monster Pipes.
Nice Amber Mouthpieces for Weichsel Stems we are selling from $1 to $8 a piece.
We send the Pipes by express for delivery, amount and charges; but expect that the amount be sent in Registered Letter or Post-Office Money Order in advance, to save consequence the expressmen charges.
In conclusion, we wish to state that we warrant all our goods (which we stamp with our name) to be real Amber, genuine Meerschaum, and to color, and will readily give every information in regard to it, based on thirty years' experience in the trade, having received our Diploma in 1870 for the respective commissions in Europe, and we will ever uphold the fair fame we have acquired in the introduction of the MANUFACTURE OF GENUINE MEERSCHAUM GOODS into this country.
We cut Pipes and Cigar-Holders of any shape or design, mount them, do repairing, boiling, and polishing. Also, Amber Work done. And, ours of all, do not charge exorbitant prices. For reference, we are in possession of commendations from thousands of our customers, representing all classes of society.

POLLAK & SON, Manufacturers of Genuine Meerschaum Goods.
Stores: 185 Bowery, near Broome, and 27 John St., 2d, middle of the block.
SEND FOR CIRCULAR AND PRICE-LIST TO LUTTER BOX 5816.

GENUINE WALTHAM WATCHES,
IN SOLID GOLD and SILVER CASES ONLY,
AT EXTREMELY LOW PRICES.
Silver Hunting Watches.....$18
Gold Hunting Watches, fit-rated Cases.....$80
Gold Hunting Watches, Ladies' Size.....$70
Every Watch warranted by special certificate from the American Watch Company. We will send these Watches by Express to any place, with bill to collect on delivery, and give the purchaser the privilege to open the package and examine the Watch before paying. Any Watch that does not give satisfaction may be exchanged or the money will be refunded. Every one is requested to write for our Descriptive Price-List, which explains the different kinds with prices of each.
Please state that you saw this in Harper's Weekly.
Address in full,
HOWARD & CO., No. 619 Broadway, N. Y.

Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Gout.
LANSDOWNE, SUSQUEHANNA CO., PA., June, 23, 1869.
DR. S. POST.—Enclosed find $3 for your Rheumatic Remedy. The small trial bottle relieved my wife, so that she can get up, dress herself, and walk about the house. J. P. MCKUNE.
☞ The success of my Remedy obviates the necessity of further sending Trial Bottles free. A small Trial Bottle (which has often cured) sent on receipt of 50 cents; or a Large Bottle sent for $2.
DR. S. POST, No. 5 Beekman St. (office 7), N.Y. City.

PRINCE & CO.,
ORGANS and MELODEONS.
NEW STYLES—Best in the World!
ORGANS WITH SIX STOPS for $170.
SECOND-HAND INSTRUMENTS, $45 to $125.
Send for Price-List and Catalogues of Cheap Music.
COMPLETE OVERCHEST ORGANS with 13 stops.
COMPLETE CHURCH ORGANS with 24 stops.
S. T. GORDON, 706 Broadway, N. Y.

HARPER'S PERIODICALS.
1869. HARPER'S WEEKLY. 1869.
BAZAR

Harper's Magazine, Weekly, and Bazar. These three periodicals fully merit the high encomiums which they have received from the press, and the support which has been given them by the reading public. Whether one considers their beautiful and instructive illustrations, which have astonished no subject of domestic or foreign importance—their literary merit, which has given them the highest place in the current literature—or their judicious editorial management—they must be emphatically pronounced the three best family periodicals in the world.—The Albanian, Albany.

Harper's Periodicals.—As the year draws to a close the time comes when subscriptions to weekly and monthly journals are in order. Can there be a more suitable present to a lady than a year's subscription to the Bazar, a paper which is not only fashionable, but useful, and which has a care for the family fireside as well as for the festivities of the party or the ball? Each number contains patterns and drawings of value, and it discourses of health, housekeeping, thrift, literature, and dress, in a manner at once pleasing and instructive.

Harper's Weekly is an older brother, and it has a strong and vigorous life. Its pages are the materials of future history, and its articles on public questions are sound, thoughtful, and timely.

Harper's Magazine is the veteran of the monthlies, and is too well known to need mention. During the many years of its life it has had a steady growth and improvement, and nothing has been left undone which could add to the permanent value and interest of the magazine.—Commercial Advertiser: New York.

TERMS FOR 1869.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE, One Year.....$4 00
HARPER'S WEEKLY, One Year.....4 00
HARPER'S BAZAR, One Year.....4 00

HARPER'S MAGAZINE, HARPER'S WEEKLY, and HARPER'S BAZAR, one year, together, $10 00; or any two for $7 00.

An Extra Copy of either the MAGAZINE, WEEKLY, or BAZAR will be supplied gratis for every Club of FIVE SUBSCRIBERS at $4 00 each, in one remittance; or, one Copy for $20 00, without extra copy.

The Postage within the United States is for the MAGAZINE, 24 cents a year, for the WEEKLY or BAZAR, 52 cents a year, payable quarterly in advance, at the quarterly, at the office where received. Subscriptions from the Dominion of Canada must be remitted with 24 cents additional for the MAGAZINE, or 20 cents for the WEEKLY or BAZAR, to prepay the United States postage.

Subscribers to the MAGAZINE, WEEKLY, or BAZAR will find on each wrapper the Number with which their subscription expires. Thus persons wishing to stop when the term of subscription closes. It is not necessary to give notice of discontinuance.

The Volumes of the MAGAZINE commence with the numbers for June and December of each year. Subscriptions may commence with any Number. When no time is specified, it will be understood that the subscriber wishes to begin with the first Number of the current Volume. Back Numbers will be sent accordingly.

The Volumes of the WEEKLY commence with the year. When no time is specified, it will be understood that the subscriber wishes to commence with the Number next after the receipt of his order.

In remitting, a Postal Money Order or Draft payable to the order of HARPER & BROTHERS is preferable to Bank Notes. Make your Order or Draft be lost or stolen, it can be renewed without loss to the subscriber.

In ordering the MAGAZINE, the WEEKLY, or the BAZAR, the name, State, and Post-Office should be written. When the direction is to be changed, both the old and the new one must be given.

TERMS FOR ADVERTISING IN HARPER'S PERIODICALS.
Harper's Magazine.—Whole Page, $200; Half Page, $120; Quarter Page, $70—each insertion; or, for a less space, $1 50 per Line, each insertion.
Harper's Weekly.—Inside Pages, $1 50 per Line; Outside Page, $2 00 per Line—each insertion.
Harper's Bazar.—$1 00 per Line; Cuts and Display, $1 75 per Line—each insertion.

Address HARPER & BROTHERS, New York.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

A JOURNAL OF CIVILIZATION

VOL. XIII.—No. 635.] NEW YORK, SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 27, 1869. SINGLE COPIES, TEN CENTS. $4.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE.

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the Year 1869, by Harper & Brothers, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court of the United States, for the Southern District of New York.

WASHINGTON'S RESIGNATION.

IN connection with the approaching event of General GRANT'S inauguration as President of the United States—an event destined to be memorable in our history—there is one incident in the career of General WASHINGTON that is especially called to our minds: it is the resignation of his commission as Commander-in-Chief, at Annapolis, December 23, 1783.

For eight years WASHINGTON had devoted his life to the service of his country. The revolution had been accomplished, and the struggling republic began its career as an independent nation. The preceding month had witnessed the evacuation of New York by the British. On the 2d of November WASHINGTON issued his "Farewell Address to the Armies of the United States." On the 25th he entered New York, where, a few days later, he took a final leave of his principal officers. After this scene—one of the most touching that is recorded in military annals—he walked in silence to Whitehall, followed by a vast procession, and took his departure for Annapolis, where Congress was about to assemble. Here he arrived on the evening of December 19. The next day he informed Congress of his desire to resign his commission. That body resolved that it should be done at a public audience on the 23d, at noon.

The day was fine, and around the State-house a great concourse was assembled. The little gallery of the Senate Chamber was filled with ladies, among whom was Mrs. WASHINGTON. The members of Congress were seated and covered; the spectators were all uncovered. WASHINGTON entered and was led to a chair, when General MIFFLIN, President of Congress, arose and announced the readiness of that body to receive his communications. The Chief, with great dignity and much feeling, delivered a brief speech. "Happy," said he, "in the confirmation of our independence and sovereignty, and pleased with the opportunity afforded the United States of becoming a respectable nation, I resign with satisfaction the appointment I accepted with diffidence—a diffidence in my abilities to accomplish so arduous a task, which, however, was superseded by a confidence in the rectitude of our cause, the support of the supreme power of the Union, and the patronage of Heaven." After other remarks he handed his commission to the President, who received it and made an eloquent reply.

After his resignation General WASHINGTON set out for Mount Vernon. All the way from Annapolis, as indeed it had been from New York, his progress was a triumphal march.

On our first page we publish an original portrait of WASHINGTON, engraved from a painting made by POLK at Valley Forge. This painting is now in the possession of the venerable and accomplished widow of JOHN J. AUDUBON, the celebrated naturalist. The following is its history:

The great American naturalist's father, JOHN AUDUBON, commenced life as a sailor, and was successful, after a few years of well-directed industry, in obtaining a handsome property in St. Domingo; following which he received an official appointment on that island, the duties of which, on his return to France, brought him in contact with the influential men connected with the "First Empire." While resident of France, after his requirement of fortune and official influence, he purchased a beautiful estate on the Loire, seven miles from Nantes.

While residing in the West Indies JOHN AUDUBON frequently visited North America, and with great business foresight purchased lands in Louisiana, Virginia, and Pennsylvania.

When Rochambeau, in 1780, was sent to America, JOHN AUDUBON held an important command in the fleet; and this position, with the fact that he had married an American wife, gave him naturally a large influence with the American officers, and secured the notice and friendship of General WASHINGTON.

During the revolutionary war JOHN AUDUBON (now styled Commodore), took possession of Mill Grove, on the Perkeominy Creek, the residence of which, the Schuylkill flowing between, was about one mile from WASHINGTON'S headquarters at Valley Forge. The presumption is that the vivacious sea-faring, and by marriage semi-American, and strong republican French officer, was a frequent visitor at WASHINGTON'S head-quarters, and probably by his manners and conversation shed some geniality over the dark days of that eventful period in our revolutionary struggle.

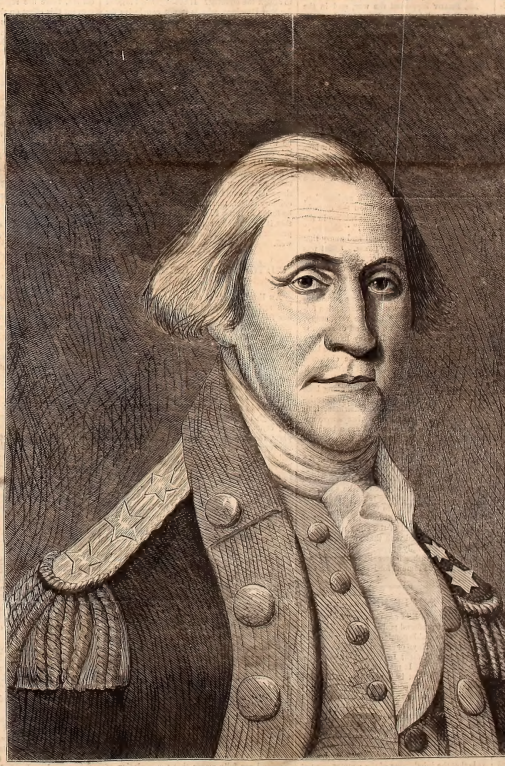
While thus situated it would seem that the camp had its resident artist by the name of POLK, who painted at the same time, and of the same size, the portraits of Commodore AUDUBON and General WASHINGTON. These two pictures Commodore AUDUBON, at the "declaration of peace," took to France, and they became conspicuous ornaments of his country seat on the Loire.

In the year 1835, while JOHN J. AUDUBON was with his family in London, he sent his eldest son to Nantes with a power of attorney to put his sister in possession of all the French property willed to him by his father, the old Commodore. The son faithfully executed his father's wishes, reserving nothing but the two portraits, one of WASHINGTON and the other of M. ANTHONY senior. In the half century, nearly, in which they had hung undisturbed the frames were so destroyed by time that they fell to pieces; the pictures, however, were brought to London and carefully lined by an expert in such matters. Upon the old and discarded stretching-frame, or upon the back of the pictures—Mrs. AUDUBON does not now remember which—was the name of the artist.

MR. POLK'S picture realizes all that has been said by contemporaneous historians, and represented by other artists, of the dignity and benevolence of WASHINGTON'S face. It combines characteristics that are discernible in TRALL'S picture, in STUART'S master-pieces, and HOUDON'S bust. WASHINGTON, at the time the picture was painted, was nearly fifty years of age, consequently in the prime of life. The negligence, comparatively speaking, of the hair is what might be expected of camp-life in the terrible winter that surrounds the memories of Valley Forge. Upon the epaulette are three stars in silver; we do not remember of seeing this designation of the rank of commander-in-chief on any other picture, and they are not on HOUDON'S statue, though the epaulets on the latter are perfect facsimiles of those in POLK'S picture.

POLK seems to have executed several paintings of WASHINGTON, as there are other which bear his name. One was found at Leesburg, on the estate of ARTHUR LEE. Concerning the one from which our engraving is taken there can be no doubt as to its genuineness, as the account of it has been handed down from father to son.

Every thing relating to WASHINGTON is held in such reverence by mankind that it is an event to present an original picture, which, after a lapse of nearly ninety years, dating from its production, is brought from the seclusion of private life and given to the world.



ORIGINAL PORTRAIT OF WASHINGTON.—[FROM A PAINTING EXECUTED BY POLK AT VALLEY FORGE.]

HARPER'S WEEKLY.
SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 27, 1869.

COUNTING THE VOTES.

THE scene at the counting of the votes for President and Vice-President was both outrageous and absurd. Every body and every thing were at cross-purposes; but in the universal confusion, of the two prominent figures we very much prefer that of old BEN WADE vigorously pounding with his gavel, completely obfuscated, declaring every thing out of order, but insisting that the result of the count should be announced, to that of General BUTLER pulling up his coat-sleeves and suggesting that Hell be cleared and fought over. Mr. WADE indicrously fails in every requisite of a presiding officer except dogged persistence. The difficulty could easily have been avoided had he instantly ruled General BUTLER out of order, and upon the appeal being pressed, submitting the question to the assembled Senate and House; because the vote sustaining the ruling would have been so overwhelming that the question whether a numerical majority of the assembled Houses of each House were necessary, would not have been raised. But when this "old Roman" directed the Senate to withdraw the anarchy was complete, for it showed that the presiding genius of the occasion had not the faintest conception of the rules that could alone control the situation.

The conduct of General BUTLER was what should have been expected. It was of the most characteristic "Old Bailey" school. There was undoubtedly a very grave question involved in what he asserted; but his manner of stating it naturally excited the utmost doubt and suspicion. It was a comical effort to browbeat men who were quite as experienced and shrewd as himself. When the General was a practicing lawyer in Middlesex County, Massachusetts, he had to examine a Professor in Harvard College as a witness, long after the execution of Dr. WEBSTER. With singular delicacy and fairness he began, "What is your profession?" "I am Professor at Cambridge." "Oh! Professor at Cambridge; yes, we hung one of your Cotber day." The anecdote has a flavor of JEFFERIES. In the storm of last week in the House the same spirit was the same spirit. "The Senators," said the honorable gentleman from the Fifth District of Massachusetts, "can go out when they please, but we can't kick them out when we want to." And upon this ground was this courteous remark made? Similarly because there was opposition to the General's claim that the House should disregard a rule of its own which it had not rescinded. This extraordinary performance of the General was but another of the indications which he so profusely furnishes of the extreme disadvantage to a public man of having been educated as a pro-slavery politician. The General's political energies down to 1861 were directed to justifying the most flagrant system of outrage upon justice and human rights. It was a business that spurned reason and humanity and demanded the bluster and brutality that were known, when they appeared in Congress, as "plantation manners," of which the most characteristic display was PRESTON BROOKS's assault upon Senator SUMNER and the "scrimmage" of BARKSDALE in the House. Tried by that standard, the conduct of General BUTLER at the counting of the votes was full of promise.

As to the essential difficulty involved in his extraordinary remarks, the General was too hot to perceive it. It is a constitutional difficulty as Mr. SHELLABARGER clearly explained. It is a difficulty to consider which required every quality which the General did not display, and which was only increased by every quality that he did. The Constitution provides that the votes shall be counted by the Vice-President in the presence of both Houses. Houses are to be witnesses that he counts correctly, but the Constitution does not provide for the case of his making the returns or of dishonesty upon the part of the Vice-President. This is an omission to be remedied by law rather than by joint resolution, and ought to have been provided for. The omission was possibly intended for at the time nor in the manner chosen by General BUTLER; and the very stupidest thing conceivable was to excite the natural jealousy and hostility of the two Houses upon a point in which they were equally interested and which requires careful and calm deliberation. The General's assertion that the Senate was trying to bully the House, and in the same breath asserted by implication the right of the House to be the judge of the case of the hall. It would hardly be possible to imagine any more signal proofs of the peculiar fitness of General BUTLER as legislator at this time in this country than his two performances during the present session, his speech upon the finances and his conduct at the counting of the votes. General BUTLER's motion of censure was laid upon the table by a vote of 130 against 65, and at the instance of General LOGAN who eulogized Mr. WADE more warmly than wisely.

The scene at the counting of the votes and the subsequent debate, although very unpleasant and humiliating in themselves, will yet be of substantial service. Congress will undoubtedly provide by law a method of securing the result intended by the Constitution, which shall be consistent with the dignity of both Houses; and the country has had another opportunity of estimating the qualifications for civil public service of General BUTLER. For as the jury is concerned we said last autumn, what time merely shows in this case as it has always shown in all similar cases, that extreme cleverness and extreme professions do not make trust-worthy agents or representatives. In his general conduct upon this occasion General BUTLER insulted the country and the House, and by assuming his shafts of derision and suspicion at Mr. WADE and Mr. COLFAX he insulted the Republican party.

JAMES A. BRADY.

WITH the social gifts, the ambitions, and susceptibilities that seem to get together their own success, Mr. BRADY, whose portrait will be found in this paper, had a certain manliness and independence that always bound the admiration that was felt for him upon genuine respect. Whatever his special abilities and professional accomplishments may have been, his name will be remembered as that of a man of the utmost tenderness, generosity, and charity in every relation; a humanizing force which is to more powerful power as heat to light. Although always a Democrat, he was radically differed with the Democracy; and for a native New Yorker of Irish blood and of Democratic traditions and training the moral conviction to differ openly with his party was proof of a tenacity and independence which can here be appreciated if not elsewhere.

Mr. BRADY was a man of war, and in the Connecticut political campaign of 1862 he spoke for the Union candidates against those of the Democracy. On one occasion the scene of these lines went with him to a meeting at Danbury. It was just before the election, and the excitement was intense. Upon the previous evening and in the same hall, Fernando Wood had spoken at a Democratic meeting, and the curiosity to see and hear so conspicuous a Democrat as Mr. BRADY, when it was supposed, would especially address himself to the Democrats, crammed the hall. The opposition had prepared a most ingenious method of annoyance. They had distributed watchmen in various parts of the gallery to hiss and laugh and talk to disturb the orator, relying upon the impossibility of putting them out in such a dense throng.

The orator was received with acclamation, but he had scarcely begun when the disturbance began. There was general hissing in the galleries. A loud cry of "Hush!" "Shut up!" arose from the floor, so earnest and angry that Mr. BRADY was obliged to pause. Quiet was restored, and he began again, but the interruption. The cries of "Put 'em out!" were then so vehement that the chairman turned to the gallery-door and begged the people to preserve order. Mr. BRADY smiled, made a jocose remark, and proceeded; but the interruption followed, and the audience became very angry. Yet there seemed to be no alternative except silence, for nobody wished to lay hands upon the women, and in any case it would have been very difficult to do so. Again the chairman could only rap and exhort, and it seemed as if the meeting would end in confusion. But with the gayest smile Mr. BRADY looked down both of the galleries, and then said, in the most sarcastic tone: "Ah well, Mr. Chairman, it is the old story. My addresses always were misunderstood by the ladies, and I am no doubter to this day!" He then begged the audience not to be troubled by the tongues of his fair friends: "For those tongues," he said, with the most delightful humor in his voice, "are among the sweetest trials of life." He then finished his speech, but he whispered as he sat down that it was a good deal like "going a long walk without boiling the peas in your shoes."

Mr. BRADY's name will long live in the traditions of the bar and of the city; and he will always be mentioned in the most affectionate regret which he so fully appreciated when he said that he would rather be recalled as "poor JIM BRADY" than be famous for learning or for eloquence.

SAN DOMINGO.

THE ESSAYS of Elia are not supposed to be a repository of profound political wisdom, but we hope that honorable gentlemen in Congress, before protecting Hayti or annexing San Domingo, will spare a moment to read A Dissertation upon Roast Pig. It may be very desirable to dine upon pig; but is it worth while to burn your house down to cook your dinner? It may be convenient to have a naval station in the West Indies; but is it wise to buy it by adding to our population nearly a million of creoles and West Indian negroes, and by the assumption of nobody knows what debts and liabilities? The reason given for this annexation should arrest the attention of every thoughtful man. We want the inhabitants of the country can not take care of themselves nor maintain a firm government. Revolution follows revolution. To be an educated, vigorous, and public-spirited citizen of San Domingo, we are told, is to be one in a thousand; but the mass of ignorance around such citizens is, says the same authority, too dense for the thousandth part of intelligence to penetrate—and therefore let them be annexed.

It would seem that our territorial and our financial question had striking points of resemblance. It is not worth while to increase our debt, because it is already quite large enough for us to manage, and it is not desirable to extend our territory and population until there is more popular intelligence diffused in what we already have. That this country needs San Domingo for any purpose at all commensurate with its necessary cost nobody can pretend. That its annexation would be the last moral or even material advantage can not be urged, while the risks are evident. We certainly want Cuba as much as Hayti, and the rest of the West Indies as much as Cuba. By the same reasoning we want the whole continent from Bering Straits to Terra del Fuego. It may be our manifest destiny to acquire it all, and to civilize it; but meanwhile it is our manifest duty to do nothing that shall imperil the principle of our Government, which is the condition of that progressive civilization. Hayti is also a very turbulent country. Revolution succeeds revolution there also. The Mexicans have no less foreign blood in their veins than the people of Hayti and San Domingo. There, too, is a mass of ignorance, and the vigorous and educated citizen is as one in a thousand. Mexico, moreover, suffers under the same want of active capital which is alleged in the argument for annexing San Domingo. Mexico finds it very hard to find capital. Ought we not, therefore, to annex the country? If the argument is good for San Domingo, why is it not conclusive for Mexico. The case of the South American republics, of Venezuela, of Canada is not less cogent. There is a striking want of order, of capital, of security, of all that is most desirable in a political community in each of the states near our southern border. Shall we not straightway annex them?

Something more is necessary in a firm and wise government than becoming a state or a public. France tried that experiment eighty years ago. Mere accretion is not vital growth, in mere size is not strength. Whatever may be wise hereafter, nothing is less desirable to this country at this time than territorial expansion. "It must be agreed," says Elia, "that of a roasted pig the crackling is confessedly the best morsel as setting houses on fire (especially in these days) could be assigned in favor of any culinary object, that pretext and excuse might be found in favor of this." But he does not deny that it is generally conceded that the cheaper process of the spit answers the purpose quite as well.

COTTON AND OTHER SPECULATIONS.

AN English cotton circular, received by the late arrival, concludes as follows: "We ask our friends what must the following state of affairs lead to? The Eastern markets all greatly overstocked; prices ruling there not likely to be increased; merchants losing heavily on every piece of shirting they ship; manufacturers producing cloth at a ruinous loss, and cotton rising?"

The question is one to be weighed not alone by persons engaged in the merchants and manufacturers in this country. Early in November, although middling cotton was selling at 25½ to 26¼ cents per pound at the principal Southern ports, the intelligence existed that when the new crop appeared in quantity the price would fall. Contracts were made here at that time for middling, to be delivered in January, at 22½ to 23 cents, but it declined early in that month in the principal Southern ports to 27½ to 28¼ cents. In the 8th of February the market opened in Florida, New Orleans, and Texas was 30½, 30¾, 30½, 30¾ cents.

In a circular issued here, dated early in January, it said: "Settlements effectuated on the close of last month by payment in cash of 3 cents per pound.....The 'shorts' delayed buying until late in December, but seemed determined to cover early in January, hence the heavy demand not only at the sea-board but in the interior markets of the whole country. Do-mestic consumption is also large."

Either the condition of trade in England, as developed by the English circular, of which we have presented an extract, or some other motive, induced various manufacturing establishments in Lancashire to propose working at half time. The plan was acceded to by some, but the action after being general it may be considered abandoned.

Undoubtedly one object of resorting to short time in English factories was to meet the advancing price of cotton in this country. The situation there is unquestionably such as the English circular states—"manufacturers producing cloth at a ruinous loss, and cotton rising." Those who have watched the state of trade in England are fully aware that the explosion of 1866, from which there has been no recovery, was followed by very defective crops in 1867 and 1868, which has had the effect to prolong and intensify that explosion.

The policy therefore of resorting to short time was wise. Its abandonment is proof of the great difficulty of inducing rival establishments, suspicious of each other, to arrive at any mutual understanding, especially when it involves a resort to economy in management, or a cessation of industry. An English paper states that some of the mills, having received orders at an advance in price, went to work at full time, and others had followed, or were about to follow. Whether these orders were given by the allies on the other side of the speculation in this country to force other settlements from the short interest is not stated.

The fact is evident that a speculative movement was set on foot to advance the price of cotton, that its arrangements are on a gigantic scale, and that upon the business in foreign markets and here it exercises a powerful influence. The ease of the money-market is highly favorable to present success, but the real condition of the trade of the commercial nations must be the test by which the price of cotton must ultimately be measured.

This speculative spirit, which prevails to an extent hitherto unknown in the world, may be observed in operations in all the great staples: it damages all regular business, and must prove ruinous to those who hold on in this policy. The question is widely discussed to what this abundance of money is due. By the vast majority of writers it is charged to the increase of the precious metals mined in California and Australia, and consequently it is claimed that a corresponding advance in prices is to be expected, and will be permanently maintained.

So far as the product of those mines is concerned, there are regular laws in operation to prevent this effect on the scale supposed. The non-banking countries are constant, and not only large, but permanent, absorbers of the precious metals; and in times of excessive produce gold and silver are extensively used in the arts to satisfy the love of display which then prevails. The gold and silver withdrawn from circulation by these means nearly equals the excess of recent production.

The policy by which the precious metals are expelled from the banking and the non-banking countries, and from those which are immoderate to those which exhibit more prudence, is incessant and of great force. The abundance of money at this juncture may be attributed to other and sufficient causes.

When we followed up the creation of legal-tenders by excessive bank issues, we drove immediately into other markets that deprived us of money which foreigners received. Its increase in other countries highly stimulated manufacturing industry. On the termination of our war an immediate supply of cotton followed the cotton famine, and heavy losses were produced also as a consequence of the fall in price of both manufactures and raw material. In 1866 the collapse came upon England, and being followed by a loss of two successive crops in corn-crops of the first necessity, the gross bills of the Bank of France have been issued of as low a denomination as fifty francs, which tends not only to make money more abundant in that empire, but also to drive it from other states, which enjoy the benefit of the coin which the French thus necessarily dispose.

The diminished activity in the system of business in Europe would of itself produce a surplus of money, without estimating the effect of our adoption of the 1,908,333 of paper, and the degradation of money which French writers call it.

To these circumstances may be traced the spirit of excessive speculation which prevails abroad and at home. On the termination of trade in foreign markets this excess of money will no longer be felt; on the contrary, if it shall be accompanied by an attempt to return to specie payments on the part of this country in the course of a severe character will arise for the possession of the precious metals, and speculation will soon be over.

Now, however, it is active here in coin, in stocks, in cotton, and corners are frequent at Chicago in breadstuffs. The tendency betrays a gambling spirit, but little heeded is the fact ful than that which seduces many to the contest with professional gamblers. In the purchase of such stocks the descriptions of property we have named the purchaser needs carefully to consider the effect upon price, then and subsequently, of the bold operations of the gambling fraternity. The ordinary laws of supply and demand founded on production and consumption are, for the time being, nullified by the unscrupulous few, who, in their haste to acquire wealth, have no thought of the speculators they suddenly ruin, or of that large class of ordinary dealers who are damaged in their legitimate trade.

Those who now think that the money which has universal circulation exists in great excess of what is usual will have cause, on the recovery of commerce and the redistribution over the United States of our appropriate supply of coin, to complain of its deficiency. But however disheartening to those who pursue their accustomed and safe but now scarcely remunerating industry may be the comparison between their slow progress and that which obtains a large fortune by ventures in wild speculation, the time is approaching when they will be thankful that they have done their part in an honest occupation constantly followed to save the country from the demoralization which speculation produces.

We hope the planting interest of the United States may be benefited by the bull movement in cotton. There seemed to be an understanding quite general among the planters at the early part of this season to hold their crops so that they should not be compelled to make the losses which they suffered from the crop of 1867. But the price has been carried up far beyond their expectations, and the two things, "manufacturers producing cloth at a ruinous loss and cotton rising," must soon be remedied by inevitable laws.

THE CASE OF GEORGIA.

THE joint resolution in regard to counting the vote of Georgia was intended to avoid any indirect settlement of a question which is still pending—namely, the admission of the Senators from that State. It declared that the Vice-President should say that, if the vote of Georgia were counted, the whole number of votes cast would be so many; if not counted, so many, thus throwing an intended doubt upon the exact relation of the State to the Union.

We said last week that the substance of reconstruction was the important point—a phrase to which the Nation objects, as implying a very dangerous doctrine. Perhaps we failed to state our view distinctly. As we understand it, Congress has stated certain conditions upon which Georgia may resume its relations to the Union; but only when Congress is satisfied that these conditions have in good faith been observed. For instance, if after adopting a Constitution and before Congress has accepted it as satisfactory Georgia should show that it considers the disabling of half of its citizens as constitutional, Congress might properly say that it was not satisfied; and the proof of the satisfaction of Congress is to be the admission of Senators and representatives.

Now the conduct of the Legislature of Georgia before the admission of the Senators has proved to Congress, let us suppose, that the conditions have not been in good faith observed. If this be so, Congress may justly say that it is not satisfied; and if the circumstances have revealed a defect in the law, it may be properly amended so as to secure more certainly the "substance" of reconstruction. The action of the House in admitting members can not bind the Senate; and if the Senate is persuaded that the law has practically evaded, it should require some other reason for committing the folly of getting deeper into the mire than that the House has gone before.

This is not the case of interpreting the law by an after-thought, but of the satisfaction of a contract of which one of the parties is the judge. It is very desirable that Georgia be restored to the Union as soon as practicable; but it is very much more desirable that Congress should not deliberately declare—as in case is submitted to it—that Georgia may disable half of its voting population from holding office. Of course the adoption of the new Amendment as it has passed the Senate would end the difficulty in Georgia and in every other State.

A KING OF SPAIN.

IT would have seemed hardly credible that a complete revolution in Spain could have been for several years almost foreshadowed and that in the country which has seemed the most backward in progress and the farthest from modern influences the monarch should not only have been exiled, but a general election peacefully held, and a Cortes or Convention assembled to decide upon the form of the new government. Yet all this, as will be constantly illustrated by events we have seen. The Convention is now sitting at Madrid which is to do for Spain what the French Convention, eighty years ago in Paris, tragically failed to do for France. That the Marquis of SERRANO, in opening the session, was justified in saying, "The revolution has achieved a glorious victory," and, "It is armed; yet probably there would be no general surprise if the peaceful progress of events should be at any moment impeded. During his speech the Marquis was interrupted by many cheers; now for PRIM; now for the Provisional Government; for a republic; for a monarchy. Yet the sentiments of the Convention are already known. They are monarchical by a great majority.

But they are monarchical as those of the revolution of '30 were in France. They demand a liberal monarchy. The freedom of religion, of the press, of education, already proclaimed by the Provisional Government, must be guaranteed, according to SERRANO, by the Cortes. And it would be remarkable if the Spanish liberal monarchical revolution should place upon the throne the son of the king whom a similar revolution in France brought to the Tuileries. At present this seems to be the probability. What a monarchical country wishes to change the persons and not the forms of its government, it does not crown a commoner, it finds the nearest available blood successor. The English revolution which expelled the direct STUART line in JAMES II. and his son, the Pretender, placed his daughter upon the throne. Her sister succeeded, and she dying without an heir, the crown went to the son of the Electress SOPHIA of HANOVER, who was cousin to JAMES II. Thus the old royal blood of the STUARTS flows from ELIZABETH of Bohemia, sister of CHARLES I., to ALBERT EDWARD, the Prince of Wales and most puissant Prince Champagne Charlie.

So in FRANCE, when CHARLES X. was exiled, his cousin, LOUIS PHILIPPE, was summoned to the throne; and wherever there is a monarchical preference so strong as to resolve upon a king, it will naturally resolve to save as much of the prestige of the past as it can by holding to the royal line. The king being a ceremony all the essential conditions must be observed, and one of the most potent of them is tradition. There has been but one founder of a royal house in modern times, and that was a man of the most extraordinary genius living at an epoch most fortunate for his ambition. Yet his house, although owing its position to a more illustrious original than any other in Europe, has the weakness that generally seems to have in an aristocracy. It is therefore very probable that DUKE OF MONTPENSIER, the youngest son of LOUIS PHILIPPE and the husband of the first Queen of Spain after ISABELLA, may be the choice of the Spanish Cortes for king. If the elections really mean a preference for monarchy there will be no KING PRIM nor KING SERRANO, but a scion of the royal stock; and the nearest in the direct line will be the logical successor of ISABELLA.

THE QUESTION OF SCHOOL EDUCATION.

THE Suffrage amendment, as finally adopted by the Senate, is essentially less than that which passed the House. It declares that no male citizen of due age shall be disfranchised or disabled from holding office by any test based upon race, color, nativity, ancestry, or creed. That is a subject which we hope the House will not drive through by the process of the previous question even if a gentleman should be on his feet, low-members that their minds are made up. The amendment as it passed the Senate is the work of Mr. WILSON. He is a man of sagacity and experience, and the Senate, like Massachusetts, a State in which the value of education is fully understood. The prohibition of any test of education is therefore less to be oversight, but it is a matter of deliberate intention. Mr. WILSON means that the want of education shall not deprive a citizen of the right of suffrage. His objection to a test is the same now as in form. He may think that education is no proof of the requisite intelligence desirable in a voter; or he may think that the power of the several States to avoid a practical political equality. The same spirit that under the form of vagrom laws passed after the abolition of slavery and subjugation of the freedmen after emancipation, will endeavor to annul the political rights of the new citizens. As a class, the freedmen are ignorant. Experience shows, they may be peremptorily turned out of office when the State merely supposes that it is restored to the Union. Experience will be no possible when the States are actually restored and their internal management is left exclusively to such bodies as the Georgia Legislature? A test of education, imposed by the Southern and Company, and applied by them, would not admit many colored citizens of South Carolina to the polls of 1870. The object of Mr. HAMILTON is not of the dominant party in South Carolina, it must be remembered that, as Georgia proves, it is quite as much a question of color as of party. Moreover, if a test were framed to constitute a test, Mr. WILSON would probably say that it will be a direct incitement to the WADE HAMPTON class to resist schools for the freedmen.

The amendment, he would therefore say, must be adapted to the actual circumstances. Does any body suppose that any of the unnaturbed States will prescribe a condition of education for the suffrage, if they do not have it now? On the other hand, is it likely that it would not be imposed in the Southern States if opportunity were offered? And would not the consequences be quite as deplorable as the present regulation of the suffrage? Such is the argument, and this we think would be his strongest position—is it not plain that nothing will so surely secure general education as general suffrage? Is not the education of the new citizens at the South one of the most imperative necessities of the situation? Yet is there any method by which that education is so likely to be accomplished as by the firm conviction of the hostile class in that region, that by no trick or arbitrary test can they disfranchise the new citizens of the ballot? The moment they are persuaded of that they will see that their fellow-voters must be educated. As a principle it is plain that where every man votes, it is the general interest that every man should vote intelligently; and England is now likely to have a better system of popular education than she ever had before, because the suffrage is more widely extended.

Such are some of the reasons which we can very readily imagine have influenced the judgment of Senator WILSON. He knows, however, we presume, that without the general intelligence and moral perception which are implied by the word education, free government is not long practicable. Territory, and wealth, and resources, and audacity can not produce a wise government from ignorant men. Counting the freedmen as fully voting, there is probably a full seventh of our population to-day who can neither read nor write. Now a man may be able to read and write, and still be a fool or a knave—but shall we, therefore, shut up our schools? It may be very easy to evade any practical test of a voter's technical education, but is it, therefore, wise that the country should seem to think that ignorance is not harmful in a voter? It is a question worthy of the frankest and fullest consideration, and it is now presented by Senator WILSON'S amendment. We are by no means sure that his amendment does not tend to promote education, notwithstanding its appearance to the contrary. We are little disposed to suppose him to have in the application of any technical educational test. The question is one of the highest expediency. How shall we most rapidly educate the ignorant?

GENERAL GRANT'S SPEECH.

GENERAL GRANT'S speech, upon being notified of his election, was just what every intelligent man probably expected. He is emphatically not a politician and the more have ever made fewer professions. But what he has to say he says directly, without the least declamation or appeal to Bancombe. Upon this occasion he said that the duty of his administration would be to secure economy, retrenchment, faithful collection of the revenue, and payment of the public debt. The great payment days of every administration to enforce the laws he did not allude to, because it was unnecessary, and the laws already enacted cover the subject of reconstruction. The Democratic party has attacked General GRANT his distrust will not be removed by the speech; if he has not distrusted him, he will not distrust him.

Indeed, the election of General GRANT is of itself a test of the national faith in character independently of purely party relations. We have become so accustomed to the love of party that we have somewhat forgotten the higher; and the practical disdain of dictation which the conduct of General GRANT's recent war has easily misinterpreted into a repudiation of party assistance. But every government in a free country is conducted by means of a party, and to suppose that a President could long exercise to stand alone, or would rely upon the chance of support from the party that opposed his election, is to suppose him much more fool than knave.

General GRANT will depend upon his party as much as any President, but he will choose his measures for himself. He says that he does not announce his selections for the Cabinet, because he does not care to expose them and himself and the objectors to needless pain. He says even quarrels are to wise a decision, and upon what ground? General GRANT knows what men he thinks most fitted for the duty to which he proposes to call them. They are of course Republicans. Now, who can give the General any real information concerning them? Naturally there are plenty of gentlemen who will tell him that his friend better equip somebody else; but he shows his great wisdom in nothing more than in declining to listen to them.

Perhaps the President has not heard of the experience of Mr. LINCOLN in appointing his Cabinet. There were two permanent caucuses of "leading men" in Washington, the Republicans had their spies, their runners, their agents. The Conservative caucus, of which Mr. THURLOW WEED was the presiding genius, urged Mr. SEWARD and Mr. CAMERON, and other Border State men of that kind upon the President. The Radical caucus insisted upon another kind of Cabinet. Rumor had it was perilous to include Mr. CHASE in the Cabinet, and Mr. WEED made a desperate effort against him. Embassies from both sides waited upon Mr. LINCOLN at Willard's, and then at the White House after the inauguration, and the last made its appearance before breakfast upon the morning of the day that the President sent in the names of his advisers to the Senate. Perhaps Mr. LINCOLN'S mind was made up long before. Perhaps he finally nominated those whom he had originally selected; but what infinite vexation he would have spared himself and the politicians if he had said at the beginning that he should decide for himself.

And who has the right to claim to be a leader of the party, and in that capacity to advise the President? Plainly, every party has the best claim that is to office will claim the right, and with equal justice—which is simply saying that there is no other practical way than to leave to the President to decide whom he will consult, if any body. If there is any clique in the party which has hoped that by the necessity of the case the President would fall into their hands, they will now be undeceived. Any "rings" in Congress or out will find that the President will follow his own conviction, relying upon what will not fail him, the better opinion of his party and the country. General GRANT is the man to whom we look with the men who are the strength of the Republican party: and to-day, also, he is undoubtedly more honored and respected than ever by the noble host of business men and camp-followers who always attach themselves to the victorious army.

The new President will enter upon his office with as general public confidence as that which saluted Mr. LINCOLN at the beginning of his second term. His hold upon the heart and faith of the American people is very great, and this faith is founded on a thorough personal conviction of his honesty, capacity, and commonsense. These were the talismans of LINCOLN as they will be of GRANT.

CONGRESS AND INTELLIGENCE.

CONGRESS.

February 8.

In the House, the Senate amendments to the bill regulating coupon duties were agreed to.

February 9.

In the Senate, Mr. Wilson's Suffrage Amendment was passed—44 to 17—providing that no discrimination shall be made in the exercise of elective franchise, or in the holding of office on account of race, color, nativity, property, education, or creed.

February 10.

In the House, both branches of Congress witnessed the counting of the electoral votes. The House separated twice: the first time to decide upon the constitutionality of the electoral vote of Georgia, both branches determining to count; but upon the division in regard to counting, the Senate determined not to count the vote of that State, while the House refused. The whole number upon this question was declared, 214 votes for Grant and Colfax: 114 votes, counting Georgia, and Seymour and Blair 80 votes.

February 11:

In the Senate, the bill to secure equal rights in the District of Columbia, by striking the word "white" from the city charters of Washington, was passed.

February 12.

In the Senate, the appropriation for removing the obstructions in the Red River was passed—$200,000.

In the House, a bill was passed to pay the officers and crew of the Kearsarge $10,000 in gold coin as the value of the pirate Alabama. The bill providing for the payment of a monument from Washington to New York was passed—109 to 64.

February 13.

In the House, a bill was passed to prevent National Bank bonds being taken on United States notes or National Bank notes as collateral security.

NEWS ITEMS.

On the morning of February 8 Senator Morton and Representatives James F. Wilson and J. W. G. Prince called upon General Grant at his residence, and officially informed him of his election as President. Previous to reading the official notification, to which General Grant replied as follows:

"I have no remarks to make to the committee except to endeavor to call around me as assistants, such men only as I believe will carry out the principles which you have said the country desires to see carried—economy, retrenchment, faithful collection of the revenue, and payment of the public debt. If I should fail in any of these duties, I shall not at any time fail to make a record, or even a third trial, with the confidence of the Senate, who have the appointing power, and should just as soon remove one of my own appointees as the appointee of any other person. It would make no difference.

"There is one matter that I might properly speak of here, and that is the selection of a Cabinet. I have concluded to fill that in writing. I will endeavor to announce or even to consult with the gentlemen of the Senate, in regard to inviting to a place in the Cabinet, before the official declaration of the result of the election was made. Although I presume that there was no doubt about what that declaration would be, I have taken consideration that I have no confidence that there is not a man in the country who could be named that I would be in the Cabinet without first or some other gentleman making an effort to secure his confirmation. I think there would be objections to the party named, but that there would be others named that would be quite as objectionable to the first place. I can tell that from the great number of recommendations which have been sent to me, in regard to for this particular person or that one, from different parts of the country. If announced in the Cabinet my efforts would be made to change my determination, and I would fail. I have concluded to defer making it, announce who I am going to invite to seats in the Cabinet until I get to the city where I am to receive confirmation. If I say any thing to them about it, it will certainly not be more than a few days previous to sending in their names. I think it well to make a public declaration of this fact of consultation so that my intentions may be known."

The President has nominated Lewis Dent, brother-in-law of General Grant, as Minister to Chili, ice Kilpatrick removed, with all the Legation. Secretary of Legation.

A heavy and protracted rain-storm has just visited California, overflowing many of the rivers, and doing much damage. Many lives are lost, many of railroad bridges were swept away, and travel considerably obstructed. Another cyclone has visited Galveston.

The steamboat Nellie Mowray was burned on Lake Pepin, in the Red River, on the night of February 6. She had a large number of passengers on board, sixty-three of whom lost their lives.

FOREIGN NEWS.

THE Spanish Constitutional Cortes was organized, February 13, with RIVERA as President.

We publish on page 138 a very full and accurate map of the Island of Cuba, and on pages 136 and 137 a panoramic view of Havana. The Government of Spain has withdrawn his proclamation of amnesty, and has declared the whole island in a state of siege.

The first public Protestant religious service ever celebrated in Spain took place on the 15th of January last. There was no disorder. Some faint idea of the prejudice which exists among the Spaniards against religious liberty is conveyed by the petition lately offered to the Provisional Government against toleration, and signed by over 15,000 ladies.

The King of Greece has chosen a new cabinet. The Government has sent in its adherence to the protocol of the late conference.

Whalen, the Fenian murderer of D'Arcy McGee, was executed in the Hill Jail, Ottawa, Canada. His last words were, "God save Ireland! God save my soul!"

A slight shock of earthquake was felt at Florence, Italy, on the 8th.

GENERAL WASHINGTON RESIGNING HIS COMMISSION TO CONGRESS AT ANNAPOLIS, MARYLAND, DECEMBER 23, 1783.—[SEE FIRST PAGE.]

AT BAY.

See Illustration.

OVER! over at last:
The shots like hailstones fall;
The battlements go down;
Down goes the riven wall.
There went the banner-pole,
Our standard brought to shame;
They're sending fire-brands in—
Look to the smoke and flame!

Nay, do not shrink or fear,
Although the end be nigh;
Thou wilt have time to live,
I shall have time to die.
Thy woman's face will win
The mercy of the foe;
And I—I am content
The certain end to know.

For the old love, Nanette,
I swore this thing to do;
And he who counts the cost
Lives not the cost to rue.
My honor well I love,
Love well the cause I serve;
And yet for thee and thine
From both I freely swerve.

Fierce is the deadly feud
That rends the land apart,
Dividing kin from kin,
Divorcing heart from heart;
But were the deadly breach
A hundredfold as wide,
I had forgotten all
To fight upon thy side.

Lips white with rage will curse
The cur that dares to turn;
And feet will—like a dog's—
The traitor's body spurn;
But in thy heart of hearts
The truth will plead for me,
That when most false to them
I was most true to thee.

That shout! They come, they come!
Once more, Nanette, no fear:
This bullet meets the first,
My sword the next in rear.
It is too soon to yield,
E'en when too late to fly;
And thou'lt have time to live,
I shall have time to die.

FROZEN IN.

IT was a bitterly cold February night toward the close of last century. The Rhine was not completely frozen over, but huge masses of ice floated down its swollen waters from the upper part of the stream. The bridges of boats had been all long since removed, and for many days only a few ferry-boats had hazarded the dangerous passage of the stream. Communication from town to town was only kept up by the road, which ran beneath the mountain sides along the left bank of the river; and even this precarious passage was inundated in parts. The wind blew in angry freezing gusts, but without stirring the leaden veil of sky. All the more stifling seemed the heated air of the low, common rooms of the way-side inn, which marked the first post station from Andernach toward Cologne. The night was advanced. But two or three villagers still lingered over their empty bottles, as if in expectation of some event. This event was the passage of the ordinary diligence from Coblentz to Cologne. The hour when it was due was long since past. The hosty inn-keeper had given orders to his pretty daughter to have all the available beds ready; for he reckoned that the state of the roads would not permit the expected travelers to go further that night. He was now getting sulky that the diligence had not arrived ere, and grumbled against Lorenz, the conductor, for not having made a strenuous exertion to come on to a station at which a few dollars might have been made to find their way into the pockets of a friend. But presently he pricked up his ears. Surely it was the sound of the horn. All doubts were soon resolved by the audible noise of the lumbering wheels on the frosty ground. Curiosity and interest were reawakened. After a sufficient delay to enable the passengers to emerge from their masses of cloaks and wrappers, they were ushered into the room.

First swaggered in a broad-shouldered, red-haired young fellow, in the garb of a student of the period, calling lustily for wine. A group of personages followed, the most striking of which was a fair, handsome girl, pale with fatigue and traces of recent sorrow, who leaned lightly on the arm of a tall, dark, gray-eyed young man, likewise in student attire, who was evidently offering her assiduous service; while on the other side of her tottered an old man, whose features, as far as they could be distinguished under his heavy fur cap, gave unmistakable evidence of his Jewish origin. When led by the fair girl to a bench he sank together with a groan, as if wearied in mind as well as body. The dark-haired young man gazed with admiration upon the lithy form of the girl thus occupied, and then sighed, as if a struggle were taking place in his mind. From his contemplation he was roused by the other student.

"Come, Adrian!" said the burly fellow, "leave off gaping at that frozen Rebecca, with her old Isaac, and take a glass of good Affenthaler to warm your blood, if it be not too hot already."

ITALIAN IMAGE-MAKERS, NEW YORK CITY.

"Hush!" replied the young man addressed as Adrian; "they will hear you, Egidi."

"Why not?" said Egidi, half sulkily. "Should a Jew be offended because you call him a Jew, any more than a dog because you call him a dog. Come away! You are moon-struck, man! Come away! or I shall have you falling in love next with the designing daughter of a villainous old usurer whom you have picked up in a diligence."

"You shall not insult her, at all events," recommanded Adrian, angrily.

But his friend dragged him away with a noisy laugh; and the two were soon engaged in a animated discussion, which ended in an intense appreciation of Master Egidi to the Affenthaler before him.

Supper, meanwhile, had been prepared. With difficulty the old Jew was persuaded to take his seat at the table, where he felt his presence so repugnant to one of the party. Conversation was out of the question under the circumstances. But "mine host" made up for all deficiencies in this respect. In voluble flow of language he warned the travelers of the desperate state of the roads, the terrible dangers incurred by continuing the journey at night in such weather, and the urgent necessity of remaining on the spot. Little head regarding all of these commendations on the first; but presently the conductor entered the room. He was followed by another individual, in humble attire, and bearing a long box, or package, cradled in his arms, who bowed to all around in a manner savoring of unctuous reverence, and all of worship, on which a pair of restless, cunning eyes strangely contrasted. This latter personage was saluted by the host as the keeper of the Mother Rocha, the holy-relic vendor, from Treves. Appealed to by the inn-keeper, Master Lorenz, the conductor, was ready enough to swear that the dangers of proceeding on the journey were certainly very great—but he must say, although, it his presence, in spite of his reverence, chose to go, it was his duty to drive them, and drive them he must. Fortified with this verdict, "mine host" again urged the advantages of his well-aired beds. An impression was evidently made. Egidi smacked his lips over his wine, while his friend gazed anxiously at the latter, who, in her turn, looked almost with entreaty at her old companion. But it was the old Jew who, although evidently weak in health and overcome by his journey, and vexing an air of positive terror at the threatened perils of the journey on his pale face, lifted his voice against the proposal, at this moment of indecision.

"It can not be!—I must go on!—I must!" he cried, striking his hands, and lifting his eyes as if in application to Heaven.

In spite of Egidi's coarse and insulting remonstrances, Adrian's entreaties in favor of the fair companion, the Jew still muttered, "I must go on!—I must!"

"I have entered into a compact," he said, at last, with resolution, "with Master Conductor, here, and his employers, by which I am to be conveyed safely on my right on my way to Cologne, so as to reach that town before the hour of noon; the conductor and his employers must abide by the compact."

"Oh! Shylock," burst out Egidi, "so that you have your moneys to the hour you care not whose liver you stab, even to your own child."

"The God of us all knows that I do for the best," responded the Jew, although with a shudder and a deep sigh; "and, even for the love of the poor girl, we must go on."

All further expostulation, either soothing or insulting, proved to have no effect on the obstinate old man. Master Rochus, the relic vendor, who had been watching the result of the controversy with an eager interest in his small, dull eyes, and had uttered a few cry of disappointment at the unexpected resolve of the Jew, threatened, in a mild vow, the vengeance of the Virgin and all the holy saints at this tempting of Providence on the occasion of a fit wintry weather. But the humble malediction was of no avail.

"The effort was vain," murmured the relic vendor, as he drew away, with a sigh of rage on his face. "But I must on with him still, to prevent his arrival by all means!" and the pious man muttered what sounded more like a curse than a holy blessing.

The conductor moved away to obey orders. He was evidently impatient that Adrian had resolved not to separate himself, on the journey, from his fair creature who had so quickly enchanted him; and, though he still wore a look of surly, was as evidently disciplined to be thought cowardly by his imposing behind. In due time the whole party was again packed in, and the diligence rumbled onward on its journey.

The night had become intensely cold. The old German diligence, as it struggled heavily on its way, looked, through the mist, like the funereal chariot of the Ice King himself. The clocked red light of the lantern, placed aloft in front, like a large demon eye, shed an uncanny, lurid radiance; and an uncanny was the aspect of the four horses, attached all abreast, snorting steams which looked, on this lurid night, like chilly fire. The postillion, perched on his low box, had crouched together, as if to present as small a mass as possible to the cold, and wore the aspect of a dark, toad-cautious and demon carriage. The passengers seemed chilled into silence. Even the doctor, shrunk from his uncongenial companion in the coupé, the relic vendor of Treves, as from a noisome thing. From time to time alone he tried to peer into the darkness, so as to ascertain the nature of the road; and only once, in answer to repeated questions from Master Rochus, whose nervous twitchings displayed his own anxieties, did he vouchsafe the answer that the greater danger was to be apprehended from the increase of the swollen torrents and the roaring masses of ice, which might have accumulated since the diligence last passed that way. In the interior, the silence was only broken by the snoring of Master Egidi, who, after grumbling about the best places being given to "abominable unbelievers," had yielded to the influence of the Affenthaler, and fallen asleep.

From time to time the old Jew muttered, as much from nervous apprehensions as from cold; and his fair companion might have been considered lifeless, had she not occasionally bent forward to arrange the disturbed wrappings of the suffering old man. The faint light within the carriage fell upon the pale features of the latter, as yet, fixed on the pretty form of the girl before him, who was evidently the object of his ardent admiration; and, but for the occasional sigh now and then, he might have been considered lifeless also. Yet, silent as it was, the busy vehicle contained in its small the world of passions, interests, emotions, and cares.

Presently, the diligence began to tumble heavily down a gradual descent. Anon, the conductor, bent eagerly forward. He could see but little; but he felt that there was a struggling and striving among the horses as they gained the hollow. Now came the splashing of water. The road was inundated. For this event he had prepared, but the anxious question in his mind was as to the force and depth of the flood. He called to the postillion to ask whether he could see the railings of a bridge. The answer was in the affirmative.

"Open over that cursed strip of land beyond, and we are safe, thunder and cannon!" he bawled.

"On! man; and take care of the bridge!"

The postillion, who was a man of iron which moved forward with unsteady, swaying movement. Lorenz could just distinguish the tall ridges of the railings of the bridge, amid a wide stream, generally narrow and scanty. A dull grating sound indicated that the diligence was on the bridge. The conductor breathed more freely—the railings tottered. Was the bridge so weakened by the force of the stream during the last hours that it would be unable to bear it still? This apprehension was felt by all except the sleeping Egidi. A heavy groaning sound—a crash—and other railings—another bridge—still still still! The diligence shook fearfully, then seemed to find a firmer support. It had reached the opposite side: but the bridge had fallen in behind it. A few spars of shattered railing, on the side of the carriage had reached, were all that was visible. Again the horses struggled—one—two—once more—then stopped entirely.

Lorenz called again to the driver, but his voice was deadened by the wave of waters around. Without further reflection he opened the door of the coupé, and sprang out. He stood nearly up to his middle in water. To his horror he found that the flood was rushing fiercely against him. The diligence had evidently been carried back upon itself. The horses could stem it with their burden no more.

The conductor's intimate knowledge of every portion of the road caused him to be at once aware of the precarious position in which the carriage had been left. The bridge which it had been checked by the force of the flood was the upper end of a low strip of land skirting the river, and several hundred yards intervening were by a small stream. Lorenz knew that this passage was sometimes inundated in the flooding seasons, but seldom or never to the extent of the present occasion Could they have reached the other end, where the road again rose, all would have been well; but, in the dark and amid the wild confusion of the waters, some accumulation of ice-blocks further down the stream had caused it to flow back on itself. It was impossible—impossible—all retreat had been cut off by the breaking of the bridge—on every side they were hemmed in. The first feeling of the conductor was one of utter despair. An icy chill ran through him. Some of the lesser ice-blocks drove against him, in though coming in contact with him. The danger to all of being frozen to death before they could be extricated was through his brain.

Meanwhile the passengers in various degrees aware of the precarious position in which they were placed, had been roused by the shock, which in every limb, cursed the mission on which he was engaged and all its agents, blasphemed his Maker, and was in utmost consternation at some of his so-called relics from his tray, and prayed to the saints for its deliverance, in agony of mind. In the interior scene, all was still more chaotic, clamorous and selfish despair, was scarcely less agitated. The fair girl, regardless of the cold, pressed her hands on her bosom, looked wildly around, and threated him to be "of comfort;" while the old Jew, more preoccupied it would seem with the weight upon his mind than the danger or self-preservation, shrieked clamorously and ceaselessly, "They must go on! they must!"

Adrian was equally absorbed in the object of his admiration, begged her to trust to his protection, and swore that no ardent lover in so sore a strait, to rescue her or die. He would have sprung from the carriage had not Lorenz extracted him by main force from the window—step until some means could be devised for their liberation.

Egidi, now fully roused from his half-drunken sleep, poured forth a torrent of blasphemous oaths against the head of the "unbelieving and accursed Jew," whose obstinacy and love of usurious gain had plunged them, spite of warning, into so fearful a predicament.

The only means that Lorenz could devise were that the postillion should unharness one of the horses, mount it, wade through the flood until he reached the higher ground, gallop to the nearest village down the stream, and obtain assistance in boats. With difficulty, numbed as were their hands, and with movements impeded by the accumulating ice-blocks, was this task at last achieved by conductor and postillion. As the horse and rider disappeared in the fresh gloom of hope glimmered in the mind of Lorenz. But the gleam was but a flash, extinguished speedily in the utter darkness of despair. Spite of the roaring of the stream, the shouts of the unhappy postillion were heard, to give notice that he was surrounded by ice-blocks, and frozen in, unable to advance or return. With his clothes now freezing to his body, and cracking in every slight movement, Lorenz now contrived to climb upon the roof of the diligence and shout for succor—Egidi as he could not but feel the attempt must be in vain.

In this despairing task he was assisted by Master Egidi, who, with all his coarseness, had a fine stentorian voice. Amid the roar of desperate adversaries, and had climbed upon the roof.

From time to time Adrian, though unwilling to leave his fair friend, joined in the shouts; while she, poor child, heeded little the words of her admirer, and was wholly absorbed in the sufferings of the old man, who, in her way huddled together, or inert and groaning mass. The postillion's horn, too, was blown; but the ringing note of the instrument was dull and faintly presentient then ceased altogether. Above all the clamor might be heard the piteous and disordered groanings of the horses, battered by the ice-blocks whirling around them, and evidently freezing to death. The cries of the drivers reached other ears of the unhappy beings imprisoned in their narrow cell of death; it was that of distant cannonade. Whether it was fancy or reality given to travelers on such occasions; but to them the warning was already vain. The energies of the human frame were benumbed, and weakly nerved as they were more and more by the intense cold which threatened to deaden them soon to lifelessness.

But there was a more immediate danger still. Masses of ice rushed round the devoted carriage, like demon monsters of the flood, ready to claim their prey, and, as they clashed, climbed higher and higher on the vehicle, as though they were living things. With a thundering crash, at last, it was only too true. The waters oozed, and gushed, and hissed into the vehicle beneath the apertures of the doors, and rose and flooded the floor, and now were rising little by little within. The coach tottered and shook in its whole mass, as if tending to destruction. In a short time, as they might be swept away, Adrian contrived to raise the Jew to a crouching position on the seat, where he could keep his head aloft as best he could, chafing his hands. The young man would fain have despoiled himself of all his wrappings to better protect the object of his care, but he hesitated; but these intentions she gently though firmly repulsed.

Within, all was passed in the silence of suffering expectation; while to their ears came the alternate cruses and shrieking prayers of the despairing. Without, meanwhile, the waters rose slowly and steadily—now quiet, but not less fatal—now hissing and bubbling through the apertures, in gurgling streams. All of the last stood, half sobs of drowning men—sucked backward and forward, as the carriage swayed—but slowly rising as the waters rose, and the men on the roof, although they did not feel so keenly the lingering horrors of approaching death by drowning, was perhaps more immediately precarious. In spite of their incessant movements, to impart some warmth to their benumbed limbs, they felt that they could not long contend against their invisible but deadly enemy. With their last failing strength they ceased shouting aloud. The only sound returned was the boom of the cannon. The lingering dawn broke faintly and slowly over the shrouded earth at last. As the snow was falling. A dull, gray view of a sea of ice was gradually revealed. The horses were there, ripe, in death, in their positions. In the nearest distance a dark mass showed where the postillion sat, a frozen statue on his frozen horse. Around the coach the waters still rose more and more.

With the dawn sundry groups of various personages from the neighboring villages had assembled in different spots on the heights above, not far from the place where the diligence had been hemmed in. A merciful Providence had been astir that night, in the shape of Lieschen, the pretty daughter of the inn-keeper. She could not keep her eyes shut, for that fair, delicate girl, exposed to the rigors of the cold, and evident dangers of the journey; and at last she declared to Hans, her swain, "who came to say a last 'good-night' to her, that she would never look upon his face again, if he did not immediately take steps to prevent a catastrophe. So poor Master Hans, however unwillingly, was obliged to pursue a journey, so resolutely begun, by those by-roads on the heights known to the inhabitants of the district. He gave the alarm all along the mountain of the approach of the diligence. The population were already aroused by the sound of the warning cannon; in their eyes the diligence was a sort of body-guard as a thing of government creation and superintendence. It was speedily ascertained that no intelligence had arrived of the reverend vehicle beyond the low, narrow strip of road, known to be already considerably flooded.

Before break of day a crowd of men, and even women and children, were assembled on the heights above. The last snow had ceased to fall, but a mist still hung over the river, like the steam of a gigantic caldron. The little masses of people clustered together for their own—hour, but no answer was returned. Presently the mist swept away, and the cry came that the glimpse of some dark object below had been seen. Again a parting of the mist, and a considerable portion of the river came to view. A louder shout proclaimed that the dark mass of the diligence was visible below. The detached masses now congregated on the promontory of rock overhanging the spot where was the carriage. Means of rescuing the unhappy travelers were discussed. The masses of ice prevented the access of boats. But presently ropes were brought, and several sturdy fellows were lowered down the steep rock with planks and ladders. All was animation, excitement, and interest. Some of the men were soon seen, from above, plunging almost up to their arm-pits in the icy tide. Again the mist swept over the scene, and all was doubts and uncertainties. Long seemed the agonizing moments of suspense. At length came a noise of shouting, and directions to those upon the heights to superintend the action of the ropes. Then, at last, a man was raised to the level of the earth; he bore in his arms a fair girl, seemingly utterly lifeless. Succeeded by women and children, she was borne away to the largest house in the village. Luckily, the parish priest was not without sufficient share of medical knowledge for the treatment of such sufferers. In a few minutes all that was necessary for resuscitation was provided. Last came the old man, a mere mass of ice, whom the girl soon opened her eyes to life: her first inquiry was for her aged companion; and she wept for joy as the old Jew was also likewise borne in, and placed upon a rude sofa: he, too, was completely lifeless. The face of Adrian appeared for a moment at the door: he gazed wildly around him, as if scarcely able to collect his benumbed faculties; but he heard the words, "She lives." And he resigned himself to the hands of those who hospitably cared for him, and placed him with the mattress spread in the outer room. Egidi was there, too, in the first impulse on entering the house had been to open his mouth, with a maiden's tearful eyes and liquid lips were poured down with wonderful effect. Lorenz still strove to stand upon his feet, and laughed and cried hysterically; but the sturdy old soul was wholly overcome. For the postillion alone fears were entertained; his frozen state seemed to have arrested the rapid current of life in his heart. Stiffen, held down on his mattress almost by force, raved the relic vendor of Treves. Terror had absolutely unmanned him. Egidi swore. He screamed incoherent words. Now he cried, "Stop him! let him not get on to Cologne!" and then, again, in an air of triumph, he would exclaim, "Praised be the Saints! It is done! it is done! the reverent Jew will not be there in time!"

Egidi was the first to recover his senses enough, although his complexion remained of the redness of beer-rot. Fortunately for his peace of mind, he was not aware that was at hand was the glass which was being filled with brandy.

"Thunder and lightning!" he shouted, with all the returning force of energy restored to his lusty frame, "here's to the good genius of the house of Hohenfels. The last of the illustrious race of Hohenfels was perished like a frozen cock-sparrow on a dunghill!"

At the same moment, his fair traveling companion had recovered the inner door to escape him to moderate his noisy manner, as the reviving old man had sunk into a heavy slumber. She started at the words of Egidi, and, lingering forward, begged a few words with him. Adrian, who had raised himself from his mattress on his first sight of the entrance, thought that his brain must be under the delusion of delirium, as he caught the eager and animated colloquy between his friend, who had, during the journey, known nothing but repugnance to the sweet girl, and the object of his intense admiration. The conference, hurried as it was, appeared long and —did his eyes deceive him? surely the burly Egidi was overcome by the feeling in the room. He started up, still doubting his own sight. But scarcely less was his surprise when Egidi cried aloud, with fervor, "So help me Heaven, I will do it!" and ran out of the house, while the girl disappeared into the inner room. "It must be all a delusion," Adrian thought, as he tried to collect his senses. No! he was not mad with the sufferings he had undergone. It was with the most intense joy that he became that he saw Egidi again enter the house hurriedly, knock at the inner door, receive a heavy packet from the hands of the girl, and, as she appeared, express a kiss upon her forehead, and then again rush frantically from the house. He sprang up, and released Egidi's friend. He heard the sound of a galloping horse upon the frosty ground as he reached the door of the house. On the road he caught sight of Egidi, seated upon a horse, turback in a mad career. Bewildered, mystified, and with strange sentiments of jealousy raging in his heart, Adrian fell back on his mattress in a sort of swoon.

The day was far advanced when Adrian awoke, to find himself in the arms of the priest, who held his wrist.

"You will do now," said the old gentleman; "you only want food."

"But what did it all mean? Explain!" said Adrian, still confused.

But the priest only shook his head, and again felt the young man's pulse. Adrian saw that he was not communicative. He inquired after his fellow-travelers then. The Jew was still in a very prostrate state, weeping and refusing to be comforted; but the girl was by his side, assuring him that all would be well. She herself was much restored, but evidently troubled in mind. Adrian was still a prey to the most conflicting feelings, compounded of doubt, anxiety, sympathy, jealousy, and fear of having betrayed his own passion on a woman who had so quickly shown an undue familiarity with another man, and that woman a Jewess, when the object of his love had rejected the race. He contrived himself sufficiently to ask, with an air of politeness, how was her father.

"Barmbus, of Cologne, is not my father," she answered, with a smile; "only a good old friend, who deserves a father's title for the care he has long bestowed on me. It is but allegorically that I would now repose some confidence in you. I need a friend, such as you have shown yourself in the past hour of heavy trial, with whom to speak of all my anxious doubts and fears. Will Baron Adrian von Steinberg listen to me?"

"You know my name?" exclaimed Adrian, still more bewildered.

"I learned it from your friend. It is that of one with whom, however distantly connected, I may claim some relationship."

To the astonished Adrian the girl now told all her history. Did he know that unhappy Count Hohenfels, who had become guilty of high treason, and had lived long in exile? Yes, was Adrian's answer, his story had been in every mouth: he was his gentleman's father. She was Helmina von Hohenfels.

The tale, though told with much detail, may thus be succinctly repeated:

"Count Rudolf von Hohenfels had been throughout life the opponent of the Jesuits; and in all his views he had been abetted and supported by his friend and patron, the Emperor Leopold. But he had excited the virulent hatred of the powerful Jesuit party. The Emperor stood too high to be reached at once by the manœuvres of these wily foes; but Count Hohenfels became a doomed man. The extravagance of his father, and a considerable amount of carelessness on his own part, had greatly involved the property of the County. To relieve himself of his temporary difficulties he had contrived to raise a large sum upon the mortgages of his estates; but, in effecting this negotiation, the Count had not been aware that cunning eyes had been upon all his movements, and that the mortgage had fallen into the hands of his enemies, the Jesuits. Not content with this hold upon their active adversary, however, the party had had their nets around the unwary Hohenfels, with such adroitness of intrigue that they were able to bring against him a charge of high treason, with some fair semblance of truth. But the Count had been warned by his friend, the Emperor, of this accusation, and, until measures to prove his innocence could be taken, had been counseled flight and concealment. The unhappy nobleman had been for some few years a widower; but a child, a daughter, remained to him; and he feared to make the poor little delicate girl a partner of his flight. Some years previously the Count had been able to render an important service to a persecuted Jew; and Barnabas had sworn a life-long devotion to his benefactor. To this faithful and secret friend the Count had confided his child. Years went by before the innocence of the exiled Hohenfels could be proved: By the active measures of Leopold the Jesuit party had been considerably weakened; a considerable had betrayed their manœuvres. The falsehood of the accusation was patent; and the Count was recalled. But a revenge was still in the hands of his adversaries. The hour of the forefeit of the mortgage had arrived. If the Count escaped the fate prepared for him, at all events his estates would pass into the hands of the adverse party. No time was to be lost to rescue the estates by payment of the debt. The funds were raised. The Count hastily sent his instructions to old Barnabas to depart for Cologne, with the moneys and papers for the release, and pay off the mortgage before the close of the last day. For this purpose the Jew had departed with his young charge from Mayence—where he had sought a residence with Helmina—to Cologne; and hence the poor faithful old man's agony lest he should not arrive in time. The catastrophe of the past night had rendered all his hopes. He lay prostrate upon his couch, groaning that all was lost, that his benefactor would be ruined, and nothing was left him but to die. But at this hour of despair Helmina von Hohenfels had discovered in Egidi the orphaned son of her father's younger brother, and hence her cousin. To him the situation of things had been explained; and Egidi, who, coarse as he was, had a brave heart, had ridden on, intending to take relays of post-riding horses on his way, with the papers and moneys in his possession, and strive to reach Cologne in time to prevent the foreclosing of the fatal mortgage."

But still all was doubt and anxiety. Would Egidi, weakened as he was by the miseries of that fearful night, be able to reach the town of the Cologne man-of-law in time? The terror of failure was in the minds of all.

Poor old Barnabas whimpered and lamented; and Helmina was thrown into trouble for the fortunes of her father, whom she was so soon to press in her arms, after years of separation. And thus the day passed in their village home.

Rochus, meanwhile, was in a state of high fever. From his mad ravings, and his muttered words in his more lucid intervals, it had soon been revealed to the priest, and subsequently to Adrian and Helmina, that the relic vendor had been bought over by the agents of the Jesuit party, to prevent, at any price, the arrival of Barnabas, the Jew, at Cologne. Providence had destined that both the Jew and the old man should be timely found strength enough to know that the estates of his benefactor had been saved.

It is only further necessary to record that Helmina was soon restored to her father—that, in due course of time, Adrian von Neisberg was betrothed to the fair Helmina—that counsel Egidi drank profound health to the bride and bridegroom on the occasion of the latter's marriage—that Egidi, to enable his benefactor's grandchildren—and that Rochus, the relic vendor, became the parents of a numerous family of boys. Evidence, it may be as well to mention, that the anniversary of that day in February was always kept in the family of Hohenfels as one of thanksgiving for escape from death, when frozen in.

HOME AND FOREIGN GOSSIP.

THE question is often asked with paternal solicitude, what climate is the most consumptive invalid? The answers given are puzzlingly diverse, and must always be so, since adaptation has to be found to the needs of a consumptive person most in general be a matter of experiment in each individual case. It is however, a common and sensible opinion that relief is most likely to be procured by some change of air—that is, if the disease has not progressed too far. To this very cede invalid away from home is usually dangerous. Within a few years past many Eastern physicians have recommended Minnesota as a favorable place of residence for those threatened with lung disease. Many have been permanently benefited by the climate. Others have continued to waste away. Minnesota is by no means a warm country. Its summer monster is said to fall frequently thirty and forty degrees below zero in the winter; but the air is pure, dry, and still, and one does not feel the intense cold as in places of the same temperature where high, cutting winds prevail. March and April are, as in most sections, trying months. It is said, moreover, that those who regain health by going to Minnesota need to stay there in order to render the cure permanent. Nassau, on New Providence, one of the Bahama Islands, is a favorite resort for those threatened with pulmonary complaints. An average of about four days takes one to this city. Fruits, such as oranges, bananas, and cocoa-nuts abound; but the special attraction is the equable temperature, which enables a person whose lungs are affected to keep constantly out of doors. No such thing as a fire-place or stove is ever required for warmth. There are no damp, cold winds, no sudden changes in the atmosphere. The thermometer seldom falls below sixty-two degrees in what is called winter, nor is the heat so excessive in summer as it sometimes is in New York. It is the genial climate which draws invalids to the city of Nassau.

THE progress of the gallant Louis Napoleon must decidedly. They have been looking up dates of important events; and have drawn the following curious parallel between the present Emperor of France and Louis Philippe. Those who attach significance to coincidences may be interested in solving the mysterious problems:

Louis Philippe ascended the throne	1830
Was born	1773
Queen was born	1808
They were married	1809
1830 1808 1809	1830
1 1 1	1
1 8 0	1
1 8 0	0
1 8 0	9
1848 1848 1848

The year of banishment.

Louis Napoleon proclaimed Emperor	1852
Was born	1808
Empress was born	1826
Married	1853
1852 1826 1853
1 1 1
1 8 0
0 8 0
1 8 0
1869 1869 1860

To be dethroned.

THE Lieutenant Ball, held in the Academy of Music last week, was so numerously attended, that the large building was rendered ill to answer its purpose. The costumes were elegant, and generally in excellent taste. A significant feature of this ball, which distinguishes it from many others which have been given this season, was the absence of objectionable persons. The committee were so particular that one mask who appeared in a rather indecorous toilet was politely requested to withdraw.

THE trial trips of the Elevated Railway, which has been constructed on Greenwich Street, from Courtland Street to the Battery, appear to have given great satisfaction. The cars are drawn by an endless chain, and every part of the motive process seems to have been designed with a view of rendering accidents impossible. The chain is worked by a pair of oscillating engines. It is proposed to extend this railway to Thirtieth Street, to connect with the Hudson River Railroad trains.

A standard headline to one column in our daily papers continues to be "The Awful Murder." Any developments of various kinds appear from time to time, but they seem to have no important bearing on the case. The mystery is as mysterious at the time of this writing, though something new, startling, and even decisive may "turn up" any day. There are some cases on record as strangely dark as this; but time or luck is usually generally brought to light, and it is believed that the old adage, "Murder will out," will prove true in this instance.

WHY not employ the forest-a machine for composing editorials, interesting stories, and the like? In this progressive age, somebody really should undertake to do it. It would scarcely be more difficult than to design a mathematical contrivance for adding figures in so simple a manner as Mr. C. H. Webb has done. His "Adding Machine" works in a wonderfully intelligent manner, and will give a much agreeable rest to the brains of those whose lives are often harassed by puzzling figures.

The dangers of the sea have been unusually great during the present winter. Seldom has the Atlantic Ocean been visited by so many violent storms, and some terrible maritime disasters are the consequence. That so many vessels have been able to outride the furious elements and bring their passengers safe to port, is a matter of devout thankfulness.

In an essay read at a recent meeting of the French Academy of Sciences the author stated that manufacturers of lace are in the habit of using a large quantity of coloring matter, sometimes as much as 200 per cent. of the whole weight, on silk subjected to the dyeing process—a practice which must be injurious to its quality. Some silk charged with foreign matter to the amount of 150 per cent., having been subjected to a temperature of 220° Fahrenheit, it lost 22 per cent. of water. One end of a sample thus treated caught fire even before it was taken from the stove, and the whole burnt into a mass immediately after. A second sample did not ignite when it was brought out, but emitted sparks which threatened to break out into a flame. The material, being perfectly dry, absorbed moisture so rapidly when exposed to the air as to cause an immediate increase of temperature.

A curious story is reported from Washington. Among the appropriations recently asked from Congress was one for paying the Superintendent of the Globe. Nobody knew any thing about the Globe. Investigation has revealed the fact, soon after Seward's Washington died, Congress provided for the construction of a vault under the Capitol, to be called the Crypt, in which his remains were to be deposited. A light was to be kept burning near it, and a Superintendent was appointed to watch it, as he has been doing daily for the last fifty years! Meantime, Washington's body was not deposited there, and every body, Congress included, forgot that any such thing was in existence. The only memorial that exists to keep the memory of the affair alive has been the annual appropriation for the Superintendent.

The Secretary of the Treasury has issued stringent orders to prevent the filling of fur sacks in Alaska. A military force will be stationed on the islands of St. Paul and St. George, in Behring's Sea, and a steamer will cruise in their neighborhood. The seals frequent in numbers only these islands, and their habits and timidity are such as to make necessary the utmost caution in dealing with them, or they would be speedily driven from the Territory. Every proceeding likely to frighten the animals is prohibited; but if the stoppage of seal-hunting causes want among the natives, it will be liberally relieved from the treasury. Strict regulations are to be enforced until Congress shall make provision by law putting the animals to be killed.

GENERAL GRANT maintains his characteristic reticence even toward ladies, who, fancying perhaps that they can find a weak spot, appeal to his gallantry. "General," remarked a lady to him not long ago, "I am dying to know who are to be in the Cabinet?" "Are you?" was the composed rejoinder. "Yes," she repeated, "I am dying with curiosity!" "That's just what Mrs. Grant says!" was the cool reply of the General.

Every one who writes about tea and coffee nowadays—and there are not a few who find a good deal to say about them—gives a new recipe for making these beverages, which he thinks is the only really good one extant. It is somewhat amusing as well as puzzling to read the various methods, which are each one the "best." The most directions we have seen are these: "In point of strength it is found exponentially that infusions of tea and coffee are strong enough when about two and a half tea-spoonfuls of tea or two ounces of freshly-roasted coffee are infused in boiling water." Boiling water! How much, pray? A gill, or a gallon, or what other quantity?

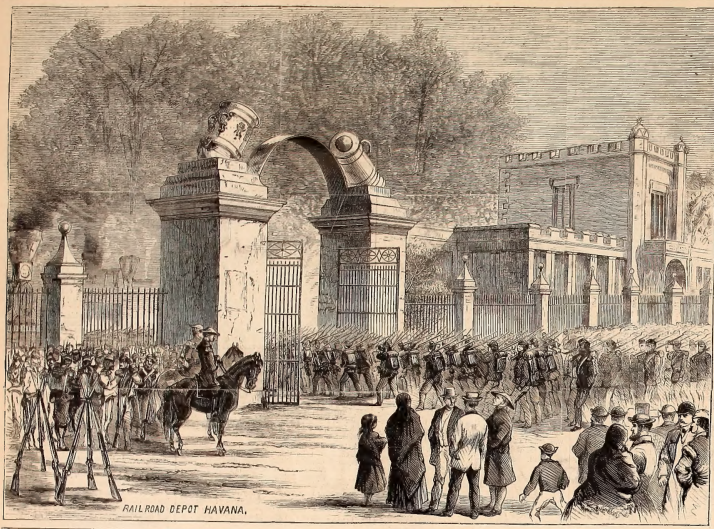
CHICAGO is to have a mammoth hotel. A company has been incorporated, styled the Intercoastic Hotel Company, which, with a capital of two millions dollars, and many enterprising leaders, will doubtless accomplish something excellent in the hotel line.

The Chinese language is peculiar in construction and inflections. An American missionary lately asked for a hammer, and had a whole paragraph to him. Another, demanding a beef-steak, was supplied with three thousand words. A third applied for some candy, and received a rusty old hatchet.

DO children ever feel cold when they are dolog what they like to do, is a question suggested by the recent case of a little fellow. He was crying bitterly with the cold when he was told by his mother to remain in the house. To insure compliance with her demands she removed the youngster's boots. He was discovered an hour later mercifully counting barefooted along the snow.

IT is reported that Queen Isabella has remarked that if she had known Paris was such a pleasant place to live in she would have abdicated long ago. Her apartments in her new Parisian mansion are spacious and gorgeous. She goes out but little, except for her daily promenade at the Bois de Boulogne. She usually spends her evenings at home reading, writing, or receiving callers. Of course numerous visitors endeavor to gain access to her, but all are not admitted. Her husband is a fond nuisance. Her son, the Prince of Asturias, is said to be a pleasant boy, lively and keen. He is ten years old, and seems to like Paris.

MAP OF CUBA AND THE ADJACENT ISLANDS.



RAILROAD DEPOT HAVANA.

THE CUBA

The determination of the not only against the insurg retary SEWARD'S tempting
ernment has not lost its indicates the value which dependency.

Our latest advices from no means suppressed, but ing into the hitherto undis
The best evidence that could the insurrection is to be foun for its resistance. Not only imported from Spain, while the Government is also organ partly for garrison duty and La Cubana, the strongest volunteers in order that the forces. This does not look tranquillity, or as if the proportions of a local riot.
supplied with food, and in the ern Department can sustain difficulty is the insufficient
The result of this condi affairs shall take in Spain.
without revolution, followed then the entire force of the the Cuban rebels. In any whether the island becomes colony.

Havana, of which we pub of government (transferred
It is situated on a fine bay population of over 130,000 well-informed persons estim walls of the city inclose an but more than twice that ed with buildings. The stre palaces of the Captain-Gener plain edifices fronting on the "Fuente de la India," or Ind
markable palms. The Cathe is a spacious and solid structu formerly the Convent of San
Our illustrations of Havana
by C. D. FREDRICKS, No. 10
Cuba and the adjacent islands

PANORAMIC VIEW OF HAVANA, CUBA.—[PHOTOGRAPH

OLUTION.

to hold Cuba at any cost, es in spite of any of Sec- ratens that the home Gov- with its queen. It also pon her principal colonial r that the revolution is by ent of rebellion is spread- ern section of the island. ished as to the strength of magnitude of the means housands of soldiers been more are on the way, but battalions of volunteers, active service in the field. Havana, is garrisoned by roops may proceed to Cien- the island were restored to had been reduced to the olutionists are abundantly ban fastnesses of the East- ged conflict. Their only arms.

end upon the turn which Provisional Government be, a monarchy or a republic, ot will be available against very in Cuba is doomed, ent or remains a Spanish norasmic view, is the seat tiago de Cuba in 1550). Gulf of Mexico. It has a to the census of 1853, but y high as 200,000. The about 2000 by 1100 yards, st of them is thickly cover- regular but narrow. The of the Intendant are large, de Armas, in which is the fountain, surrounded by re- se, fronting on the harbor, ains the deposit warehouses, ers.

ngraved from photographs de la Habana. A Map of n found on page 135.

PALM'S ABOUT THE INDIAN FOUNTAIN.

ED BY C. D. FREDRICKS, No. 108 CALLE DE LA HABANA.]

THE HELPLESS

The ben-bird beats her pinions on the snare:
Her mate the goshawk's crooked talons tear:
Over the callow nestlings, weak and lone,
What wing shall spread when darkness gathers?—None.
Poor little birds!

The shepherd's dog with age lies dead and cold:
The wolf steals down upon the trembling fold:
The last pale crimson streak of sunset's gone:
Who guards the flock until the morning?—None.
Poor little lambs!

The father in the felon prison lies:
The mother in her garret sadly shuts her eyes:
Sharp hunger sickens: day is almost done:
Who watches by the squalid cradle?—None.
Poor little babes!

THE BOY OF NORCOTT'S.

CHAPTER XXII.

UNWISHED-FOR PROMOTION.

THE morning after this brief intimation I attached myself to the departure side of book whose business was to receive and reply to telegraphic messages. I took that group of countries whose languages I knew, and addressed myself to my task in right earnest. An occupation where either leisure or emergency will always possess a certain interest, but beyond this there was not any thing attractive in my present pursuit. A pressing message to sell this, or buy that, to push on vigorously with a certain enterprise, or to suspend all action in another, would perhaps form the staple of a day's work. When disasters occurred, too, it was their monetary feature alone was recorded. The fire that consumed a warehouse was told with reference to the amount insured; the shipwreck was related by incidents that bore on the lost cargo, and the damage incurred. Still, it was less monotonous than the work of the office, and I had a certain pride in converting the messages—sometimes partly unintelligible—into the plain language that could be understood, that imparted a fair share of ambition to my labor.

My duty was almost myself, with my book in which I had entered the dispatches, each evening, at supper-time, at Herr Iginas's house. He would be at table with his daughter when I arrived, and the interview would pass somewhat in this wise: Herr Oppovich would take the book from my hands without a word, and, even as he sat at me, and the Fräulein, with a gentle bend of the head, but with the faintest show of any more intimate greeting, would acknowledge me. She would continue to eat as I stood there, as unmindful of me as though I were a servant. Having scanned the book over, he would hand it across to his daughter, and then would cause a few words to be written after which his daughter would write opposite each message some word of reply or of comment, such as, "Already provided for," "Will attend to details myself," "Useless," or such like; but never more than a few words, and these she would write freely, and only considering herself with the man—whose accuracy failed him more and more every day, and whose general debility grew rapidly—did no more than glance at the matters and nod an acceptance of them. In giving the book back to me she rarely looked up, if she did so, and if her eyes met mine, their expression was cold and almost defiant; and thus, with a slight bend of the head, I would withdraw.

Nor was this reception the less chilling that, before I had well closed the door, they would be in full conversation upon something that was reference it was which had inspired the constraint and reserve. These, it might be thought, were not very proud and liberal measures to me; and yet they formed the happiest incident of my day, and I actually longed for the hour, as might a lover to meet his mistress. One day it will pass with a pale and beautiful face, to watch the sunlight as it played upon her golden hair, which she wore in small knots, hanging peculiar to her face—in heavy masses of curls that fell over her back and shoulders; her hand, too, a model of symmetry, and with the fingers rose-tipped, like the goddesses of Homer, affected me as a spell; and I have stood there unconsciously staring at it till warned by a second admonition to retire.

Perhaps the solitude in which I lived helped to make me dwell on this thoughtfully on this daily-recurring interview; for I went nowhere, I associated with no one, I dined alone, and my one brisk walk for the day was exercise I took by myself. When evening came, and the other clerks frequented the theatre, I went home to read, or at others to sit and think.

"Sara tells me," said the old man one day, when some matter chance had brought him to my office—"Sara tells me that you are suffering from over-confinement. She thinks you look pale and worn, and that this constant work is telling on you."

"Far from it, Sir. I am both well and happy, and if I looked to be made happier, this thoughtful kindness would make me so."

"Yes; she is very kind, and very thoughtful, too; but, as well as these, she is despotic," said he, with a faint laugh; "and so she has decided that you are to exchange with M. Marsac, who will be here by Saturday, and who will go up to all the details of his walk. He buys our timber for us in Hungary and Transylvania; and he, too, will enjoy a little rest from constant travel."

"I don't speak Hungarian, Sir," begun I, eager to offer an opposition to the plan.

"Sara says you are a quick learner, and will soon acquire it—at least, enough for traffic."

"It is a business, too, that I suspect requires much insight into the people and their ways."

"You can't learn them younger, Ind; and, as all those we deal with are old clients of the house, you will not be much exposed to roguories."

"But if I make mistakes, Sir? If I involve you in difficulty and in loss?"

"You'll repay it by zeal, Ind, and by devotion, as we have seen you do here."

He waved his hand in action, and left me to my own thoughts. Very sad thoughts they were, as they told me of separation from her that gave the widest charm to my life. The manner to me had been so markedly cold and distant for some time, so unlike what it had been at first, that I could not help feeling that, by continuing me away, some evidence of displeasure was to be detected. The old man's kind, fatherly interpated, for every day showed him less and less alive to the business of "the House;" though, from habit, he persisted in coming down every morning to the office, and believed himself the guide and director of all that went on there.

I puzzled myself long to think what I could have done to forfeit her favor. I had never in the slightest degree passed that boundary of deference that we all like to exact from all in the service of the house. I had neglected no duty, nor, having no intimates or associates, had I given publicity to any part of me that I had said this or that of my employers. I scrutinized every act of my daily life, and suggested even possible and impossible causes for her coldness, but without approaching a reason at all probable. While I thus doubted and disputed with myself the evening dinner-hour arrived, bringing them a letter addressed to myself. It bore the postmark of the Austrian Post, and superscribed "Digby Owen, Esq., at Messrs. Oppovich & Fils, me." I tore it open, and read:

"The Abbey, Kilgobbin, Co. Cork, 'Lady Norcott's Sunday's Well, Cork, Ireland.'"

The writing looked an English hand, and the language was English, but the name was not, nor any signature. Could it have been, then, that I had folded, and sealed, and sent on my letter—that letter I had written to my mother—and found out knowing it, and that the lawyer had sent me this reply, which, though long delayed, might have been prompted like the rest by eagerness for tidings I conveyed? At all events, I had got my dear mother's address—at least, I hoped so. This point I had long been anxious to solve, and sat down to write to her. It was a very flurried note I composed, though I did my very best to be collected. I told her that I was well, was busy, and by what accident of fortune I had come here; that I had reasonable hopes of advancement, and, even now, had a salary that left me little to be needed. I was afraid to say much of what I wished to tell her till I was sure my letter would reach her; and I entreated her to write me in return of post, were it but a line. I need not say how much longer and fuller what longings to be again beside her, to hold her hand, to hear her voice, and call her by that dearest of all the names affection dictates. "I am going from this in a few days into Hungary," added I, "and address me here, and it shall be sent after me."

When I had finished my letter I was free from my thoughts to this strange communication, so abrupt and so short. How came it to Finme, too? Why was it addressed to Oppovich and not to whom? If posted in Fiume, why not written there? Ay; but by whom? Who could know what I had stated for any one's address? It was a secret buried in my own heart.

I suddenly determined I would ask the Fräulein Sara to send in when she came to dress, by which, of course, I could do without disclosing the contents of the note. I hurried off to the house, and asked if she would permit me to speak to her.

"Yes. The Fräulein was going out, but, it my business was brief, she would see me."

She was in bonnet and shawl as I entered, and stood with one hand on a table, looking very calm, but somewhat hurried.

"I beg your pardon, M. Owen," said she, "if I say that I can only give you a few minutes, and will not ask you even to sit down. If it be matter of the office—"

"No, mademoiselle, it is more a matter of chance."

"Then, if it relate to your change of occupation—"

"No, mademoiselle, not even to that. It is a purely personal question. I have got a letter, with a Fiume postmark, but not without the writer's name; and I am curious to know how it could find me to discover him. Would you look at the hand, and see if it be known to you?"

"Pray excuse me, M. Owen. I am the stupidest of all people in reading riddles or solving difficulties. All the world knows as to say how I treat anonymous letters myself. If they be simply insults, I burn them. If they relate what appear to be matters of fact, I wait and watch for them."

Offended by the whole tone of her manner, I bowed and moved towards the door.

"Have you seen M. Marsac? I hear he has arrived."

"No, mademoiselle; not yet."

"When you have conferred and consulted with him your instructions are all prepared; and I suppose you are ready to start?"

"I shall be, mademoiselle, when called upon."

"I will say good-bye, then," said she, advancing one step toward me, evidently expecting to offer me her hand; but I replied by a low, very low, bow, and retired.

I thought I should choke as I went down the stairs. My throat seemed to swell, and then to close up; and when I gained the shelter of the thick trees I threw myself down on my face in the grass, and sobbed as if my heart was breaking. How I vowed and swore that I would tear every recollection of her from my mind, and never think more of her, and how her image ever came back clearer and brighter and more beautiful before me after each oath!

CHAPTER XXIII.

THE MAN WHO TRAVELED FOR OUR HOUSE.

As I sat brooding over my fire that same evening my door was suddenly opened, and a large burly man, looming even larger from an immense cape, rather than the man, entered. His first care was to divest himself of a tall Astrakhan cap, from which he flung off some snow-flakes, and then to throw off his cape, still steaming the snow from his great boots, which reached halfway up the thigh.

"You are," cried he at last, with a jovial air, "you see I come, like a good comrade, and make myself at home at once."

"I certainly see so much," said I, dryly; "but whom have I the honor to receive?"

"You have the honor to receive Gustave Manceforce de Marsac, young man, a gentleman of Dauphine, who now masquerades in the character of the travelled agent for the respectable house of Hodnig and Oppovich."

"I am proud to make your acquaintance, M. de Marsac," said I, offering my hand.

"What age are you?" cried he, staring fixedly at me. "You can't be twenty?"

"Yes, I am not quite so young."

"And they purpose to send you down to replace me?" cried he; and he threw himself back in his chair, and broke out into laughter.

"I see all the presumption; but I can only say it was none of my doing."

"No, no; it is not presumption," said he, in a half-coaxing tone. "But I may say it, without vanity; it is not every man's gift to be able to succeed as I have done, Monsieur. May I ask for a cigar? Thanks. A real Cuban I verily believe. I finished my tobacco two posts from this, and have been smoking all the samples—pepper and hemp-seed among them—since then."

"May I offer you something to eat?"

"You may if you accompany it with something to drink. Would you believe it, Oppovich and his daughter were at supper when I arrived to report myself, and neither of them as much as said, Chevalier—I mean Mon. de Marsac—won't you do us the honor to join us? No. Old Ignas went on with his supper, and I could eat a potato," said, I think it was; and the fair Sara examined my packing-book to see I had made no delay on the road; but neither offered me even the courtesy of a glass of wine."

"I don't suspect it was from any want of hospitality," I began.

"An utter want of every thing, mon cher. Want of courtesy; want of delicacy; want of due deference to a man of birth and blood. I see you are sending your servant out. Now, my dear, don't send a stranger—don't make what we call a 'Prince Rupert' of me. A little quiet supper, and something to wash it down; good wholesome wine, is all the rest. May I give your man the orders?"

"You will confer a great favor on me," said I. He took down my address, and whispered a few minutes with him at the window. "Ly Kleptomitz first," said he aloud, as the man was leaving; "and then come to my M. Marsac sent you. Smart 'bursche' you've got there. If you don't take him with you hand him over to me."

"I will do so," said I, "and am happy to have secured him a good master."

"You'll not know him when you pass through Fiume again. Fiume is Marsac's nut every time Europe to drill a servant. Give me a Chinese, an Esquimaux; give me a Hottentot, and in six months you'll not know him—a passable visitor, driver a letter, wait at table, or serve coffee, with the quiet dignity and the impassive steadiness of the most accomplished. Fiume is not immortal. Do you think he is?"

"I have no opinion to think so."

"Well, well, you are too young to take interest in politics; not but that I did at fourteen: I majored at fourteen, Monsieur. I will show you a stiletto Mazzini gave me on my birthday, and the motto on the blade was, 'An service du Roi.' Ah, you are not a Legitimist, I'll tell you. I hear you say to yourself, 'How the devil did he come to this place? what led him to Fiume?' A long story that; a story that Alexandre Dumas would give one of his eyes for. There's more adventure, more scrapes by villainy, dangers, and deathblows gnashing in that twenty-two years of my life—I am now thirty-six—than in all the Monte Christos that ever were written. I will take Chevalier Marsac's counsel for once, and say, What do you say if we lay the cloth? It will expedite matters a little."

"With all my heart. Here are all my household goods," said I, opening a little press in the wall.

"And not to be despised, by my means. Show me what a man drinks out of, and I'll tell you what he drinks. When a man has got thin glasses like these—à la Montebello, as we say—his ripple is Bordeaux."

"I confess to weakness," said I, laughing.

"It is my own infirmity, too," said he, sighing. "My theory is, plurality of wines is as much a mistake as plurality of wives. Coquette, if you will, with fifty, but give your affections to one. If I am any thing, I am moral. What can keep your fellow so long? I gave him but two commissions."

"Perhaps the shops were closed at this hour."

"If they were, Sir," said he, pompously, "at the word Marsac they would open. Ha, what do I see here—a piano? Am I at liberty to open it?" And without waiting for a reply he sat down, and ran his hands over the keys with a masterly facility. As he flew over the octaves, and struck chords of splendid harmony I could not help feeling an amount of credit in all his boastful declarations just from this one trait of real power about him.

"I see you are a rare musician," said I.

"And it is what I know least," said he; "though Elotow said one day, 'If that rascal De Marsac takes to writing operas I'll never compose another.' But here comes the supper: and as he spoke my servant entered, with a small basket with cold viands in it, two bottles of Chianti wine, and a good-sized tin box, with a charcoal fire beneath.

"Well and perfectly done!" exclaimed my guest, as he aided them to place the soup on the table, and to dispose some hors d'œuvre of anchovies, caviare, ham, and fresh butter on the board. "I am sorry we have no flowers. I love a bouquet. A few camellias for color, and some violets for smell. They relieve the grossness of the material enjoyments; they poetize the meal: and if you have no women at table, mon cher, be sure you have flowers: not that I object to both together. There, now, is our little bill of fare—a white soup, a deviled mackerel, some truffles with butter, and a cutlet upon with stewed mushrooms. Oysters they had not, not even those little Ostenders they call scampi; but the wine will compensate for much: the wine of Hungary: Champagne, with a faint suspicion of dryness. Ah, the chairs of the board in all form. "You are called—"

"Digby is my Christian name," interrupted I, "and you can call me by it."

"Digby, I drink to your health: and if the wine had been only a little warmer, I'd say I could not drink it so in a more generous way. No fellow of your age, however, knows how to air his Bordeaux: hot flannels to the carafe before decanting, and all that is necessary, and let your glasses also be slightly warmed. To sip such claret as this, and then turn one's eyes to that Chinese-looking wonder in the wall, is like the sensation of a man who in his honey-moon fancies how happy he will be one of these days, if it succeeded to a peerage. Don't you see the triumphant enjoyment at this moment? Is there not something at your heart that says, 'Hodnig and Oppovich may go to the devil for me?'"

"No; I don't think you have rightly measured my feelings. On the whole, I rather suspect I bore a very good will to the house and people who have enabled me to have these comforts."

"You pretend, then, to what they call gratitude?"

"I have that weakness."

"I could as soon believe in the heathen my mother: I like the man who is kind to me while he is kind, and when the kindness, and I could, if occasion served, be kind to him in turn; but to say that I could retain such a memory of the service of one who found it would renew in me the first pleasant sensations I received, and with these sensations the good-will to require them, is downright nonsense. You might as well tell me that I could get drunk simply by remembering the orgy I assisted at ten years ago."

"I protest against your sentiment and your logic too."

"Then we won't dispute the matter. We'll talk of something we can agree upon. Let us abuse Sara."

"If you do, you'll choose some other place to do it."

"What, do you mean to tell me that you can stand the haughty airs and proud pretensions of the young person?"

"I mean to tell you that I know nothing of the Fräulein Oppovich but what is amiable and good."

"What do I care for amiable and good? I want a girl to be graceful, well-mannered, pleasing, lively to look at, and eager to listen. There now, don't get purple about the cheeks and flash at me such fiery looks. Here's the Champagne, and we'll drink a bumper to Sara."

"Take some other name for your toast, or I'll fling your bottle out of the window."

"Why, will, will you?" said he, setting down his glass, and measuring me from head to foot.

"I swear it."

"I like that spirit, Digby: I'll be shot if I don't," said he, taking my hand, which I did not give very willingly. "You are just what I was some fifteen or twenty years ago—warm, impulsive, and headstrong. It's the world—that the old world, Digby—grinds that generous nature out of one! I declare I don't believe that a spark of real truthfulness survives a man's first twenty campaigns: there are very faint, very faint indeed; there's a suspicion of evil in the upper lip, and some small capillary flourishes along your cheek. That wine is too sweet. I'll return to the Bordeaux."

"I grieve to say I have no more than that bottle of it. It was some I bought when I was ill and threatened with ague."

"What profanation! any thing would be good enough for ague. I, at in a man's days of vigorous health he merits cherishing. Let us console ourselves with Rediger. Now, boy," said he, as he cleared off a bumper from a large goblet, "I'll give you some hints for your future, far more precious than this wine, good as it is. Gustave de Marsac, like Homer's hero, can give gold for brass, and instead of wine he will give you wisdom. First of all for a word of warning: don't fall in love with Sara. It's the popular error down here to do so, but it's a cruel mistake. That fellow that has the hemp trade here—what's his name—the vulgar dog that wears mutton-chop whiskers, and fancies he's English because he gets his clothes from London? I remember his name presently—he has all his life been proposing for Sara, and begging off—as matters go well or ill with the House of Oppovich; and as he is a shrewd fellow in business, all the young men here think they ought to 'go in' for Sara too."

I should say here, that however distasteful to me this talk, and however willingly I would have repressed it, it was totally out of my power to arrest the flow of words which, with the force of a swollen torrent, came from him. He drank freely, too, large goblets of Champagne as he talked, and to this, I am obliged to own, I looked as my last hope of being rid of him. I placed every bottle I possessed on the table, and lighting my cigar, resigned myself, with what patience I could, to the result.

"Am I keeping you up, my dear Digby?" cried he, at last, after a burst of abuse on Fortune and all that it contained that lasted about half an hour.

"I seldom sit up so late," was cautious reply; "but I must own I have seldom met with a good evening."

"You hit it, boy; that was well and truly spoken. As a talker, of the highest order of talk, I yield to no man in Europe. Do you remember Duvergier saying in the Chambre, in an apology for being late, 'I dined with De Marsac?'"

"I can not say I remember that."

"How could you? You were an infant at the time." Away he went after this into reminiscences of political life—how deep he was in that Spanish marriage question, and how it came to a breach—an irreparable breach—between Guizot and himself, when that woman, "you know whom I mean, the Countess, went to Buhver. Of course, I ought not to have confided it to her. I know all that as well as you can tell me; but then I am wise, when I choose, who is self-possessed at all times?"

Next entirely trustful of what he was telling me, and little interested in it besides, I brought him back to Fiume, and to the business that was now about to be confided to me.

"Ah, true; you want your instructions. You shall have them, not that you'll need them long, mon cher, a few months—what am I saying?—three will see it all up with Hodnig and Oppovich."

"What do you mean?" cried I, eagerly.

"Just simply what I say." It was not very easy for me to follow him here, but I could gather, amidst a confused mass of self-glorification, prediction, and lamentation over warnings disregarded, and such like, that the great Jew house of "Hodnig and Oppovich was the real head of the firm of Hodnig and Oppovich. "The Nathanheimers own all Europe and a very considerable slice of America," burst he out. "You hear of a great wine-house at Xeres, or a great corn-merchant at Odessa, or a great tallow exporter at Riga, and it's all Nathanheimer! If a man prospers and shows that he has skill in business, they'll stand by him, even to millions. If he blunders, they help him away as if to brush away that cork. There must be no failures with them. That's their creed."

He proceeded to explain how these great potentates of finance and trade had agencies in every great centre of Europe, who reported to them every thing that was going on, who flourished, who foundered; how, when enterprises that promised well presented themselves, Nathanheimer would advance any sum, no matter how great, that was wanted. If a country needed a railroad, it a city required a boulevard, if a sea-port wanted a dock, they were ready to furnish it—and all of them. The conditions, too, were never unfair, never ungenerous, but still they bargained always for something besides money. They desired that this man would aid such a project here, or oppose that other there. Their interests were so various and so far spread that they needed political power every where, and they had it.

How effectually power pardoned, and power condoned, which was any, the slightest, insubordination among those they supported and maintained. Marsac gave a catalogue of those that had ruined in London, Amsterdam, Paris, Frankfort, and Vienna, simply because they had attempted to emancipate themselves from the control imposed upon them. Let one of the subordinate firms branch out into an enterprise unauthorized by the great head, and straightway their transactions become dishonored and their credit assailed. In one word, he made it appear that from one end of Europe to the other the whole financial system was in the hands of a few crafty men of immense wealth, who unthroned dynasties and controlled the fate of nations with a word.

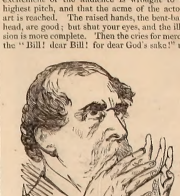
He went on to show that Oppovich had somehow fallen into disgrace with these mighty patrons. "Somehow that he is too old and too feeble for business, and hands over to Sara details that she is quite unequal to deal with; some ever that he has speculated without sanction, and is intriguing with Greek democrats; others declare that he has been merely unfortunate; at all events his hour has struck. Mind my words, three months hence they'll not have Nathanheimer's agency in their house, and I suspect you'll see our friend Bettmeyer will succeed to that rich inheritance."

Rambling on, now talking with a vagueness that savored of imbecility, now speaking with a purpose-like acuteness and power that brought conviction, he sat till daybreak, drinking freely all the time, and at last so overwhelming me with strange revelations that I was often at a loss to know whether it was he that was confounding me, or that I myself had lost all control of right reason and judgment.

"I've been dead beat, my poor fellow," said he at last, "and it's your own fault. You've been drinking nothing but water these last two hours. Go off to bed now, and leave me to finish this bottle. After that I'll have a plunge off the end of the mole, cold enough it will be, but no ice, and you'll find me here at one o'clock with a breakfast appetite that will astonish you."

I took him at his word, and said "Good-night."

MR. CHARLES DICKENS'S NEW READING.



NEARLY eleven years have passed since Mr. CHARLES DICKENS commenced his career as a professional "reader." He had read the "Christmas Carol" and the "Chimes" before public audiences on several occasions, but always in aid of the funds of some charitable institution. It was not until the evening of Thursday, the 29th of April, 1858, that he appeared to give a reading for his own benefit.

Since then, as is well known, Mr. Dickens has frequently given readings from several of his works, in London, in the principal towns of England, Ireland, and Scotland, and in the United States.

But, although among his friends and such of the outside world as had been admitted to the private performances of the Tavistock House theatricals Mr. Dickens was known to possess much dramatic power, it was not until within the last few weeks that he found scope for its exhibition on the platform. When Mr. Dickens read recently from one half-dozen books to friends and acquaintances, on whose discrimination and knowledge of public audiences he had reliance, and when, after requesting their frank verdict on the experiment, he commenced the new reading, "Sikes and Nancy," (intl, gradually warming with each succeeding sentence, he flung aside his book and acted the scene of the murder, shrieked the terrified pleadings of the girl, growled the brutal savagery of the murderer, brought looks, tones, gestures simultaneously into play to illustrate his meaning, there was no one, not even of those who had heard the scene or who believed in him most, but was astonished at the power and the versatility of his genius.

Grandest of all the characters stands out Fagin the Jew. There is nothing comic about him, there is nothing grand or tragic, as in Shylock; he is sordid, mean, avaricious, and revengeful; and Mr. Dickens shows him to you in every phase. You read it in his rounded shoulders, in his sunken chin, in his puckered cheeks and hanging brow, in his gleaming eyes and quivering, clutching hands, in the lithe shiftiness of his movements, and the intense earnestness of his attitudes. The voice is husky and with a slight lisp, but there is no nasal intonation in the part. And so should every other conventional attributes be omitted, the conventional words are never spoken; and the Jew fence, crafty and cunning even in his bitter vengeance, is there before us, to the life.

Next comes Nancy. Readers of the old edition of "Oliver Twist" will doubtless recollect how desperately difficult it was to fight against the dreadful impression which Mr. George Cruikshank's picture of Nancy left upon the mind, and how it required all the assistance of the author's genius to preserve interest in the stunted, squat, round-faced trull whom the artist had depicted. No such ill-favored slut would have found a protector in Sikes, who among his set and in his profession was a mark. We all know Nancy's position; but just because we know it we are certain she must have had some amount of personal comeliness. Mr. Cruikshank has entirely denied her. In the reading we get none of the common side of her character, which seem forth occasionally in the earlier volumes. She is the heroine, doing evil that good may come of it—breaking the trust reposed in her that the man she loves and they among whom she has lived may be brought to better lives. With the dread shadow of impending death upon her, she is thrillingly earnest, almost prophetic. Thus, in accordance with a favorite custom of the author, during the interview on the steps at London Bridge, not only does the girl's language rise from the tone of everyday life and become imbued with a romantic intensity and fervor, but that eminently prosaic old person, Mr. Brownlow, becomes affected in the same manner, saying "before this river wakes to life," and indulging in other romantic types and metaphors. This may be scarcely lifelike, but it is very effective in the reading, enchaining the attention of the audience and forming a fine contrast to the simple pathos of the dialogue in the murder-scene, every word of which is in the highest degree natural and well-placed. It is here, of course, that the excitement of the audience is wrought to its highest pitch, and that the acme of the actor's art is reached. The raised hands, the bent-back head, are good; but what your eyes, and the illusion is more complete. Then the cries for mercy, the "Bill! dear Bill! for dear God's sake!" untered in tones in which the agony of fear prevails even over the earnestness of the prayer, the dead, dull voice as hope departs, are intensely real. When the pleading ceases, you open your eyes in relief, in time to see the impersonation of the murderer seizing a heavy club and striking his victim to the ground.

Fagin

I would have the reading end here. I would have the curtain descend, as it were, upon that deed of blood. I would have no more of Sikes, nothing of the pleasant humor of Mrs. Sharp. Throughout the entire scene of the murder, from the entrance of Sikes into the house until the catastrophe, the silence was intense—but a phrase, "a pin might have been heard to drop," might have been legitimately employed. It was a great study to watch the faces of the people—eager, excited, intent—permitted for once in a lifetime to be natural, forgetting to be British and cynical and unimpassioned. The great strength of this reading did not last into the concluding five minutes. The people were earnest and attentive; but the wild excitement so seldom seen among us died as Nancy died, and the rest was somewhat of an anti-climax.

A LOVER'S QUARREL.

By EDGAR FAWCETT.

CAN I think how it happened? Vaguely. She was there on the porch, you know, The wide of the woodbines above her, The pomp of the roses below; And zealously stitching, as usual, At the work you have doubtless seen— An impossible worsted parrot, A solecism in green.

I stood by the gate and watched her, With feelings strangely queer As those in your book of poems, Tom— The book that was damned last year. And so richly the sunbeams jeweled Her hair in its golden knot, That you, with your knack for sonnets, Would have collided one on the spot!

But when I unfastened the gate, Tom, The noise of its clinking latch Made her look from the parrot's crimson wing With a crimson flush to match. And the speed of her nimble needle Was stopped with a sweet surprise As she bid me go through the roses By the glad light in her eyes.

And then for an hour and longer On the shadowy porch we sat, With humming-birds in the woodbine To drowsily echo our chat— Light, wandering talk, and careless— Of nothing, and nothing, But somehow beneath it a hidden joy Like the gleam of the wedding-ring.

It is wonderful, Tom, how often A sensible man will try, When his power of bliss looks perfect, To fling it wantonly by: The reverse, I suppose, of that impulse Which prompts us to shrink from pain, And a problem in metaphysics I am powerless to explain.

Did you ever contemplate in rapture, Like the poets Percy Fox, Some marvel of delicate color And faultlessly chaste design, And feel at the moment a longing Destructively lunatic, To stab the immortal canvas With a lunge of your ...sking-stick?

Don't smile; for a similar madness Attacked me, I'm sure, that day. How the quarrel began or ended I would be idle, perhaps, to say. But the serpent that stole to our Eden (And I state, Tom, what I mean) Took the form of a worsted parrot, A solecism in green.

I chose to be stupidly fretful That the eyes I loved were bent Always toward the tiresome bird, On its crimson wing intent. What I said is hard to remember; Entre nous, I'd rather not try 'Twas a wish, I believe, that the parrot Could make use of his wing and fly.

Her answer was apt and ready— You know, Tom, the darling's wit— "Poor bird! as it's only worsted You must fly, I suppose, from it." What then? And follow, don't ask me. I was petulant, she was much more; We quarreled and parted.—You're laughing, You unsympathetic beast!

But, Tom, as you go there this evening, While I sit gloomily here, Could you manage—I know you will, Tom— To whisper a word in her ear? Just mention how dearly I love her, And say how forlorn I've been, And all for that odious parrot, That solecism in green!

HUMORS OF THE DAY.

THE BEST HAT FOR A BETTING MAN.—A wide-awake.

AN Alabama editor, in pulling a grocery kept by a woman, says: "Her tomatoes are as red as her own cheeks, her indigo is as blue as her own eyes, and her pepper as hot as her own tongue."

HERRINGS are the only sure preventive against hair falling off.

A SENSELESS SAYING.

"Pluck up your courage." Do nothing of the sort! Better mid action than in. The former is the better. It will stand you in rare good stead one of these dark nights.

FOG-SIGNALS—Coughs and colds.

KILLING TIME—Shooting a cow'ey.

A DREADFUL DEED—A warrant for execution.

Irish citizen in his grief is asked by his friend, What's the matter, Mat? "Matter, indeed! Why, here, I insured my brother's life only two weeks ago, and I entreated him to avoid wild adventure. And when I came to tell them insurances they'd been after making some mistake, the blackguards they tried to bribe me off with a hundred pounds, as if I was a heathen to sell my brother's blood!"

IF YOU WANT A KISS, TAKE IT.

There's a lofty Saxon proverb
That is pretty much like this,
That a man is a fool who begs
When he has a woman's kiss.
But there's danger in displaying,
And the sweetness may forsake it:
Be I tell you, Love Provident,
If you want a kiss, why take it.

Never let another follow
Steal a march on you in this,
Never let a laughing maiden
Say you spelling for a kiss.
There's a royal way to klasing
And the jolly ones will take it
Have a motto that is winning:
If you want a kiss, why take it.

Any fool may face a cannon—
Any body wears a crown—
But a man must win a woman
If he'll have her for his own.
Would you have the golden apple,
You must find the tree and shake it:
If the telling is worth the having,
And you want a kiss, why take it.

Who would hurn upon a desert
With a forest smiling by?
Who would give his wings for summer
For a bleak and wintry sky?
On! I tell you there's a secret
And you can not, can not break it,
Have a motto that is winning:
If you want a kiss, why take it.

Any fool may face a cannon—
Any body wears a crown—
But a man must win a woman
If he'll have her for his own.
Would you have the golden apple,
You must find the tree and shake it:
If the telling is worth the having,
And you want a kiss, why take it.

"Doctor," said a gentleman to a physician, "my daughter had a fit this morning, and afterward remained for half an hour without knowledge or understanding." "Oh," replied the doctor, "never mind that; many people continue so all their lives."

THE ARMY DRILL.

ATTENTION—Wake up!

EYES TO—Look with some amiable and virtuous young woman. Don't look at anybody else.

ATTENTION—Pay to her, assiduously and respectfully.

RIGHT FACE—Pop the question like a man, and she'll accept you.

QUICK MARCH—With her to church, and go through the service without stuttering.

HALT—And reflect seriously for a few moments; then determine to devote yourself entirely to your wife.

RIGHT ABOUT FACE—From the haunts you have frequented when single, and prefer your own home.

ADVANCE ARMS—To your young wife when out walking together, and don't let her walk three or four yards behind you.

BREAK OFF—Billiard playing, betting, and staying out at night, if you wish to have a happy home.

An Irishman complained to his physician that he stuffed him so much with drugs, that he was sick a long time after he got well.

A wag calls Grecian architecture the "stoops" that ladies use at present.

Josh Billings says: "When a young man sin't good for my thing, I like to see him have a good-headed cane. If he can't buy a cane, let him part his hair in the middle."

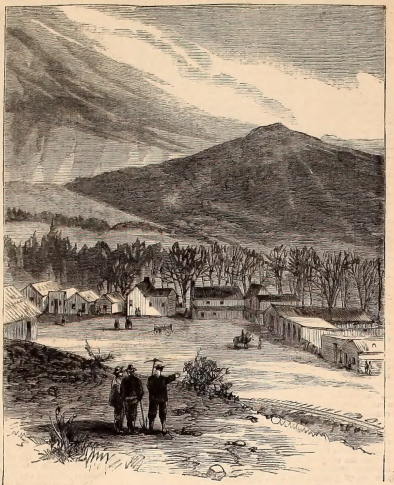
RHYMING CALENDAR.

January snowy,	July mopey,
February flowy,	August croppy,
March blowy,	September poppy,
April showery,	October blowy,
May flowery,	November showery,
June bowery,	December frosty.

An old minister the other day asked a woman what could be done to reform her husband to attend church. "I don't know," she replied, "unless you were to put a pipe and a jug of whisky in the pew."

A noted politician was once asserting his entire indifference to the opinions of his opponents, and to their personal abuse. "Why," said he, "a man like me, the other day to Judas Iscariot, but I don't care a fig." "And a by-stander, "but how does Judas feel about it?"

THE UNION PACIFIC RAILROAD—SCENE AT WEBER CANON, UTAH.



THE UNION PACIFIC RAILROAD—TERMINUS AT ECHO CITY, UTAH.

THE PACIFIC RAILROAD IN UTAH.

ECHO CITY, represented in one of our illustrations on this page, is the present terminus of the Union Pacific Railroad in Utah. The accompanying picture is a sketch of Weber Cañon in the same vicinity, being situated on the east of Salt Lake and a few miles north of Salt Lake City. It is now almost certain that this railroad, connecting the Atlantic with the Pacific Ocean, will be completed by the end of the coming June. The transportation of passengers and specie and of precious goods will thus find an appropriate channel. This railroad will result in the rehabilitation of Eastern Asia.

CAMP SUPPLY, INDIAN TERRITORY.

THE post is situated near the confluence of the "Beaver River" and "Wolf Creek," which, uniting, form the north fork of the Canadian River. The view of Wolf Creek, in our sketch, is obstructed by the timber, which at this point is very dense. The site was originally selected by Brevet Brigadier-General ALFRED SULLY, Lieutenant-Colonel Third Infantry, on a previous expedition, in the month of September, 1868, the column which he commanded having had a severe skirmish near this place while crossing Wolf Creek, at a point which is designated as "Bald Hill." This post was planned by General SULLY, and is, without doubt, one of the most defensible works of its kind on the Plains. The store-houses and quarters of the soldiers are constructed of heavy timber, cut in the vicinity of the post, and are loopholed for musketry; the stockade is ten feet high, and the block-houses are also ten feet in height, with a parapet of four feet, from which an additional fire can be brought to bear on all points of approach. The soldiers' quarters are so constructed that they can fire over the roofs of the buildings (which form lunettes at the angles), while an additional fire is delivered from the loopholes inside. The garrison consists of Companies "B," "E," and "F," Third U. S. Infantry; Company "G," Thirty-eighth Infantry, with "C" Troop, Tenth U. S. Cavalry, the whole commanded by Brevet Major J. H. PAGE, Captain Third U. S. Infantry.

BURNING OF THE INTERNATIONAL HOTEL AT ST. PAUL.

THE fire at St. Paul, Minnesota, on the 3d instant, destroyed property estimated at over $100,000. The International Hotel and four other buildings were laid in ruins. The occupants of the hotel, two hundred and six in number, were suddenly alarmed at twenty minutes past five o'clock in the morning. The flames spread with great rapidity, and the lodgers found it impossible to secure even their clothing. Several persons, occupying rooms on the third floor, were obliged to escape by means of ladders. No lives were lost. Among the lodgers were several members of the Minnesota Legislature.

CAMP SUPPLY, INDIAN TERRITORY.

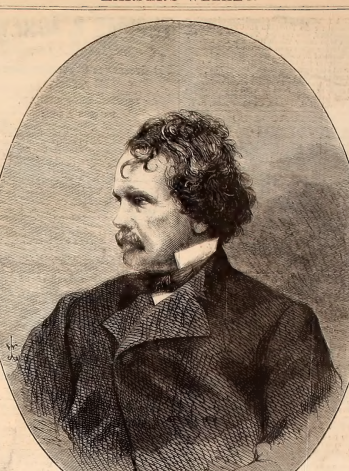
JAMES T. BRADY.

GENIUS pertains always and exclusively to the moral nature. Spiritual sympathy is its very atmosphere. But this sympathy in some men is so entirely occupied and absorbed in an ideal world, and is so exclusively directed toward goals that are only discerned by the highest order of prophetic instinct, that it scarcely touches the individual heart: its appeal is to the race. Our Platos operate by cycles—through the attraction of gravitation, rather than through molecular affinities. This, perhaps, is the highest order of human power; it is certainly the grandest.

But there is another kind of genius that does not elevate itself above the immediate circle of its movement, but which most strongly allies itself with the moral forces with which it comes in contact. To this order belongs the subject of our sketch. His eminence and wonderful tact as a lawyer, and his success as a politician, were due to a genius of this kind, aided by an active and brilliant intellect, well stored with knowledge, and ripened by culture.

JAMES T. BRADY was born in this city, April 9, 1815. Both of his parents were natives of Ireland; and his father, who emigrated to this country in 1812, before entering the legal profession, prepared young gentlemen for college, numbering among his pupils Archbishop M'CLOSKEY. JAMES was the eldest of his children. He studied law in his father's office, and was admitted to the bar in 1836. His practice was extensive, and in 1845 he was appointed Corporation Counsel of New York city, holding that position for two terms. He was chiefly known from his connection with criminal cases.

Among the important criminal cases in which MR. BRADY was engaged for the defense were the trial of DANIEL E. SICKLES for the killing of FRANCIS BARTON KEY, in Washington; the case of M'DONALD, of Mobile, for the killing of VIRGINIA STEWART, in Broadway; the case of HUNTINGTON, the Wall Street banker, in which the defense of moral insanity was set up; the JEFFERIS case, in which the prisoner was charged with the murder of WALTON and MATHEWS; the case of Madame RESTELL, in which he was associated with the late DAVID GRAHAM, the prisoner being charged with having produced abortion; the BAKER-POOLE trial—BILL POOLE having been shot at Stanwix Hall, Broadway, in 1854; the



THE LATE JAMES T. BRADY.—[PHOTOGRAPHED BY ROCKWOOD, 809 BROADWAY.]

KANE arson case, wherein the prisoner was tried for having set fire to buildings in the Third Avenue, and several lives were lost by means of the conflagration. There were also many other criminal trials of lesser note in which he was counsel for the prisoner. As a proof of his extraordinary success as a criminal lawyer it may be stated that of all the persons he has defended for capital offences, only one ever suffered the extreme penalty of the law. The last criminal case of importance, the defense of which was conducted by MR. BRADY, was that of General COLE, who was tried in Albany a few months since for the killing of Hon. MR. HISCOCK, a member of the late Constitutional Convention.

Few men have left behind them a larger circle of cherished friends than MR. BRADY. His kindness and courtesy endeared him to all. With the younger members of the bar he was an especial favorite, always ready to aid them by his counsel and advice. A large number of young lawyers owe their success, in no small degree, to the kindly encouragement given them by him in times of trouble and despondency.

MR. BRADY was never married. His political sympathies have always been with the Democratic party; but he supported the Administration against the rebellion, and upheld the Draft law of 1863. He devoted a considerable portion of his time to literary efforts, and was a popular lecturer. His appreciation of the ludicrous was very great; and his sallies of wit before the bar or in the rostrum were always ready and irresistible in their effect. His eloquence as an advocate was often more than a match for superior legal attainments.

ANECDOTE OF LORD ELDON.

THE Chancellor was sitting in his study over a table of papers, when a young and lovely girl, somewhat rustic in her attire, slightly embarrassed by the novelty of her position, but thoroughly in command of her wits, entered the room, and walked up to the lawyer's chair. "My dear," said the Chancellor, rising and bowing with the Old-World courtesy, "who are you?" "Lord Eldon," answered the blushing maiden, "I am Bessie Bridge, of Weobly, the daughter of the Vicar of Weobly, and papa has sent me to remind you of a promise which you made him when I was a little baby, and you were a guest in his house on the occasion of your first election as Member of Parliament for Weobly." "A promise, my dear young lady?" interposed the Chancellor, trying to recall how he had pledged himself. "Yes, Lord Eldon, a promise. You were standing over my cradle when papa said to you, 'Mr. Scott, promise me that, if ever you are Lord Chancellor, when my little girl is a poor clergyman's wife you will give her husband a living;' and you answered, 'Mr. Bridge, my promise is not worth half-a-crown, but I give it to you, wishing it were worth more!'" Enthusiastically the Chancellor exclaimed, "You are quite right; I admit the obligation; I remember all about it;" and then, after a pause, archly surveying the damsel, whose graces were the reverse of matronly, he added, "But surely the time for making good my promise has not yet arrived? You can not be any one's wife at present?" For a few seconds Bessie hesitated for an answer; and then with a blush, and a ripple of silver laughter, she replied, "No, but I do so wish to be somebody's wife! I am engaged to a young clergyman, and there is a living in Herefordshire, near my old home, which has recently fallen vacant, and if you give it to Alfred, why then, Lord Eldon, we shall be married before the end of the year." Is there need to say that the Chancellor forthwith summoned his secretary, that the secretary forthwith made out the presentation to Bessie's lover, and that, having given the Chancellor a warm expression of her gratitude, Bessie made good speed back to Herefordshire, bagging the precious document the whole way home?

BURNING OF THE INTERNATIONAL HOTEL AT ST. PAUL, MINNESOTA, FEBRUARY 3, 1869.—[SKETCHED BY R. O. SWEENY.]

EACH TO HIS OWN.

"O my sweetest, and O my dearest,
How rich the summer is, having you!
Over your head the sky is cloudless,
Warmest sunshine and freshest dew."
So, with a lover's flattering breath,
The butterfly to his daisy saith.

"Ah, my sweetest, and ah my fairest!"
Brushing her face with a tender touch;
"Of all the flowers you are the rarest —
And all the meadows are full of such!"
O royal rose, sitting up alone,
Is there any thing more for you to own?

Ho, blue heavens that bend above her!
Ho, little daisy down in the grass!
Who would guess her to have a love
More than others we daily pass?
Why love cometh or stays away
Truly none can but love can say.

The little brown robin leafy-nested,
Quiet and small and plain is she;
But listen to robin scarlet-breasted!
He is as proud as proud can be.
None could praise her with sweeter words
If she were wife to the king of birds.

The sweetest home in the forest's bosom
None can be happy owner knows;
And to be called the fairest blossom
It isn't needful to be a rose.
O love, you surely are blind to see
In all the meadows only me!

Truer than truth, love, when you flatter!
Say, do you know, O great, grand skies,
That all your shining's a useless matter,
Without—he said it!—without these eyes?
"Be proud, my daisy, my pearl," saith he,
"For you are the crown of the world to me!"

CARL SPENCER.

FACTS FOR THE LADIES.

MRS. MAXEY has had her Wheeler & Wilson Sewing Machine in almost daily use for over eleven years, without any repairs. She has done with her own hands during that period the larger portion of the sewing for a family of eleven children and herself, and a part of the time for fifteen or twenty farm servants. She would not now change her Wheeler & Wilson for any other she has ever seen.

R. MAXEY.

Brandon, Miss.

BETTER than medicines, better than the skill of doctors, is the rest and freedom from the best and brain racking labor of the needle, which is vouchsafed to the modern woman by the use of the sewing machine. We know, and can attest it, that a sewing machine company like the WILSON (of Cleveland), which scatters over the land a first-class machine at a comparatively trifling cost, is to be ranked among the benevolent institutions of the day.—Cleveland Daily Leader.

THE manía for Velocipeding has at last reached such a height as to require a journal devoted exclusively to its interests. This requisition is supplied by the "VELOCIPEDIST," a neat, well-printed, and well-filled eight-paged journal, issued monthly, or oftener if required, edited by T. R. PICKERING and W. CHESTER KING, 144 Greene Street.

WALTHAM WATCHES are the best and the cheapest.

DISPEPSIA TABLETS cure Indigestion, Heartburn, and Sour Stomach. Fifty Cents per Box. Mailed for 60c. Sold by druggists. S. G. WELLING, 871 Broadway.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

BOOSEY'S DOLLAR SERIES of Popular Operas for Piano-forte Solo, with Overture and whole of Chorus, splendidly bound in vermilion and gold, now ready. Cheapest and most extensive collection of Modern Music in the world. Mailed free on application. Any work mailed on receipt of price.

BOOSEY & CO., 644 Broadway, N. Y.

Enameled White, $1.00 by Mail.
JOHN FOGGAN & CO. 78 NASSAU ST., N.Y.

SEND ONE DOLLAR, and get by return mail one of LORING'S DOLLAR BOXES of the richest Initiated French NOTE-PAPER.
All the ladies are in love with them.—Address
LORING, PUBLISHER, BOSTON, MASS.

EXTRA INDUCEMENTS offered to good agents to canvass for the YOUTH'S ILLUSTRATED BIBLE HISTORY, now in press. The work will be embellished with nearly THREE HUNDRED ENGRAVINGS, and will be one of the most entertaining, instructive, and elevating of all books. It should and a place in every family in the land. Agents are meeting a ready sale. Sold only by Subscription. Price $3 75.

Canvassing Books will be ready for Agents by the 15th. Those who wish to secure choice of territory should apply at once. Send for full description Circular, with terms to agents. Masonic Publishing Co. Address JOHN G. WILLIAMS, 439 Broome St., N. Y.

HITCHCOCK'S
HALF-DIME MUSIC.
Printed on heavy music-paper, 4 pages, colored titles. Music and Words. Mailed for 5 cts. each, or the whole 20 for $1 00.

YOUNG FOLKS' SONGS.
No. 1. Captain Jinks. Maclagan.
" 2. Wait till you Get Home, Robin?
" 3. We'd better Bide a Wee.
" 4. Nelly Bly.
" 5. Not for Joseph.
" 6. Rosabelle, Sweetheart, Good-bye.
" 7. I really don't Think I shall Marry.
" 8. Prime of Teens.
" 9. Champagne Charlie.
" 10. Skating Rink Polka.
" 11. Darkey's Waltz.
" 12. Come, Either, my Baby, my Darling.
" 13. Our Danish Boy's Whistle.
" 14. Little Maid Mine.
" 15. Maggie's Secret.
" 16. Would Love Shine over All. (Sacred Song.)
" 17. The Old Cottage Clock.
" 18. Ida Lewis.
" 19. The Rose of Erin.
" 20. Arma-Arm. (Polka Mazurka.)
" 21. She might not Sell your Eggs.
" 22. Rolling down Broadway. (By this time.)
" 23. Waltzing down at Long Branch.
" 24. Still I'll Love Thee.
" 25. The Passing Bell.
" 26. Take Back the Heart.
" 27. See the Conquering Hero Comes.
" 28. There's a Charm in Spring.
" 29. Up in a Balloon.
" 30. Olympic Schottische.

The above can be had at the music, book, and periodical stores, or by enclosing the price, 5 cts. each, to the publisher. Other popular pieces will rapidly follow. Agents wanted. BENJ. W. HITCHCOCK, Publisher, 19 Spring St., New York (Nicholas Building).

Teeth clouded with Impurities are only for those who will not take the trouble to keep them in perfect order by the daily use of SOZODONT. A reliable and pleasant preparation that removing mist from the face of nature, this hygeian preparation will remove every impurity from the dental surface, and keep the teeth always pure and spotless.

HORACE GREELEY.—AGENTS Wanted at once for Recollections of a Busy Life," the Autobiography of HORACE GREELEY published in this time; an elegant volume of 624 pages, with superbsteel Portrait of Author, and other beautiful Illustrations. Selling very rapidly. Price, $3.50. Agents give the most glowing Territory and Liberal Discounts. Send for circular to J. B. FORD & CO., 164 Nassau Street, New York.

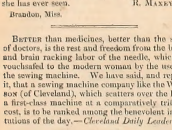
100,000 BROOK TROUT,
Four Months old, for sale by the MARLAND TROUT PONDS. Price $25 to $20 per Thousand. Address C. P. WILLIAMS, or JOHN PALMER, Richland Station, Oswego Co., Oswego, New York.

LIBRARY OF LOVE. Etiquette, Courtship, and Marriage, a little book worth reading. Sent free, have Dress, and Write Letters correctly, 4 books, 30c. Model Letters, wonderful and mysterious, 30c. Both in a Package. W. C. WEMYSS, 3 Astor Place, N. Y.



IMPROVED ALUMINIUM BRONZE HUNTING-CASED WATCHES.
$500.
I will cheerfully give the Magnificent above watch to any one can surpass my imitation of GOLD WATCHES. Description of metal and goods sent free on receipt of stamp.
Prices, from $16 to $22.
Send for my C. O. D., with charges. Address JULES D. HUGUENIN, LE LOCLE, SWITZERLAND, Nos. 56 & 58 Nassau Street, N. Y.
Call and examine for yourselves.

$3 00 worth of Music for Ten Cents.
BRAINARD'S MUSICAL WORLD.
A Monthly Magazine. Each number contains twenty pages of new music and interesting reading. Terms $1 00 per annum. An elegant writing-desk given for five subscribers. Pianos, Organs, Sewing Machines, &c., for clubs. Specimen copies, with $3 00 worth of music, full list of premiums, &c., sent on receipt of Ten Cents. Address S. BRAINARD & SONS, PUBLISHERS, CLEVELAND, OHIO.

THE LANGHAM HOTEL, London.
JAMES M. SANDERSON, Manager, formerly of New York.

MILES O'REILLY,
HARPER & BROTHERS, NEW YORK,
Have Just Published:
THE POETICAL WORKS
OF THE LATE
GENERAL HALPINE.
THE POETICAL WORKS of CHARLES G. HALPINE (MILES O'REILLY). Consisting of Odes, Poems, Sonnets, Epics, and Lyrical Effusions which have not heretofore been collected together. With a Biographical Sketch and Explanatory Notes. Edited by ROBERT B. ROOSEVELT. Portrait on Steel. Crown 8vo, Cloth, $2 50.

His poetry will not be soon neglected or forgotten. There is a charm about his verses which most make them ever welcome. Tenderness, sentiment, and humor abound in them; the absence of malice or bitterness is characteristic of the writer's whole-souled nature. * * * Few can read the poems without pleasure—none can read them without interest.—New York Evening Post.

☞ HARPER & BROTHERS will send the above Work by mail, postage prepaid, to any part of the United States, on receipt of the price.

THOMAS R. AGNEW,
ESTABLISHED 1836,
260 Greenwich St., corner Murray, New York,
IS OFFERING CHEAP,
FOR CASH:
COFFEES.—Green, Roasted, and Ground; all grades to suit the palate and the pocket of the million; 75c., 28c., 29c., 30c., 32c., 40c.; Mocha, 50c.
TEAS.—Every body should know who they buy teas of, as all who sell ourteas are not watchmakers. Mr. Agnew spent three years in China, and knows exactly what teas are, and does not deal in damaged goods of any kind; consequently every pound of tea sold is warranted as represented, or the money returned.
MOLASSES.—Mr. Agnew has his agent in New Orleans, to export in the Sugar-houses, who ships him the choicest of the crop.
RICE.—Mr. Agnew has a house in South Carolina, who ship him the best head rice in market.
FLOUR is received direct from the mills. Genesee, Indiana, and Lake, best brands in market, from $7 to $16 per barrel.
GROCERIES.—Every thing desired in families, hotels, restaurants, boarding-houses, steamships and sailing vessels is sold by Mr. Agnew, who is a live man, working 16, 18, and 20 hours every day for the best quarter of a century. He has a steam-coach computer with the old fossilized grocers, who have been brought up in a straight barrel, or as hickeys for others, and never begin to flap their wings when gray-headed. In a word, Agnew is as far ahead of the trade as Dexter is of the cart-horse when trotting. He is the man for the people—sells as inspiring and parental as time.

No excuse now for Fingers and Magazines lying about loose all the year.

CONANT'S PATENTED PERIODICAL COVERS,
for HARPER'S WEEKLY or BAZAR, sent by mail for $1 25. They hold the numbers of a whole year.
Address R. CONANT, 39 NASSAU ST., N. Y.
"A good thing."—New York Tribune.
MAGAZINE SIZE, 50 CENTS. SHEET-MUSIC SIZE, $1 60.

VOX HUMANA, French Exposition Rubber Reed Instrument. Any person can play them from ordinary Music Without practice. Sent, express paid, for $1. DESBURES & CO., Orange City, N. J.

Tobacco.—Manufactured is working wonderful cures of Rheumatism. Where other remedies fail, this inestimable salve takes hold, penetrates to the very core, removes all inflammation, and effects a complete cure.

MAGIC, MYSTERY, & MIRTH.
Send free on receipt of a stamp, by
W. HEPHISTO, 63 Nassau St., New York.

$5000 a Year can be made by live agents, selling my new and valuable invention. Address J. LATHAM & CO., 23 Second St., Baltimore, Md.

WATERS'
NEW SCALE PIANOS,
With Iron Frames, Overstrung Bass and Agraffe Bridge.
Melodeons and Cabinet Organs.
The best manufactured; Warranted for Six Years.
Fifty Pianos, Melodeons, and Organs, of six first-class makers, at Reduced Prices for Cash, during this month. The same to let, and rent allowed if purchased. Second-hand instruments at great bargains. Wanted, 50 Second-hand Pianos, for which we will pay Cash. Warerooms, No. 481 Broadway, New York. HORACE WATERS.

$245 A MONTH. 10 AGENTS 49
New and useful articles. Address
WM. J. HOWARD & CO., Alfred, Me.

$3 WONDER.
INDUSTRY SEWING MACHINE.
Only THREE DOLLARS. Simple, practical, and durable. Makes the genuine chain stitch, and adapted for all kinds of plain sewing. Any child can operate it. An elegant gift. Testimonials daily. Sent to agent's order on receipt of $3. Address INDUSTRY SEWING MACHINE CO., Manchester, N. H.

EPILEPSY CAN BE CURED.—Three hiring friends afflicted are earnestly solicited to send for a Circular Letter of References and testimonials which fully convince the most skeptical of the curability of the disease. Address DR. BOOTH LONDON, M.D., 46 Grove Street, N. Y. City.

EARLY ROSE POTATO, American and Foreign Spring Wheats, Oats, Barley, Corn, Clover Seeds, Grass Seed, Hop, Garden, and Field Cotton. Send for the Experimental Farm Journal. Only 20 cents. GEO. A. DEITZ, Chambersburg, Pa.

BANKRUPT STOCK of JEWELRY
cheap. 5000 pieces assorted for $100; 2500 pieces for $50; 125 pieces for $20, wholesale. Circular sent free. Address P. O. BOX 681, Providence, R. I.

$1800 PER YEAR.—For Employment and a WATCH FREE. Address
J. B. MASSEY & CO., ST. LOUIS, MO.

HARPER & BROTHERS, NEW YORK,
Have just Published:
I.
Charles Reade.
HARD CASH. A Matter-of-Fact Romance. By CHARLES READE, Author of "Love me Little, love me Long," "Never too Late to Mend," &c. With Illustrations. New Edition. 8vo, Paper, 75 cents.
II.
F. Whymper.
TRAVEL AND ADVENTURE IN THE TERRITORY OF ALASKA, formerly Russian America—now ceded to the United States—and in various other parts of the North Pacific. By FREDERICK WHYMPER. With Map and Illustrations. Crown 8vo, Cloth, $2 50.
III.
Sir Samuel W. Baker.
CAST UP BY THE SEA; or, The Adventures of Ned Grey. By SAMUEL WHITE BAKER, M.A., F.R.G.S., Author of "The Albert N'Yanza Great Basin of the Nile," "The Rifle and Hound of Ceylon," &c. Unabridged. With Ten Illustrations by Huard. 12mo, Cloth, 75 cents.
IV.
The Rev. John L. Nevius.
CHINA AND THE CHINESE; a General Description of the Country and its Inhabitants: its Civilization and Form of Government; its Religious and Social Institutions; its Intercourse with other Nations; and its Present Condition and Prospects. By the Rev. JOHN L. NEVIUS, Ten Years a Missionary in China. With a Map and Illustrations. 12mo, Cloth, $1 75.
V.
The Rev. Lyman Abbott.
JESUS OF NAZARETH: his Life and Teachings; Founded on the Four Gospels, and Illustrated by Reference to the Manners, Customs, Religious Beliefs, and Political Institutions of the Times. By LYMAN ABBOTT. With Designs by Doré, De Lucelle, Frank, and others. Crown 8vo, Cloth, Beveled Edges, $3 50.
VI.
The Author of "Rachel's Secret."
NATURE'S NOBLEMAN. A Novel. By the Author of "Rachel's Secret." 8vo, Paper, 50 cents.
VII.
The Rev. Henry Ward Beecher.
SERMONS BY HENRY WARD BEECHER. Plymouth Church Series. Selected from Published and Unpublished Discourses, and Revised by their Author. In Two Volumes. 8vo, With Steel Portrait by Halpin. Cloth, $6 00.
VIII.
The Author of "John Halifax."
THE WOMAN'S KINGDOM. A Love Story. By the Author of "John Halifax," "A Life for a Life," "Two Marriages," "Fairy Book," &c. Illustrations. 8vo, Paper, $1 00; Cloth, $1 50.
IX.
The Rev. Dr. Bellows.
THE OLD WORLD IN ITS NEW FACE: Impressions of Europe in 1867-68. By HENRY W. BELLOWS. 2 Vols., 12mo, Cloth, $3 50. Vol. II. just ready.
X.
Charles Lever.
THE BRAMLEIGHS OF BISHOP'S FOLLY. A Novel. By CHARLES LEVER. 8vo, Paper, 50 cents.
XI.
C. W. Dilke.
GREATER BRITAIN: a Record of Travel in English-speaking Countries during 1866 and 1867. By CHARLES WENTWORTH DILKE. With Maps and Illustrations. 12mo, Cloth, $1 00.
XII.
Paul Du Chaillu.
WILD LIFE UNDER THE EQUATOR. Narrated for Young People. By PAUL B. DU CHAILLU, Author of "Discoveries in Equatorial Africa," "Adventures in Land," "Stories of the Gorilla Country," &c. With numerous Engravings. 12mo, Cloth, $1 75.
XIII.
Wilkie Collins.
THE MOONSTONE. A Novel. By WILKIE COLLINS. Illustrations. 8vo, Cloth, $2 00; Paper, $1 50.
XIV.
Samuel Smiles.
LIFE OF GEORGE STEPHENSONS. The Life of George Stephenson, and of his Son, Robert Stephenson; comprising a History of the Invention and Introduction of the Railway Locomotive. By SAMUEL SMILES, Author of "Self-Help," "The Huguenots," &c. With Steel Portraits and numerous Illustrations. 8vo, Cloth, $6 00.
XV.
Ross Browne.
ADVENTURES IN THE APACHE COUNTRY: a Tour through Arizona and Sonora, with Notes on the Silver Regions of Nevada. By J. ROSS BROWNE, Author of "Yusef," "Crusoe's Island," "A Tour in Greece," "Land of Thor," &c. With Illustrations. 12mo, Cloth, Beveled, $2 00.
XVI.
Lord Lytton.
MISCELLANEOUS PROSE WORKS OF EDWARD BULWER, LORD LYTTON. In Two Volumes. 12mo, Cloth, $3 50.
XVII.
THE RIGHTFUL HEIR. A Drama in Five Acts. By EDWARD BULWER, LORD LYTTON, Author of "Richelieu," "The Lady of Lyons," "Not so Bad as we Seem," "Pelham," "The Caxtons," "What will he do with it?" &c. 16mo, Paper, 15 cents.
XVIII.
Prof. Dalton.
A TREATISE ON PHYSIOLOGY AND HYGIENE. For Schools, Families, and Colleges. By JOHN C. DALTON, M.D., Professor of Physiology in the College of Physicians and Surgeons, New York. With Illustrations. 12mo, Cloth or Half Leather, $1 50.

☞ HARPER & BROTHERS will send any of the above works by mail, postage prepaid, to any part of the United States, on receipt of the price.

STAR-SPANGLED BANNER."—100 of the most splendid Engraving, "Past and Future," GIVEN AWAY every week. A $2 00 Engraving and splendid 40-column Ledger-size paper a whole year for only 10 cts. Money refunded to all not satisfied. Engraving sent on roller, with first No. of paper. NOW IS THE TIME. A whole year's paper and splendid Engraving only 10 cts. Specimens, &c., for 6 cts. Address STAR-SPANGLED BANNER, Nashua, N. H.

HUNTERS GUIDE" AND TRAPPER'S COMPANION. New Revised Edition, containing 200 new Recipes added. All about Hunting, Trapping, and Fishing, Tanning and Coloring Furs and Pelts. 10,000 sold in 3 weeks. Price of this book, a pocket book, 64 pp., only 25 cents; 6 for $1. Address Dr. GEORGE W. SNELL, Kenduskeag, Penobscot Co., Maine.

ESTABLISHED 1861.

THE

GREAT AMERICAN

TEA COMPANY

RECEIVE THEIR TEAS BY THE CARGO FROM

THE BEST TEA DISTRICTS OF

CHINA AND JAPAN,

and sell them in quantities to suit customers

AT CARGO PRICES.

The Company have selected the following kinds from their stock, which they recommend as of great worth of value. They are sold at cargo prices, the same as the Company sell them in New York, in the list of prices will show:

PRICE LIST OF TEAS.

OOLONG (black), 75c., 86c., 90c.: best, $1 per lb.
MIXED (green and black), 75c., 86c., 90c.; best, $1 per lb.
ENGLISH BREAKFAST (black), 86c., 90c., $1, $1 10; best, $1 20 per lb.
IMPERIAL (green), 80c., 90c., $1, $1 10; best, $1 25 per lb.
YOUNG HYSON (green), 80c., 90c., $1, $1 10; best, $1 25 per lb.
UNCOLORED JAPAN, 90c., $1, $1 10; best, $1 25 per lb.
GUNPOWDER (green), $1, $1 10; best, $1 50 per lb.

COFFEES ROASTED AND GROUND DAILY.

Ground Coffee, 20 cents, 25 cents, 30 cents, 35 cents; best, 40 cents per pound.

Hotels, saloons, boarding-house keepers, and Families who use large quantities of Coffee, can economize in the matter by buying our

FRESH BREAKFAST AND DINNER COFFEE,

which we sell at the low price of 25 cents per pound, and warrant to give perfect satisfaction.

ROASTED (unground), 30c., 35c.: best, 40c. per lb.
GREEN (unroasted), 25c., 30c., 35c.; best, 35c. per lb.

CLUB ORDER.

POUGHKEEPSIE, MICH., August 26, 1868.

To the GREAT AMERICAN TEA COMPANY:

31 and 33 Vesey Street, New York.

GENTS: The people here will not form a Club alone. They say I have learned the road, and that I have got to send another order for them. So here you have it, in the shape of my seventh order since the 6th of May last, making five hundred and forty dollars in nine and forty-four cents I have sent you since that date.

Hoping this will be as good an Order as others, I remain

Yours, &c., JOHN W. HAWKINS.

In the Town of Aspan, Mrs. Kemp.... dollars, $10 60
" Imperial.... at 1 25.. 6 25
" Young Hyson.. A. L. Cummings.. at 1 25.. 3 75
" Imperial.... Elias Stephens.. at 1 25.. 2 50
" Coffee.... J. L. Clapp.... at 30.. 1 50
" Gunpowder.. O. A. Watrous.. at 1 60.. 2 00
" Imperial.... C. F. Taylor.... at 1 25.. 5 00
" Young Hyson.. J. Hopkins.... at 1 25.. 5 00
" Coffee.... at 30.. 1 50
" Gunpowder.. John Stephens.. at 1 50.. 2 00
" Young Hyson.. Wm. H. Dusty.. at 1 25.. 3 75
" do. do. H. Malone.... at 1 25.. 1 25
" do. do. N. Newcomb.... at 1 25.. 1 25
" do. do. Noah Campbell.. at 1 25.. 6 00
" Gunpowder.. Judge Miller.... at 1 50.. 6 00
" do. do. Gale.... at 1 50.. 6 00
" Imperial.... Mrs. Bird.... at 1 25.. 1 25
$74 35

Parties sending Club or other orders for less than Thirty Dollars had better send a Post-office Draft or Money with their orders, to save the expense of collections by express: but larger orders we will forward by express to "collect on delivery."

Hereafter we will send a complimentary package of Tea to every getting up the Club. Our profits are small, but we will be as liberal as we can afford. We send on complimentary packages for clubs of less than Thirty Dollars.

Parties getting their Teas from us may confidently rely upon getting them pure and fresh, as they come direct from the Custom-House stores to our warehouses.

We warrant all the goods we sell to give entire satisfaction. If they are not satisfactory they can be returned in our express within 30 days, and we will refund the money refunded.

N.B.—Inhabitants of villages and towns where a large number reside, by clubbing together, can obtain their teas cost of their Trade at Cargo prices: one third (besides the Express charges) by sending direct to

"THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA COMPANY."

CAUTION.—As some concerns, in this city and others, use our name and style of business somewhat misleading and doing business, it is important that our friends should be careful to write our address in full, and not to put on the number of our Post-Office Box, as appears in the advertisement. This will prevent their orders from getting into the hands of bogus imitators.

POST-OFFICE Orders and Drafts make payable to the Order of

"THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA COMPANY."

Direct Letters and Orders as below (no more, no less):

GREAT AMERICAN TEA COMPANY,
31 and 33 Vesey Street,
Post-Office Box 5643, New York City.

$25 KNITTING MACHINE.

WANTED!—Buyers and Sellers for the RICK-FORD FAMILY KNITTER, the most reliable machine for the household ever invented. It knits 20,000 stitches a minute, runs back and forward, and sets up its own work. Further information and $2 to $5 per day at their homes. Our new Book of Instructions is plain and explicit. RICKFORD KNITTING MACHINE CO., 62 Bromfield St., Boston, Ms.

WESTERN LANDS.—Choice lands for sale in Butler and two unorganized Counties, Southern Kansas. Low price, and on five years' time. Military Land Warrants Bought and Sold. The Kansas Farmer free. For particulars, Send Five to all. Address
BUTLER & LAWRENCE, Wa. Kansas.

TEN PER CENT. COUPON BONDS of the CITY OF LAREDO, the Capital of Michoacan. For sale by A. WILKINS, Detroit, Mich.

EMPLOYMENT that pays. For particulars, address S. M. SPENCER & CO., Brattleboro, Vt.

DEAFNESS, CATARRH, SCHOFULA Specialty.—Cures legally guaranteed or money returned. By the inventor of the Celebrated Patent Invisible Organic Vibrator for Audible Speech. Send 10c. for Treatise on Deafness, Catarrh, and Scrofula. Dr. T. STILWELL, 198 Broadway, N. Y.

100 BEAUTIFUL PHOTOGRAPHS sent on receipt of 10c. Address N. Y. PICTURE CO., No. 69 Wall St.

The Celebrated Imitation Gold

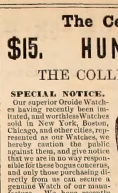
$15. HUNTING WATCHES. $20.

THE COLLINS OROIDE WATCH FACTORY.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

Our superior Oroide Watches having recently been imitated, and worthless Watches sold in New York, Boston, Chicago, and other cities, representenced as our Watches, we hereby caution the public against them, and give notice that we are in no way responsible for these bogus concerns, and only those purchasing directly from us can receive a genuine Watch of our manufacture. We have recently greatly improved our Oroide in appearance and durability, and, to protect the public from imposition hereafter, we have named it the

"COLLINS METAL,"



CASES OF THE

COLLINS METAL

(IMPROVED OROIDE).

and we give notice that any one making use of this name will be prosecuted to the extent of the law.

This metal has all the brilliancy and durability of Gold; can not be distinguished from it by the best judges; retains its color till worn out, and is equal to gold excepting in intrinsic value. All our Gentlemen's Watches are Full-Jeweled Patent Levers; those for Ladies an Improved Escapement, better than a Lever for a small Watch; all in Hunting-Cases, and fully guaranteed by special certificate. The $10 Watches are equal in neatness, style of finish, general appearance, and for time to a Gold one costing $100. They are sold for $10 and $15 for fine finish, and are fully equal to a Gold Watch costing $200. Chains of every style, from $2 to $8.

JEWELRY.—We are manufacturing all kinds of Jewelry of the Collins Metal—Pins, Earrings, Sleeve-Buttons, Lockets, Studs, Finger-Rings, Bracelets, Pencils, Charms, Odd Fellow and Masonic Pins, &c., all of the latest and most elegant styles, and fully equal to gold in appearance and durability.

TO CLUBS:—Where SIX Watches are ordered at one time, we will send one extra Watch free of charge.

We positively employ no agents (who would require a commission), as we only manufacture the watches for less tha^n our published prices. Our regular customers, therefore, have the benefit of our lowest prices. Parties of New York or elsewhere representing themselves as our agents are swindlers. The genuine Collins Watches can only be had at our office in New York City. Customers are requested not to send money in letters, as we will send goods to any part of the United States to be paid for when taken from the express office. Customers must pay all express charges. In ordering, write plainly the name, town, county, and state. Those in the city will remember that our only Office is

Nos. 37 and 39 Nassau Street, Opposite the Post-Office (Up Stairs), New York.

C. E. COLLINS & CO.

CHARLES READE'S NOVELS.

POPULAR EDITION.

CHEAP, PORTABLE, AND LEGIBLE.

PUBLISHED BY

HARPER & BROTHERS, New York.

HARPER & BROTHERS
Have just Ready:

HARD CASH.

A MATTER-OF-FACT ROMANCE.

By CHARLES READE.

WITH ILLUSTRATIONS. 8vo, PAPER.

PRICE THIRTY-FIVE CENTS!

To be followed immediately by

SIMILARLY CHEAP EDITIONS

of the other popular novels of

CHARLES READE.

"HARD CASH" sent by mail, postage prepaid, to any part of the United States, on receipt of 35 cents.

HARPER & BROTHERS, New York.

WANTED BY A MANUFACTURING CO.—Salesmen, to sell to Jobbers and Retail trade line of goods. Remunerative and permanent situation. H. H. RICHARDS & SON, 413 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, Pa.

CHICOPEE SEWING MACHINE.

First-class, and fully licensed. AGENTS WANTED. For terms, address CHICOPEE M'F'G CO., Chicopee, Mass.

GUNS, REVOLVERS, &c.

DOUBLE-Barrel Shot-Guns, $9 to $50; Single Shot-Guns, 8in'a and Boys', $2 50 to $20; Musket Shot-Guns, using small caps, warranted to shoot shot close and kill at 50 yards, $2 50; Fine Sporting Rifles, any size, $12 50; Pistols, and Belt Revolvers, all sizes, $5 to $20. WANTED.—Second-hand Army or Navy Rifles, Carbines, Revolvers, &c. Send stamp for circular, or send stamp to the GREAT WESTERN GUN WORKS, Pittsburgh, Pa. J. REID, Manager. Depot of Goods, Circulars, or Tools. Cornu & CO.

PROTECT YOUR LIFE AND PROPERTY WITH A

FIRE EXTINGUISHER

Send for Circular. U. S. FIRE EX. CO., 8 Dey St., N. Y.

AGENTS WANTED in every town to sell the celebrated Copper Bottom Tea Kettle—lightest, cheapest and most durable machines made. Send for circular. Address C. MITCHELL, Holland, New York.

100 PHOTOGRAPHS OF BEAUTIFUL WOMEN sent, postpaid, for 25 cts. Send for Circulars. Address O. SUTTON, Hollis, New York.

GENUINE OROIDE GOLD WATCH CO.,

Geneva, Switzerland,

Manufacture, on strictly scientific principles, style, finish, durability, and color (18 carat gold) a facsimile of the most rare and costly description of Gold Watches. They are now introduced to the notice of the Nobility and Gentlemen's the Swiss Movements, $10 and $15; Patent Levers, $20; Chronometer Balance, $25. Elaborately engraved, Hunting Cases, Duplex Escapements, Compensation the most exacting of our customers—have the strength, durability, accuracy, and utility of our celebrated watches, and pronounce them invaluable as reliable time-keepers. Each Watch warranted by special certificate from the Oroide Gold Watch Co. to be perfect time-keeper, and to retain their color equal to gold. Magnificent Oroide Gold Watch Co. to be perfect time-keeper, and to retain their color equal to gold. Magnificent Oroide Gold Chains, $3, $5, $7, and $10. Clubs for Six Watches will receive an extra Watch free. Express Co's will exhibit the Watch, &c., when requested, on receipt of express charges both ways. Expressed every where, to be paid for on delivery, except orders from California, Far Western Territories, and Texas, which must be accompanied with a Postal Money Order. Customers must pay all charges. The universal demand for our goods has induced designing persons to counterfeit our inimitable Watch with worthless metal watches that tarnish in a week, claiming to be the Oroide Gold Watch. Beware of them.

JOHN FOGGAN, Pres't Oroide Gold Watch Co.

Only Office in the United States, No. 78 NASSAU STREET, New York.

ARCHITECTURAL DEPARTMENT OF THE

Novelty Iron Works,

Nos. 77 and 83 Liberty Street,

Cor. Broadway, New York.

Plain and Ornamental Iron Work of all kinds for Buildings.

25 CENTS.—Now is the time to subscribe to "MAPLE LEAVES," the best, the most popular, and the cheapest monthly published. Each number contains matter of interest and importance to every body. 25 cents a copy for the year, or 3 cents for one number. Sample copies sent on receipt of stamp to pay postage. Address MAPLE LEAVES, Box 991, Detroit, Mi., N. Y.

VELOCIPEDE WHEELS.

MANUFACTURED BY

S. N. BROWN & CO.,

Troy, New York.

They also make a prime article of Spokes and Hubs for Light Carriage and Buggy Wheels. Send for Price-List.

GRAY'S PATENT BRICH MACHINE.

Send for circular to W. IRRVINGTON IRON WORKS, Newburgh, N.Y., Sole Manufacturers for the United States.

STAMMERING cured by BATES' APPLIANCES. For descriptive pamphlet, address STORER & CO., Box 5076, N. Y.

WANTED — AGENTS — $75 to $200 per month, everywhere, male and female, to introduce the GENUINE LOCK-STITCH FAMILY SEWING MACHINE. Machine will stitch, hem, fell, tuck, quilt, cord, bind, braid and embroider in the most perfect manner. Price only $18. Fully warranted for five years. We will pay the above wages to parties who will engage with us. Intclose stamp, and we will give you full particulars. I make the "Elastic Lock Stitch." Every second stitch can be cut without the thread ravelling. Don't be sent without testimony. WRIGHT MANUFACTURING CO., 100 per month and warrants it a month. Address SECOND & ELM STREETS, CLEVELAND, O.; PITTSBURGH, PA.; BOSTON, MASS., or ST. LOUIS, MO.

CAUTION.—Do not be imposed upon by other parties palming off worthless and cheap machines in the name of ours; ours alone have in the only genuine and really practical sliding shuttle.

WANTED AGENTS To Sell the AMERICAN KNITTING MACHINE.

Price $25. The simplest, cheapest and best Knitting Machine in the market. Address AMERICAN KNITTING MACHINE CO., Boston, Mass., or St. Louis, Mo.

HARPER'S PERIODICALS

Harper's Periodicals.—As the year draws to a close the publishers desire to call attention to the fact that the monthly journals are in order. Can there be a more suitable present to a lady than a year's subscription to the Bazar: paper which is not only fashionable, but sensible, and which has a care for the family dresser as well as for the belles of the party of the ball? Each number contains patterns and drawings of value, and it discourses of health, housekeeping, thrift, literature, and dress, in a manner at once pleasing and instructive.

Harper's Weekly is an elder brother, and it has a strong and vigorous life. Its pages are the materials of future history, and its editorials on public questions are sound, timely, and timely.

Harper's Monthly is the veteran of the monthlies, and it has well known to secure and retain, during many years of its life it has had a steady growth and improvement, and nothing has been left undone which could aid the permanent value and interest of the magazine.—Commercial Advertiser: New York.

TERMS FOR 1869.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE, One Year..... $4 00
HARPER'S WEEKLY, One Year..... 4 00
HARPER'S BAZAR, One Year..... 4 00

HARPER'S MAGAZINE, HARPER'S WEEKLY, and HARPER'S BAZAR, to one address, for one year, $10 00; or two for $7 00.

An Extra Copy for either the MAGAZINE, WEEKLY, or BAZAR will be supplied gratis for every Club of Five Subscribers at $4 00 each, in one remittance; or, Six Copies for $20 00, without extra copy.

The Postage within the United States is prepaid by the Publishers. Subscriptions to HARPER'S WEEKLY or BAZAR commence with any number. Subscriptions to HARPER'S MAGAZINE commence with the Number for June and December of each year. When no time is specified, it will be understood that the subscriber wishes to begin with the first Number of the current Volume; and the Numbers will be forwarded accordingly.

The Volumes of the WEEKLY commence with the first Number. When no time is specified, it will be understood that the subscriber wishes to commence with the first Number after the receipt of his order.

In remitting by mail, a Post-Office Order or Draft payable to the order of HARPER & BROTHERS is preferable to Bank Notes, as, should the Draft or Order be lost or stolen, it can be renewed without loss to the sender.

In ordering the MAGAZINE, the WEEKLY, or the BAZAR, the name and address should be clearly written. When the direction is to be changed, both the old and the new one must be given.

TERMS FOR ADVERTISING IN HARPER'S PERIODICALS.

Harper's Magazine.—Whole Page, $200; Half Page, $110; Quarter Page, $60—each insertion; or, for 6 insertions, $1 50 per Line, each insertion.

Harper's Weekly.—Inside Pages, $1 50 per Line; Outside Page, $2 00 per Line—each insertion.

Harper's Bazar.—Inside Page, $1 per Line; Outside Page, $2 per Line—each insertion.

Address HARPER & BROTHERS, New York.

U. S. G. AT WORK ON HIS CABINET.

"I'm afraid this Plank will not do—"

GORHAM MFG. CO.

Sterling Silver Ware,

AND

Fine Electro-Plated Ware,

of the following trade-marks:

Trade-Mark for Silver. Trade-Mark for Electro-Plate. GORHAM MFG. Co.

MANUFACTURED BY THE

GORHAM MANUFACTURING CO.,

PROVIDENCE, R. I.

Orders received from the Trade only, but these goods may be obtained from responsible dealers every where.

THE GORHAM WARE may be obtained of ADAMS, CHANDLER, & CO., No. 20 JOHN STREET, NEW YORK.

PRINCE & CO.'S ORGANS AND MELODEONS.

43,000 now in use.

BUFFALO, N.Y. CHICAGO, ILL.

BLUNT & CO., 179 Water St., N.Y.

SURVEYING INSTRUMENTS.

First Quality only. At VERY LOW PRICES.

PRICE-LIST SENT FREE.

ELGIN WATCHES.

CAUTION—The public are respectfully cautioned against purchasing our watches, or watches engraved to us in or our name, of parties who attempt to send them "C.O.D." We have no connection with such houses, and do not furnish cases to any house for that purpose. The excellence and good quality of the real Elgin Watches have caused spurious Foreign and American Watch Companies to make repeated invasions with the same or similar trade-marks as ours. Avoid all parties who advertise to send our goods "C.O.D." no matter whom. To get the real Elgin Watches purchase only of dealers in your vicinity or elsewhere whom you know to be honorable.

THE NATIONAL WATCH COMPANY,

ELGIN, ILLINOIS.

Business Office, Nos. 159 and 161 Lake St., Chicago, Ill.

Wm. Knabe & Co.

MANUFACTORY

Grand, Square, and Upright

PIANOS.

Unapproachable for their IMMENSE POWER OF TONE, GREAT SINGING QUALITY,

Evenness throughout the entire Scale, Easy Action, Workmanship and Durability, and pronounced by Unequaled by all the FAMED AMERICAN AND FOREIGN CONNOISSEURS AND CRITICS, As the Most Perfect and Reliable Pianos Ever Manufactured in this or any other Country.

Every Instrument Warranted for Ten Years.

WAREROOMS,

650 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

J. BAUER & CO.,

General Agents and Manufacturers and Importers of Musical Instruments, Strings, and Musical Merchandise.

£150,000,000

Sterling. Unclaimed Money and Estates Register, commencing 1870. Fee to search for any name, 2s. 6d. Address, 6 Prince of Wales Road, London, England.

GENUINE WALTHAM WATCHES,

IN SOLID GOLD AND SILVER CASES ONLY,

AT EXTREMELY LOW PRICES.

Silver Hunting Watches $18
Gold Hunting Watches, 18 carat Cases . . . $89
Gold Hunting Watches, Ladies' Size . . . $70

Every Watch warranted by special certificate from the American Watch Company. We will send these Watches by Express to any place, with bill to collect on delivery, and give the purchaser the privilege to open the package and examine the Watch before paying, and any Watch that does not prove satisfactory may be exchanged or the money will be refunded. Every one is regarded to write for our Descriptive PRICE-LIST, which explains the different kinds with prices of each.

Please state that you saw this in Harper's Weekly.

Address in full,

HOWARD & CO., No. 619 Broadway, N.Y.

Dr. JNO. V. BURTON'S

TOBACCO ANTIDOTE.

WARRANTED TO REMOVE ALL DESIRE FOR TOBACCO. It entirely expunges the Narcotic. Tobacco is not exciting the blood, invigorating the system, possesses great nourishing or strengthening power, an essential basic and appetizer, enables the stomach to digest the heartiest food, makes sleep refreshing. Prepared in Pills. Price Fifty Cents and dollars. For Antidote and treatise on the injurious effects of tobacco, with truthful anecdotes, etc., SENT FREE. Agents wanted. Address

DR. T. B. ABBOTT, Jersey City, N. J.

FOR SALE BY ALL DRUGGISTS.

Caution.—Beware of banking institutes. [Trademark & Copyrighted.]

FURNITURE

WARREN WARD & CO.,

Nos. 75 & 77 Spring St., corner of Crosby.

Established 1850. Wholesale and Retail Manufacturers of the latest styles of BEDROOM, PARLOR, DINING, and LIBRARY FURNITURE, MATTRESSES, SPRING BEDS, &c., &c. Suitable for City and Country residences.

ALL GOODS WARRANTED AS REPRESENTED.

THE WILSON SHUTTLE SEWING MACHINES. Cheaper than all others. AGENTS WANTED. Remunerative. 67 The Wilson Sewing Machine Co., Cleveland, O.

MARVIN & CO.'s

CHROME IRON SAFES

ARE THE BEST IN THE WORLD.

265 Broadway, N.Y.

ADDRESS TO SMOKERS.

In reply to the many inquiries made daily in regard to Meerschaum Pipes, we wish to state that we recommend, for home and office use, the plain Hungarian and Egg Bowls, with Welchsel Stems. They hold the most tobacco, and are the most practical ones, being the coolest to clean. Or the Hamburg Bowls, having the largest surface of any bowls, and consequently the London Straight and London Bend.

Being represented already throughout the country by our goods, we are desirous to have our Pipes—which are considered equaled by none—still more extensively used by those who relish a good smoke, and find Cigars too expensive. Therefore we have reduced our prices as follows:

We will sell 1 No. 2 Pipe for $5, and charge $1 additional for every number higher; therefore No. 4 cost $7, No. 5, $8, No. 6, $9, from No. 4 to No. 8 are considered fashionable ones; from No. 9 upward large ones. To the price is included a Case and Stem.

Also Silver Mouthpieces for Wooden Stems are added from $1 to $4.

We send by Express to collect on delivery, amount and charges; but suggest that the amount be sent in Registered Letter or Post-office Order in advance, as this generally saves the express-return charges.

In conclusion, we wish to state that we warrant all our goods (which we stamp with our name) to be real Amber, genuine Meerschaum, and to color, and will readily give every information in regard to it, based on thirty years' experience in the trade, having received our Diploma in 1839 by the respective commissioners in Europe; and we will ever remain the fair firm we have acquired in the introduction of the MANUFACTURE OF GENUINE MEERSCHAUM GOODS into this country.

We treat Pipes and Cigar-Holders of our shape or design, meanwhile, re-painting, boiling, and polishing. Also, Amber Work done. And, main of all, do not charge exorbitant prices. For reference, we are in possession of commendations from thousands of our customers, representing all classes of society.

POLLAK & SON, Manufacturers of Genuine Meerschaum Goods.

Stores: 485 Broadway, near Broome, and 27 John St., 2d, middle of the block.

SEND FOR CIRCULAR and PRICE-LIST to LETTER BOX 5846.

12 POUNDS of GOLD for $12

would be cheaper than 12 lbs. of Silver for $6,

and cheaper than 12 lbs. of Iron for $1.

In like manner,

12 Months of the American Agriculturist for $1½

is cheaper than 12 Months of any other Journal in the World!

for the reason that

12 Months of the American Agriculturist for $1½,

gives in condensed form

so large an amount of the "real article," the useful, the reliable, the practical. As Gold surpasses Silver and Iron, in its intrinsic value, so does The American Agriculturist stand PRE-EMINENT for its Sterling qualities. Printed matter, like the precious and the baser metals, can not be properly estimated by the number of pounds of paper and ink supplied for a dollar. BUT

You get Quality, Quantity, and Cheapness, all combined in The American Agriculturist. Why, only think of it! This Journal gives in every number, in Quantity, from 40 to 44 very large pages; and as for Quality, every body admits that it is a marvel for its real value. Nearly 200,000 subscribers assert this by continuing to pay for and read The American Agriculturist year after year—and who knows its value better than its Readers? Here is the way the subscribers testify their appreciation, to wit: As The American Agriculturist is an old journal, of 28 years' standing, new Subscribers and renewals come in at all times of the year, but rather more briskly in December and January. LAST YEAR nearly 40,000 came in January alone—and the then unprecedented number of 2860 were received in a single day. THIS YEAR, notwithstanding the starting of half-a-dozen new competitors, 3365 Subscribers have come in during a single day. Here is the record of ten days past from the books:

2659 Subscribers in One Day,	that is,	23,480
2039 Subscribers in One Day,
1911 Subscribers in One Day,
2341 Subscribers in One Day,
2259 Subscribers in One Day,
3365 Subscribers in One Day,		Subscribers
2325 Subscribers in One Day,
2109 Subscribers in One Day,		in only
2016 Subscribers in One Day,		10 Days!
2126 Subscribers in One Day,

STEM-WINDING Waltham Watches.

These watches are of the well-known 2-plate style, and warranted to satisfy the most exacting demand for beauty, finish, and accuracy. The manufacture of watches of this fine quality is not even attempted in this country except at Waltham.

For Sale by all Leading Jewelers.

And in this ratio have they not only been pouring in for many weeks past, but they are still coming. MARK YOU, these are partly old subscribers renewing, but largely also new subscribers whom the old subscribers bring with them, after having tested the value of the paper for from one to twenty-seven years. Could there be any stronger evidence of the real value of The American Agriculturist? People do not pay their money a second time for a thing, and persuade their friends and neighbors to do so, unless it be proved good, and well worth the money.

As for CHEAPNESS, there is nothing to be compared with The American Agriculturist. It costs only $1 50 for a whole year (less than the cost of an Egg or two, or a poor Cigar per week)! Four copies cost only $5 a year, or ten copies for $12. . . . Yet every subscriber gets the benefit of over Twelve Thousand Dollars' worth of beautiful and instructive original ENGRAVINGS, and more than One Thousand Columns of most Excellent, Practical, Condensed, Instructive Reading Matter, prepared by the most thoroughgoing, intelligent, practical men in the country—men who are not merely good writers or visionary theorists, but men of sound common-sense. The Publishers expend more money in securing good Editors, and the best possible information, than any other weekly or monthly journal in America—and they can afford to do it, for, with only the cost of one set of Editors, Newspaperers, Engravers, Printers, etc., etc., for so large a number of subscribers, vastly more can be expended, and given to each subscriber for the same money.

Only $1 50 a year (or less to Clubs or four or more) pays for The American Agriculturist a whole year. Try it a year and see how Cheap it is— see how much you get for a little money!

You Want It; Your Wife Wants It; Your Children Want It.

It is VERY GOOD, and VERY CHEAP. It is VERY USEFUL in CITY, VILLAGE, and COUNTRY. It is taken and read regularly by more than 75,000 families in Cities and Villages alone. It is useful and full of good things for YOURSELF, for YOUR WIFE, and for YOUR CHILDREN. Neither you nor they can read it a year without getting many hints and suggestions that will each repay you MANY TIMES the cost. TRY IT. Only $1 50 for a whole year. The Publishers are:

ORANGE JUDD & CO.,

No. 245 Broadway, New York.

WOODWARD'S NATIONAL ARCHITECT.

A practical work, just published, containing 1000 Designs, Plans, and Details to Working Scale of Country, Suburban, and Village Houses, with specifications and estimate of cost, enabling a builder to design, build, erect, and completely finish dwelling houses in the latest and most approved style. One large quarto volume, superbly bound.

PRICE TWELVE DOLLARS, postpaid.

WOODWARD'S COUNTRY HOMES. 150 Designs, $1 50, postpaid. Gen. O. Woodward, Architect, 191 Broadway, New York. Send stamp for catalogue of all new books on Architecture.

NEW MUSIC.

VELOCIPEDE GALOP, illustrated . . . . . 50c.
TELEGRAM WALTZ, Strauss . . . . . 50c.
SITTY MARIE, &c. The Halting Troubadour. &c.
LOU'S SOUVENIR THEME OF MEYERBEER . . . . . 50c.
LOVE'S DREAM AND PAY NO REGARD . . . . . 50c.
THE FLOWER OF FLORENCE. Music sealed. 25c.
FREDERICK BLUME, 1128 Broadway, 2d door above 26th St. Branch, 295 Bowery.

SENT FREE. Business Men, Mechanics, Farmers, Professional Men, and Housewives, send next stamp for book of valuable information, and our object in sending it.

C. D. HARPER & CO., Cleveland, O.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

A JOURNAL OF CIVILIZATION

VOL. XIII.—No. 636.] NEW YORK, SATURDAY, MARCH 6, 1869. SINGLE COPIES, TEN CENTS. $4.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE.

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the Year 1869, by Harper & Brothers, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court of the United States, for the South... District of New York.

AN IMPRINT 1869

THE COUNTRY DOCTOR.—[DRAWN BY A. B. WARD.]

HARPER'S WEEKLY.
SATURDAY, MARCH 6, 1869.

HOW TO HELP PRESIDENT GRANT.

THE long agony will soon be over, and we shall all know who is to be in the Cabinet. The reticence of the President elect has given boundless opportunity for conjecture, and for many weeks we have been regaled with very extraordinary speculations. Meanwhile it is curious to remark how very limited has been the range of names mentioned for each office, and how confidently, despite all rumors, the conviction of the properly partisan character of the Administration has deepened. By partisan we do not mean to contrast party with patriotism, but to identify the two. If a man honestly believes the principles and policy of the Republican party to be best for the country, his patriotism and his party fidelity are so far synonymous. Party in that case is the hand by which patriotism works. Those who do not perceive that parties have their origin in human nature and temperament may heartily despise them; but those who do, see also their necessity. There is always a great deal of sentimentality about a no-party Administration; but a partisan President is a party President.

Now the principle which we shall undoubtedly see illustrated in the choice of the Cabinet is one that every member of the dominant party should consider. The President will select honest and capable men from the Republican ranks. Let every Republican who recommends another office follow the same rule. We have to bear the odium of the enormous corruption which prevails in the Revenue Department. Whether the offenders are political Johnsonites or not, they are supposed to be under the protection of the party in power. It is a duty to the party, therefore, not to connive at the nomination to office of incompetent or unprincipled men, however sound Republicans they may be. Every such man is a mill-stone around the neck of the party, and whoever assists him into place helps to push the party out of power.

Especially should those whose names are valuable simply for keeping them on a list indiscriminately signing every petition nor recommending every applicant. A conspicuous gentleman, who had filled high offices in the State, signed with every petition that was brought to him, and always had a private understanding with the appointing power that his name was not to be regarded unless it was accompanied by a special letter. This was timid, and like all timidity it baffled its own ends. For the appointing power could always see that the recommendation of one who had no moral courage, and who was evidently so anxious a politician, was not very valuable. No man can complain, when he has signed a people not to respect his name, that it has ceased to be respectable.

If a man has not the courage to abide by his convictions of fitness and honesty under such circumstances, he has not courage enough honestly to take part in politics. He is constantly running against the public welfare, and makes himself a public nuisance. It is to him, and such conduct as his, that the horrible waste and corruption in the public service are due, which have made the Civil Service Bill indispensable. And while we have no such law let us all do what we can to supply its place.

As to the distinction between what are called conservatives and radicals the President will undoubtedly smilingly disregard it, and we may wisely do the same. Those who are most conspicuous in the party as conservatives and as radicals are not the most conspicuous also as honest and unsuspected men. We shall not be surprised if the Cabinet is made up of both classes. General GRANT is naturally not an extreme man, as it is called; if we may mix metaphoric party slang, he is neither a hunker nor a red. But of all men he is a self-dependent, and if the Secretary of State, being both honest and capable, be also radical, we presume there is no man in the world who will be less troubled by that fact than the President. His policy will not be determined by his Cabinet, and he certainly will be the last man to cringe or faction. How refreshing it is to contemplate such a President! How the whole national life is invigorated by the general conviction that sagacity, integrity, and energy are about to succeed sluggishness, confusion, corruption, and treachery in the executive control of the Government!

THE ELECTORAL VOTE.

THE fact that there are only about four weeks between the time of voting for Presidential electors and the time of their assembling to ballot for President and Vice-President, and the further and controlling fact that this time is wholly insufficient for correcting the astounding frauds which have become engrafted upon the system, must convince the people of the United States that some serious change is necessary to secure a fair and complete expression of the popular will. The regulation of this matter, if a change of the National Constitution shall be thought inexpedient, belongs partly to Congress and partly to the State Legislatures, the power of each being derived from that instrument. The Constitution provides (Sec. 1, Art. 2) that "Each State shall appoint in such manner as the Legislature thereof may direct a number of electors equal to the whole number of Senators and Representatives to which the State may be entitled in the Congress," and that "the Congress may determine the time of choosing the electors, and the day on which they shall give their votes; which day shall be the same throughout the United States."

An act of Congress, passed in pursuance of this last provision, requires that the electors shall occur on the Tuesday following the first Monday of November, and that the electors shall meet on the first Wednesday in December. The general ticket system has been adopted by the several States for the election of electors in place of the district system, which prevailed in some States, and of that of appointment by the Legislature — a mode also adopted by several States, and adhered to by South Carolina up to a recent date.

The Congressional arrangement of the time for choosing electors and the day for their meeting, which constituted the limit of Congressional power, was made when the Constitution was first set in motion, and was afterward slightly changed, without opposing, it may be inferred, that there would ever be gross frauds like those perpetrated at the last election — frauds which gave the electoral vote of New York to the nominees of the Democratic party. The arrangement of those frauds, and the advance of the general election, created a "serene confidence" in the result in the minds of those who were charged with the duty of management. The escape from this danger, the most frightful to the country which can be contemplated, was due to the early discovery of this plan, to self-devotion to conceal the fact, and the great popularity of the Republican candidate, and, it may be said, to an interposition which in great emergencies has ever saved our country from ruin.

The momentous interests which are staked upon a Presidential contest leave no doubt that future elections will be managed with the same serious and general than those of last November. The question, what remedies shall be applied, is far above those which ordinarily receive attention in parties and in politics. It concerns the purity of the franchise, the liberty — indeed the safety — of each citizen, and the continuance of free government. The remedies must not be devised neither property nor life will be safe. They will be at the mercy of those politicians who hold all rights in utter contempt.

As the Constitution is now interpreted, we cited to Congress no other power in this matter than to arrange the time for choosing and the day for the action of electors; but the Legislatures have the sole power to determine the manner in which each State shall appoint them, it will be seen that, while Congress can relegate the interval between the election and the day for balloting, the State Legislature alone can provide the means within that enlarged interval for purging the returns of their frauds. The whole interval, consisting at the last election of only twenty-four working days, was consumed in the necessary process of counting. By reference to our last number it will be which conform in this respect very nearly to those of other States, it will readily be seen that no opportunity exists for expunging the fraudulent votes.

First, the inspectors of the election are to count and certify the result; next, the boards of local canvassers are to examine and compare these certificates. The returns of the local boards are to be sent to some central point in particular districts; they are then to be collected and forwarded to the Secretary of State. The boards of State Canvassers then meets to ascertain the combined result; and, finally, the Secretary of State gives to each elector a certificate of his election; and thus provided the electors organize, fill vacancies, and on the next day, the first Wednesday in December, give their votes.

These several investigations are armed with no other authority than that of ascertaining the vote actually given, and can not investigate any charges, such as that of repeaters or the improperly naturalized commit. On the contrary, jurisdiction over the correction of these frauds is given solely to the Judiciary, which is fettered by the well-known fact that each board of canvassers can not be convened by any authority after the day fixed for the purpose of completing their work by statute; and hence it would be impossible to act except during the time this allowed to each of those Boards. The frauds were so extensive and the time so very short that the authors of them were fully aware of their existence, and who desired their correction, was completely frustrated. This difficulty was perfectly well understood by those who planned this scheme for securing the control of the General Government, and constituted the basis of that "serene confidence" which was felt in the result.

The adoption of the general ticket system is a direct encouragement to these frauds, inasmuch as under that system the fraudulent vote of the cities of New York and Brooklyn, and places which were exposed to the same influences, overcame the vote of the rural districts; whereas if the district system had been in operation, at that of appointment by the Legislature, this temptation to commit these frauds would not have existed to the same extent. Under either of these latter modes of appointment each locality would be free of the control of any other, and its vote would be represented in the Electoral College.

The public objection to the general ticket system was based is simply this: that it was deemed material to the power and influence of each State in the Electoral College, that its vote for Presidential candidates should be undivided; whereas under the district system it was possible to divide the vote of any State among the several candidates. But if the interior districts are to be overshadowed by the frauds of cities under the general ticket system, it will be far better to abandon it forever, and thus give to the honest voters an opportunity to be felt in elections for the Presidency. The vote of the State as a unit on the side of corruption is a calamity which outweighs every consideration founded on the pride and power derived from our numerical strength in the Electoral College as compared with that of other States. Division of the vote is the only possible chance for those who perform their duty with integrity. In some districts in this city no all of those who were selected to represent the honest voters and to prevent the reception of illegal votes were obliged, by indications not to be mistaken, to retire and leave the field to the most abandoned politicians. The moral mind were terrified and the prudent alarmed, but the boldest found that it was impossible to check in any manner the action of those who by intimidation converted the ballot-box into an instrumentality of fraud and plunder.

Inasmuch as the legislative power under our State Constitution is conferred wholly on the Senate and Assembly, and the Governor has no control over it, except so far as bills are concerned, which by the Constitution require his approval or are subjected to his veto, it would seem to be competent for the Legislature alone to exercise the power which the Constitution of the United States expressly and in terms confers on the Legislature to determine the manner in which the State may appoint its electors. The Legislature alone may adopt the district system in lieu of the general ticket system. In States in which the legislative power is conferred on the Senate and Assembly conjointly with the Governor (the case in this State) it is not an examination of our State Constitution will show that the power is not conferred in that manner.

So far as the mode of appointment adopted and long practiced in South Carolina is concerned, in reply to the ground that the State was to appoint and the Legislature was to provide only the manner in which it should do so, and consequently that an appointment of electors by the Legislature is illegal, it may be said that numerous States at the outset adopted the system which in the end was counted in the presence of the two Houses of Congress for many successive terms, and that this is hence regarded by many as a practical construction of the Constitution which long acquiesced in to admit of question. But the true remedy is an amendment of the National Constitution, conferring upon Congress authority to fix the time, place, and manner of conducting the election for President and Vice-President, which is substantially the proposition of Senator MORTON.

The theory which underlies the original dependence of the General Government upon the several States in this respect was based by the framers of the Constitution in undoubtedly this, that there were interests then existing in the particular States of so important a character that it was dangerous then to create a differently constituted General government. The most prominent interest in producing this weakness in the central power was unquestionably that of slave property, the security of which was regarded in many States as of greater importance than the Union itself. The complete destruction of this institution leaves no interest of this character remaining. On the contrary, every interest now points to the necessity of a national government capable of preserving its own existence.

In one of the most forcible Numbers of the Federalist it is conceded that if a majority of States were to omit the appointment of Senators the Government would be at a stand-still for which there would be no remedy. Secession would have accomplished its work if it could have seduced such a majority into that iniquity. A weakness of structure so apparent should no longer be endured, since the interest which produced it has been eliminated from our system. It is therefore, that the Constitution should be made to conform to the new situation by imparting to the General Government the power to provide for the election of its chief magistrate, and particularly to punish and prevent the frauds which threaten to secure an odious pre-eminence of the worst citizens.

The Constitution, to be complete, should also provide that if any State fails to elect a Senator the Senators elected by the other States shall have power to constitute the Senate and perform its duties.

In the mean time the State should provide adequate means for investigating the late frauds, with a view to having them expunged, and its true vote declared and announced to Congress. The power conferred by the National Constitution on the Legislature merely authorizes such a proceeding in defiance of the Governor's veto; but if it shall be thought that the veto may legally be exercised it will be expedient to expose the Governor to a contingency of being obliged to protect or to punish those to whom he owes a distinction which commends him to higher honors secured in the same manner.

EDUCATION AND POLITICS.

IN considering last week the terms of the Constitutional Amendment as adopted by the Senate, which forbade any tests for the suffrage founded upon race, color, nativity, education, or creed, we stated what we supposed to be the reason which may have induced Senator WILSON to apply the prohibition to education. Since then, however, the House has made short work of the subject. It promptly and peremptorily disagreed to the Amendment, and the Senate decided to compromise by adding to the declaration that race or previous condition of servitude shall not disqualify from holding the words, or holding office. It is very true that where every body votes it is generally superfluous to provide that every body may be voted for. It is one of those things that may be safely left to the general good sense and "the course of affairs." But the proceedings in Georgia show that the opportunity for in this instance quietly remedy an actual difficulty. It will not compel any body to vote for a candidate upon the grounds of color or race, but it will prevent his exclusion from office if he is legally voted for and elected. It is a generally harmless and just now a useful superfluity. Certainly no one should not allow himself to defeat the Amendment, but we can not see why it should.

The Amendment of Mr. BINGHAM indeed has the advantage of that proposed by the Senate, that it will have the hearty support of the great mass of intelligent citizens, and raises no question as to the wisdom of the step. It permits any State to require an educational qualification; but that of creed is forbidden in the State Constitutions. Whether it be desirable to make the right of suffrage the result of education as a means of promoting general intelligence may be a question, as we suggested last week; but there can be no question that education is a prime necessity of our condition.

Ignorance is the victim of knavery, and it is ignorance which is the chief source of the corruption of politics. The immigration of the Southern laboring class was the capital of the Slavery Lords, and the strength of the rebellion. The population of New York and Brooklyn city flexible in the hands of Tammany. General intelligence is the foe of injustice and the friend of equal rights, and as intelligence increases, the power of demagogism and fraud as controlling political forces declines. An educated class, when it is also the class which has the exclusive political power, is always mischievous enough. The enemies of human progress have always been the aristocratic classes, and they have always been the technically educated classes. But the equal power of intellect was the ignorance of the other classes which they carefully fostered, and which their superior education enabled them to control. The difficulty is that ignorance blinds men to their own interests; and although technical education does not supply the moral sentiment it does enable men to see the relation between honesty and expediency.

Now it is a mistake to suppose that we are numerically the best-educated people in the world. That is true of parts of the country, not of the whole. At least a seventh of the population is ignorant in the technical sense, and our just boast must qualify it to the extent to the utmost the best system of schools that we have. Hardly less necessary is the duty of keeping them free from every form of sectarianism and bigotry; and, therefore, the exclusive purpose of the Roman church to obtain a separate share of the public school money must be as resolutely opposed. The Roman Church is a political party seeking to prevail under the plea of religious immunity. Its claim that a people should be religiously educated is valid, but the sophistry of the argument is the implication that public schools are to be places of religious education for which they are not intended, the real secret of the hostility of the Roman priesthood to unsectarian common schools is the consciousness that the mere contact of children themselves, the Catholic child sees that there may be every kind of excellence and superiority outside of his church; in a word, that a technical Catholic is no better than one who is not.

Whether we make voting depend upon education or not, we may be very sure that only intelligent voters will give themselves an honest and economical government, and that the only practical way of increasing intelligence is to promote education.

AMNESTY AND PARDON.

THE Judiciary Committee of the Senate has reported without hesitation that the President's Christmas proclamation of full pardon and amnesty to the late rebels was, as we have always supposed, wholly beyond his constitutional power, and it proposes a resolution to that effect. The Committee remark that of the operative words amnesty and pardon, only the latter is found in the Constitution. That instrument permits the President to grant reprieves and pardons, and the significance of those words is well settled. Pardon in English law and precedent, which we follow, relieves a party offender from punishment not already suffered for a specific crime named. It restores nothing already lost, but remits what is yet to be suffered. The power of general pardon by the sovereign was not claimed by a British sovereign after the country had a settled constitution, although it was often exercised by Parliament.

Amnesty was an act of oblivion granted by the Government to those who had been guilty of crime. So far as the public was concerned it had the same effect as if the crime had never been committed, and procured a restoration of all rights. It purified blood corrupted by attainder, which a pardon did not, and was granted to whole classes of offenders. It thus affected the crime instead of the criminal, and proceeded from the sovereign power, which in England was the King and Parliament, and in the United States is Congress with the approval of the President, or by a two-thirds vote without his approval. In the British system the power of amnesty or general pardon existed in the King, and our Constitutional Convention of 1787, restraining all royal prerogatives, did not use the word amnesty, and gave the President simply the power to grant reprieves and pardons.

These brief and clear statements of the report can not be successfully controverted, and the resolution is very much more than a form. If the President at any time and at his individual pleasure can declare a general pardon, he can dispense with the laws; and it seems to us that the Attorney-General has been altogether too swift in his decision under the proclamation. Moreover, in the present case the whole subject of reconstruction was in the management of Congress, and the country in the elections had approved that general policy. The conscience of the President was, therefore, evidently but another wanton attempt to make trouble.

THE BRITISH TREATY.

THE opinion of the Foreign Committee of the Senate, and especially of Senators SUMNER, FESSENDEN, and MORTON, should have great weight in the consideration of the British treaty. The Committee, or the Republican members, are unanimously opposed to the ratification. Mr. SUMNER is wholly opposed to it, and by the time that we go to press we may perhaps have his reasons. There is no public man in the country more familiar with the subject of international law, as it is rather studied in books, and among his great public services the speech upon the Trent difficulty will always remain one of the main signal. It was a speech delivered at a moment of unprecedented excitement, when so accomplished and prudent a student of international law as Mr. EVERETT justified England's seizure of SLIDELL and MASON, and when our hostility to the rebellion and hatred to England clamored for holding the rebel emissaries at any cost. But Mr. SUMNER by his comprehensive review and masterly statement of the American doctrine and precedent made us not only ready but proud to surrender them. It is a peculiar right to be heard upon this subject, and to be heard with the most respectful attention.

It seems hardly credible, as is now reported, that Mr. REVERDY JOHNSON could have made the concessions which he is said to have made, as that the Commission should meet in London; that Alabama claims may be settled by a unanimous vote, while for the others a majority should be sufficient; and that the Alabama arbitrator must be agreed upon by the governments, while in the other cases he should be chosen by lot. This, as is said, was naturally very distasteful to Mr. SEWARD, and he insisted upon a new treaty. It is certainly a favorable fact for the present treaty that Mr. SEWARD approves it, because Anglomania was never one of his tendencies. We should not be surprised if he considered the treaty as proposed a virtual surrender upon the part of England. For what is the real point at issue? Whether England shall pay for the losses arising from rebel privateers fitted out in English ports. That is the question; not whether England shall pay for our commerce destroyed, and own that she did wrong in acknowledging the rebels as belligerents. The only practical way that a government can atone for a commerce destroyed is to pay for specific losses; and the way to ascertain specific losses is to have a Commission of Inquiry.

But the great wrong of England toward us, the moral offense, can not be negotiated away. Only time can deal with that, and we do wrong to insist upon carrying that sense of moral injury into our discussion of the treaty. Of course, if the mandate of the Commission is partial, the treaty should not be ratified; and if we intend a certain settlement "any how," the commission is a farce, and the treaty useless. On the other hand, if we have specific claims for damages for definite material injury, ought we not to be willing to submit them to an impartial tribunal?

It is alleged that the treaty leaves to an umpire the decision of the gravest international question. But to this it may be answered, first, that the umpire is chosen by the Commission or determined by lot from two candidates named by it, and the Commission must be supposed to be composed of those whom we would willingly send to a congress; and, second, that the decision of the question of recognition of rebel maritime belligerency, whether for us or against us, can only seriously affect Great Britain; and in that, as we think, lies the practical surrender of the treaty.

The Tribune very truly remarks that the rejection of the treaty will show that "enthusiastic after-dinner speeches are not quite enough to satisfy the American people for the seizure of our lawful carriage of distress by professed friends to accomplish the destruction of our commerce." Exactly; but while that is our feeling, is any treaty or settlement possible? The Legislature of Massachusetts has taken into consideration a resolution that no treaty ought to be ratified which does not by its terms concede the liability of England. If that is the only terms indispensable, and we should refuse the offer to concede that liability indirectly, the question will merely remain open.

SUBMISSION OF THE STATE CONSTITUTION.

THE Senate of New York has voted to submit the new Constitution to the people at the next annual election, and the Assembly will probably concur. It has further voted to submit in like manner the suffrage; the judiciary; the taxation; and the rest in one group. If any of the three specified articles are rejected, the provisions of the present Constitution will remain. The suffrage article proposes a political equality among the male inhabitants of the State; the judiciary article will be undoubtedly accepted as the most wise and safe improvement upon the present one; and the article upon taxation, among other sections, provides that there shall be a uniform rule for the taxation of real and personal property.

The proposed Constitution, like the present one, provides for the submission to the people every twenty years of the question whether there shall be a Convention for constitutional revision. This proposition was adopted without debate, but it is a very foolish one. How could it do to have a Convention every twenty years to overhaul the Constitution of the United States? The simple and obvious method would seem to be to amend the present, as fundamental law that are found defective and not to remodel the whole. In a Convention for the purpose there is either a zeal to reform every thing on a reluctance to change any thing. As the late Convention in this State Mr. LAPHAM of Canandaigua proposed immediately after the organization to take up the present Constitution and to go through it regularly in Convention, changing only what by common consent needed change. This plan was suggested as a means of saving time. They have probably probably have been an equal delay, without the previous question which the Convention was unwilling to adopt in its early stages. Each general subject was therefore referred to a Committee, and each Committee reported an article. The changes that were made are probably improvements; but the proposition that the equalization of the suffrage could have been presented in the manner already provided.

LET THE PEOPLE ELECT THE PRESIDENT.

IN another article we have considered the defects of the present system of electing a President. The general views there expressed are confirmed by a careful paper by Mr. CHARLES F. ADAMS, read at the late meeting of the Social Science Association at Albany. The electoral machinery provided by the Constitution has, in his opinion, failed. The successful candidate in the previous election received a majority of five per cent. in the popular vote, and only forty-four per cent. in the electoral colleges. A change of less than 30,000 votes in seven States would have elected Mr. SEYMOUR President, while General GRANT would still have received a popular majority of 280,000 votes.

Mr. ADAMS's conclusive of two things: one, that the present system in a very possible emergency will defeat the will of the people in the choice of President; and the other, that, as we elsewhere show, it stimulates fraud in places where a few votes may nullify a great many in other places. It was well known to be the hope and intention of the Democratic managers possibly to decide the late election, especially to decide the State election, in the city of New York. The famous message sent into the rural districts to state virtually how many votes they wanted was the natural result of the present system. As Mr. ADAMS truly says, it remains to be seen how long the voters of Illinois, Ohio, and Massachusetts, rolling up useless majorities by scores of thousands, will stand with folded arms and calmly watch the working of a system under which one vote in the Sixth Ward of New York may outweigh fifty votes within their own borders.

The present system has no advantage whatever, and is full of plain perils. It was the suggestion and not the rights, in any honorable sense, but of State jealousies. It is a cumbrous and absurd impediment to the smooth and simple course of the Government, being a contrivance by which, when there are but two candidates, the will of the minority of the voters may prevail. The district election is an improvement upon electing a general State ticket, but the best and simplest plan is the abolition of the clumsy electoral machinery, and the direct popular vote for President.

THE GOVERNOR'S VETOES.

IN resisting special legislation in cases which should be determined by general laws Governor HOFFMAN is doing a true service. One of the serious evils of our legislation, both because of the opportunities of fraud in themselves and of the delay of really important business, is the deluge of private bills. Every man and section has an axe to grind, and it is not the business of the State to grind for each case. We observe with pleasure the distinction made by the Governor. There are vitally important cases which no general law can cover, and for the best of reasons. Governor HOFFMAN presented in his form we hope that it may be our pleasing duty still more to commend the Governor

THE WAR IN PARAGUAY.

THE war in Paraguay seems near its end; and we trust that the power of LOPEZ is so wholly broken that the Allies will dictate terms which shall practically complete the destruction. The tyrannical will of one man has secluded that country from all the influences of civilization; and when his offenses properly gave occasion for the interference of foreigners, it was sincerely to be wished that he would persist to his own overthrow, which we presume is practically the case now. Whether LOPEZ has escaped into the interior or will cross the ocean to Europe, as other South American tyrants have done, is of little importance, provided the settlement of the country by the Allies be made firm and secure. It is certainly of the best augury for South America that the same year which witnesses the overthrow of SANTIESTRO near the mouth of the Plata should also behold the fall of the ferocious Dictatorship of LOPEZ upon its upper waters.

LITERARY.

THE HARPERS have just published several interesting and valuable books. Among them is "China and the Chinese," by the Rev. JOHN L. NEVIUS, for ten years a missionary in that country. It is a manual of China, describing not only the manners and customs, but the religion, philosophy, and moral and charitable systems of the nation, with chapters upon the social system, life and work in China. It is written with sympathy and good feeling, and is a very timely and convenient book, now that our relations are to become more intimate with the flowery foreigners.

Another of the late issues of the HARPERS is "Her Majesty's Tower," by WILLIAM HEPWORTH DIXON, a skillful grouping of the events and persons of the Tower, many of whom are especially associated with the Tower "the most ancient and poetic pile in Europe." It is a striking glimpse of the tragedy of history, and the tragedy which almost seems to justify SWIFT's cynical satire, and CARLYLE's scornful contempt and impatience. The book of Mr. DIXON'S will be found peculiarly interesting, and quite invaluable to those going to London.

Since Alaska is now part of us it is well to know something of that extremity of ourselves, and Mr. FREDERICK WHYMPER'S "Travel and Adventure in the Territory of Alaska," republished by the HARPERS, gives us that knowledge. Mr. WHYMPER accompanied "the expedition to Dutchmouth" for Vancouver Island via the Horn, and reaching Alaska he proceeds to describe the country and the people and inhabitants in a lively and entertaining strain. The novelty of the subject and the extent of the voyage, for the traveler ascended the Yukon River, with his good humor and his vigilant eye make his book capital reading.

ANTHONY TROLLOPE'S last novel, "He knew he was Right," Part I., is also just issued by the HARPERS, and it has all his most characteristic traits. The same fidelity to nature, the same quiet shrewdness, the same interesting plot which distinguish his other novels, will be found in this by his army of readers, who will not like it the less that it is printed in clear type and on excellent paper, and costs only thirty cents.

Our readers will not forget that the second volume of DR. BELLOWS's book of travel, "The Old World in its New Face," is now published; a book which delightfully refreshes the remembrance of the grand tour, and adds the result of the observation of a most shrewd and intelligent observer. When MONTAIGNE went into Italy he stopped at every castle to pay his respects to its lord. In like manner the Doctor pays his respects to the most conspicuous contemporary movements and persons in Europe; and although his work is necessarily desultory, it is vivid and entertaining.

The picture elsewhere in this paper of Mr. DU CHAILLU lecturing to the young folks reminds us that Mr. HARPERS have published his permanent lecture to them in a book, "Under the Equator," of which the title tells the story.

DOMESTIC INTELLIGENCE.

CONGRESS.

February 15:

In the Senate, the Senate amendments to the joint resolution relative to suffrage were non-concurred in.

February 16:

In the Senate, a bill was passed granting lands to aid in the construction of the Green Bay and Lake Michigan Railroad. Also a bill relating to the transfer of lands from the Union Pacific to the Denver City Railway Company.

In the House, the Internal Revenue bill was passed.

February 17:

In the Senate, the report of the Conference Committee on the Navy bill was agreed to. The report proposes a large reduction in the naval force and in the navy-yards. The Committee on Foreign Relations reported against purchasing a new site for the Executive Mansion. A resolution was adopted requesting the Attorney-General to furnish a list of the names of persons convicted of violating the revenue laws, and the fines attached to such convictions, and the number of actions issued for such offenses.

In the House, the Committee on Elections submitted a report in the Louisiana case declaring the seat of Mr. SCOTT, McCANDLESS, and HUNT are entitled to the seat of the contestants, respectively. The report was laid on the table.—The Bill supplementary to the National Bank law was amended in several of its sections, and then laid on the table, by 69 to 58.

February 18:

In the Senate, the House bill regulating the franking privilege was agreed to. An amendment, abolishing the franking privilege entirely after the first of July was then adopted, after which the bill was rejected and the Senate adjourned.

In the House, the bill supplementary to the National Banking law was taken up, and the vote laying the bill on the table was reconsidered. After an animated debate on several amendments offered, the bill was recommitted to the Banking Committee, with instructions to report back, forthwith the first three sections of the bill, striking out Secretary's restrictive fourth section, and it was agreed to without division. The bill was then with much regularity put through and was passed by a vote of 106 yeas to 77 nays.—At the evening session the bill on the Louisiana election bill was resumed. An amendment, offered by Mr. Hodges, was agreed to. It restores the power to the county registrars to thirty, and consolidates the original bill with the amendment.

February 19:

In the House, Mr. Blaine's amendment to the Army Appropriation bill was adopted; it contemplates the reduction of the army to twenty regiments of infantry, five of cavalry, and five of artillery, and provides that no appropriations in the bill for pay shall be paid to made until further action of Congress. The amendments making appropriations for special purposes were agreed to, and the bill then passed.—The Committee of Conference on the bill to reduce the Navy and the Marine Corps submitted a report, which was agreed to. It provides for a gradual reduction of the corps by absorption.

February 20:

In the House, the Suffrage Amendment was considered. The Senate amendment to the Conference bill reported by the Senate 40 to 16—which declares that the right of citizens of the United States to vote and hold office shall not be denied or abridged by any State on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude. This amendment was agreed to 140 to 35.

NEWS ITEMS.

The Syracuse shorter election resulted in a decided Republican triumph.

The Kiowa Indians have all come into the reservation at the Wichita Agency, in accordance with the demands of General Sheridan. The Comanches and Arrapahoes are expected to be at the same point, and it is expected that these three belligerent tribes will soon be peacefully located on the lands set apart for them.

Dr. J. Sims will shortly lecture in the Academy in this city. His lectures are scientific and relate to gynecology. They have attracted great interest. Dr. Sims makes a lecturing tour West this spring.

FOREIGN NEWS.

THE Constitutional Cortes of Spain have requested Prime Minister Serrano to rearrange the Cabinet. The Minister of Justice has submitted a plan for establishing a uniform system of jurisprudence, abolishing ecclesiastical courts, and declaring universal toleration important reform. An unsuccessful attempt was made on February 16 to assassinate General PRIM. The Duke de Montpensier has been permitted to return to Spain as a private citizen.

Late advices from Cuba indicate that the insurrection is rapidly spreading throughout the island. Havana itself is practically in a state of siege, although not officially declared so. Many Americans in the revolt is raised the incentricities are joined by large numbers of recruits, and every sparking for weal or woe. The rebels are forced to abandon their labors and seek safety within the fortified strong-holds. Many Americans have been entirely deserted by both owners and overseers, and crops are spoiling for want of labor.

The new British Parliament was formally opened February 9. The Queen's speech announced troubles the country on the reign of peace; hopes that the possibility might exist to exist between the United States and Great Britain may be established on a broad basis; and announced the speedy introduction of a bill for new administration.

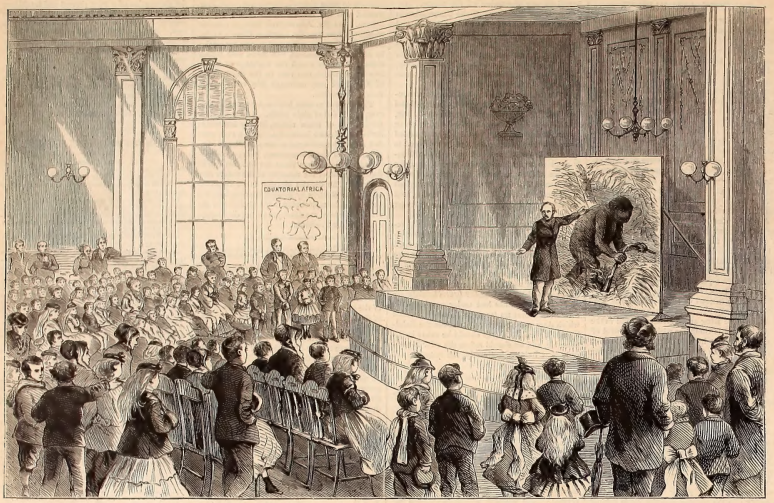
The reported reservation of Aesuncion by the Paraguayan army, and subsequent flight of President Lopez, is confirmed by later advices from Rio Janeiro.

Public meetings of a somewhat extraordinary nature have recently been held in France, at which resentments have been expressed in favor of the abolition of the power of the Senate and of the Legislature. The Emperor has consequently abolished the privilege of the people to assemble in public meetings.

A dreadful disaster occurred recently on board the steamer Ville-de-Boulogne, by which the whole saloon took place in the powder magazine, completely blowing up the ship and killing nearly all the officers and crew.

The Mikado of Japan retains ex-Lieutenant Grinnell, an American, as Chief of his Naval Bureau, and has appointed General Paul Frank, an American officer, General-in-Chief of the Japanese army, at a salary of $20,000 per year.

Mr. Daniel A. Lange, English representative of the Suez Canal Company, advertises officially that the Canal will be opened to general navigation on October of this year. Its width will be 72 feet at bottom, 295 feet at top, and its depth 26 feet.



MR. PAUL DU CHAILLU LECTURING TO THE YOUNG FOLKS OF BOSTON.

DU CHAILLU'S LECTURES FOR THE YOUNG FOLKS.

MR. DU CHAILLU—the celebrated African explorer—has, at least so far as young folks are concerned, taken the front rank among our popular lecturers. His series of three lectures recently delivered in the Horticultural Hall at Boston were attended by thousands of young people, and were a remarkable success. Mr. DU CHAILLU is peculiarly well fitted for a popular lecturer. In the first place he has something to say, and what he says is new. He adds to the stock of human information. His style is inimitable. Interesting as are his printed works, as compared with those of other travelers, his lectures, delivered as he delivers them, are still more interesting.

We give on this page an illustration showing this famous traveler as he appeared when addressing his youthful auditors in Boston. "It is saying but little," says the Boston Daily Advertiser, "to state that the lecturer was successful in his efforts to interest his eager auditors. There has not for many years been a lecturer who so completely delighted his audience; and both old and young were equally interested and instructed. DU CHAILLU has the happy faculty of living over again in speech the adventures of his career as a traveler; he becomes so absorbed in his relation of hunting wild beasts that there was no one in the hall who did not catch his enthusiasm. It was very interesting to see the hundreds of boys and girls who sat before him leaning forward, with half-open mouths and sparkling eyes, as he unfolded his large cartoons and depicted the scenes that they portrayed."

The subjects of these lectures related to the animals, vegetation, villages, and people of the interior of Africa. We understand that the interest excited by them will lead to the establishment of a "Young Folks' Lyceum" at Boston. We have not space to give any detailed report of MR. DU CHAILLU'S lectures; but, as he will probably be invited to deliver them in all our large cities, we advise all our young readers to hear them for themselves, and also to read his charming books, "The Ashango Land," "The Gorilla Country," and "Wild Life under the Equator." MR. DU CHAILLU'S lecture on "Races and Types of Mankind" has been highly appreciated by our most learned SAVANS.

GRAND MASQUERADE CARNIVAL AT THE SKATING RINK, BUFFALO, NEW YORK.—SKETCHED BY J. P. HOFFMAN.—[SEE PAGE 151.]

A VELOCIPEDE OF FIFTY YEARS AGO.

A VELOCIPEDE OF FIFTY YEARS AGO.

THE velocipede, which is just at this moment so popular in New York, was brought to the city just fifty years ago! It was supposed to be the invention of a German nobleman, Baron CHARLES DE DRAIS, who used it while performing his official duties as master of the woods and forests belonging to the Grand-Duke of Baden. They were for a long time called the Draisina, from the inventor; and on their introduction into England, at the beginning of the present century, the greatest possible expectations were created with regard to their usefulness and speed. The nature and properties of the machine were thus set forth: 1. That on a well maintained post-road they would travel up a hill as fast as a man could walk. 2. On a plain, even after a heavy rain, they would go six or seven miles an hour. 3. When the roads were dry and firm they would run on a plain at the rate of eight miles an hour. 4. On a descent they would equal a horse at full speed. By examining our illustration, which is taken from a picture published by ACKERMAN of London in 1819, it will be perceived that it is precisely the same thing we now call the velocipede, except in the crank or "treadle. The English called these machines "Hobby-horses" and "Dandy Horses;" they were introduced into this city under the first-mentioned name. They were described in advertisements of the day as "consisting of two wheels, one behind the other, connected by a perch, on which a saddle is placed as a seat. The front wheel is made to turn on a pivot guided by a curved lever or rudder, which comes up to the hands; the fore-arms rest on a cushion in front, in this position, both hands holding the rudder firmly, the machine and traveler are preserved in equilibrio."

The sporting gentry of England for a while cultivated the velocipede; but Lord GEORGE BENTINCK and persons of his style finally pronounced against them, and they soon descended to the vulgar level of playthings for young people, and ceased to be regarded in any other light than a toy or hobby. While the fever did last a shoemaker of London made some money by the manufacture of a strong shoe with a bit of iron at the toe, which greatly aided the feet of the "velocipeders" as they went over the ground.

On their introduction into New York our excitable citizens went into an ecstasy of astonishment and delight. The manufacturers for a time could not apparently meet the demand. Very desperate contests at nightfall used to run them up the Bowery to Vauxhall Garden, and other more desperate people ventured on them down the hill that led from the head of Chatham Street to the City Hall Park. There was a place opened for their exhibition somewhere near Bowling Green; but in the highest point of the fever it was terribly broken by a wet blanket, the application of which is thus detailed in the Ladies' Literary Cabinet, a weekly paper now lying before us, published corner of Chatham and Dunne streets, by WOODWORTH & HYRETES, on Saturday, August 9, 1819:

"VELOCIPEDE HOAX.—Some mischievous wag on Saturday last caused printed hand-bills to be distributed announcing that on Monday at 5 o'clock precisely a velocipede would start from the head of Chatham Square, and proceed to St. Paul's Church in less than two minutes, and that it would afterward be exhibited in the Park, etc. Notwithstanding the rain on Monday the people began to collect at an early hour, so that before 5 o'clock Chatham Street was literally crowded from one end to the other. Every window from the basement to the attic was thrown open, and filled with the beautiful heads of ladies and children, exposed to an incessant searching mist, which robbed their lovely tresses of every curl which the morning's industry had created. But female fortitude and curiosity combined are not to be shaken by winds or weather. For more than an hour did the throng continue to increase, until it was almost impossible to pass the street with, or without a velocipede. In the mean time the Park was also crowded, and the City Hall exhibited the appearance of a gala-day. It is needless to say that no velocipede appeared."

In the same publication of the preceding week we find the following interesting account of a newly-invented velocipede for ladies, then building by "a distinguished artist:"

"It is to have beams, or bodies on springs, and four wheels which will insure its safety. It is to quarter on the road like other carriages, and with four velocifers, it is supposed that it will proceed with astonishing rapidity; but its peculiar recommendation is to be the conveyance of two ladies and two velocifers, at the rate of six miles an hour."

We are at a loss to know what the "distinguished artist manufacturer" meant by velocifers, unless the modern treadle, which is probably the case.

The velocipede mania of 1819 soon died out in New York, and the people who had purchased machines at high prices sold them much less than cost, or gave them away as playthings for grown-up boys. Time must decide whether history is to repeat itself with regard to the present velocipede mania. At present, however, there seems to be no danger of any diminution in the interest taken in this curious machine, of which a single agency in this city has prepared seventy patents for improvements!

THAT BOY OF NORCOTT'S.

CHAPTER XXIV.

MY INSTRUCTIONS.

My friend did not keep his self-made appointment with me at breakfast, nor did I see him for two days, when we met in the street. "I have gone over to the enemy," said he, "I have taken an engagement with Bettmeyer: six thousand florins and all expenses—silver florins, mon cher; and if you're wise," added he, in a whisper, "you'll follow my lead. Shall I say a word for you?" I thanked him coldly, and declined the offer.

"All right, stick to gratitude, and you'll see where it will land you," said he, gayly. "I've send you half a dozen letters to friends of mine up yonder," and he pointed toward the North.

"You'll find Hunyadi an excellent fellow, and the countess charming; don't make love to her, though, for Tasnay is a regular Othello. As for the Erdödis, I only wish I was going there instead of you—such pheasants, such woodcock such Tokay, their own vintage. Once you're down in Transylvania, write me word whom you'd like to know. They're all dear friends of mine. By-the-way, don't make any blunder about that Hunyadi contract. The people here will want you to break it —don't on any account. It's the finest bargain ever was made; splendid timber, magnificent bark, and the cuttings alone worth all the money." He rattled out this with his own headlong speed, and was gone before I well knew I had seen him. That evening I was ordered to Herr Oppovich's house to receive my last instructions. The old man was asleep on a sofa as I entered, and Sara seated at a table by the fire, deeply engaged in accounts.

"Sit down, Herr Owen—she had given us calling me Von Owen—" and I will speak to you in a minute."

I was not impatient at the delay, for I had time to gaze at her silken hair, and her faultless profile, and the beautiful outline of her figure, as, leaning her head on her hand, she bent over the table.

"I can not make this come right—are you clever at figures?" asked she.

"I can not say it is my gift, but I will do my best to aid you." And now we were seated side by side, poring over the same page, and as she had placed one taper finger next the col- umn of figures I did so likewise, thinking for less of the arithmetic than of the chance of touching her hand with mine.

"These figures are somewhat confusing," she said. "Let us begin at the top—fourteen hundred and six hundred make two thousand, and twelve hundred, three thousand two hundred—now is this a seven or a three?"

"I'd say a three."

"I've called it a seven, because M. Marsac usually writes his sevens in this way."

"These are De Marsac's, then?" asked I.

"And why 'De,' may I ask?" said she, quickly; "why not Marsac, as I called him?"

"I took his name as he gave it me."

"You know him, then? Oh, I had forgotten —he called on you the night he came. Have you seen him since?"

"Only passingly, in the street."

"Had he time to tell you that he has been dismissed?"

"Yes, he said he was now in Mr. Bettmeyer's office."

"Shall I tell you why?" she stopped, and her cheek became crimson, while her eyes sparkled with an angry fire that actually startled me; "but let us finish this. Where were we?" she now leaned her head down upon her hands, and seemed overcome by her emotion. When she looked up again her face was perfectly pale, and her eyes sad and weariful. "I am afraid we shall wake him," said she, looking toward her father; "come into this room here. So this man has been talking of us?" cried she, as soon as we had passed into the adjoining room. "Has he told you how he has requited all my father's kindness? how he has repaid his trustfulness and faith in him? Speak freely if you wish me to regard you as a friend."

"I would that you might, Fräulein. There is no name I would do so much to win."

"But you are a gentleman, and with noble blood. Could you stoop to be the friend of"—here she hesitated, and, after an effort, added, "a Jew?"

"Try me, prove me," said I, stooping till my lips touched her hand.

She did not withdraw her hand, but left it in mine, as I pressed it again and again to my lips.

"He told you, then," said she, in a half whisper, "that our house was on the brink of ruin; that in a few weeks, or even less, my father would not face the exchange—did he not say this?"

"I will tell you all," said I; "for I know you will forgive me when I repeat what will offend you to hear, but what it is safer you should hear."

And, in the fewest words I could, I related what Marsac had told me of the house and its difficulties. When I came to that part which represented Oppovich as the mere agent of the great Parisian banker—whose name I was not quite sure of—I faltered and hesitated.

"Go on," said she, gently. "If he told you that Baron Nathanheimer was about to withdraw his protection from us?"

I slightly bent my head in affirmation.

"But did he say why?"

"Something there was of rash enterprise, of speculation unauthorized and—"

"Of an old man with failing faculties," said she, in the same low tone; "and of a young girl, little versed in business, but self-confident and presumptuous enough to think herself equal to supply his place. I have no doubt he was very much on this head. He wrote to Paris also, who sent me his letter—the letter he wrote of us while eating our bread. It was not handsome of him—was it, Sir?"

I can give no idea, not the faintest, of the way she said these few words, nor of the ineffable scorn of her look, while her voice remained calm and gentle as ever.

"No. It was not handsome."

She nodded to me to proceed, and I continued:

"I have told you nearly every thing; for of himself and his banefulness—"

"Oh! do not tell me of that. I am in no laughing mood, and I would not like to hear of it. What did he say of the Hunyadi affair?"

"Nothing, or next to nothing. He offered me letters of introduction to Count Hunyadi; but beyond that there was no mention of him."

She arose as I said this, and walked slowly up and down the room. I saw she was deep in thought, and was careful not to disturb or distract her. At last she opened a writing-desk, and took out a roll of papers fastened by a tape.

"These," said she, "you will take with you, and carefully read over. They are the records of a transaction that is now involving us in great trouble, and which may prove more than trouble. M. Marsac has been indeed—how we shall not stop to inquire—to contract for the purchase of an extensive wood belonging to Graf Hunyadi: the price, half a million of francs. We delayed to ratify an agreement of such moment until each party assured of the value of the timber; and, while we deliberated on the choice of the person to send down to Hungary, we have received from our correspondent at Vienna certain bills for acceptance in payment of the purchase. You follow me, don't you?"

"Yes. As I understand it, the bargain was assumed to be ratified?"

"Just so."

She paused; and, after a slight struggle with herself, went on:

"The contract, legally drawn up and complete in every way, was signed; not, however, by my father, but by my brother. You have heard, perhaps, that I have a brother. Bad companionship, and a yielding disposition, have led him into evil, and for some years we have not seen him. Much misfortune has come to him; but none greater, perhaps, than his meeting with Marsac; for, though Adolf has done many things, he would not have gone thus far without the promptings of this bad man."

"Was it his own name he wrote?" asked I.

"No. It was my father's!" and she faltered at the word; and as she spoke it her head fell heavily forward, and she covered her face with her hands.

She rallied however quickly, and went on:

MY INSTRUCTIONS.]

"We now know that the timber is not worth one-fourth of its large sum. Baron Elsa himself has seen it, and declares that we have been duped or—worse. He insists that we rescind the contract, or accept all its consequences. The one is hopeless—the other ruin. Meanwhile, the Baron suspends further relations with us, and heavy acceptances of ours will soon press for payment. I must not go into this," said she, hurriedly. "You are very young to charge with such a mission; but I have great faith in your loyalty. You will not wrong our trust?"

"That I will not."

"You will go to Graf Hunyadi, and speak with him. He—as many of his countrymen are—a man of high and generous feeling, he will not bring ruin upon us, when our only alternative will be to denounce our acts. You are very young; but you have habits of the world and society. No—I am not seeking to learn a secret; but you know enough to make your compunctions and acceptable, where any others in our employ would be indadmissible. At all events, you will send us the sum of our we have to deal with, and you will report to me at once."

"I am not to tell him how this signature has been obtained?" asked I, awaiting the reply.

"That would be to denounce the contract at once!" cried she, as though this thought had for the first time struck her. "You know the penalty of a forgery here? It is the galleys for life. He must be sent at all events. No! you can," cried she, eagerly, "I can give you no instructions! I have none to give. When I say, I trust you—I have told you all."

"Has Herr Ignaz not said how he would wish me to act?"

"My father knows nothing of it all! Nothing. You have seen him, and you know how little he is able now to cope with a difficulty. The very sense that his difficulties are not his own very overcomes him, even to tears."

Up to this she had spoken with a calm firmness that had in a touch of almost sternness to her manner, but at the mention of her poor father's condition her courage gave way, and she turned away and hid her face, but her convulsed shoulders showed how her emotion was overcoming her. I took her hand, and she took mine hand in both my own. She left it to me while I kissed it again and again.

"Oh, how I despised rather than spoke, "if you knew how devoted I am to you, if you know how willingly I would give my very life for you, you would not think your confidence ill-placed at this hour. Your trust in me has made me forget how lowly I am, and how humble—to forget all that separates us, even to telling that I love you. Give me one word—only one—of hope; or, if not that, let your dear hand but close on mine, and I am your knight forever."

She never spoke, however, and her cold fingers returned no pressure to mine.

"I love you; I love you!" I muttered, as I covered her hand with kisses.

"There! Do you not hear?" cried she, suddenly. "Ulric is calling me."

"Sara, Sara! Where is Sara?" cried the old nunn, in a weak, reedy voice.

"I am coming, father," said she. "Good-by, Digby; remember that I trust you!"

She waved me back with hand, with a faint, sad smile, she moved away. As she reached the door, however, she turned, and, with a look of kindly meaning, said, "Trust you in all things!"

I sprang forward to clasp her to my heart, but the door closed on her, and I was alone!

TOO HARD ON THE LINE.

On a certain pleasant morning Burleigh came down into Hesperia's drawing-room with a sober face. He was not a jealous man, nor to have one's fiancée impudently flirting under one's very nose demands some course of action, if a man is not quite so. But the ladies had become involved with him maliciously; and whether the ring on Frank Fayal's chain was or was not Lucy's material little, as it was popularly supposed to be long to that young lady. Patience he had tried, with an expectation of shaming her by magnanimity. But that requires a certain moral development to comprehend magnanimity. Had Burleigh stormed like Blue Beard and Rochester rolled in one Lucy would have experienced a genuine respect for him, and liked him all the better. As it was he retreated behind his pride, when he talked of trust and loyalty, and indulged herself in growing contempt for what she esteemed his lack of spirit.

And so Burleigh came down determined on reason with her.

Now he loved her was bad enough for a sensible man like Burleigh. The man has magnanimous with her was worse. But to reason with her was madness of all. Preposterously folly! A genuine throwing away of pearls before—Oh. I am not going to say what you have in your mind. And I only mean by "jewel of gold in a swine's snout," to which Solomon likens "the fair woman without discretion."

As usual, before breakfast Lucy sat in Flirtation Nook. So Hesperia had dubbed it, and her frolicsome mood was to come to make the title good. It was, in fact, only a bay-window contained off from the drawing-room and furnished with a fauteuil, a flower-stand, and a bust of Psyche. But what had not that Psyche seen in those few short weeks! Hesperia had there that winter, besides what she termed her "miscellanies," her madcap cousins Lucy and Dot, who, with Burleigh and Fayal, had entered into an alliance of offence and defence, and were known as the Square Party. And they flirted so enormously and glaringly that people said it was a matrimonial party—as it is certain that Lucy and Burleigh were engaged; but Lucy flirted with Fayal, and Dot laughed and was sweet on Whitney Gilbert, known as the Bait in Hesperia's circle, because of his millions. Who can tell how matters stood in those days? It is enough for us to know that Burleigh found Lucy in Flirtation Nook.

If my reader is clever in drawing conclusions, she—I say "she" for I know that he won't read me—she has already concluded that I am not at all in love with my heroine, and is quite right in so deciding. At my time of life hearts and heads are tough alike; and I have learned what we all learn by the time we are forty, to wait, and the lesson is of no particular use to us—not to rely on my eyes! Old fellows like me arrive at a horrible spirit of analysis. The blue or the brown of an eye is only so much coloring matter; ivory, white or clear brune—is only so much buffer, that will one day wrinkle. Lovely outlines are only so much muscle, nitrogen, sulphur, what not? Shows no mounting wonderful in the sun, but only than muscle and coloring—both so perishable!

But men of Burleigh's age! I—oh, to him Lucy's pink cheeks and fair, curly head were innocence! Under her broad, smooth forehead could lurk no guile. Her soft blue eyes bewildered him. A touch of the long golden tress hanging over her shoulder sent the blood whirling through his veins. Fresh and young, single there in her white frock and blue sash, she was immortal youth and beauty, smiling sancy defiance at the mouses outside and their analogies. And, vanquished at every sight, Burleigh bent over her to be pettishly pushed away.

"No; you shall not kiss me," said Lucy, pouting. "Did you ever see such an ogre or a bear; and I don't like bears, Burleigh."

This brought Burleigh back to his intention of trying reason.

"Neither do I like coquettes," he replied, sitting down by her and looking at her with a very serious face. "They are unwholesome bears, Lucy."

"Yes; the old story. You are jealous. I cannot imagine what you mean. I think you are a Turk at heart, Sir; and, if you could have your way, I should peep out at life from behind a harem lattice," cries Lucy, raising her head, "and never step out unless enveloped in a yashmac."

"Not even when people shrug their shoulders and sneer at you," replied Burleigh, with rising irritation, "and indignant when you place me in the ridiculous position of a man who society expects to be jealous. If that has any connection with hattices and yashmacs I admit that I am a Turk."

"Just as I said! Poor Frank and I exchange a dozen words, and you look daggers for the rest of the evening. Is that Christian? Is it the best partner in the room, and you are indignant because—"

"No," interrupted Burleigh, eagerly. "I could not be jealous of you in this degrading fashion. I only wish you to ask yourself seriously—"

"But I do not wish to ask myself any thing seriously; for, knowing that she has the worst of the argument, she becomes herself in a double childishness. "I know nothing about reasoning and considering."

"But dear—"

"I hate duty. I always did. You make me think of Cato, pulling off a shoe, and I can't and now I hope I may look in what direction I choose;" and with a sweeping reverence Lucy took her fairy self out of reach.

Natural result of trying to reason with a thoroughly unreasonable being; and a very lucky man was Burleigh to escape from further marriage, though he did not think so at that moment, but sat astounded. To have discovered that his idol was heartless, unconscious, and ungenerous seemed to him a very dismal business.

"This great advantage, however, had Burleigh, in common with most of the men in his displayal love. He was habitually self-controlled, and whatever he felt, not the quiver of a muscle betrayed him. Lucy knew that he was angry with vexation when people looked for his missing ring, and her spite at him grew every day. Do we her confidante; and while Burleigh rode and walked, recklessly indifferent where, trying to rid of the sense of love tugging at his heart, the two were closeted together in devising vengeance. Burleigh never was in greater danger.

Coming home one of his long tramps, Burleigh found a letter on his table.

"One of your letters, Sir," explained Jim. "I found it in a sweeping out, Sir."

The edges of the paper were eaten with fire, and discolored, showing that it had been in the flames. Burleigh stood, remembering that he had burned letters; but Jim had declared that this was his letter, and, with that touching faith in the word of man's place in positive assertion, he opened it, and read:

"MY DEAR FRIEND.—I am, you say, to describe my life here accurately. I am to tell you how I live, and all down faithfully. But of what life would you have me speak? Of the hour I pass in bed, and the groups I wear? Unless a life may consist in pulling on the boots every morning, my days have no duration. Hesperia is kind to me; it is her nature, and I am her cousin. Nobody here is uncivil. Her guests are ladies and gentlemen. And yet I never was sadder! I must say it out: I am restless and dissatisfied. I am a stone in every body's eyes; and I can not lie quietly, and bear the everyday wear and tear, like other stones, because I have the longing, and I have the power to feel the sense of beauty. Where if some one would but find it out to me.

"I—but there were [illegible] days, when they remember me; but that is not often. I am so neutral a tint, that I remarked to-day, with a smile, and not beautiful! It is right, I suppose, it is quite natural. Yet I am filled with a devouring envy and jealousy. I could forgive a lifeless stone to the feeble clatter that these feeble belles offer for conversation. I am like the ugly princess of the fairy tales, with this spell laid upon me that I can never attract or shine unless I am first sure that love is my listener. And, sitting in my deep loneliness, I see women guarded by the reverence and admiration of men whom they can not even comprehend, and receiving such protection and worship as I crave.

"In right of what, I wonder? It is a trick of red and white in the cheek, a roundish arm, a well-cut nose, a flounce and a train that alone may rightly claim such homage. And I—I am a woman! I am a woman's crown, and till she enters on the empire of some heart I am but the mockery of myself dissatisfied people. And I rebel against the flimsy barriers between me and my inheritance. I rebel against Lucy, struggle for your portion of life's good; the world belongs to him who takes it; refuse to sit in coldness and neutrality, shadow, and accept universal neglect. Brave words, my dear, brave words! And I—I cannot tell myself as much. But there is the habit of being forgotten; and I have denied myself. I have never yet believed in despise, and of the laughing eyes with which they would regard me if I were to attempt to shine in society. The struggle is too unequal! It is easier to submit. I submit, and yet if there is ever an opening in the talk for me, I am brilliant. I am all the things I go by; and no doubt I shall always sign myself,

"Yours, faithfully,

"ALICE AINSLEIGH."

This remarkable letter was indorsed in the same hand in which it was written, "sentimental and feeble—rather pretty," and had evidently been thrown in the fire. As evidently it had never been answered by Burleigh. But some balance it had received and found its way to him was of course a mystery. There was a Mrs Ainsleigh, but Burleigh could not recall a Christian name of her face; partly because, till the last few days, he had been under the impression that Lucy filled all the places in his conversations. Now, on reading her letter, he felt some such curiosity concerning Miss Ainsleigh as you would about the six stones which you walk over every day, if you had just learned that the Koh-i-noor was imbedded in one of them.

Quite unconscious of his interest, Miss Ainsleigh sat in a corner, with her crochet, very much as the letter had said. She was a delicate woman, and, owing to no means have looked her twenty-eight years if it had not been for the extreme gravity of her face. Her mouth was small, but sweet-looking enough. Her eyes were gray, very soft, and very dark. Her reddish-brown hair, parted evenly on a well-shaped forehead, and was brushed very smoothly, too smoothly for her beauty, over her ears. She had no color, but was of a fair white—not sickly. Her figure seemed rather tall, but firmly. The little foot resting on the stool was neatly slippered. The ruffle of her skirt, the handkerchief in her lap, were fine and delicate. A dainty lily of a woman," thought Burleigh; "needing only a little flush of happiness to bloom into a beauty."

And that was the end of an exceedingly thing it is to think well of yourself; and how much better to say at once that you are a fool, and be at rest. Up to that morning Burleigh had met Miss Ainsleigh three times a day, at least, and had never once thought of her.

He made his way toward her. Nobody else saw her. The talk was of a drive to be taken, but in flowed about for an hour about a rock. Nobody expected her to have any interest in the excursion, and she sat patiently silent, her eyes fixed on her needle.

"You say nothing," said a pleasant voice in her neighborhood. "Do you dislike driving? May I offer you a seat behind my horses? I can assure you they are gentle."

Miss Ainsleigh went on calmly with her work. Reasons and explanations taught her that no such speech could be addressed to her.

"Miss Ainsleigh!" urged the voice.

Then, looking up, surprised, and looked up at Burleigh with an amusing astonishment, and, as plainly as eyes could speak, her eyes said:

"This is me! Are you quite in your right mind?"

"Will you go?" repeated Burleigh, doing his best to look unconscious of her stare.

A little titter reached Miss Ainsleigh. Lucy and Dot, nearly in hysterics at the great spectacle of Burleigh humbling your her class.

"I shall be very happy," she said, demurely, thinking to herself the while, "I see; a love quarrel. Well, I am sure I have no part in it." figure, and I shall enjoy the drive." So she went, and was quite at her ease. Why should a man figure in love affairs? She possessed a quiet and great faculty, hearty enjoyment of small pleasures. Her contentment was so thorough that it was almost self-reflection. But her companionship relieved his bitter thinking. After the drive he came to sit beside her. The next day he would have to ride again. Before very long he found himself thinking, since his own happiness was destroyed, why not make hers: on the principle that some lovers fall to practising the sick, and others go out as missionaries. Quite unconscious to herself, somewhat surprised, Miss Ainsleigh received him with quiet serenity. All his attentions she attributed to the evident quarrel with Lucy, and herself that evening could look any morning to see them reconciled, and cooing together in Flirtation Nook.

But she did not believe how she should relish the spectacle? The part even of a lay figure has its dangers. Burleigh was a winning man. She had enjoyed his talk and his attentions immensely. Most significant sign of all, she was growing courageous. She bantered Burleigh, and contradicted and teased him, and grew quite merry and spirit. What magician is it that works such miracles? Miss Ainsleigh was old enough to know.

For Lucy—she made a bouquet every morning for Fayal's button-hole, and fastened it there. She tied away his whiskers and arrayed him in her hat. She leaned on his arm, and looked up into his face, and looked down again, all under Burleigh's eyes. It was excruciating, but a mistake, dear coquettes, one and all. Your real power over a man will always be in exact proportion to the extent of his belief in you! And so some day Dot, who was much cleverer than Lucy, said to her,

"I never saw any thing so ridiculous, but I think Burleigh is getting in earnest about that old maid. You had better tell him about that letter or it will be too late."

"Nonsense!" said Lucy, sharply.

Miss Ainsleigh and Burleigh had arrived at that stage when such is attained as a woman yet can find nothing to say. Miss Ainsleigh prophesied rain. Burleigh denied it. Silence. Miss Ainsleigh looked about the room, saw the canary, and made a neat little speech on birds. Burleigh said "yes" and "no" in the wrong places, and created a second silence, and Miss Ainsleigh's heart began to beat very fast, when Lucy entered, and with that graceful unconsciousness of another woman's presence to civility which some young ladies exhibit, she laid her hand on Burleigh's arm, saying,

"I am afraid I bring you disengaged. I want to speak with you," and drew him out into the hall.

The reconciliation had come; and the poor lay figure? Were the shadows deepening about her, sitting motionless by the fire, half as dark as that falling over her life?

Lucy drew Burleigh into the hall. A soft twilight reigned there, and it could hardly be said that they had leaned heavily on any one or not as they walked up and down the marble pavement. She was looking her loveliest. She was wearing a most beautiful young woman, and she felt herself irresistible. She looked up at Burleigh. He was quiet and grave, waiting to hear what she had to say. She hesitated, and pressed her little hands on his arm—experience taught her that might go further than many arguments —and began thus:

"Burleigh, I have a confession to make, but you must promise me not to be angry."

"How can I promise that till I know the offense?" asked Burleigh, in a crushing, matter-of-fact way, for he was a little afraid of this confession.

"How grim you are, Burleigh! You did not use to be so severe with me."

At this ferocious picture of himself being severe with such a very pretty young woman, Burleigh felt himself relenting; but by some trick of memory recalled Lucy tying away Fayal's whiskers, and hardened his heart.

"I am very sorry blunt and rude. What was it you wished to say?"

"It was about a letter"—Lucy's confidence decidedly on the wane—"which I—you know I have written it, but Dot and I only thought of it as a joke. I never did like Miss Ainsleigh. She was so ill-natured, and I felt just a little spiteful at you. Dot composed it and I copied it, and we burned it a little to pretend it had been in the fire, and gave her a few dollars to say he found it in sweeping out your room, to make you read it. And I told Hesperia the other day what a fib Miss Ainsleigh had written about us, and said I had done such a dreadful thing, and that I must tell you! And I thought I never could do it; and—will you forgive me, Burleigh?"

"Forgive you!" exclaimed Burleigh, radiant, "I have never so delighted. You have relieved my last doubt. I couldn't quite reconcile it with the refinement and delicacy of Miss Ainsleigh's manner that she should have written that letter."

"Oh! very well: I am glad I do," pouted Lucy; but Burleigh scarcely looked at her, and evidently was not thinking of her at all. She took her hand from his arm. He made no effort to detain her. She turned away from him. He went back to the room where he had left Miss Ainsleigh. She had risen.

Miss Ainsleigh sat quiet in the shadow as he had left her, only it was now so dark that he could distinguish her figure. Perhaps that was the reason that he seated himself so near her.

"I think I could see your face," he said, and there was a thrill and tremble in his voice new to her. "I have something to tell you. Something to ask you."

"I know," she said, trying to nerve herself.

"You know?"

"I have always foreseen that you would one day be reconciled. I am very glad for you!"

Very glad? Oh, Miss Ainsleigh! all the fits were not laid at Lucy on that memorable evening.

"Reconciliation!" echoed Burleigh. "Of what are you talking? My question concerns myself. It is to know whether you know why I have so persistently haunted you of late?"

"No," she answered, trying to speak with indifference, "I guess there have arisen among men a new order of Don Quixotes, sworn to the service of elderly spinsters and undesirable femininity in general."

"Then you never thought," questioned Burleigh, taking her hand, "that I was the most selfish of men, and was continually with you because—I love you."

Miss Ainsleigh started violently, but she made no answer.

"Speak," he pleaded, raising her hands to his lips. "Tell me that you will be my wife."

"I will not," answered Miss Ainsleigh, low and distinct.

"You will not?"

"No."

Burleigh sat dumb. He loved this woman, and honored her, yet there had always been upon him a certain sense of sacrifice. "It was for her happiness," he had told himself, and he had never canvassed the possibility of a rejection. Now that she did reject him, he discovered, in his bitter and overwhelming disappointment, how very much he loved.

"Understand," she said, turning toward him as he sat motionless beside her; "I could love you with heart and soul. Your love might be, would be, Paradise to me. But poor and plain and lonely as I am, I will not take Paradise itself as an alms thrown to me by a reckless, disappointed affection."

"No!" said Burleigh, as eager as he had been downcast; "but do you refuse to make Paradise for me? Did not I tell you that I was selfish? I ask you to make my happiness. I love you. Plain? Then I love your sweet face. Lonely? Then you are lovely! You said you could love me with heart and soul. Only love me as I love you, and I ask nothing better."

"Beg pardon," said Jim's voice in the door; "but the bell have rung three times for supper."

One word, whispered Burleigh, "before we go. Say yes."

And some one near him murmured "yes." Probably it was Miss Ainsleigh. For I heard Hesperia saying shortly after,

"I never was so surprised. Alice is a nice person, a clever woman; but that she should marry Burleigh! I am not sure if I remembered to congratulate them, for I really felt as if I were dreaming. What could he see in her?"

Lucy married the Bait, Whitney Gilbert. Dot became Mrs. Finch. Both ladies are fond of quoting Mrs. Burleigh. For the moral, it there is any, old Mrs. Hubbard drew it for the benefit of her absent daughter.

"And, after all, you must never feel quite sure," said Mrs. Hubbard, "till the knot is fairly tied, how many strange things may turn up. There is Mrs. Gilbert, she that was Lucy Simpson. She might once have married Burleigh. She was smartly engaged to him; but he proved to be perverse, and he slipped through her fingers, fell dead in love with his present wife. Oh! you can tell stories about her now. She is mightily improved, a very fine woman; but in those days she had only two grooms to her back, and was quite an old maid. Nobody thought of taking her out. And he—raved about her—and is as fond of her now as ever. There is a great deal in luck, my dear. Remember that! And when you have your fish well hooked, don't strain too hard on your line. Time enough to wallop him when you get him safe to shore."

CARNIVAL AT THE BUFFALO SKATING-RINK.

THE skating-rink at Buffalo is one of the largest in the country. It was recently the scene of a most excellent masquerade skating carnival which we illustrate on page 148. The rice was crowded with a throng of skaters of both sexes, and a very imaginative costuming of them; there was a large attendance of spectators, filling the immense building to its utmost capacity. When all were on the ball simultaneously and the masks were laid aside it was a decidedly interesting spectacle; for the ladies of Buffalo, and especially those of them that skate, are unsurpassed in beauty by any in the world.

The rink is one after Mr. Heaver's patent, and an interview with this one at Buffalo would represents all the institutions of the sort in this country, and will therefore be interesting to all of our readers who enjoy skating.

ZOOLOGICAL GARDENS.

THE collections of living animals, now popularly known as Zoological Gardens, are of considerable antiquity. We read of such gardens in China as far back as 2000 years; but they consisted chiefly of some favorite animals, such as stags, fish, and tortoises. The Greeks, under Pericles, introduced peacocks in large numbers from India. The Romans had their elephants; and the first giraffe in Rome, under Nero, was not as great an event in the history of zoological gardens as its time as the arrival in 1849 of the hippopotamus in London. The first modern public garden of which we have any detailed account is that in the reign of the Chinese Emperor, Wen Wang, founded by him about 1150 B.C., and named by him "The Park of Intelligence"; it contained mammalia, birds, fish, and amphibia. The zoological gardens of former princes and their masters occasionally as hunting-grounds.

Alexander the Great possessed his zoological gardens. Pliny from Pliny the Younger had given orders to the keepers to send all the rare and curious animals which died in the gardens to Alexandria.

Splendid must have been the zoological gardens which the Spaniards found connected with the Palace of Montezuma. Bernal Diaz, Ferdinand Cortes and other writings of the time, as well as more recently "The History of the Indians," by Thomas Herrera, give very interesting and detailed accounts of the menagerie in Montezuma's park. The buildings belonging to these gardens were all gorgeous, and even the grandeur of the Indian princes; they were supported by plates, each of which was hewn out of a single piece of some precious stone. Cochineched galleries led into the different parts of the garden—in the marine and fresh-water basins, containing innumerable water-fowl—to the birds of prey, falcons and eagles, which latter especially were represented in the menagerie variety—to the crocodiles, alligators, and serpents, some of them belonging to the most venomous species. The halls of a large square building contained the dens of the lions, tigers, leopards, bears, wolves, and other wild animals. Three hundred slaves were employed in the gardens tending the animals, upon which great care was bestowed, and scrupulous attention paid to their cleanliness. To this South American zoological garden of the sixteenth century no other of its time could be compared.

The annals of zoological gardens now in existence have been founded in this century, with the exception of the Jardin des Plantes, which, although founded in 1626, did not receive its first living animals until the year 1793-1794. Hitherto it had been a Garden of Plants exclusively.

We shall not be expected to enumerate the great Continental gardens, of which that at Berlin, half an hour's drive beyond the Brandenburg gates, contains the Royal Menagerie; it is open upon the payment of an admission fee. Berlin has also a zoological museum, similar to Museum of Natural History. The collection is one of the richest and most extensive in Europe, especially in the department of Ornithology; it includes the birds collected by Pallas and Wildenow, and the fishes of Bloch. The best specimens are those of Japan, China, the Sea, and the Cape. The whole is exceedingly well arranged, and named for the convenience of students. Still more extensive collections in the British Museum (to be hereafter removed to South Kensington) is allowed to be the finest in Europe.

The Zoological Society of London was instituted in 1826, and occupies now about seventeen acres of gardens in the Regent's Park. Among the earliest tenants of the menagerie were a pair of emues from New Holland; two Arctic bears from a Russian bear; a bald Congreve; a Persian mastiffs and Thibet watch-dogs; two llamas from Peru; a splendid collection of eagles, falcons, and other birds of prey; cranes, cassowaries, and storks; zebras and Indian cows; Esquimaux dogs; armadillos; and a collection of monkeys. To the menagerie have been added an immense number of species of Mammalia and Aves; in 1865 a collection of Reptiles; and in 1833 a collection of Fish, Molluscs, Zoophytes, and other Aquatic Animals. In 1836 the menagerie was visited by George IV. at Sandpit-gate, Windsor, was removed to the society's Gardens; and in 1834 the last of the Tower lions ended his regretted love. It is now the finest public Vivarium in Europe.

Very rare, and consequently expensive, animals are purchased occasionally. The Indian rhinoceros cost £1000; the four giraffes, £700, and their carriage an additional £700. The elephant and calf were bought in 1851 for £450; and the hippopotamus, although a gift, was not brought home and housed at less than £1000—a sum which, in more than three years of the Crystal Exhibition season, when the receipts were £10,-000 above the previous year. The lion Albert was purchased for £140; and the lioness for £200. The value of some of the smaller birds will appear, however, more startling: thus, the price of blackcocks and grouse in season is from £80; a pair of crowned pigeons and two maleos, £60; a pair of Victoria pigeons, £35; four Mandarin ducks, £70.

There is a strange notion that the Zoological Society has proposed a large reward for a "tortoise-shelled cat," and that one was actually delivered to the Society for £2501 But male tortoiseshell cats may be had in many quarters.

The Zoological Society's Gardens were established in 1831. Thither Cross removed his menagerie from the King's Mews, where it had been transferred from Exeter Change. The Gardens, a glazed circular building, 100 feet in diameter, was built for the cages of the carnivorous animals (lions, tigers, leopards, etc.); and other houses for mammalia, birds, etc. Here, in 1834, was first exhibited a young Indian rhinoceros, for which Cross paid £800. It was the only specimen brought to England for twenty years.

HOME AND FOREIGN GOSSIP.

THERE are thirteen public markets in New York city. One of these, Washington, in the lower part of town and East River, has not yet been occupied. It is, however, completed, and will be occupied as soon as the contract bonds as regards health and reputation? Recently a meeting respecting the removal of some of the markets was prepared by General Egbert L. Viele, Civil Engineer, at the request of the Common Council. From this report it is evident that an immediate renovation is needful—a fact which those who frequent the markets sufficiently know. The sites are also painfully realized. General Viele concludes his report with a plan and specification for the health department. In regard to Washington Market, he begs to remind the Common Council that it is important that it might to be in its present location; it is itself choked in, while the commerce of its vicinity is rapidly and healthfully growing. It is his opinion that this market be removed as speedily as possible to the block bounded by Fulton, Front, Dover, and Pearl streets. A design for a new building, to be located on this spot, is submitted, which would occupy the block from Twenty-third to Twenty-fifth Streets, and Eleventh Avenue and the river. It is also suggested that Fulton Market be removed to the block bounded by Pier 1, and markets as are not required in their present location be discontinued. The plan, in its most prominent features, be erected.

"Am does not appear to be confined to days by any means. Several deaths from this fearful disease have recently occurred in Brooklyn and other places on Long Island. Several persons, we learn, are said to have been killed in Queen's County within a few weeks. The latest victim was the boy of a stagnoy dog is liable to produce hydrophobia.

Since the recent revolution in Spain the Spaniards are trying to establish a republic in Cuba also; and they seem to conduct them quite differently from either the English or the American. An election in Madrid is thus described: The polls for one district are to the building where the deputies meet. You turn to the right, then to the left; nobody to show you the way—nobody else going in. In a room on one side half-a-dozen men are chatting by the fire-smoking of course: hats and cloaks on, equally of course. On a table are fifteen little boxes, each inscribed with some care. You may choose at your leisure—if you happen to be able to read—the box you prefer. Assist or molest you, urge you to vote for one or dissuade you from another. When a man comes in whose shy looks prove that he can not tell one ballot from another, some one of the five or six hats, and cloaks, and cigarettes will help him—but only one. There is not the smallest appearance of rivalry or contest. When the voter gets his ballot he bows, thanks his assistant, passes from this smoky room into another smoky room, carpeted, panelled with mahogany, furnished in mahogany, very grave gentlemen awaiting him, pen in hand, cigarette in mouth. Of goes his bit, he bows, advances timidly through the great room, undergoes a scrutiny, scarcely passes over writings done in big follow, gives in his ballot, sees it put into the mahogany box, and makes what reverence he can be a recipit. The quivering elector who has undergone this ordeal seems thankfully away with a sense of relief mingled with the pride of having done his duty.

From an exchange we gather some significant items respecting Zion's Church in this city, which is commonly known as the Mother Church. They own a large brick meeting-house on the corner of Bleecker and Tenth streets, a roomy little parsonage in Grove Street, and some funded property, all had in Eighth Street, amounting in total value to above $200,000. Their membership is about 1,000 in all, and very thing pertaining to their service indicates a well-ordered society, amply capable of taking care of their own affairs.

An elegant botanical which has been dug out of the mine of Pompeii, has been put together, and is now in the Museum at Naples. It is of bronze, and inlaid with silver. The ornamentations are large—nine feet in length, and five in width.

Seldom has a theatre been the scene of such a real and fearful tragedy as occurred recently at Havana. Senorita Aldama, a beautiful young Cuban, daughter of a wealthy planter, appeared on stage, while among the Cuban revolutionary song in a theatre, was brutally assassinated. At the time of this occurrence she was upon her favorite American flag, with the inscription, "Long live the Republic of Cuba!" upon it. When that inscription was being sung the whole audience rose and cheered the young lady, and as she bent to acknowledge the salute, a Spaniard with her with a revolver, killing her instantly. Two American gentlemen occupied the box adjoining Senorita Aldama, and one of them, seeing the pistol pointed at the young lady's breast, drew his revolver and killed the assassin.

The art of picking pockets has been brought to a high degree of perfection, as most of our readers are aware. The following revelation of some of the most approved methods in vogue is from a New York "exit," and may be useful to put the fortunate possessor of well-lined pocket-books upon their guard. To pick a man's pocket, he says, "Why, you see a crowd, single out a man who is promising and whose money we want; one of the best ways is to get behind him, and as to crowd against his left arm, another gets himself behind him, and the operator stands at his right hardly back. If you are in a strange place and a comfortable money about him, he is naturally careful of his money and will put his hand to his pocket-book, which is in his right-hand pocket. When the proper time comes the operator shall tips up or somehow at the hat of the victim, whose first impulse is to restore it, and as he can't raise his left arm he takes his hand from his right pocket, when the operator gives it and seizes the money. This action he does not feel nine times out of ten. Sometimes a man will have his hat knocked over his eyes, and turns to see who did it. The one who did it escapes through the crowd, and we all follow, and meet at some appointed place to divide the spoils. Sometimes a man's pocket-book is in the street care, the same authority pronounces to be "a risky business." "But the way of doing it is easy. For instance, I sit unpicked as a man will manage to get my hand or finger into her pocket (she is not fool is a man), and get out her purse (pocket-book; then I open it and extract the money, and then replace the purse in the pocket. Sometimes I find discovers her loss she is almost sure to think that she has lost her money or left it where she was last shopping, and so will look for it enough. As to ladies' watches and jewelry, we don't do it—that is, the best of us don't—unless we are hard up."

In a recent work on health it is shown that many more of the "ills to which flesh is heir" are due to improper diet than we are fully supposed. Long disquisitions of various kinds—pain in the lungs, heart, and brain—result from the use of indigestible food, and the like—frequently result directly from indigestion. And physical and mental treatment addressed to the stomach brings immediate or speedy relief, and satisfactory diet effects a cure. Many instances are given in each proves that it is a hard saying.

It has been well said, that a judicious woman always keeps a little behind and a little within the line of the fashion of the day. She is not in a hurry to adopt an innovation until she sees it has fairly won ground; and even then she does adopt it, she will modifies it to her own personal needs, so reflues down the extravagance and caricature which usually at first accompanies the introduction as displayed upon the persons. She never makes a fashion in its greatest excess, but always in moderation.

An anxious inquirer, in a Western journal, propounds the following conundrum:

"If a fellow, riding his velocipede, meets a lady on a particularly narrow bridge, where there is room for hands to steer, is he positively required to let go with one hand to do it? If so, how will he do it? Will he do it with his machine?

"If a fellow, riding his velocipede, overtakes a lady carrying two bundles and a parcel, what should he do with his velocipede?

"If a fellow, riding his machine, meets three ladies walking abreast, which, particularly is entitled to the honor, what ought he to do with it?

"If a fellow, riding his velocipede, encounters his expected father-in-law bobbing painfully over a bit of slippery asphalt, what shall he do with it?

"If people, coming suddenly around corners, will run against a velocipede, is it bound to be a long and apologize, or are they?

"If a fellow wishes to join a funeral procession, ought he to ride his machine?

"Am does not appear to be confined to days by any means. Several deaths from this fearful disease have recently occurred in Brooklyn and other places on Long Island. Several persons, we learn, are said to have been killed in Queen's County within a few weeks. The latest victim was the boy of a stagnoy dog is liable to produce hydrophobia.

"If a fellow, riding his velocipede, overtakes a lady carrying two bundles and a parcel, what should he do with his velocipede?

"If a fellow, riding his velocipede, overtakes a lady carrying two bundles and a parcel, what should he do with his velocipede?

"If a fellow, riding his velocipede, encounters his expected father-in-law bobbing painfully over a bit of slippery asphalt, what shall he do with it?

"If people, coming suddenly around corners, will run against a velocipede, is it bound to be a long and apologize, or are they?

"If a fellow wishes to join a funeral procession, ought he to ride his machine?

"Am does not appear to ride a velocipede to church; and, if so, what will he do with it when he gets there?"

An ingenious gentleman in Cincinnati is constructing a velocipede which is to be propelled by a spring. After various trials he estimates that it will go 500 miles before it will again require winding. Query: Will the spring be wound after the boss dowel? A reason velocipede has been invented recently, with which it can be steered. It has one on two feet, one faute, however. The driver is half roasted by the boiler, and is liable to be blown off at a tangent without a moment's warning.

"Carleton," of the Boston Journal, in a sketch of a visit to Salt Lake City, says that as soon as girls arrive at a marriageable age they become concubines. "The Mormon Church teaches that monogamy is the highest God. To accept it is to glorify Him; to reject it is to reject eternal happiness. A man may have as many concubines as he may be able to support, but for a girl to reject his addresses is to reject the gospel. Women regard polygamy as a religious sacrifice. It is to them the will of God. Accepting it, they glorify him and secure their own salvation. I venture to say that there is not one really happy woman in Utah, if united to a man with more than one woman. Polygamy is against nature. You see nature's protest in the sad and care-worn countenance of every woman you meet.

It may be interesting to some of our readers to know that, when cut flowers have faded, by cutting half an inch from the end of the stem and putting the freshly-trimmed stalks instantly into boiling water, the petals will revive, and become fresher and resume their beauty, often in a few minutes. Colored flowers, crimsons, blues, scarlets, roses and geraniums, may be treated in this way. White flowers turn yellow. The thickest textured flowers need the process, although anxious revive wonderfully. Flowers that have lain the whole night on a table, after having been worn for dancing, may be instantly renovated, It is said, by means of a cupful of hot water.

HUMORS OF THE DAY.

A GOOD REASSER.—A teetotaler's arguments are pretty sure to be sound, for he is certain to make use of nothing which will not hold water.

BUDS OF A FEATHER.—When a man has feathered his nest you will generally find that he also plumes himself upon it. How true it therefore that Fiches take unto themselves wings!

"THOSE ARE SO NEAR AND YET SO FAR."—An Englishman recently remarks, that distant relations when making their visits are invariably "very close."

ADVICE TO YOUTH.

Take sits to live worth money, dearly get;
Spend less than earn, and owe not; and ever think
Out OF ARE ELEMENT.—The last place which you could expect a woman to like is—a Still-room.

DIFFERENT MEASURES OF VALUE.

The Spanish Real—Million!
The Spanish real—Ten cents' worth!

A BLUNDER-SOME.—Kissing the wrong girl.

"How do you like the looks of the varmint?" asked an Artemisian of Down-Easter who was gazing with disdain upon an alligator with open mouth on the bank of the Mississippi. "Ah, that's responded the latter, "reminds me of the mental exercise." "But what ye will call a hair'some critter, but he's a deal of openness when he wakes."

TO LET.

To be let at a very delicate rate,
A snug little cottage, with healthy state,
"It's a bachelor's heart and the agent is chance,
Affection is rent—to be paid in advance.
The owner, as yet, has possess'd it alone,
So the kitchen and parlor are both in one;
But soon "Twill be furnish'd by Cupid himself, if a wife
Takes a lease of the term for a heart like life.
The tenant will have a few lazes to pay—
Love, kisses, and such—but no taxes, they say.
As for the good-will, the owner's inclined
To have that, if agreeable, settled in kind.
Provided true title, by proof, can be shown
That the heart is unfettered, the lease is his own.
So ladies, dear ladies, pray do not forget,
Here's an offer worth while, for a heart to be let.

A LITTLE MISTAKE.—A worthy deacon in a town somewhere in North America, gave notice at a prayer-meeting, the other day, that a charity sermon that was to be held immediately after, and unconclusively added: "The collection will be taken up for the benefits remaining." This was equaled by a clergyman who told in the course of a very solemn prayer scene, where "there wasn't a dry tear to the house."

"Father Taylor, is your son-in-law a Christian?" said a minister of long-standing to the Bishop. "I mean isn't exactly a saint, but he is a very sweet sinner."

A blind old farmer says: "If a man professes to serve the Lord, I like to see how he does it when he comes onions, as well as when he hollers glory hallelujah."

A celebrated divine, who prided himself upon the originality of his sermons, was once told, jocularly, that a sermon he had preached was excellent. "But," said the vain preacher, "I fear it is not original, for every word of it is a book I have at home." The answer rebuked vanity and pedantry in the spirit of Solomon: "Then I have no doubt you have the same book in your library; it is sometimes a looking-glass."

A pompous individual walked up to the bar of a sea-side hotel, and with considerable flourish, signed the book, and wrote down, "Mr. —, gentleman and servant." "That don't make any difference," says the landlord, "I charge you both the same price for board."

Two little boys were met after dark by a fellow who demanded their money. Said one of them, "I have not money." "Then," said the fellow, "I must murder you." But the other made assurance doubly sure by saying, "I, sir, haven't got a pocket to put money in."

A maiden lady, alluding to her youthful accomplishments, said that at six months of age she went alone. A matrimonial friend facetiously remarked: "Yes, and you have been going alone ever since."

A gentleman standing in a crowd felt the pressure of a lady's hand upon his watch-pocket. At first the sensation was delightful. It made inexpressibly delicious thrills run through his frame; but these sensations were away, and the pressure began to feel the most bit uncomfortable. "Madam," said he, "if you suspected, 'you are standing on my feet.'" "Your feet, sir!" "Yes, madam." "Why, I thought it was your watch, Sir; I thought I was standing on a block of wood or something quite large, Sir!" "Quite—but you covered 'em, madam."

CURE FOR THE BLUES.

Five parts of cold bitters, two parts of ice,
Sugar ahl, wel ewestaingus, considerabillus.
Spiritus Frumenti to the degree, ad lib.
Waterus pumpus, non multum.
Nutmegus, sprinkilus.

"Pals de matter, wat's de matter?" exclaimed an old Dutchman as he looked up his apron and ran out of his shop to know the meaning of a crowd in his neighborhood. "Vy, dere is a fight."

"There is a man killed," answered a by-stander.

"Oh, tat is all!—shust a man kill! Humph! I tot it was a fight."

"What, in Heaven's name, shall we do for dinner?" asked a wife, when, after telling her husband there was nothing in the house to eat, he said that he had no money.

"Do?" exclaimed the husband, wildly. "Ha! ha! I have it now. Go fry the goldfish, and roast the canary."

A few days since a German called at the post-office, and inquired for a letter. He could not speak English enough to make himself understood; whereupon a friend asked him what it was like. "He has not many words yet; he only knows how to swear."

INDIAN BURIAL-PLACE ON DEER CREEK, NEAR FORT LARAMIE.—FROM A PHOTOGRAPH BY A. GARDNER.—[SEE PAGE 157.]

TRUCK-WAGONS, WASHINGTON MARKET, NEW YORK.—[SKETCHED BY T. R. DAVIS.]

MARKET-WAGONS.

Our illustration on this page shows one of the most interesting features of a large New York market-place in the morning. The streets along the boundaries of the market, and for some distance beyond, are filled with truck-wagons from the country laden with the produce of the season. The country farmers have come in from miles around, and, having reached their destination, carry on a driving business with the market-men, but principally with grocers from all parts of the city, who select the early morning hours for the purchase of vegetables, fruits, etc. In the summer an extensive business is carried on by agents who bring supplies to the New York markets from the thriving rural districts along the Hudson by means of barges.

HEAVY CATTLE.

To our agricultural readers the subject of our illustration on this page can not fail to be interesting. The pair of cattle known as "Own Brothers" here shown came from Indiana, and were raised by W. H. Drew, of Putnam County, son of Daniel Drew. One of them was five and the other six years old last spring. Their live weight is 6500 pounds. Their fine condition is owing in great measure to the care of Henry Hoffman, who has charge of one of Mr. Drew's farms. They were by him fattened, and were sold for $1500 to William Ialon, of Centre Market, who is noted for killing the heaviest cattle in our markets. The weight of this gigantic pair of cattle is most readily appreciated by a comparison with the weight of others which have been brought before our notice. The bullock "Reunion," at seven years of age in 1866, weighed alive 3795 pounds; the meat 2475 pounds. The live weight of the ox "Union," seven years old in 1867, was 3410 pounds; previous to these there was the "George Washington," whose live weight (in 1840) was 3204 pounds. Mr. Andrew Johnson, in 1866, weighed alive 3330 pounds.

THE "OWN BROTHERS"—RAISED BY W. H. DREW, ESQ., OF PUTNAM COUNTY, NEW YORK—LIVE WEIGHT 6500 POUNDS.

CATHERINE'S QUEST.

Imagine to yourself an old, rambling, red-brick house, with odd corners and gables here and there, all bound and clasped together with ivy, and you have Craymoor Grange, as it was built long before Queen Elizabeth's time, and that illustrious monarch is said to have slept in it in one of her royal progresses—as where has she not slept?

There still remain some remnants of by-gone ages, although it has been much modified and added to in later days. Among these are the brew-house and laundry—formerly, it is said, mingled in the hall-room. The hall of these is chiefly remarkable for an immense arched window, such as you see in churches, with five lights.

When the owners to the Grange this year had been partially blocked up, and in front of it, by to one-third of its height, was a wooden dais, or platform, which stood a rudimentary mangle, left there, I suppose, by the last tenants of the house.

Of these last tenants we knew very little, for it was so long since it had been inhabited that the oldest authority in the village could not remember it.

There were, however, some half-defined moments in the village church of Craymoor, bearing the figures and escutcheons of knights and dames of "the old family," as the villagers said, but the inscriptions were worn and almost illegible, and for some time we none of us took the pains to decipher them.

We first came to Craymoor Grange in the summer of 1849, my husband having discovered the place in one of his rambles, and taken a fancy to it. As it was certainly thought we should ever make it our home, it was so dilapidated and tumble-down; but by the time winter came on we had secured the main portion of the premises made, and the rooms really became quite presentable.

As our family was small we confined ourselves chiefly to the newer part of the house, having the older rooms to the nice, dust, and darkness. We made use of two of the old rooms, however, one as a servant's bedroom and the other as an extra spare chamber, in case of many visitors. For myself, though I hope I am neither nervous nor superstitious, I confess that I would rather sleep in "our wing," as we called the part of the house we inhabited, than in any of the old rooms.

When Catherine l'Estrange came to us, however, during our first Christmas at Craymoor, I found that she was troubled with no such scruples, but declared that she delighted in queer old rooms, with raftered ceilings and deep windowseats, and so, and begged to be allowed to occupy the spare chamber. This I readily accorded to, as we had several visitors, and needed all the available rooms.

As my story has principally to do with Catherine l'Estrange I suppose I ought to speak more fully about her. She was an old school friend of my daughter Ella, and at the time of which I am speaking was just one-and-twenty, and the merriest girl I ever knew. She had stayed with us once or twice before we came to the Grange, but we then knew no other particulars concerning her family than that her father had been a Indian officer, and that he and her mother had both died in India when she was six years old, leaving her to the care of an aunt living in England.

I now, after a long, and I fear a tedious, preamble, come to my story.

On the eve of the new year of 1850, Catherine had a very bad sore throat, and was obliged, though against her inclination, to remain in, stay in bed all day, and forego our small evening gayety.

At about six o'clock P.M. Ella took her some tea, and fearing she would be dull, offered to stay with her during the evening. This, however, Catherine would not hear of. "You go and entertain your company," said she laughingly, "and leave me to my own devices; I feel very lazy, and I dare say I shall go to sleep." As she had not slept much on the preceding night, Ella thought it was the best thing she could do; so she went out by the door leading on to the corridor, first placing the night-lamp on a table behind the door opening on to the balcony, so that it might not shine in her face.

She did not again visit Catherine's room until reminded of it by my son George, at about half past ten. She then rapped at the door, and receiving no answer, opened it softly, and approached the bed. Catherine lay quite still, and Ella imagined her to be asleep. She therefore returned to the drawing-room without disturbing her.

As it was New-Year's Eve, we staid up "to see the old year out and the new year in," and at a few minutes to twelve we all gathered round the open window on the stairs to hear the chimes ring out from the village church.

We were all listening breathlessly as the hallclock struck twelve, when a piercing cry suddenly echoed through the house, causing us all to start in alarm. I knew that it could only proceed from Catherine's room, for the servants were all assembled at the window beneath us, listening, like ourselves, for the chimes. Thither therefore I flew, followed by Ella, and we found poor Catherine in a truly pitiable state.

She was deadly pale, in an agony of terror, and the perspiration stood in large drops upon her forehead. It was some time before we could succeed at all in composing her, and her first words were to implore us to take her into another room.

She was too weak to stand, so we wrapped her in blankets, and carried her out. As we did so, I noticed that as she was taken through the laundry she shuddered, and put her hands before her eyes. When she was laid on Ella's bed she grew calmer, and apologized for the trouble she had caused, saying that she had had a dreadful dream.

With this explanation we were fain to be content, though I thought it hardly accounted for her excessive terror. I had observed, however, that any allusion to what had passed caused her to tremble and turn pale again, and I thought it best to refrain from exciting her further.

When morning came I found Catherine almost her usual self again; I commented with brass mainin in until the evening, as her cold was not much better. Ella's curiosity to hear the whole affair had so much overcome her that she could now no longer be restrained; but whenever she asked to hear it, Catherine said, "Not now; another time, perhaps, I will tell you."

When she came down to dinner in the evening, we noticed that she was peculiarly silent, and we endeavored to draw her into her usual spirits, but in vain. She tried to laugh and to appear merry, poor child; but there was evidently something on her mind.

At last, as we all sat round the fire after dinner, she spoke. She addressed herself to my husband, but the tone of her voice caused us all to listen.

"Mr. Fanshawe, I have something to ask of you," said she, and then paused.

"Ask on," said Mr. Fanshawe.

"I know that you will think the request I am going to make very strange, but I have a particular reason for making it," continued she.

"It is that you will have the wooden dais in the east of the laundry removed."

Mr. Fanshawe certainly was taken aback, as were we all. When he had mastered his bewilderment, and seemed himself again he had heard aright—

"If," he indeed, a strange request, my dear Catherine," said he; "what can be your reason for asking such a thing?"

"I can only say that it does, and not question me, you will understand my reason," answered Catherine.

Mr. Fanshawe demurred, however, thinking it some foolish whim, and at last Catherine said:

"I must tell you why I wish it done, then I am sure we shall discover something underneath."

At this we all looked at one another in extreme bewilderment.

"Discover something underneath? No doubt we should discover a heap of rats, dust and spiders," answered Mr. Fanshawe, much amused.

But Catherine was not to be laughed down.

"Only do as I ask you, Mr. Fanshawe," said she, "and you will see. If you find nothing underneath the dais but cobwebs and dust, then you may laugh at me as much as you like." And I saw that she was serious, for tears were actually gathering in her eyes. Of course we were all very anxious to know what Catherine expected to find, and how she came to suspect that there was any thing to be found; but she would not say, and begged us all not to question her.

And now I must ask you to imagine yourself to be there.

"Let us do as Catherine wishes, father," said he, "the dais spoils the laundry, and would be much better away."

"Well, well," said Mr. Fanshawe, "do as you like, only I don't expect you will find any treasure that is found.—And now," added he, "you must have a glass of wine to warm you, Catherine, for you look quite ghastly, child."

Here the conversation changed, though we often alluded to the subject again during the evening.

The next morning the first thing in all our thoughts was Catherine's singular request.

I think Mr. Fanshawe felt that he would have forgotten it, but such was not the case; on the contrary, she enlisted George's services the first thing after breakfast, and the wooden dais, and they left the room together, accompanied by Ella.

It was a snowy morning, and Mr. Fanshawe was obliged to be away from home all day on business, so I was quite at a loss how to entertain my numerous guests successfully. Happily for me, however, the mystery attendant on the removal of the dais in the laundry charmed them all; and I have to thank Catherine for contributing to their amusement much better than I could possibly have done.

Not long after the disappearance of Catherine, Ella, and George a message was sent to us in the drawing-room requesting our presence in the laundry, and on all flocking there with more or less eagerness we found a fire burning on the old-fashioned hearth and chairs arranged round it.

It appeared that with the help of Sam, our factotum, who was a kind of Jack-of-all-trades, George had succeeded in removing the planks of the dais, which, although strongly put together, were rotten and worm-eaten, and that we were now summoned to be witnesses of its removal. We found Catherine trembling with a strange eagerness, and her face quite pale with excitement. This was shared by Ella and George; and, judging by the important expression on their faces, I fancied they were let farther into the secret than any one else.

We all sat down in the chairs placed for our accommodation; and the wild whistling of the wind in the huge chimney, together with the sheets of snow which whirled the window-panes, enhanced the mystery of the whole affair, while George and his coadjutor worked lustily on.

At length, after a great deal of panting and puffing, George was heard to exclaim, "Now for the tug of war!" and there followed a minute's pause, and then a shout, as the loosened planks were torn asunder, and a cloud of dust enveloped both workmen and spectators.

Impulsively I stepped forward, and a moment of the direst confusion ensued, during which the boys of our party greatly endangered their limbs among the broken boards.

"By George!" exclaimed my son at last—in his eagerness invoking his patron saint—as he stumbled upon something, "there is something here and no mistake;" and, hastily clearing away the rubbish and clinging cobwebs, he disclosed to view what proved on examination to be an immense oaken chest, about four feet in height, heavily mounted with ornamented with brass mouldings corroded with age and damp.

Here was a piece of excitement indeed: never in my recollection had excitement had I thought of any thing so mysterious as this. The most skeptical among us grew interested.

"Oh, do open it, Ella," said Ella, when the first exclamations of surprise were over.

"Easier to say than to do, Miss," replied Sam, exerting his herculean strength in vain. "Here's the aid of a hammer and the kitchen poker, however, he at last succeeded in forcing it open. It was fastened very eagerly to per from rust. There was something in it certainly, but we none of us could determine what, until Sam, who was in the hobbed in the chest in his hand and brought forth—something which caused the bravest to start with horror, while poor Catherine sank down, white and trembling, upon the hearthrug.

It was a bone, to which adhered fragments of decaying silk.

The consternation and conjectures which followed can be better imagined than described. Seeing the effects of the discovery upon Catherine, my husband and Ella had soon replace it in the chest, which George closed again, to be left until Mr. Fanshawe came home and could himself examine into it.

The rest of the day I passed in attending to Catherine, who seemed much shocked and overcome by what had been found, and in trying to divert my guests' thoughts from the subject, and in this I succeeded pretty well, though not all. In this I succeeded only partially, and never did I welcome my husband's return more gladly than on that evening.

On his arrival I would not let him be disturbed by the relation of what had happened until he had finished his dinner, and it was not till we were gathered as usual round the fire that George related the whole story to him.

When the recital of the young gentlemen left the room together, in order that Mr. Fanshawe might verify by his own eyes what he would hardly believe.

They were some time gone, and on their return I noticed that my husband held in his hand an old piece of soiled parchment, with mouldy seals affixed to it.

"We certainly have discovered much more than I thought we should," said he, "and I can possibly more than you thought for either." Here he paused for her to reply, but she did not.

"It seems that we have actually found some animal," added he—I fancied I could detect a certain anxiety in his tone that belied what he said—"but as to the nature of the accompanying tissues which I can see are running away with some of you"—here he looked round with a smile—"I will not decide. I'll call no come and examine them to-morrow. I have also found a piece of parchment in the chest," he added, "but I have not yet looked at it."

Before you do that, Mr. Fanshawe, and before you send for the surgeon," interrupted Catherine, suddenly, "I must tell you." Here she paused, as if to collect herself, and then began:

"I should certainly be very glad to be told," my husband admitted, much surprised; "though how you can possibly tell us all I cannot surmise."

"Listen, and I will tell you," answered Catherine; and feeling very glad that our curiosity was at last to be satisfied we all "pricked up our ears," as George would say, to listen.

I here transcribe Catherine's story word for word, as my readers subsequently wrote it down for themselves.

"You all remember," she began, "my alarming you on New-Year's Eve at midnight, and that I told you I was disturbed by a dreadful dream.

"I said so because I thought you would make fun of me if I called it a vision; and yet it was much more like a vision, for I seemed to see it waking, and it was so very vivid and consecutive than any dream I ever had.

"Before I try to describe it I want you all to understand that I reasoned intuitively to comprehend what I saw, and to recognize all the figures which appeared before me, and their relation to one another, though I am sure I never beheld them before in my life.

"When Ella left me that night I lay propped up with pillows, staring idly at the strange shadows thrown by the hidden lamp across the laundry and the open door. As I looked, it at last seemed to me that a change came over the room —a most unaccountable change.

"Instead of the blocked-up window, the rusty mangle, and the dais at the farther end, I saw the window clear and distinct from top to bottom, and in front of a deep window-seat at its base stood an oaken chest, exactly corresponding to the one discovered this morning. The room seemed brilliantly lighted, and every thing was clearly and distinctly visible; and not only was it changed, but also peopled.

"Many figures passed up and down; brocaded ladies swept by the door, and side-glimpses of men in strange costumes bowed in courtly style to the dames by their side. Among all these figures I noticed one in particular—a handsome man, and I knew them to be bride and bridegroom. The man was tall and broad, with dark hair and eyes, and a commanding and even fierce bearing, however, to be quite enslaved by the woman by his side, whom I hardly even now like to think of, there was something to me so repellent in her presence.

"She was tall and of middle age, and would have been handsome were it not for a sinister expression in her dark flashing eyes, which was enhanced by the black eyebrows which met over them.

"She reminded me irresistibly of the effigy on the stone monument in Craymoor Church, which Ella and I named 'the wicked woman.'

"As I gazed on the strange scene before me I presently became aware of three other figures which I had not noticed before. They were standing in a small arched doorway in one corner of the room (where the servant's bedroom now is) furtively watching the gay company. One was a pale, care-worn woman, apparently of about three-and-thirty, still beautiful, though haggard and mournful-looking, with blue eyes and a fair complexion.

"Her hand rested on the shoulders of two children, one a boy and the other a girl, of about ten and eleven years of age respectively. They much resembled their mother, I thought. Like her, they were meanly dressed, though no poverty of attire could hide the nobility of their aspect. I noticed that the mother's eyes were fixed upon the face of the tall stately man before-mentioned, who seemed unaware or careless of her presence: and instinctively I knew him to be the father of her children and the blighter of her life.

"As I looked and beheld all this the lights paled, the figures disappeared, and once more the room became dark and deserted. No, not quite deserted, for I presently distinguished, seated on the window-seat of the oaken chest, the fair woman and her children again.

"The moonlight now streamed through the window upon them with a flare, making it appear more ghastly and haggard than before. In her long thin fingers she was holding up to the light a watch set in large pearls, apparently interwoven in a diamond pattern, and on this the children were at first fixed.

"She then hung it on the girl's fair neck, who hid it in her bosom. Both children then crossed their arms upon their mother and kissed her repeatedly, while her head sank lower and lower, and the paleness of death overspread her features.

"This scene faded away as the other had done, and I saw the fair woman no more.

"Then it seemed to me that many figures passed and repassed before the window—the wicked woman (as I shall call her to distinguish her), accompanied by her by the image of herself, whom I knew to be her son. He was apparently older than the fair-haired children, who also passed to and fro, attired as servants, and generally employed in some menial work.

"At last the wicked woman's son, with haughty gestures, ordered the other boy to do some wearying thing that lay on the ground, and when he refused, he raised his cane as though to strike him. But the child escaped so, however, the Jew at him, and they engaged in a fierce struggle.

"In the midst of this the wicked woman, whom I had by this time learned to call Revenge and separated them; after which she pointed imperiously to the door, and signed to the younger boy to go out.

"He obeyed her mandate, but first threw his arms round his sister in a last embrace, and she snatched the diamond necklace from off her neck and gave it to him. He then went out, waving a last adieu to her, and I saw him no more.

"The figures seemed to recede from the scene me after this, and I remember nothing clearly until I beheld an infirm and tottering figure led away through the wicked doorway, in which I recognized the tall and stately man I had first seen in company with the wicked woman, but who was now old man, apparently being supported to his bed to die. As he passed out he laid one trembling hand upon the head of the fair girl, now a blooming woman, and a softer shade came over his face. This the wicked woman noted, and the marked disappointment in her countenance.

"She also was older-looking, but age had in no degree softened her features; on the contrary, they appeared to me to wear a harsher expression than before.

"In the next scene which came before me the wicked woman's son was was evidently making love to the girl. Both were standing by the old window-seat, but her face was resolutely turned from his, and I could see that he was seated at him it was with an expression of uncontrollable horror and dislike.

"Again this scene changed as those before it had done; the young man was gone, and only the light of a grated lantern illumined the room, or rather made darkness visible. The wicked woman was the only occupant of the laundry; she was kneeling by the oaken chest, trying to raise the heavy lid. In her left hand she held a piece of parchment, with large red seals pendent from it. I knew it to be the old man's will which she was hiding, thus defrauding the just claimants of their rights.

"Her hands trembled, and her whole appearance denoted guilty trepidation. At length, however, the lid was raised, but just as she was about to replace the parchment in the chest, a figure glided silently from a dark corner of the window-seat and confronted her. It was the fair girl, pale, resolute, and extending her hand to claim the will.

"After the first guilty start, which caused her to drop the parchment into the chest, the wicked woman hurriedly tried to close the lid. Her efforts were frustrated, however, by the girl, who leaned with all her force upon it, keeping it back, and still held out her hand as before.

"There followed a pause which seemed to me very long, but which could in reality have only lasted a minute.

"It was broken by the wicked woman, who, hastily casting a glance behind her into the gloom of the darkened chamber, then seized the girl by the arm and dragged her with all her force into the chest. It was but the work of a moment, for the woman was much the more powerful of the two, and the poor victim was too much taken by surprise to make much resistance. I saw one despairing look in her face as her murderess flashed the lantern before it with a hideous gleam of triumph.

"Then the lid was pressed down upon her, and I saw no more, only I felt an unutterable terror, and tried in vain to scream.

"This was not all the vision, however, for before I had mastered my terror the scene was superseded by another.

"This time it was twilight, and the wicked woman and her son were together. The son seemed to be talking eagerly, and grew more and more excited, while the mother grew pale and erect, with a malicious smile upon her lips. Presently she moved toward the chest with a fell purpose in her eyes, unlocked it, and by which hung from her girdle, raised the lid, and disclosed the contents.

"I understood it all now: the son was asking for the girl whom he had loved, and whom on his return home he missed, and the wicked woman, stung at hearing for the first time that he had loved her, was determined to have her revenge.

"He should see the dread contents of the chest the man staggered back horrified; then, doubtless comprehending the case, he would suddenly upon the murderess, and threw his arm around her, and there ensued a struggle terrible to witness.

"Her proud triumphant glance of malice was now succeeded by one of abject fear, and, as his strength began to fail him the mastery of destiny.

"His iron frame heaved for a moment with the violence of his efforts, the next he had forced her down into the chest upon the mouldering body of her victim. I saw her eyes light up with the terror of death for one second, and then her remains were stifled forever beneath the massive lid.

"The horror of this scene was too much for me; I found voice to scream at last, and I suppose it was my cry which alarmed you all."

When Catherine ceased speaking there was a profound silence for a minute, which Mr. Fanshawe was the first to break as he gave utterance a peculiar intonation in his voice, "It is very strange, very unaccountable," re-echoing all our thoughts.

Now it happened that Mr. Fleet, our family lawyer, was among our guests that Christmas-time, and since the discovery of the coffin and bones had taken a great interest in the whole affair. He now questioned and cross-questioned Catherine, and seemed quite satisfied with the result.

"This would have made a fine case," said he, "if only it had been a question of the right of succession, for any lawyer to make out; but unfortunately the events are too long past to have any effect upon the present. Now, Mr. Fleet was wrong, though we none of us knew it at the time."

We were all launched forth into conjectures and opinions, during which Catherine lay still and weary upon the sofa. I saw this, and thought it quite time to put an end to my day's adventures by suggesting a retirement for the night, and we were soon all dispersed to dream of the mysterious coffin and discovery.

I think we were none of us sorry when morning dawned without any further tragedy (by us, I mean the female part of the establishment).

When I came down to breakfast I found Mr. Fleet very active on the subject of the night before.

"A surgeon ought to be immediately sent for to pronounce an opinion on the contents of the chest," he said; and Dr. Driscoll presently came, and after examining the bones unanimously declared that they were, as we thought, those of two females, who might have been from one to two hundred years old.

Mr. Fleet next offered to decipher the will, for such he imagined the parchment to be, and he and Mr. Fanshawe were closeted together for some time.

When they at last appeared again, they looked much interested and excited, and had a piece of news to inform me of the result of their examination.

They told me that the document had proved to be a will, but that there was a circumstance connected with it which greatly added to the mystery of the whole business. This was the mention of the name of L'Estrange. I was, of course, as much surprised as they, and heard the will read with great interest.

I can not transcribe the technical terms in which it was expressed. Mr. Fleet read me the translation he had made, for the original was in old English; but it was to this effect:

It purported to be the will of Reginald, Viscount St. Aubyn, in which he bequeathed all his inheritance to his lawful wife, Francis St. Aubyn —commonly known by the name of Francis L'Estrange—and to his heirs forever. It was signed Reginald, Viscount St. Aubyn, and the witnesses were John Murray and Phœbe Brett, who in the old copy had each affixed their mark.

Mr. Fleet affirmed that it was a perfectly legal document, but this was not all it contained.

There was a postscript which our lawyer translated as follows:

"In order to avoid all disputes and doubts which might otherwise arise, I, Reginald, declare that my lawful wife was Editha, youngest daughter of Francis L'Estrange, Baronet, and that the register of our marriage may be seen in the church of St. Andrew, Haslet. By this marriage we had two children, a son Francis, and a daughter Catherine, commonly called Francis and Catherine L'Estrange. And I hereby declare that Agatha Thornbaugh was not legally married to me as she imagined, but that my wife being alive at the time; neither do I leave to her son by her first husband, Ralph Thornbaugh, any part or share in my inheritance."

Both the will and the writing at the foot of it were dated the 14th of May, 1641.

This communication of our stories caused me for a time to feel quite bewildered and unable to think, but Mr. Fleet was in his element.

"Here is a case worth entering into," said he, and he further went on to state that he had no doubt that Mr. Fleet's ancestors, named in the will were our Catherine's ancestors, the Christian names being similar rendering it more than probable. Catherine was the direct descendant of Francis L'Estrange, the heir mentioned in the will, who was no doubt also the fairhaired boy Editha's son, whose likeness he expected to gain from Craymore church. He reminded me, however, of Catherine's statement that the wicked woman in the vision resembled the effigy on the monument there.

Thither, then, the lawyer required, accompanied by Mr. Fanshawe and myself. It was thought best to keep the sequel of the story from Catherine and the others until it was explained more fully, as Mr. Fleet slightly affirmed it should be. I awaited anxiously the result of their researches, and they exceeded I think even our most sanguine expectations.

Not only had they deciphered the inscription round the monument, but, with permission from the clergyman and the assistance of the sexton they had disinterred the coffin and found it to be filled with earth.

I am aware that this was rather an illegal proceeding, but as Mr. Fleet was only acting in a semi-or-and not professionally, he did not stick at trifles.

The inscription was in Latin, and stated that the tomb was erected to the memory of Editha, wife of Reginald, Viscount St. Aubyn, who was buried beneath, and who died on the 31st day of December, 1640—about twelve months' years before the day on which Catherine had seen the vision.

I could not help thinking it shocking that the villagers had for two centuries been worshiping in the presence of a perpetual lie, but Mr. Fleet thought only for the practical satisfaction of his "case." He applied to Mr. Fanshawe to take the next step, namely, to write to Catherine's aunt and ask a living question to tell her the whole story, and beg her to assist in elucidating matters by giving all the information she could concerning the L'Estrange family.

This was done, and we anxiously awaited the answer. Meantime, all my guests were clamorous to hear the contents of the will, and I had to appease them as best I could by promising that they should know it soon.

In a few days old Miss L'Estrange's answer came. She said her brother, father, and grandfather had all declared that Editha, who had married her great-grandfather, who was a Francis L'Estrange, to have passed most of his life abroad, always having been on the Continent with her son.

What this was, however, she could not say. She affirmed that the L'Estranges had in old times resided in Craymore, and that she believed that her father's family had consisted of herself and her brother, whose only child Catherine was.

As for Catherine's vision, she said that the figures she had beheld in the vision were thought to be those of her ancestors, she was not so much surprised as I should have been, since she had had a presentiment all along that the tragedies she had witnessed were in some way connected with her own family.

I must not forget to say that on ascertaining that the parish church of Haslet was still standing we searched the register, and the missing link of evidence was made clear by the finding of the looked-for entry.

There remains little more to be told. The charge of the old will was committed to Mr. Fleet, and Catherine's story has been carefully laid up among the archives of our family. I say advisedly of our family, for the line of the L'Estranges, alias St. Aubyns, has been united to ours by the marriage of Catherine to my son George, which took place in 1850.

I have but one more incident to relate. I I have done. A short time ago old Miss L'Estrange died, bequeathing all her worldly possessions to Catherine, George's eldest and only old family relics. Catherine was looking over them as George unpacked them, and she presently came to a miniature of a young and beautiful girl with fair hair and blue eyes, and a wistful expression, and with it a necklace of pearls strung in a diamond pattern. On seeing these she became suddenly grave, and handing them to me, said: "They are the same; the young girl and the pearl necklace I told you of."

If you were to visit Craymoor Grange now, you would find no old laundry. The part of the house containing it has been pulled down, and children play where blackens peckett on the ground where it once stood.

The oaken chest has also long since been destroyed.

THE TELL-TALE.

"Who made that noise?" asked a teacher in one of our public schools, coming into the classroom.

A profound silence followed his question. There were thirty boys all looking at him, some three or four of whom had been guilty of a flagrant breach of order; yet every face was alike innocent in expression, and no one replied to his question.

"Boys," he asked, in a calmer tone, "who made that disturbance? Many of you know; and I depend upon the lovers of good order here to make common cause against the breach of it."

But still no one responded to the appeal.

"I know," whispered one to another; "and I'm not going to make a tell-tale of me."

"And so I," replied his companion; "but he will not get it out of me, I can tell him."

And thus the whole business ran through the room. For more than a minute the teacher stood before them awaiting some reply, and then retired to another room, and left them long in the adjoining room. But no sooner was his back turned than the same noise that had disturbed him was renewed, even louder than before.

He of course immediately returned, and again stood before them.

"Let the boys who have violated the good order of the school hold up their hands," he said.

No hand was held up.

"Now let all who are innocent hold up their hands."

Every hand was promptly raised.

For a few moments the teacher looked his scholars in the face, his own countenance expressing pain and mortification. At length he said:

"From a boy I have ever looked upon falsehood as the worst of crimes, indicating a disposition to commit any of the whole catalogue of crimes, if the individual had the courage to do so. I have always been pained to find that I have scholars in my class who are not above this meanest of all vices. It was bad enough to break the rules of the school, but a thousand times worse to tell a falsehood about it—a falsehood, too, that involved upon every innocent, high-minded boy in the room. I see here the sons of men whose standing in the community for virtue and honesty is known and acknowledged by all. These boys, I am sorry to say, are all involved in the guilt of this violation of order, until one of them shall be the crime of a virtual denial of it; for how can I discriminate when all act alike? Who, I ask the guilty to hold up their hands and confess it like men; but when I call upon the innocent to attest their innocence, and declare themselves to be innocent. I will now by you once more. Let the guilty hold up their hands."

But no hand was lifted.

"Now let the innocent lift their hands."

Every hand was again raised.

"I would not be the boy who has thus lifted his hand falsely to-day, and in attestation of a falsehood for all the wealth this world could bestow," the teacher said, as he looked at his class for a moment in silence, and then turned away and again left the room. Although he remained out for full ten minutes he was not again disturbed.

"Now you see, James Harker," said a boy in a low tone, looking with a half indignant expression of countenance at the boy who sat next to him.

"I don't care if I was. He couldn't find it out," was the answer promptly.

"But I don't think it right that others should be blamed for what you have done."

"You are a fine one to turn tell-tale, are you?" said Harker, with a sneer.

"No, not a mere tell-tale; but still I am not certain that it would be better for our teacher know that you were one of the offenders, unless you have the true spirit to do so yourself."

"Oh, that's all tell-tale! tell-tale! Tom Jones is going to turn tell-tale!" said James Harker, so loud as to be heard all around, pointing at the same time at Jones, while his face was expressive of the most sovereign contempt.

"Are you going to tell of me too?" asked a boy sitting near, with a threatening look.

"I did not see you making a noise."

"You had better not, I can tell you."

"I did not see you," repeated Jones, "and I was Thomas Jones's reply; "but I can tell you what I think. If you did make the noise, and then so rudely denied it as you did, I think that every honest-minded boy here should feel it his duty to expose you."

"Let any one dare to do it," was the reply to this.

After school several of the boys got around Thomas Jones, and attempted to convince him that to turn informer would be the most despicable thing in the world.

"I don't think it half so bad as to be a violator of the rules of the school and a liar into the bargain," replied Thomas Jones's rejoinder.

"There is not a meaner creature in the world than a tell-tale," said James Harker, with his expressive sneer.

"Which is worse, James—he who tells what is true of another, or he who falsely accuses him?"

"I will leave you to draw all such nice distinctions," replied Harker, tossing his head contemptuously.

"It is not hard for me to draw them, James, nor, I presume, for any boy here. But it is useless for us to talk about this matter. I will tell you what I will do, and if I say so, you may be sure that I will. If you will go up to-morrow and tell our teacher that you did the wrong he complained of I will keep silent; but if you will not my mind is made up on it. I am one and I will not rest under the imputation of having told a falsehood when I am innocent, nor do I think that I am right in suffering the whole class to rest under a false accusation while it is in my power to relieve them."

"I always thought you were a mean, low creature," replied Harker, "and now I know it."

"Well you know for yourself the meanness boy in the school if he does it," said another of the wrongdoers.

"He had better not tell on me," broke in a third.

"Look here, Thomas, come with me," another had said, taking Thomas Jones by the arm, and drawing him aside, when the two walked off together.

"I wouldn't say any thing about it if I were you," continued the last; "you will only get the ill-will of those boys, and perhaps of the whole class. You will be called a mean informer if you speak."

"There is a great difference, Jack," was Thomas's reply, "as my father has often told me, between a mere informer or tell-tale, as it is called by others, and one who makes known the wrong actions of another for the benefit of the whole. Now if, for the mere delight of seeing others punished, I were to be constantly running to the teacher with complaints against my fellow-students, then I would be that justly-despised individual—a tell-tale. But I have no such motives in view. James Harker has not only violated the rules of the class, thus throwing it into disorder, and hindering its progress, but by his bad conduct, and wicked denial of it, involved the whole class, you and I among the rest, in the imputation of being violators of good order, and utterers of falsehood into the bargain. Now, for one, I have been taught to love truth from my earliest recollection, and I can not and will not rest under a charge of falsehood."

"Then why not go to the teacher and declare your innocence?"

"What good would that do? Has not every boy in the class made such a declaration—the innocent with the guilty? I could not ask the teacher to believe me."

"But, indeed, I would not tell of it, Thomas," urged his friend.

"I have said that you would gain the ill-will of the whole class by it."

"That is not a reason sufficient to induce me to refrain from doing a right action."

Thus the boys kept conversed as they walked along, and at length parted from each other. As soon as Thomas Jones entered his own house, he sought out his father, to whom he always went in difficulties, and by whose judgment he was always guided. To him he submitted his case, and asked to be advised.

"You have made up your mind, you say," remarked his father, after he had heard all his boy had to relate. "If, on hearing your story, to-morrow, that James Harker was one of the offenders—"

"That is, if you approve of my doing so."

"From the statement that you have given, Thomas, I do certainly approve of it. But you will also have to remember that in your motives misinterpreted by many of your fellow-students."

"I know that, father. But you have often told me, that in every important action I should be governed by right motives, and not by the opinions of others.

"And you are conscious of having right motives in what you now propose to do?"

"I am."

"You do not feel glad at the idea of having James Harker punished for his conduct?"

"Indeed, I do not. It is that idea that causes me to hesitate more than any thing else."

"What, then, is your motive?"

"One motive is, to relieve myself from the charge of disorderly conduct, and from an imputation of falsehood; and another motive is, to relieve from similar censure all in the class who are innocent. It seems to me, in a case like this, that it is every boy's duty to point out the guilty who thus take away from the good character of the whole. I shall what is good be injured under the false idea that it is mean to expose what is evil?"

"You certainly reason correctly, my boy," replied Mr. Jones, "and I shall fully approve the act you contemplate. Do not be deterred from doing it under the idea that you will be regarded as an informer. There are many cases where it is right to become an informer, and wrong to withhold information; and this, I am fully persuaded, is an instance where the former rule is clearly applicable. But, in making your communication, as it is one in which your character and standing with the school is involved, do so in writing under your own name, with reasons. It is the duty of every one, after resolving to act right in a matter where he may be misjudged, to give his reasons, that he may not be injured by false judgment."

On the next morning, Thomas Jones presented

THE TELL-TALE—"HE WENT UP, WITH A FIRM STEP, TO THE TEACHER'S STAND, AND HANDED HIM A NOTE."

until nearly the close of the school, to see if James Harker would be honest and magnanimous enough to confess his fault; but as he did not do so, he went up, with a firm step, to the teacher's stand, handed him a note, and then retired to his seat. The teacher read the note, and after reflecting for a few minutes, arose and called the school to order.

"I hold a note in my hand," he said, after silence and attention were obtained, "the reading of which has afforded me no ordinary gratification. It indicates a tone of feeling and principle highly honorable to the writer. As requested by him, I will now read it to the class:

"'SIR,—Yesterday there was a violation of order in the school, the perpetrators of which you endeavored to find out, but in vain. In your manner of ascertaining the guilty the innocent became involved in the imputation of disorder, and, what is a thousand times worse, of falsehood. I saw one boy in the act of making the noise you complained of, and have tried, in vain, to convince him that he ought to confess his fault, and thus relieve his fellow-students from the charge under which they now rest. But he will not do so, and calls me a "tell-tale" and other hard names, because I tell him if he will not do so I shall be compelled to become an informer. Now, in doing so, I wish it to be clearly understood that I am not prompted by a desire to see him punished, but am only impelled from a sense of duty to myself and the whole class to do this act. The boy's name is James Harker. Please read this to the class. THOMAS JONES.'

"'James Harker will come forward," the teacher said as he laid aside the note.

The boy he called came forward with a guilty, downcast face.

"Did you make the noise I complained of yesterday?"

"Yes, Sir."

"Why did you do it?"

"Bill Grimes, Henry Peters, and Tom Price were as bad as I. They made a noise too."

"William Grimes, Henry Peters, and Thomas Price, will all come forward."

The three boys named came forward; and when questioned, did not deny the charge.

"You now see," remarked the teacher, "the four boys who involved in disgrace the whole class. You also see the difference between a high-minded boy, impelled by a sense of duty to become an informer, and what is meant by a mere tell-tale. Thomas Jones is one, James Harker the other. So soon as the guilt of the latter is discovered he immediately informs on all who are guilty, in the hope of seeing them likewise punished."

"And now," continued the teacher, "let every boy who blames Thomas Jones for what he has done hold up his hand."

Not a hand was raised.

"Now all who approve of his conduct hold up their hands."

Every hand was lifted, and every countenance expressed gratification.

The class was then dismissed; and the offenders left with the teacher, to be dealt with as he might see to be the most for their good and the welfare of the school.

In this little story, the principal incidents of which are true, I have endeavored to give my young readers some idea of the difference between acting from a mere selfish impulse, and from a clear conviction of right. It is from the motive from which a thing is done that determines the quality or character of an action. Thus, an action may be good or bad, so far as the individual is concerned, according to the motive which influences him. Thomas Jones did right in informing upon James Harker, because his end was a good one; but James Harker was acted upon by a wrong motive, the desire to see his companions in evil punished with himself, when he became an informer; and therefore his act as far as he was concerned was an evil one. Learn, then, to discriminate between motives, and be well assured of their purity before you act from them. And also resolve, when you are convinced that it is right for you to do a thing, and that it is your duty to do it, that you will do that thing regardless of what may be thought or said of you. Then when you grow up to be men will you be truly useful in society; for to men of like character is society indebted for all the great moral reformations that have ever taken place in the world.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE COLUMBUS MONUMENT, GENOA.

GENOA, ITALY.

WHEN and by whom was America discovered? A question in geography, which it was my turn sometimes to answer as I stood in class on a line of the well-worn floor in the ever-to-be-remembered old red-brick school-house located among the hills of northern Massachusetts. My parrot answer, "in 1492, by CHRISTOPHER COLUMBUS, a native of Genoa," was as promptly as it was thoughtlessly given. That was many years lang syne; but the scene rushed vividly on my mind when, on entering Genoa by the Porta Lanterna, the first thing that I saw was this inscription on a building in front of the gate or porta, "CRISTOFORO COLOMBO scopre America." I forgot for the moment that I was entering Genoa, "la superba," and remembered only the old red-brick school-house and my childhood's pleasures there. Another object soon recalled my thoughts, for in the large square near the gate was a handsome monument of white marble, which had been erected to the memory of the brave discoverer, and of which the accompanying sketch will give you a better idea than any description of mine.

The Indian girl at the feet of COLUMBUS needs to be labeled, "this is supposed to be an Indian girl;" or, as Artemus said of his show, "DANIEL may be known from the rest of the lions by the green cotton umbrella under his arm." So this may be known for an Indian girl by the feathers on her head; for the bandeau of perpendicular feathers is all there is to mark an American aboriginal. Any modern original belle might well have posed for the statue. But as you have the sketch you can do your own criticising, whether for praise or censure. One item more of COLOMBO before we talk of Genoa.

A few hours before reaching Genoa we were shown a dingy old house located in a dirty little town yclept Cogoleto, or Congoletto, on which was an inscription that "here CRISTOFORO COLOMBO was born." Now if he was "raised" there I do not wonder that he sought another world, if only to escape from the wretched poverty and misery which were the prevailing characteristics of Congoletto.

The appellation of "la superba" to Genoa is apropos now to its situation rather than to the city itself, for its streets are very narrow, mere alley-ways most of them, two or three only having any pretension to the width of Broadway at Broadway's narrowest, and its palaces being all decayed and gloomy are superb only in large entrance gates, grand stairways, and extent of building. The guide-books will enlighten you as to their location, owners, founders, architects, and pictures, all of which interest me too little to waste ink and paper upon them; but the situation of Genoa I am ready to say that it is indeed superb.

It is sheltered and protected by the hills of Carignano on the east, St. Benigno on the west, and these are joined by an intervening Apennine chain on the north, which completes the amphitheatre, in the centre of which Genoa is situated. It is exposed only to warm, genial southern breezes, supposed to be conducive to health; but I should much prefer to take my chances for good health in a colder and cleaner place.

A few words only of the churches. The Annunziata is squalid enough exteriorly, but interiorly gorgeous in blue and gold. A Madonna in silver instead of the usual marble representation, lamps said to be of gold, and other expensive paraphernalia tell the story of the Annunziata. Of San LORENZO, or, as it is called now, the Cathedral, the exterior is a patchwork of black and white stripes, with only one tower completed, though the church was commenced hundreds of years ago. The columns are said to have been brought from Jerusalem, which does not by any means help to any idea of beauty, for they are most uncommonly ugly, as is the full relievo in stone of Saint LORENZO roasting on a gridiron, which adorns (?) the façade, being placed over the principal entrance. There is a chapel of St. John too in this Cathedral, where no female is allowed to enter on account of the fascinating power once exercised by Miss Herodias. Personally I did not consider the prohibition as any punishment, as I had no curiosity whatever to see the said chapel.

I found myself, or rather my hat, to be a curiosity to these untraveled Genoese. I don't know which attracted most attention, my "sea side" sun-protecting hat, on the part of the Genoese women, or their muslin mazeros or scarfs on my part; but I believe my hat carried the day, for I repeatedly heard remarks, sotto voce, on "il cappello della Dama" after I had passed by the speakers, who were either women or children. The men preserved due decorum in look and speech. One morning, as in my exploration of the by-ways I passed through a little market, I heard a call in a feminine voice of "guarda il cappello" (look at the hat), followed by such a merry, prolonged cachinnation that I involuntarily joined in it. I think the enjoyment of the thing was equally shared.

The never-failing head-covering of the middle class is a scarf (mazero) of white muslin, fastened either across the front or back part of the head (at the fancy of the wearer), and which, falling over the shoulders, has a very picturesque effect, particularly if the wearer is young and pretty, which was often the case.

The peasants wear a MAZERO of cotton printed in bright gaudy colors. Some of them looked as if they had been made from old-fashioned chintz bed-spreads, borrowed from some such stores as I have seen in New England garrets. One very old woman had on such a very striking affair that I turned to take a second look to see if she were really the motive power of the mass of gay birds and flowers printed on her mantle of white cotton, or if some of them had not volition of their own; but her gaze at my hat outdid mine at her MAZERO, so I called it "quits."

J.

MONUMENT TO CHRISTOPHER COLUMBUS AT GENOA, ITALY.

AN INDIAN CEMETERY.

THE customs of burial adopted by different nations, handed down by tradition often from the remotest times, are very significant. Their meaning, however, is not all apparent: much has been lost in the lapse of ages, and frequently only the naked rite is left us, which we must explain as best we can. It is scarcely possible now for us to determine whether the Egyptians embalmed the bodies of their departed friends to preserve them against destruction in a watery soil or because they believed that by preserving the body they also preserved the soul. Certainly they seem to have held that the soul and body were indissoluble. Those ancient nations that adopted the custom of urn-burial appear to have held exactly the opposite belief—that the destruction of the body was the deliverance of the soul. BACON somewhere alludes to the preference which the Jews had for burial in a soil tint, on account of its peculiar chemical properties, tended toward the rapid dissolution of the body. Aceldama, he says, was chosen as a cemetery for this reason. Then, again, some nations prefer the concealment of the human remains, while others take extraordinary means to secure exposure. Some African tribes, DU CHAILLU tells us, bury in the hollows of trees or under the beds of streams. The Parsees, on the contrary, expose their remains on the top of lofty towers, called, in the poetical language of the East, "Halls of Silence." The bodies are left upon a grating so adjusted that when the birds of the air have accomplished the destruction of the flesh the bones fall through between the bars.

Somewhat similar to this is the custom adopted by the Indians on the Plains, illustrated on page 152. The body of the departed is covered with different wrappings, the first usually a blanket, and the last a mat of small willows strung together by means of buffalo sinews, and is then deposited among the bushes of the cotton-wood or other trees. Usually—almost always—these relics are found along the banks of streams. THEODORE R. DAVIS, in his article, "A Summer on the Plains," published in Harper's Magazine for February, 1868, describes another but very similar mode of burial, an instance of which he observed on the Saline River. He says: "At some little distance from the village site, and on a prominent knoll, we discovered a small scaffold. It was evidently the last resting-place of some Indian; its investigation proved very interesting. The scaffold was constructed of small saplings, the body was placed on the top, where it was carefully covered from the weather with the canvas cover of a captured wagon. The Indians had left with the body what they consider the necessary outfit for a trip to the 'Happy Hunting Ground,' such as arms, ammunition, food, and clothing, a handsome parfleche, a number of carefully-braided lariats, and a small portion of the scalp of some murdered white woman. The white man's clothing seemed to have been highly valued, for several articles of his wearing apparel were found with the body."

However disposed of, the Indians always turn the feet of the dead to the south. Christians, and indeed almost all men, have from times immemorial buried the body with the head toward the west, so that the face looked toward the rising sun. But to the Indian the Great Spirit resides in the south, and thitherward they direct their prayers and the faces of their dead.

EYES AND NO EYES.

An amusing result of the passport system is reported from Paris. A certain mayor had to make out a passport for a certain duchess. The duchess was wealthy; the mayor was in her service. The duchess was something of a coquette; the mayor was anxious to gratify her humor. But the duchess was one-eyed, and the mayor had a difficulty in making out the passport. How was he to describe her eyes? He entered them in the schedule as follows: "Eyes—one, beautiful, soft, full of expression—one of them being absent." This is surely the triumph of courtesy, and worthy of the nation that places itself on its politeness.

ENGLISH VALENTINES.

IN England Valentine's Day has recovered its pristine importance, and it is now en règle to send a remembrance to one's cotérie d'intime, and valentines are made not only elegant souvenirs of friendship or of a deeper feeling, but are also useful gifts. Thus, beneath a beautiful sachet composed of quilted silk or satin we find a lace handkerchief or half-a-dozen fine cambric mouchoirs; or, in another style, we meet a musical valentine, and in the lovely humming-bird's nest lies hidden among the pearly eggs a pretty ring. The character of the most fashionable valentines of the season harmonizes with the Watteau costumes that are so generally worn. Many of the valentines are painted with Watteau designs; these are richly painted on white and colored silk, and framed by a netting of pearls and swan's-down or marabout feathers; others are ornamented with curious bows, knots, and rosettes of ribbon and lace. Among the Watteau valentines we remarked a painting that pleased us much: two figures—"Beauty, the girl, and Love, the boy"—are bound by garlands, and surrounded by wreaths of flowers and leaves.

HAVE CHARITY.

BY FRANCIS S. SMITH.

Tenacious the great, sin-blasted city
Toils a homeless little one—
Not a friend to soothe or pity—
Not a bed to lie upon—
Naked, dirty, bruised and bleeding—
Subject still to kick and curse—
Schooled in sin and sadly needing Aid from Christian tongue and purse.

But the rich and gay pass by her,
Full of vanity and pride,
And a pittance they deny her,
As they pull their skirts aside.
Then a sullen mood comes o'er her—
Reckless she of woe or weal—
Death from hunger is before her—
She must starve or steal.

She does steal, and who can blame her,
Hunger hangs her vitals gnaw—
None understands nor heeds her,
And she violates the law.
Then the hungered child of fashion,
Who refused to give relief,
Cries, with well-affected passion,
"Out upon the little thief!"

Censure full of world-wise schooling,
Cease to mock and deplore—
When the girl transgressed man's ruling
She acted a higher law.
Take her place—feel her temptation—
Starved, shelterless, a sorrier lot
And, though sure of reprobation,
Ye would steal ere ye would die!

THE CITY'S CHILDREN!

TERRIBLE ATROCITIES!!

A Little Girl's Feet Frozen Off!!!

THE FLESH CUT FROM HER BACK!!!

THE CHILDREN'S AID SOCIETY!!!!

Villainy under the Veil of Charity

RELIGIOUS HUMBUGS EXPOSED!

VICE MORE PROFITABLE THAN VIRTUE!

A SAINT'S FACE AND A DEMON'S HEART!!

HOW LONG SHALL SUCH THINGS CONTINUE!!

THE MONSTER PUNISHED!!!

RETRIBUTION!!!

In spite of the exertions made by the "Churches of Aid Society," "Children-Boys' Lodging Rooms," and city missions generally, there is still much to do in the matter of relieving the necessities of the suffering little ones known as "The City's Children"—little, white-faced, neglected, abused sufferers, who live in the squalid, subterranean abodes, dark courts, and filthy alleys poisoned alike with the stench of the streets in the fine and steep at night in covered wagons, coal-boxes, or any other place they may be able to steal into—some of whom have neither parents nor friends, and others who have friends, but would be better off without them.

Nearly will remember the case of the unfortunate orphan girl who, some twelve or fourteen years ago, was taken from the poor-house by a fiend in human shape named Mrs. Decker, who resided at the time on Second Avenue. It will be in the recollection of many how this poor, friendless little creature was tortured by the wretch who had adopted her, till she was kindly put an end to her sufferings. How she was beaten by the little girl was a mass of bruises—starved till her bones seemed bursting through the skin—turned out into the bitter cold almost naked till her feet were blistered with frost, and her constituted frame racked by rheumatism—while all the while the monster who subjected her to such tortures attended church regularly, and was regarded as little less than a saint by those who did not know her.

This, as we have already remarked, occurred a score of years ago, but who can say how many similar cases have happened and are happening every day in this city? The Mrs. Deckers are not all dead yet—society is full of them still, and, alas, too, will be so long as there is a single child in the city who is poor, friendless, and has not other means to rely upon than the charity of the public. Such a thing—as cases such atrocities when they come to light, are a disgrace to the present age of progress. Any body who will follow us through the following narrative of wrong and humanity can acknowledge the full force of all which we have said, and will feel themselves well repaid for their trouble as well.

"Please, sir, may I shovel off your sidewalk?"

"No, boy; I employ a man to do that, and he'll take care of you."

"I only want five cents, sir—just five cents—let me have five cents for half an hour and I'll do say work you've got to do, and you'll see—I don't care what it is."

"No, I tell you! Go home and keep out of the streets! Go and learn to be honest—what pretense can be talking of to allow their children to go running around begging?"

The first speaker was a stout-built lad, who carried upon his shoulders a well-constructed wooden shovel, and the person to whom he addressed himself was the wealthy Mr. Stewart, who overheard the request of his son in one of the streets cutting the Fifth Avenue at right angles.

The boy was about fourteen years of age, and though shabbily dressed, a respectable-looking enough lad—he was something about his countenance which could not fail to impress any one favorably with him.

Mr. Seymour had just returned from a drive out on the Avenue, and was in particular sleepy mood when entering the door of his residence, when the boy, who had been loafing about, as he walked along, saw the windows of the rich mansions in front of which he was passing, and accosted him.

About an hour after the above conversation, Mr. Seymour, again coming out into the street, glanced from the window of his front parlor. Already he regretted that he had acted so rudely answering the boy's petition, and his imagination he again beheld the pleading face. Suddenly an exclamation, half of fear, half of surprise, burst from his lips as he actually met the mournful gaze of the boy's large, sorrowful eyes.

It was but a single glance, and the boy passed away without offering to stop, but soon recovering himself, Mr. Seymour sprang to the hall, then out at the door, and in a loud voice called to the boy's side.

"Here, boy!" he said, hurriedly, as he touched the lad on the shoulder, "you got work to do, and are asking for yet?"

"No, sir," replied the boy, dejectedly; "the people tell me that I am too small to shovel snow, and too big to beg, and so I s'pose I shall have to go home without any thing. No I won't though," he added, suddenly, while a look of savage resolution came upon his pallid features—"no I won't—I have never spun his pallid features—"no I won't—I have never spun no filthy rotten's cent yet, but I'll steal—I'll murder before I go home without any thing!"

"Good gracious, boy!" exclaimed Mr. Seymour, "what are you saying? Upon my life you talk like a perfect young savage. Have I been some change for you?" And he placed in his hand a few cents.

Instantly the look of fierce hatred vanished from the boy's face, and an expression of extreme satisfaction took its place, as, eagerly watching the move which the rich man held out to him, he hastily placed it into a brown "fip," and then, off like a shot, was up the street at his topmost speed.

Mr. Seymour, on seeing after the boy till he saw him enter a baker's shop on the corner, and then he mechanically followed in the same direction.

"So he was hungry," he muttered, as he walked along, "and probably had no connected with some one who is also hungry. Poor fellow! I wish I had given him a few dollars instead of a few cents; but then, he is but a child, and what will come of it." Now him, and he would be, but, by George, something that's not my business to meddle with, and I'll go in for a glass of brandy."

The boy was hungry—he was in the baker's shop, clutching a loaf of bread in his nervous grasp, and devouring it with a ravenously gnawed it as he tore a piece from it and ed cleanly, and as soon as he had done so he

to be frightened at, and I don't see as we've much to complain about. We see no pretty well. We've plenty to eat, and to drink, and to wear, and don't have to work very hard."

"Oh, yes," whispered Dick, significantly, "that's 'cos he's got a new boy on trial. We allers do have a fresh old time whenever a new boy comes; but we have to go back to it afterward. It seems to me almost as if you were my brother, Charley, and I will say this much to you, if I die for it—don't you be bound to him!"

"What are you whispering about there, Richard?" broke in the shrill voice of the king-bee from the entry outside. "I'll teach you to have to curtail your playing hours; you've got too much time for sleeping, you have!"

"I knew he was around!" whispered the little unfortunate. "Now, Dick, I'm for duty." And turning his back to his companion, he refused to say another word.

The boy's warning was not without its effect upon the mind of Richard Lawrence; but, having once resolved upon his course of action, he was not easily to be swerved from it; and he began to think that a night's sleep he determined to carry out his original purpose, let what would happen. He subsequently did so, but he had not been an indentured apprentice forty-eight hours when he bitterly regretted not having taken his little room-mate's advice.

From that moment the dormitories were signed with placed Charles Hollister beneath the entire control of Mr. Jeffrey. For years, the demeanor of the latter toward his superiors underwent no complete change but in the presence of his bed, although prone to witness something of the kind from whatever point of observation he chose to command. Ignorant of the world, and thoroughly artless and honest himself, he never imagined that any one could exercise such perfect hypocrisy. During the whole fortnight while he was in the house, he believed that all boys were treated with great consideration. All the lessons he received, as well as the neighbors he became a full-fledged "bee"—then tasks were imposed, and the ill-starred apprentice saw the completion of what took them from twelve to sixteen hours per day, and they were not performed daily to a standard that harrowing pieces of injustice which were calculated to wound the heart of any one but a person of very low possessing the slightest spirit.

It was in the middle of the second day of young Hollister's apprenticeship, and he was busily employed in the shop of Mr. Jeffrey, under whose tuition he at the shop of Mr. Jeffrey, under whose tuition he and temporarily been placed, when he was his worst, began extend the "bee" system of punishment. Walking from the exercise of his daily treatises. He was bestowed upon each to another of the boys, and the latter was directed to each to another of the boys, and the latter was directed to be passed along some biting insects or creeping things, to be passed along some biting insects or creeping things, remark which he uttered no reply, but still at length he stood behind Dick Manners, who felt something on the hands, but still at length he stood behind Dick Manners, who felt something on the hands, but still at length he stood behind Dick Manners, who felt something on the hands

A JOHNSON CLOTHIER,
LATE MOSES

A. J. RETURNS TO HIS FIRST LOVE.

A Prophetic Picture, drawn by Our Paid Prophet.

GENUINE WALTHAM WATCHES,

IN SOLID GOLD AND SILVER CASES ONLY,

AT EXTREMELY LOW PRICES.

Silver Hunting Watches	$18
Gold Hunting Watches, 18 carat Cases	$80
Gold Hunting Watches, Ladies' Size	$70

Every Watch warranted by special certificate from the American Watch Company. We will send these Watches by Express to any place, with bill to collect on delivery, and give the purchaser the privilege to open the package and examine the Watch before paying, and any Watch that does not give satisfaction may be exchanged or the money will be refunded. Every one is registered to write for our Descriptive Price List, which explains the different kinds with prices of each. Please state that you saw this in Harper's Weekly.

Address in full,

HOWARD & CO., No. 619 Broadway, N.Y.

Waltham Watches.

These watches are by far the best made in this country, and warranted to satisfy the most exacting demand for beauty, finish, and accuracy.

For Sale by all Leading Jewelers.

HITCHCOCK'S

HALF-DIME MUSIC.

Printed on heavy music-paper, 4 pages, colored titles, Music and Words. Mailed for 5 cts. each, or the whole 50 for $1.50.

NOW READY:

No. 1. Captain Jinks. Maclegan.
" 2. We can't you Tell me why, Robin?
" 3. We'd better Bide a Wee.
" 4. Rise Joe.
" 5. Not for Joseph.
" 6. Good-bye, Sweetheart, Good-bye.
" 7. I really don't Think I shall Marry.
" 8. Praise of Tears.
" 9. Clumpetyclog Charlie.
" 10. Skating Rink Polka.
" 11. Genevieve Waltz.
" 12. Come hither, my Boy, my Darling.
" 13. The Deuced Boy's Whistle.
" 14. Little Maggie May.
" 15. Maggie's Secret.
" 16. His Love Shines over All. (Sacred Song.)
" 17. The Old Family Clock.
" 18. Silver Chimes.
" 19. The Rose of Erin.
" 20. Arm-in-Arm. (Polka Mazurka.)
" 21. Nine-and-Ninepence Suit your Fancy.
" 22. Riding down Broadway.
" 23. Walking down at Long Branch.
" 24. Still I'll Love True.
" 25. Ole Bull's Polka.
" 26. Take Back the Heart.
" 27. Sweet Consoling Hero Comes.
" 28. There's a Charm in Spring.
" 29. Up in a Balloon.
" 30. Olympic Schottische.

The above can be had at the music, book, and periodical stores, or by enclosing the price, 5 cts. each, to the publisher. Other choice selections will rapidly follow.

Agents wanted. BENJ. W. HITCHCOCK, Publisher, 98 Spring St., New York (under St. Nicholas Hotel).

IMPROVED ALUMINIUM BRONZE HUNTING-CASED WATCHES.

Prices from $16 to $22.

From the Scientific American:
Page 92 of Vol. II. 1869.

"The color of this metal closely resembles that of 18 carat gold, is more grateful to the eye, and will retain its brilliant," &c., &c.

When desired, these Watches will be sent to any express office, and permission of examination granted upon payment of freight charges.

Descriptive Circulars and metal scut free upon application. An inspection of our goods respectfully solicited.

JULES D. HUGUENIN & CO.,
No. 3 Maiden Lane, Up Stairs, Second Street, New York.

For sale by all respectable dealers.

$20 A DAY

AGENTS—to introduce the BUCKEYE $20 SHUTTLE SEWING MACHINES. Stitch alike on both sides, and is the only Licensed Double Machine in the market sold for less than $40. All others are infringements, and the seller and user are liable to prosecution and imprisonment. Full particulars free. Address

W. A. HENDERSON & CO., Cleveland, Ohio.

W. K. KNAHE & CO.,

Grand, Square, and Upright

PIANOS.

WHOLESALE DEPOT,

650 BROADWAY, N.Y.

J. BAUER & CO.

GORHAM MFG. CO.

Sterling Silver Ware,

AND

Fine Electro-Plated Ware,

of the following trade-marks:

Trade-Mark for Silver. GORHAM MFG CO. Trade-Mark for Plate.

MANUFACTURED BY THE

GORHAM MANUFACTURING CO.,

PROVIDENCE, R.I.

Orders received from the Trade only, but these goods may be obtained from responsible dealers every where.

THE GORHAM WARE may be obtained of ADAMS, CHANDLER, & CO., No. 20 JOHN STREET, New York.

WOODWARD'S NATIONAL ARCHITECT.

A practical work, just published, containing 100 Designs, Plans, and Details of Working Scale of Country, Suburban and Village Houses, with specifications and estimate of cost. Quarto. PRICE Twelve Dollars, postpaid.

WOODWARD'S COUNTRY HOMES. 150 Designs, $1 50, postpaid. Geo. E. Woodward, Architect, 191 Broadway, New York. Send stamp for catalogue of all new books on Architecture.

ELGIN WATCHES.

CAUTION.—The public are respectfully cautioned against purchasing our watches, or watches represenring to be of our make, of parties who offer them to send them "C.O.D." We have no connection with such houses, and do not furnish our goods to any house for that purpose. The excellence and good repute of the real ELGIN WATCHES have caused several Foreign and American Watch Companies to make imitation watches with the name or similar trade marks as ours. Avoid all parties who advertise to send our goods "C.O.D." no matter whom. To get the real ELGIN WATCHES purchase only of dealers in your vicinity or elsewhere whom you know to be honorable.

THE NATIONAL WATCH COMPANY,

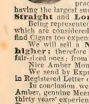
ELGIN, ILLINOIS.

Business Office, Nos. 139 and 141 Lake St., Chicago, Ill.

£150,000,000

Sterling. Unclaimed Money and Estates Registry, commencing 1676. How to search for any name. 25 Grs & Co., 6 Prince of Wales Road, London, England.

ADDRESS TO SMOKERS.



In reply to the many inquiries made daily in regard to Meerschaum Pipes, we wish to state that we recommend, especially for home and office use, the plain Hungarian and Egg Bowls, with Welchsel Stems. They hold the most tobacco, and are the most durable and practical ones, being the coolest to clean. Or the Hamburg Bowls, having the largest surface to show color. For traveling and street smoking, we recommend the London Straight and London Bend.

Being represented extensively throughout the country by our goods, we are desirous to have our Pipes—which are considered equaled by none—still more extensively used by those who relish a good smoke, and for whose convenience. Therefore we have reduced our prices as follows:

We will sell a No. 3 Pipe for $5, and charge $1 additional for every number higher; therefore a No. 4 costs $6, No. 5 $7, and so on. Nos. 7 and 8 are considered full-sized ones; from No. 9 upward large ones. In the price is included a Case and Stem.

New Amber Mouthpieces for Weichsel Stems we are selling from $1 to $3 a piece.

We send by Express to collect on delivery, amount and charges; but suggest that the amount be sent in Registered Letter or Post-Office Money Order in advance, to save container the express-charges.

In conclusion, we wish to state that we warrant all our goods (which we stamp with our name) to be real Amber, genuine Meerschaum, and to color, and will readily give every information in regard to it, based on thirty years' experience in the trade, having received our Diploma in 1859 by the respective commissions in Europe; and we will ever uphold the fair fame we have acquired in the introduction of the MANUFACTURE OF GENUINE MEERSCHAUM GOODS into this country.

We cut Pipes and Cigar-Holders of any shape or design, mount them, do repairing, boiling, and polishing. Also, Amber Work done. And, main of all, do not charge exorbitant prices. For reference, we are in possession of commendations from thousands of our customers, representing all classes of society.

POLLAK & SON, Manufacturers of Genuine Meerschaum Goods.

Stores: 485 Broadway, near Broome, and 27 John St., 2d, middle of the block.

SEND FOR CIRCULAR and PRICE-LIST to LETTER BOX 5846.

Guardian Mutual LIFE INSURANCE CO.,

No. 102 Broadway, New York.

Assets - - $1,500,000.

All Approved Forms of Insurance Issued.

All Policies Non-forfeitable by their Terms.

Liberal Modes for the Payment of Premiums.

ANNUAL DIVIDENDS

The Entire Profits of the Company Divided Equitably among the Insured.

DIRECTORS:

HON. JOHN A. DIX, WM. WILKENS, JOHN J. CRANE, WM. T. HOOKER, WM. M. VERMILYE, CHAS. G. ROCKWOOD, JOHN GEO. DEPEYSTER, MINOT C. MORGAN, THOMAS HIGNEY, BENJ. H. SHERMAN, A. ANSON PARKER, RICHARD H. BOWNE,

HON. JAMES HARPER, JULIUS H. PRATT, WM. W. WRIGHT, CHAS. J. STARR, WILLIAM ALLEN, GEO. W. CUTLER, GEO. T. HOPE, JOHN H. SHERWOOD, WALTON H. PECKHAM, EDWARD H. WRIGHT, WM. COGSWELL, WM. L. COGSWELL, E. V. HAUGHWOUT.

WALTON H. PECKHAM, President.
HENRY V. GAHAGAN, Secretary.

LUCIUS McADAM, Actuary.

W. E. VERMILYE, M.D., Med. Ex.

D. T. MACFARLAN, General Agent.

Agents Wanted.

FOUNTAIN PENS.—8 styles. 12 pens, 30 cts.; one gross, $2; Gold Pens, 16 carats, $1 60. One dip writes 2 pages. Self-inking Stencil, Key, pencil-sharpener, and pen-holder combined, 30 cts.; 12 for $1 80, postpaid. Our agents make $60 per week. Address Home Fountain Pen Co., 413 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, Pa.

FURNITURE.

WARREN WARD & CO.,

Nos. 75 & 77 Spring St., corner of Crosby.

Established 1826. Wholesale and Retail Manufacturers of the latest styles of BEDROOM, PARLOR, DINING, and LIBRARY FURNITURE, MATTRESSES, SPRING BEDS, &c., &c. Suitable for City and Country residences.

ALL GOODS WARRANTED AS REPRESENTED.

DR. JNO. V. BURTON'S TOBACCO ANTIDOTE.

Wabrenter, Ohio, Sept. 1, 1868.

DR. JNO. V. BURTON—Sir: Your Tobacco Antidote has given entire satisfaction to all who have used it. I have been using tobacco for 30 years, and have used many remedies to break off the habit, but your Antidote is the only one that has ever done me any good. I have not used tobacco since I commenced taking your Antidote, and have no desire for it. Yours truly, JOHN A. WARREN.

DR. JNO. V. BURTON—Dear Sir: I have been using your Antidote for the last two months, and have not used tobacco since I commenced taking it. I have been using tobacco for 20 years, and have used many remedies to break off the habit, but your Antidote is the only one that has ever done me any good. I have not used tobacco since I commenced taking your Antidote, and have no desire for it. Yours truly, JOHN A. WARREN.

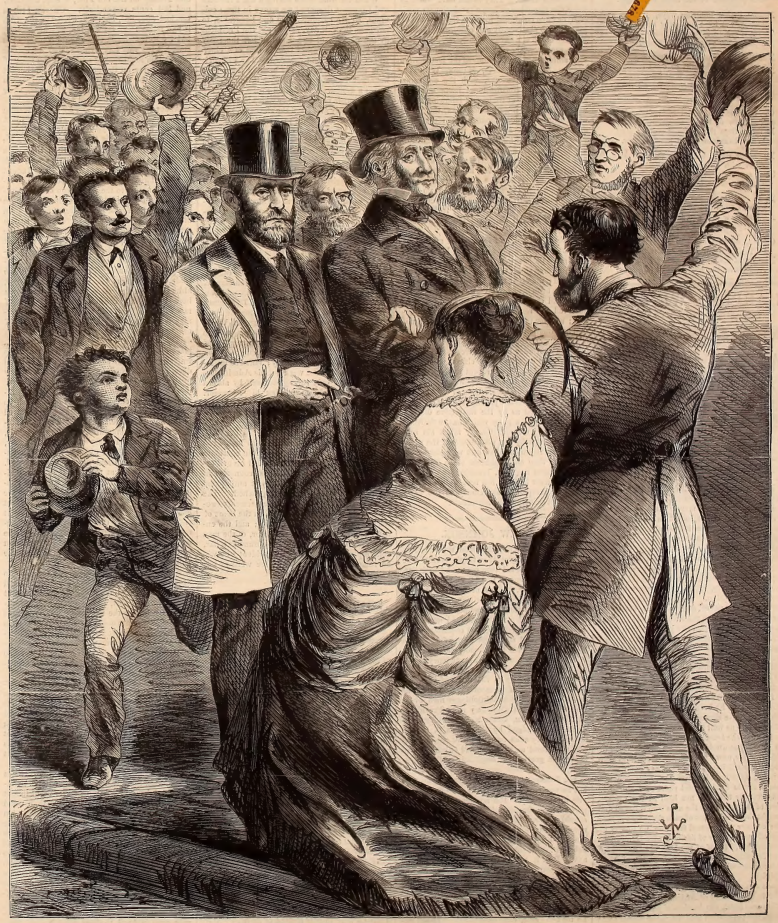
Dr

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

A JOURNAL OF CIVILIZATION.

VOL. XIII.—No. 637.] NEW YORK, SATURDAY, MARCH 13, 1869. [SINGLE COPIES, TEN CENTS. $4 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE.

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the Year 1869, by Harper & Brothers, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court of the United States, for the Southern District of New York.



HURRAH FOR GRANT!—[DRAWN BY W. S. L. JEWETT.]

THE FIRST OF ALL THE LAND.

I.

Up to the outraged seats of power
He comes, the first of all the land,
Unmoved as in the battle-hour,
A people's favor in his hand.

To whom but unto him belong
Welcomes to the Deliverer's place?
It was his sword annulled the wrong,
And re-ennobled half a race.

His sword was in his greatest hour
To anger States the wand of peace,
And, loyal to his silent power,
The echoes of rebellion cease.

And Fame to land and age afar
Shall glorify him doubly given
Unbaffled soldier of the war,
Untroubled ruler in the state.

II.

Oh, land, to high occasion true!
The instinct of thy people brought
Their trust to him whose words were few,
But pregnant of the fields he fought.

Natures, in her unerring ways,
Fulfills the lean or larger need;
The soil where revolution sways
Bears some of an heroic breed.

Nor lightly may the hand forget
The men of thought or deed sublime,
Whose grand, decisive lives have set
Her luminous landmarks for all time.

III.

Oh, land, self-ruled and self-redeemed,
The Bow of Peace, ascendant now,
Is fairer than the Promise seemed
When Freedom was a perilous vow.

For other lands, beholding thee,
Alert with purer vigor, rise,
Shall scorn the ancient heresy
That Truth or Freedom ever die.

Discovered States the bond renew,
Purged from the old offense and shame,
And, to their last allegiance true,
Stand phalanxed in sweet Freedom's name.

Oh, day of all the land's desire!
Of night-long promise and surmise!
Night and eclipse with thee expire,
And dawn the happy years of peace!

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

SATURDAY, MARCH 13, 1869.

PRESIDENT GRANT.

AFTER the lamentable interregnum of Mr. JOHNSON, which we elsewhere consider, General GRANT succeeds to the Presidency. He is elected by the same public, but a hundred-fold stronger, that elected Mr. LINCOLN, and which, by a two-thirds majority in Congress, has steadily baffled the designs of the Executive since Mr. LINCOLN's death. Heavily taxed, the country is yet prosperous and rich in industry and energy and hope, and feels that with the retirement of Mr. JOHNSON a horrible incubus is lifted, and that the course before it is so far cleared.

Eight years ago the Republican party came into power. Its opponents, under the name of the Democracy, were merely the vast and unscrupulous political organization of the aristocracy. The party was led by the great slavelords and their lieutenants. Its policy was a defense and maintenance of slavery. It was strictly a Southern party, with Northern adherents and allies; but no man who was not acceptable to the Southern mastery could rise to the highest posts, or hope to gratify even a moderate ambition. A more shameful subservience was never demanded or honorable men than that which the slave lords of the Democracy required upon the party's part to carry. Eight years ago there had been a protest upon the part of some of the party, and there were two tickets nominated. But the political philosophy of the protesting candidate, as well as his practical wisdom, humanity, and patriotism, were all expressed in his famous phrase, "I don't care whether slavery is voted up or down." Had he been successful, he would undoubtedly have served the purpose of those who elected him as well as Mr. BUCHANAN did.

If, then, the Democratic party had succeeded in 1860, what would have been the situation of this country now? Does any thoughtful man recall its condition under BUCHANAN and PIERCE without shame and indignation? There was not a single fundamental right of freedom in this country that was not held by the permission of slavery. For the man who believed and taught the equal rights of men there was in half the country no personal freedom, no liberty of speech, no security of life. Under Democratic ascendency, in half of the United States which vociferously sneered at despotisms, for an American citizen who held and expressed the opinions of Christian civilization every where there was no more protection than for the traveller in the interior of Africa. Meanwhile taxation was light, the burden of government was easy, the population was spare, the country was large, industry was active, and prosperity was great. War was a tradition. The word "union" was a spell by which the basest politicians conjured. To be a "Union saver" was to be a man willing to save the Union by the sacrifice of every thing that the Union was designed to secure. "The Union," interpreted by the Democracy, meant merely the supremacy of slavery.

But the real masters of the Democratic party, who lustily shouted "Union," were dismissive. They were willing to have Union so long as they could control it. They knew, what none of their Northern lieutenants perceived, that their prolonged dominance was impossible; and when they saw that the Fugitive Slave law, the repeal of the Missouri Compromise, the assault upon Kansas, and the Dred Scott decision, which were the last great aggressive movements, had not only awakened the conscience of the country, but that its self-interest felt the blighting hand of slavery, they foresaw the end and broke up the Charleston convention. But if Mr. DOUGLAS had been elected they would have gained four years in which to perfect their plan to the least detail. They would have aimed to force the Republicans into a revolutionary position, or have combined to make the demand of secession so peremptory and conclusive that the country could not have seriously struggled.

In the situation of this country nine years ago, amidst the machinations of the Democratic leaders, DOUGLAS, DAVIS, MASON, WIGFALL, BENJAMIN, and the rest, with the enormous moral lethargy, constitutional ignorance, and universal timidity of trade, and following Presidents like PIERCE and BUCHANAN, the figure of ABRAHAM LINCOLN seems no less remarkable and Providential, and much more contrasted with those around him, than that of WASHINGTON in the earlier day. Had he been defeated, it is hard to believe that this Government would to-day exist; and if it did, it could only have been with the dominance of slavery more supreme than ever. There was, indeed, no hope for the progressive civilization of this country, and none for the liberal movement of the world where, but in the defeat of the Democratic party.

In the eight years of Republican supremacy the Union has been saved, but not without danger to its great purpose; slavery has been abolished; the equal civil rights of all citizens have been established, the ungodly that ruled this Government has been overthrown; the admiration, prospect, and confidence of the world have been deserved and rendered as they never were before; and for the first time since the origin of the nation an American citizen, while fully conscious of the dangers that still threaten us, may feel that the necessary idea of a free popular government, the equality of all men before the law, is a fundamental law. The recent attempt of the Democratic party to recover power was defeated by votes even frank avowals of hostility both to the Democratic principle and to common honesty, as well as by the instinctive distrust of the country of a party which has so fearfully betrayed it. General GRANT comes to his seat with the sympathy and confidence of the great mass of his fellow-citizens, and with less actual opposition than any Executive since WASHINGTON; and the same sagacity, tenacity, and honesty that his career hitherto has revealed will give a long and prosperous supremacy to the party whose best principles he represents.

ANDREW JOHNSON.

ANDREW JOHNSON retires from the Presidency without the regret of his party, and he does not fear removal from office and with certainly as little general respect as attended the retirement of Mr. PIERCE or Mr. BUCHANAN. They were all, indeed, politicians of the same school, and that the worst school in American politics—a school which demanded moral and intellectual sophistication, and required its followers to defend the worst form of despotism as harmonious with the Democratic principle. It is a school whose political ascendency in this country for more than a generation has well brought the country to the verge of ruin, but made the name of Democracy odious in the world as honorable and intelligible men every where. It gave the country such Presidents as POLK, PIERCE, BUCHANAN, and ANDREW JOHNSON. Judged by the tenets of such a school, and by such representatives, what else was so natural as the universal official foreign sneer that greeted the beginning of the rebellion?

Mr. JOHNSON was elected by the Republicans, but he was never in sympathy with the principles of the party. His nomination was a departure from the rule which Republican voters should never forget, to trust in emergencies none but those who are beyond doubt. Had the war been a question of saving the Union only, Mr. JOHNSON was as good a candidate as any. But it was a question of saving the Union upon Republican principles, and he was therefore as bad a candidate as could have been selected. The melancholy spectacle of his inauguration was full of foreboding. The black shadows of murderous conspiracy amidst which he took his seat, only deepened the gloom occasioned by his verbose threats of rigor, and the conviction of his dullness and narrowness grew with every speech he made.

In the first development of his policy he claimed to follow the precedent of Mr. LINCOLN. But Mr. LINCOLN had no Procustean policy; and it was possible for Mr. JOHNSON neither to comprehend the character nor to assume what is granted to so few men, the exquisite good sense and sagacity of his predecessor. Among the most melancholy displays of this melancholy Administration was the last two letters-to Senators DIXON and DOOLITTLE that to blame Mr. JOHNSON was to blame Mr. LINCOLN. Whatever that statement was repeated in profound sense of the hopelessness of debate must have fallen upon the Senate. It is not easy to imagine two men more radically and absolutely different in character, temperament, wisdom, and political principle; and the man who could gravely defend Mr. JOHNSON's veto of the Civil Rights Bill, for instance, because Mr. LINCOLN wanted to recognize certain government in Arkansas, might amuse and exasperate, but he could not persuade nor win respect.

When the difference between the President and Congress deepened we strove in these columns, so far as practicable and honorable, to postpone the evil day, and to put the President in the position of one who had left the party that elected him rather than in that of a chief whom the party had deserted. The Philadelphia movement failed because Republicans were not shrewd men connected with it, and because it was a deliberate invitation to the conscience and patriotism of the country which had invited filth and disease and death to the slaves, to trust every thing in the future to ANDREW JOHNSON, the rebel leaders and the Democratic party. The New Orleans massacre was simply a vivid illustration of the inevitable result of the Philadelphia policy of "peace and fraternity." Then the desperate struggle between the Executive and the Legislature was pushed, and was, then, unquestionably, except for the perfectly steady attitude of the loyal country at the elections American JOHNSON would have shown himself as daring as he was dogged. Could he have had his way all that was really gained by the war would have been as far as possible surrendered. Had he had leisure and adequate time the Freedmen, and the World admits that could they have been kept from the suffrage the exrebel States would have been Democratic. With those States combined under so-called ascendency allied with the kind of Democracy that was revealed in the World during the Presidential campaign, what system was it. WADE HAMPTON a typical American citizen, and in General LEE a grand old soldier, the work of ANDREW JOHNSON would have been complete.

His failure, and his entire failure, is undeniably that, in the last weeks of his Administration, he could only re-ge himself by absurd attempts were made to explain his successor. He nominated to the Senate for consul to Havana a soldier who was conspicuously the enemy of General GRANT, and for minister to Chili, General SICKLES, whose character and relation to Mr. JOHNSON's Administration has had, however, the good result of proving the character of the people. At every mention of his evil career it has been evident that the country condemned him; and undoubtedly it anticipated his removal when he was impeached. The verdict against him, indeed, of the seventy-two thirds vote, but it was recorded in the heart of the people as it will be in history; and the enthusiastic election, as his successor, of the man whom he only succeeded to brand as a liar, is a contemptuously dismissed a President who will be remembered for not one wise word or one truly honorable action.

TRADE—THE PRESENT SITUATION.

THE period when the spring trade is about to assume its highest activity is one of great interest, as it involves always an examination as well of the preceding years' trade and industry as of the present and future things. Importers of all descriptions of goods have now their stocks opened and ready for sale at the sea-board, in excess somewhat at this part of the quarter of last year. Purchasers from all parts of the Union have reached and are moving toward the Atlantic cities; the questions being generally considered are, How shall we borrow and for? What quantity will consumption require?

The change of most importance which the results of last year's industry has produced is the improved condition of the whole Southern country. The South has less food to buy, and is receiving more for its cotton than for many years past.

The Macon Telegraph estimates the crop now being marketed at 2,500,000 bales, and as being worth $150 a bale, amounting in the aggregate to $250,000,000, or as much, it says, as the crop of 1859–60, "the largest crop ever raised." The crop of 1859–60 "approximated to 5,000,000 bales, realizing, at $60 a bale, $250,000,000."

There is an important error in this estimate of the value of the present year's crop as compared with that of 1859–60. The proceeds in 1859–60 were in gold instead of currency. But, allowing for this difference, it will appear that an enormous sum will be divided among cotton-planters without the disquiet and delay of being obliged to use it largely for food. The universal production of corn and wheat in the Southern States is due to the lessons taught by the war, and will be of immense benefit to that region for every and to the whole Union.

It will be seen, therefore, that the Southern States, which last year were in no condition to buy from us extensively—their cotton produced not much more than half of what the year before are now in a situation to supply themselves with foreign and domestic manufactures. Much cotton will be exported to foreign ports directly from Southern ports, and, as a consequence of it, foreign goods will be imported direct by the South; but a much larger trade will be enjoyed by the North with the South than has ever taken place in any year since the war. Money there is said to be in more general circulation than it has lately been, and a feeling of strength has succeeded to that of depression.

In our last issue we stated the price of middling cotton—of Florida, Mobile, New Orleans, and Texas—on the 8th Feb., at 30¢, 30¼, 30½, and 30¾ cents respectively. On the 11th it reached 30¼, 30½, 30¾, and 31. On the 18th it had fallen to 29 for Florida, 29½ for Mobile, 29¾ for New Orleans, and 29¼ for Texas. We stated, what was very evident, that a gigantic speculation had been set on foot at the close of 1868 to carry up the price, which it thought could not be maintained. The speculation reached its culmination on the 11th inst., since which the price has declined and fluctuated.

About this time last year, the combination of circumstances, cotton was depressed to 15 cents for middling upland, greatly to the injury of the cotton planter. This year, the planters being under lighter advances than they were then, have sent forward their crops with such moderation as to prevent any sacrifice. Indeed this speculation in the article of speculation has insured fortunately to the advantage of the planters, although they did not share in the advance that year, which took place after the crop had been driven to sell. Last year there was a rise in cotton goods, corresponding in part with the advance in middling upland, which advance at the close of the cotton year, at the end of August, had reached about 30 cents. This advance communicated considerable activity to trade. At present the situation is reversed, although cotton goods did not advance, either here or abroad, to conform fully to the price of raw cotton. The price of shirtings and sheetings is held on middling cotton at about 27 cents per pound, instead of 28½ to 29 cents. A decline of half a cent per yard on prints took place on the 9th of February. The market is watched with great eagerness in all descriptions of goods, and there is a tendency to be sparing in the purchase of cotton fabrics.

The trade will be also throughout the year received a heavy check by means of the lock-up on the part of the Erie operators which occurred on the 11th. Gold sold to 132¾. The great staples, all our manufactures, all imported goods, stocks, and indeed every species of property, sympathized with the distress which this unscrupulous and wicked speculation occasioned. We recommended at the time that the repetition of such an iniquity should be made punishable by penal laws, and we are happy to see that Congress has passed an act to prevent loans by National banks on legal tenders. It is not improbable, therefore, that the country may enjoy protection from a repetition that large and sudden displacement of an important amount of what is relied upon to redeem the issues of National banks.

The damage in this respect was the more to be deplored inasmuch as English operators had previously secured their supplies of cotton at prices below its cost, and by means of the lock-up, which struck the trade when the crop was being moved, were enabled to obtain our cereals at a rate below what is remunerative, notwithstanding the drop in wages in England. A blockfollowing a bad one in 1867—were such as to require larger supplies from the world's granaries than had been necessary at any period.

But, notwithstanding the serious damage inflicted on every interest by the "lock-up," the fact that we have a crop of cotton of such great value, and that we have a surplus of grain and food to supply to other countries, and that both will be required in unusual quantities, makes it very certain that we have a sound and solid basis for a healthy trade during all of the present year.

We have already shown in previous articles that foreign manufacturing states must maintain the labor of their mills at its usual height without taking more of our cotton than usual—we, in great part, to the necessary diversion of labor in India from cotton planting to the raising of grain to prevent a famine; and hence it is that although the prices of cotton here was carried up too high by speculation, yet a large demand must necessarily exist for what we have to sell at fair prices. We stand in a position no less favorable with regard to food; and it will be impossible for those countries which suffered severely from the six months' drought, which commenced in England and parts of Europe early in April, to delay much longer filling up the large gap in their supplies. The Albany

Evening Journal gives the quantity of wheat in store at Chicago, Milwaukee, and New York at 87,4 bushels less than last year, when wheat was 80 cents to $1 per bushel higher than at present. The stock of flour, it claims, is at no market except Chicago as heavy this year as last.

MR. H. KAINS JACKSON, in an article in the London Times, states that "whatever rates are current in London are to be accepted, they being as a rule the highest in the world." Whether or not we shall be obliged to accept these rates, will depend wholly on what has been so successful with cotton, the information which our farmers show in pressing their productions into market. The rates published in England amount to no more than an offer of price. The offer is based on a comprehensive view of what she can command from the granaries of the world; but now she will find that, as the manias of our competitors in supplying her with food are seriously crippled, it will be necessary to adjust the price to the stats of things known to exist. Firmness on the part of our substantial farming interest will unquestionably secure a fair price for all they have to sell. Fewer wheat vessels are bound to England from the world at large than usual, and her supply is unquestionably lower than at any period of 1867. The rates which come over the cable show that the lowest possible with the combined crop and imports permit. A late San Francisco paper mentions that wheat was taken in that market for England at prices which, although very high, would certainly produce a loss in England at the current English quotations. The apparent enigma is unraveled when it is considered that the English at this time, owing to the terrible effects of the drought, have an interest the deepest that can sway men to obtain food at the lowest price possible, and that New York is the market upon which the greatest reliance is placed for ultimately obtaining the requisite quantity. No device will be omitted which tends to break down the New York market. Our farmers who are able to hold may be sure that it is their policy to withhold their grain from sacrifice, as the effects of the drought in England will inevitably extend its influence over the countries which suffered from it to the period of the harvest of 1870. Such has been the preceding experience of such misfortunes.

The new Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland, at the banquet given to him in Dublin on the 8th of February, confirms some views which we have from time to time given. He says, referring to the crisis of 1866, that it "exceeded in intensity any commercial crisis which has occurred during the last twenty-five years;" and he adds, referring to the failure of the potato crop in Ireland: "During the last summer a very dry season pleyed in jeopardy one of the staple crops of the country, and affords a very large income to farmers in this agricultural country; but I believe that plentiful rains and the mild season which followed have prevented that disaster, which at one time it was feared would take place throughout the United Kingdom.

The Mark Lane Express of the 8th of February also says: "The potato crop has suffered by the drought have now got through the roughest of the season well, from the continued growth of excellent weather."

Undoubtedly the mild winter has had important effects, and we rejoice that it is so; but the fear which the LORD-Lieutenant refers to is wholly at variance with what Mr. CAIRNS, Mr. JACKSONS, and JACKSONS have expressed, with respect to English wants, in the London Times, and which, from having been adopted in this country, have kept down the price of our cereals very near to English limits.

The manipulators of grain market reports on the other side have had no time allowed for foreign producers, who supply England with much of her food, to know that there was any fear of disaster which would extend over the entire kingdom; and it is impossible to suppose that the excessive rains, commencing late in autumn, accompanied with a mild winter, and which allowed vegetation, grass, and the winter grain to continue growing, can have done more than postponed — close pasturing in winter is of questionable advantage—the time when grain from this country will be required.

THE NEW YORK ELECTION FRAUDS.

THE Congressional Report upon the election frauds in New York authentically confirms the universal impression that an enormous crime against the country was committed in this State by the Democratic managers. Every person who was actively engaged in the canvass knew that fraudulent naturalization papers had been sent out of the city into the neighboring counties and towns. The characters of the Democratic judges chiefly engaged in the business of naturalization were notorious. The equally notorious character of the most active Democratic managers justified the liveliest suspicion. Frauds upon the ballot in the city were certain— but then for the first time suggested, and, knowing the great probability of fraud, and suspicions of the universal conviction that it was even then attempted in the most flagrant manner, the duty of any honorable magistrate of any party was to announce the fact, and call upon all good citizens to expose the crime, and bring the criminals to justice. This was peculiarly the duty of MR. HOFFMAN, who was then Mayor of the city, and also a candidate for Governor. But that gentleman issued a proclamation declaring even the "charges" of fraud to be "gross and unfounded." Thus stating as a fact what hundreds of citizens knew to be untrue, and what it was his especial duty to know to be so, MR. HOFFMAN's action tended directly to the protection of the frauds, and no man familiar with the facts doubted then or doubts now that those frauds made him Governor.

Why is it that every Democratic paper imitated the Mayor in sneering at the charges of fraud? Why should a leading journal of that party make the absurd assertion that the vote of the city of New York is as honest as that of any city? Why should Democrats who are intelligent enough to comprehend such a crime by shrugging their shoulders and saying that the Republicans are as bad as Democrats, and that one party cheats just as much as the other? It is not a question of party. It is a question of the stability of the Government. If Republicans organize and execute these vast systems of fraud, it is for Democrats try to expose them? Simply because the Democratic managers know that if it be true that some Republicans cheat at the polls, the enormous frauds are perpetrated by Democrats are for the benefit of the Democratic party. Therefore their papers affect to sneer at what they call stale slander and personality. When a Democratic candidate, as was the case in certain districts in New York, receives more majority than there are legal voters in the ward, is it a stale slander to say so?

There should be a brief summary of the report of MR. LAWRENCE cheaply published and circulated through the country, that the people of the United States may understand how they are cheated of their rights, and how the essential principle of the Government is assailed by the immense frauds perpetrated yearly in New York. They would then see the wisdom of the substance of the provisions which the report recommends. The United States alone should naturalize citizens, and defend by its own officers and laws the national elections. Indeed the whole system of naturalization, and every safeguard of the ballot-box should be abolished rather than intrusted to the administration of courts and magistrates which, like so many of those in the city of New York, again and again and again corrupt the ballot by the grossest and unspeakable disgrace to the American name.

HITCHING UP.

PRESIDENT BARNARD of Columbia College has announced that the system of marks for recitations has been abolished. Class-rank is now to be determined by half-yearly examination in writing, each question to be valued in advance by the examiner. The system of discipline is also changed. There will be no no excuses for absence; but attendance upon three-quarters of the lectures in any department will be necessary for examination in it; and no student will be graduated unless he has passed all the examinations.

These changes are very reasonable, and they show that Columbia College is moving in the great changes that are taking place in public opinion in regard to collegiate education, and is disposed to adopt itself to them. The average age at which young men enter college is now much greater than formerly. The entering examinations are so advanced that many applicants of a score or more of years standing dubiously wonders if he could not proceed a freshman. The consequent presumption is that students come to study, not to paint the President's door black, or to make the night-bell shapper before morning prayers, and that they are to be treated accordingly.

The old system of college discipline and police was ludicrous and belittling. It was the result in great part of the fact that the Professors were generally shy students or recluse clergymen, totally unacquainted with the human nature, and utterly bewildered in a crowd of boys. As a rule, and with striking exceptions, they were so little fitted to teach boys from fifteen to twenty as they were to command a horse. The head of a college was selected, as it was slyly said the English Bishops were, for skill in construing Greek. If young men had been mere Greek particles, that was an admirable rule. But as they were not, the result was not satisfactory. The advantage of disregarding this tradition was shown in the appointment of JOSIAH QUINCY as President of Harvard College. The mundane affairs of that venerable institution had fallen into sad disorder during the administration of a dignified and worthy clergyman, and the cloth opposed MR. QUINCY's appointment. But he was confirmed, and his administration was the most prosperous and successful in the history of the College. MR. QUINCY's LATIN was copious and correct; but his wife-spoken and practical mind was trained in important civic trusts and in contact with society, was even more essential to the fit discharge of his duties.

The old tradition of the College has been recently further disturbed by the tendency to appoint young men to the presidency. It is found that many of the most efficient and best beloved of the teachers have been men in full sympathy with those around them, and the value of mere age has therefore signally dwindled. An anecdote is going through the papers of a farmer who, visiting his State, who met two not ancient persons who had been upset in a sleigh. He stopped to help, and suggested that while they were about it, another boy should hitch up. "Father boy" was the President of Cornell University. One thing, indeed, seems to be pretty clear: If the colleges in this country are to be flourishing, they must renounce the traditions that are incompatible with the time. They must cherish that enthusiasm for culture, that separation for "sweetness and light" from which all effective study springs, and which depends very little upon mere pedagogy, and very much upon mutual sympathy and confidence. There is many a college gradually tipping over, like the sleigh at Ithaca, and if it would run along again comfortably and swiftly, it must summon "Cuff or boy" to hitch up.

A LITTLE MORE.

FROM the latest reports we should suppose that affairs were almost bad enough in Mexico for somebody to propose the immediate annexation of that country. But the States of Puebla, Mazatlan, Yucatan, Tlascala, Nuevo Leon, Quiroga, and other provinces, are heavily out with revolution; all the conditions of disorder, ignorance, and wretchedness, which seemed to be so persuasive in the case of San Domingo, are amply supplied by Mexico, and if they were sufficient reasons for the annexation of the one, they must be conclusive for that of the other. There are piles, counterpiles, rivers, of misery, poverty, and anarchy in Mexico, and if these do not fit a country for immediate admission into the Union, according to the current reasoning, what can?

Cuba, also, is much disturbed. The revolution there is formidable. The ignorance and wretchedness of the people are also great. Is not Cuba equally fitted for annexation?

The House of Representatives has been busily discussing the reduction of certain of our missions to the South American states. General BUTLER's amendment willing that General KILPATRICK shall continue to be minister to Chili; and General BANKS thinks that the saving of four thousand dollars is not to be placed against the dissatisfaction of no Representative or an abridged influence in those countries. But why discuss? They are all more or less revolutionary, wretched, and ignorant; why not take them all in, and save all the salaries of all the ministers?

"Perhaps the United States," says the New York Times, "might manage to absorb and digest the five northerly and northwesterly states of Mexico. But why so small a bite? Why not the whole thing? We are so in want of territory; what we have is so thoroughly peopled and subdued; the sentiment of the population upon the frontiers and at the South is so patriotic and civilized, that we so far from every kind of perplexing domestic question arising from races and extent, that nothing could be easier than to add to the Union more foreign states and a few millions more of alien population. Possibly Spain, which is in some trouble, might like to make an arrangement; and MR. SEWARD has doubtless discovered that Russia has some possessions in Asia that she would sell at a bargain. That would be especially attractive, because it would relieve us from the questions to which we have alluded, we have also such an overflowing treasury. But the annexation of Mexico is plainly first in order—or any Mexico and San Domingo together.

THE DEAD SOLDIERS.

THE loyal citizens of Louisville, Kentucky, have resolved to erect a suitable monument in honor of the 2905 Union soldiers buried in the National Department of Cave Hill Cemetery in that city. The Committee state that in their military division, extending from Western Virginia to the Mississippi, and from Ohio to the Gulf, there are twenty national cemeteries, in which are buried 114,648, in numbers varying from the 555 at Danville, Kentucky, to the 16,486 in the Nashville Cemetery. Thirty-two States are represented in these cemeteries, and the Committee ask why each of those States should not have a monument in each of the cemeteries. They have carefully investigated, and have discovered how many of those buried belonged to each State, exclusive of the 13,705 buried at Andersonville, and of those registered as United States troops. Colonel E. B. WHITMAN, who is warmly interested, is charged with the duty of gathering the dead into the cemeteries.

While the Legislatures are spending money so recklessly they might well consider whether a little sum might wisely be expended for so pure and patriotic a purpose.

DOMESTIC INTELLIGENCE

CONGRESS.

February 22:

In the Senate, it was agreed to postpone the repeal of the Tenure-of-Office bill, and bills were passed abolishing the office of Superintendent of Exports and Drawbacks.

In the House, a bill was passed granting the right of way to the Texas, El Paso, and Pacific Railroad. —The Post-Office Appropriation bill was passed.

February 23:

In the Senate, the following bills were passed: one authorizing certain National Banks to change their location; one incorporating the Western Union Telegraph Company to import submarine wires free of duty; the Army Appropriation Bill; a bill to amend the Judicial system; the Civil Rights Act; and a bill to prevent the discrimination of fees in securing pensions in Kentucky.

